This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.

+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.

+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.

+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

Mus 13.11 *

THIS BOOK IS FOR USE
WITHIN THE LIBRARY ONLY

Harvard College Library

FROM THE

ELKAN NAUMBURG
FELLOWSHIP FUND

By the terms of the gift the income of this Fund in any year when the Fellowship is not assigned is to be used for the Library of the University for the purchase of works, preferably pertaining to Music.

MUSIC LIBRARY

THE MUSICAL WORLD

VOL. XXXVIII

LONDON
PUBLISHED BY BOOSEY AND SONS
24 & 28 HOLLES STREET, CAVENDISH SQUARE
1860

Mus 13.11 *

Harvard College Library
Mar. 15, 1921
Naumburg Fellowship fund

PRINTED BY

SPOTTISWOODE AND CO. NEW-STREET SQUARE, LONDON, E.C.

MUSIC & GENERAL PRINTERS

INDEX.

A Musical Elench, 577
A Man of Mark, 401
A Portrait of Shakspere, 674
A Posthumous Opera by Mozart, 511
A Step Upwards in Life, 798
A Theatre behind the Scenes, 818
A Young English Musical Genius (Boulogne), 10
An Anagram (Pantagruel and Panurge), 363
The Sisters Marchisio, 642
An Unknown Opera by Donizetti, 609
Actors (The) at the Crystal Palace, 481
Actress and Dressmaker, 10
Agencies, 578
Alaray, Signor, 673
Alboni, the Cosy, 528
Antiquity of Cards, 563
Artists' Volunteer Rifle Corps, 235, 306
Apropos of the Norwich Festival, 536, 554, 573
Athenæum versus Era, 618

Bach Society, 481
Bach and Mendelssohn from a Social Point of View, 775
Balfe, Marriage of Miss Victoire, 224
Balfe's (Mr. W.), Bianca (Times), 799
Balfe's (Mr. W.), Bianca (Post), 818
Beale Tours, The, 24, 528
Becker, Herr, 803
Beethoven (Dwight's Journal), 507
Beethoven (Schindler's Life of), 12
Beethoven and Paer, 480
Beethoven's No. 9, a Rhapsody, 640
Benedict, M., as a Composer Pianist (Post), 400
Benedict's "Erin and Caledonia" (Illustrated Times), 594
Benedict's "Undine," 705
Bishop of Ripon on Church Music, 706
Bly, Dr. M. V., 810
Brass Band Contest at Crystal Palace, 432, 447
Brass Band Contest at Manchester, 595
Brough, Robert, 480, 483, 530, 657
Brough, Robert, Memorial Performance at Liverpool, 545
Brougham, Mr. John, 794
Buckstone, Mr., Benefit Address, 451
Buckstone, Mr., Dinner to, 627

Can Paris pay its Artists (Europe Artiste)
Charity School Meeting at the Crystal Palace, 859
Cherubini's Manuscripts, 172
Cherubini, Anecdote of, 466
Christian Minstrelsy (Punch), 499
Christmas Elijah at Manchester, 823
Christmas Messiah at Leeds, 824
Church Music — Harmonium for Churches (Church Remembrancer), 7
Cinti-Damoreau, Madame, to her Pupils, 425
Clementi's Sonata in C major (Athenæum), 400
Concert-Room Pianists, 627
CONCERTS:—
Aguilar, E., 170, 202, 255, 368, 468. Allison, Master H. C., 203, 347, 481. Amateur Musical Society, 158, 191, 217, 257, 288, 314. Anderson, Mrs., 377. Arion, The, 395. Balfe, Surrey Garden Series, 449, 464, 479. Baxter, Madame Laura, 367. Beaumont Institution, 218. Benedict's Vocal Association, 111, 158, 203, 316, 430. Benedict, Jules, 394. Benefit of a Professor in Distress (Chelsea), 562. Billetta, Signor, 449. Blind School at St. John's Wood, 514, 641. Broadwood's, Concert at Mesars., 64. Brough Memorial Concert, 479. Buckingham Palace, 430. Busby, Miss Emma, 369. Carvill, H., 290. Chipp, Edmund F., 465. Charity Children at Crystal Palace, 366. Clarke, F. Scotson, 379. Coles, Miss S., 418. Corfield, Miss Fanny, 378. Crystal Palace Performance of Elijah, 278. Crystal Palace, Saturday Concerts, 89, 143, 169, 203, 218, 242, 267, 523, 562, 721, 795. Crystal Palace, Madame Clara Novello's Farewell, 626, 649. Crystal Palace Opera Concerts, 369. Cronin, Miss M., 464, Cusins, W. G., 377. Deichmann, Carl, 378. De Vaucheran, Madame, 90. Depret, M., 431. Distin, M. J., sen., 78. Dolby, Miss, 39, 90. Douay and Ponssard, MM., 480. East and West India Docks, 707. Engell, Herr L., 449. English Glee and Madrigal Union, 363, 418. Field, Master W. A., 128. Finoli, Mademoiselle, 450. Floral Hall, Covent Garden, 347, 527, 531, 546, 558, 569. Forbes, Mr. George, 63. Fox, Master George, 77. Galitzin, Prince George, 394, 448. Ganz, Herr W., 468. Glover, Howard, 144, 417. Goddard, Susan, 465. Griffiths and Perkins, 227. Hallé, Charles, 369. Harris, Edwin, 690. Hatton, J. L., Henken, Mr. John, Choral Class, 192. Hölzel, Gustav, 419. Huddart, Miss Fanny, 367. HULLAH's, Mr.: Creation, the, 40, Gounod's Grand Mass in G, 111, John the Baptist, 315, Judas Maccabeus, 191, Macfarren's May-day, 255, Rossini's Stabat Mater, 255. Irving, Allan, 367. Jefferys, Theresa, 315. Kapp-Young, Madame, 419. Jullien, Madame, 494. Kinkee, Mr. and Mrs., 26. Kuhe, W., 395. Lazarus, Mr., 40, 705. Leicester, 140. Leslie's, Mr., Henry, Choir, 143, 202. 289, 315, 331, 418. Lidel, Herr, 368, London Glee and Madrigal Union, 9, 29, 378, 418. London Orchestral Association, 29. London Quintet Union, 143, 170, 242. London Tonic Sol-fa Choir, 753, 762. Lucas, Mr. F., 267. Macfarren, Mr. John, 347. Martin, G. W., 417. McLeod, Miss Helen, 367. Medical Benevolent College, 369. Messent, Miss, 418. Molique, B., 346. Monday Popular Concerts, 25, 39, 63, 78, 154, 169, 201, 217, 241, 287, 298, 331, 346, 353, 366, 393, 417, 429, 737, 753, 763, 783, 795, 816. Monmouth Hall, Westbourne Grove, 713. Musical Society of London, 46, 89, 138, 274, 297, 363, 376. Myddleton Hall Concerts, 112, 142, 298. Nabich, Herr Maurice, 142. New Philharmonic, 142, 201, 256, 314, 377. Newton, Mrs. Alexander, 418. Nickinson, John, 464. Novello, Madame, Farewell, 746, Oberthür, C., 347. Paez, Madame, 378. Palmer, Miss, 367. Pauer, Ernst, 395. Peoples' Philharmonic, 689. Philharmonic Society, 274, 297, 331, 366, 393, 429. Piatti, Signor, 430. Poole, Miss, 368. Pratten, Mr. and Mrs., 450. Professors' Concert Union, 377, 464. Puzzi, Madame, 331. Ransford, 143. Reeves, Sims, 266. Richards, Brinley, 10, 378. Richardson, 255. Rieder, Madame, 367. Ries, 378. Ritter, Theodore, 315. Royal Academy of Music, 224, 315, 782, 817. Soyal Society of Musicians, 320, 368. Royal Society of Female Musicians, 379.—SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY: Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise, 95. Mendelssohn's Elijah, 366, 417. Handel's Dettingen Te Deum, 95. Judas Maccabeus, 142, 159. Haydn's Creation, 315, 331. Israel in Egypt, 266, 289. Samson, 25, 40, 58. Seasons, 201. Solomon, 782. Sainton-Dolby, Madame, 394. Sainvelle, Madame, 770. Salaman, C., 202. Sedlatzek, Miss, 449. Sloper, Lindsey, 449. Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, 63, 112, 283, 369, 418, 468, 817. Society of British and Foreign Musicians, 479. Tennant, 431. Thomas, Harold, 367. Thomas, John, 449. Turner, Mr. J. B., 79. Valentine, Mlle. Caroline, 395. Vaneri, Mlle., 468. Vaucheran, Madame De, 468, 810. Vinning, Madame, 431. Volunteer Rifles (1st Surrey), 795. Wallace, W. V., 368. Wilkinson, Miss E., 464. Winter, Melchior, 367. Wylde, Dr., 811

Conran, Miss Ellen, 722.
Copyright of Paradise Lost, 483.
CORRESPONDENCE:—
A to A? or C to C? 650. A Cry from the Pit, 713. A Day of Devotion, 539. A Delicate Point, 216. A lapsus pennæ, 778. A Letter from Weber, 794. A new Dodge, 761. A new National Anthem, 751. A Protest against a Veteran, 555. A Query, 712. A Successful Composer, You're wanted, 750. An unintended Omission, 39. Apollo, The, and Marsyas, 168. Barry's (Mr. C. A.) Songs, 352. Better, 824. Beethoven and Mendelssohn, 352. Beethoven v. Paer, 433, 481. Belleisle's March, 650, 655. Berger, Francesco, 625. Chappell (William), You're Wanted, 698. Cheadle Association, The, 457. Chord of the Six-four, 39, 58. Church Organists, 513. Church Psalmody in the 19th Century, 762. Clark, F. Scotson, 187, 336. Collard, The late Mr. F. W. 265. Confusion of Instruments, 824. Crump versus Petiface, 809. Delaporte and the Orpheonists, 513. Doubts, 751. Elijah at Exeter Hall, 337. English Festivals and Foreign Singers, 650. English Music and Composers, 712. Fair Play (F. S. Clark), 153. Floral Hall Concerts, 778. Girard, Miss C., 77. Grumbling (A Veteran) 336. Handel's Messiah, 103. Harmonies of Psalm and Hymn Tunes, 281. Hewitt, C. D. and A. G. Henderson, 457. Holmes, The Brothers (A. Wehner) 152. In re Leeds, 794. Jullien Festival (S. Arthur Chappell), 513. Jullien Shilling Fund (W. H. Clemow), 216. Kerbusch, Leo, 187. Leeds doings, 761. Leeds Town-hall Organ, 168, 681, 699. Loder, E. J., 700, 750. Macfarren's, Mr. G. A., "Christmas," 320. Mathematical Theory of the Major Diatonic Scale (W. W. Parkinson), 248, 335. Mere Musicians, 734. Molique's "Abraham" (Thos. D. Eaton), 634. Mori, Frank, You're Wanted, 698. Mozart's Trios, 151. Music for the Autumn and Winter, 577. On the Supertonic as a Primary Base, 751. On the relation and progression of Chord, 698. One Invalid and two Key Bugles 555. Organist, Advertisement for an, 386. Pneumatic Lever, the, 216. Ransford's, Mr., Concert (H.T.A.), 152, 265, 281. Sacred Harmonic Society, 778, 793. School of Violin Playing (Leo Kerbusch), 362. Smart, Henry, Choral Book, 457. Smart, Henry, You're wanted, 713. Stipends of our Church Organists, 665. Summerhayes, Miss Cecilia, and her Concert, 539. Tenor or Treble, 281. Tonic Sol-fa Association and Mr. Bowley, 362. Uniform Musical Pitch, 539. Unit Basses, 56. Up to C in altissimo, 555. Vocal Association, 203. Volunteer Bands, 538.
Corri, Death of Mr. Haydn, 144
Costa, Mr. and Ella, Mr., 445
Crystal Palace, 265
Crumbs of News, 579
Cuckoo, the notes of the, 434
Czillag, Madame, 760

Delaporte, M., 545
Dickens, Mr. Alfred, 547
Discovery of Old Music, 563
Distin, Mr. J. and The Morning Star, 129
Dolby, Madame Sainton and M. Sainton in Paris, 171
Dramatic Dottings, 49
Dramatic College (Daily Telegraph), 497
Drechsler, The late Mr., 443
Dreyschœk, A., 224
Dulcken, Mr. F. Q., 739
Durand, M. and the Messager de Paris, 670

Effect of Music on the Sick, 611
Eisteddfod of Wales, 515
Elvey, Death of Dr. S., 668
Engel, Herr L., 722
English Actors in America, 467
Evans's Harmoniums, 255

Fairbrother, Death of Mr. S. G., 321
Farren, Death of Mr. Henry, 112
Fechter, M., 335
Festival of the Three Choirs, 763
Finoli, Mlle., 512
Fiorentino, P. A. and St. James's Hall, 451
Flexmore, the Clown, Death of, 562
Floral Hall, 527
Ford v. Gye, 722
FOREIGN:—
America, 516, 673, 686. Amiens, 74. Arnheim, 124, 450. Aukland, 705. Baden-baden, 450, 576. Bergamo, 167. Berlin, 41, 75, 112, 192, 193, 530, 686, 731. Berne, 520. Boston, 779. Boulogne-sur-Mer, 529, 555. Bologna, 722. Breman, 290. Breslau, 106. Brussels, 74, 257. Coblenz, 106, 594. Cologne, 22, 42, 123, 545, 591. Crefield, 123. Ems, 530. Frankfort-on-the-Maine, 545. Hague, The, 161. Hamburgh, 167. Hanover, 545, 754. Leipsic, 287; 545. Madrid, 686, 810. Malines, 545. Mayence, 514, 529. Milan, 779. Modena, 506. Naples, 686. New York, 779. Nice, 686. Oldenberg, 106. Ostend, 594. Paris, 73, 105, 123, 161, 290, 509, 610. Pesth, 106. Rio Janeiro, 106. Rome, 824. Rotterdam, 594. Salzbourg, 530. Spa, 529. St. Petersburgh, 42, 75, 161. Stockholm, 545. Vienna, 75, 106, 257, 290, 530, 696, 728, 743, 761, 810. Weimar, 220, Wiesbaden, 576.
Fra Diavolo, The original of, 538
Frikell, Professor, 96

Gabriel, Miss Virginia, 255
Geary, Mr. Gustavus L., 128
German Men's Song Festival, 595
Gibbon, 547
Gilbert, W. B., Lecture on Pianoforte, 824
Glasgow, Musical Festival, 29, 94
Glover, Death of Mr. Edmund, 681
Glover (Mr. Howard,) Ruy Blas, 733
Gluck's Iphigenia, at St. James's Hall, 400
Goddard, Miss A., 432, 781, 811
Gougenheim, Miss Josephine, 642
Grisi and Mario, in Dublin, 611

Hallé, C., 431
Handel, 3, 435
Hausmann, Mr. G. (Edinboro' Courant), 459
Hasslinger's, Herr Von, Oratorio, "John the Baptist," 351
Henselt, Adolphe, 384
Her Majesty's Theatre, Alterations and Improvements, 241
Hippopotamus, The, 561
Hogarth and his Carriage, 459
Hood's Jokes on himself, 563
Horsley's, Mr. Gideon, 48

Jacobourtch Family, The, 435
Japanese at Philadelphia, 499
Jullien, The late (Extract from a Paris Letter), 217
Jullien (from the Times), 174
Jullien, 186
Jullien (from Figaro), 207
Jullien, Mellon, Galitzin (Weekly Dispatch), 559
Jullien, Madame, Provincial Tour, 529, 595, 610, 626

Kingdom (The), of Music, 530
Knowles, Sheridan, 683
Koppitz, Herr, the Flutist, 384

Lablache, The late Signor, 252
Lacy, Mr. Walter, 762
Lady Organists, 560
LEADING ARTICLES:—
A new German work on the Position of Music among the Arts, 508. Addison, Satirical Article on the Italian Opera, 765. Baden-Baden, approaching Season at, 445. Beethoven's Fidelio in Paris, 317. Beethoven's Fidelio and Hiller's letter to the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, 380. Beethoven's "Undine," 639. Best, Mr., and the Opening of the Free Library, St. George's Hall, Liverpool, 700. Borghi-Mamo, Madame, 286. Bourcicault, Mr. and Mrs., 606. Brass Bands' Contest, 396. Brough, Robert, death of, 428. Bunn, Alfred, Death of, 825. Burnand's (Mr.) new Burlesque of Dido, 109. Canterbury Hall and the Progress of Music, 124. Charity Children at Crystal Palace and Punch, 364. Cherubini, Statue to, 798. Concert Programme at a Literary Institution, 8. Conductors (chefs d'orchestre), 476. Crystal Palace Dinners, 304. Decline of the Drama, 239. Devrient, Death of Madame Schroeder, 106. De Meyer, Leopold, Pianoforte playing, 382. Economy in producing New Operas, 653. Extra Performances at the two Italian Operas, 381. Festival of the Three Choirs, 766. Fétis M. Biographie Universelle, 398, 620. Field, Potter, Kalkbrenner, H. Herz, and Czerny, 541. Fitzball, Mr. and the Libretto of Lurline, 140. Flexmore the Clown, Death of, 557. Foreign Pianists in London, 284. French Dramatists, 76. French Choral Singers at the Crystal Palace, 92. Galitzin's Prince George, Russian Concerts, 381, 397. Glinka's Compositions, &c., 94, 445. Grassot, Death of, 61, 76 Great Singers of the Eighteenth Century, 686. Hallé, Mr. Chas., Manchester Concerts, and "Iphygenia in Tauris," 26. Handel's Israel in Egypt, at Exeter Hall, 332. Hausmann, Death of Herr, 445. Her Majesty's Theatre, Prospectus (for 1860) 205. Hoffmann, the Composer, 492. Hullah, Mr. John, 812, 826. Hummell, J. N., 493. Italian Operas and Italian Vocalists, 236. Italian Opera in the Provinces, 652. Jullien, Death of, 174. Jullien Fund, 188. Jullien, Remarks on, by a Journalist, 223. Librettos for Music, 733. Linley's, Mr. George, History (Musical) of England, 796. Lower Rhenish Musical Festival, 348. Macfarren's, Mr. G. A., Christmas at the Musical Society of London, 301. Massé, M. Victor, and his Operas, 748. Manchester, 41. Mellon, Alfred, and Floral Hall, 624. Mendelssohn's Elijah at the Crystal Palace, 269. Mozart's Coronation Mass, 669. Music, 780, 797. Musical Knowledge and Musical Entertainments, 265. Musical Season, The, 156. Monday Popular Concerts, 27, 428, 813. Moscheles, 476. Mozart's Don Juan, 333. Music and the French Language, 126. Music as an Art, 668. Musical Parties, 45. Musician, help Thyself, and the Letter to the Times, 44, 60. Musical Critics and their Method of expressing themselves, 701. Norwich Festival, 590. Novello, Madame Clara, 604, 749. Operas and Librettos, 588, 604. Opera Competition and Singers (Revue des Théâtres), 414. Opera House, the new one in Paris, 415. Pantagruel, Panurge, &c., 45, 93, 125, 141, 157, 175, 189, 205, 222, 237, 253, 270, 285, 302, 318. Philharmonic Society, 252, 684, 702, 764. Pianoforte Composers and Pianoforte Music, 509. Piccolomini Testimonial, The, 254, 272. Punch and the Technical Terms in Music, 654. Religious Tinge and Light Literature, 46. Ries, Schmidt, Marschner, Reissiger, and Kufferath, 526. Robson, Mr. F., 399. Rossini's Semiramide at the Paris Opera, 412. Rousseau, Jean-Jacques, 623. Royal Italian Opera Prospectus for 1860, 221. Russians at Home, The, 413. Sacred Harmonic Society, 767. Saturday Review and Le Duc Job, 62. Scotchman, The, 732. Scraps from Abroad, 716. Season of Song, The, 190. Singers' Salaries, 541. Smith, Mr. E. T., and his English and Italian Operas, 814. Smith, Albert, reappearance at the Egyptian Hall, 28. Smith, Albert, Death of, 334. Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, 76, 350. Society for the Relief of Literary Men in Russia, 382. Summer is icumen, 174. The lowest thing ever done in Music, 110. The Opera in France, 573. The Sonata, 572. The Art of Music, 636. The two English Opera Houses, 697. Theatrical Licenses, 717. Tomaschek, Worsichek and Berger, 557. Vienna Opera, The, 781. What has become of the Ballet, 814. Wright, Mr. Edward, Death of, 9. Yates (the late Mrs.), 590.

Leeds Musical Festival (for 1861), 592, 610
Liberator and Leveller, The. (Illustrated Times), 627
Lind (Jenny), 636
Lola-Montez, 483, 505, 546
London Concert Season (Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung), 601
London Glee and Madrigal Union, 823
London Royal Yacht Club, The, 111
Longfellow and Mr. G. B. Allen, 531
Lumley, Eliza, 514

Macfarren's Robin Hood, 665, 686, 703, 714
Mark, Dr., College of Music, 447
Mathematical Theory of the Minor Scale, 539
Mathews, Mrs., "Friend for the Fireside," 296
Marchesio, the Sisters, 704, 786
Mayhew, Horace, a Letter to, 777, 809
Mendelssohn, A., Letter of, 104
Mendelssohn's, Elijah, at the Crystal Palace, 327
Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony in C Minor, 329
Meyer, Leopold De, 320
Meyerbeer, 490, 594, 650, 671, 690, 704, 713
Molique's Abraham (Morning Post), 623, 685
Molique, Herr, the Norwich Festival, 762, 769
Mozart (by Otto Jahn), 80, 91, 107, 210, 225, 359
Mozart (by Otto Jahn) from the Morning Post 775, 808
Mozart's Don Giovanni at the Italiens, Paris, 162
Mozart's Impresario, 554
Mozart Child and Man, 112, 178, 194, 258, 306, 321, 339, 353, 369, 411
Mozart and Jeliotte the Singer, 329
Musical Pitch (Athenæum), 609
Musical doings in London (Vienna Recensionen), 553
Music at St. Helliers, Jersey, 515
Music in France (Athenæum), 609
Music in the South Seas (Dwight), 499
Music in Germany, 610
Musical Festival in Durham, 139
Music and Mystery (Punch), 23
Music and Theatres in Paris, 22, 43, 59, 72, 90, 121, 144, 160, 172, 209, 219, 243, 267, 299, 375, 391, 423, 439, 455, 471, 487, 509, 519, 535, 552, 568, 590, 602, 619, 647, 680, 712, 743, 759, 807
Music at Brussels, 344, 625
Music in Russia, 440
Musical Society of London, 363, 430
Music and Devotion, 465
Music and the Drama at Sydney, 466
Music by Kingsley, 547
My Church, 522

New Arrivals, 335
New School of Dancing Music (Haydn, Wilson), 777
New Theatre at Leeds, 573
Norfolk and Norwich Musical Festival, 171 461, 507, 538, 554, 562, 575, 615, 631
Nourrit (Adolphe), Letters to F. Hiller, 648
Novello, Madame Clara, 265, 281, 328, 363, 376, 442, 263, 673, 674, 746

Of the Relation and Progression of Chord, 699
Opening of the new Harmonium, Malew, 79
Operatic Music in Germany, 578
Opera at Crystal Palace (Punch), 363
Opéra Comique, the History of (le Ménéstrel), 543, 607, 663, 719, 729, 759
Orpheonists (The French) in London, 155, 272, 386, 400, 415, 416, 335, 443, 450
Organs and Organ Players (Punch), 778
Organ (The) York, 577
Organ (The) by Joseph Regnier, 510, 600, 744
Organ and Organists — Churches and Clergymen, 491
Organ (The definition and description of the), 407
Organ Reed Stops, 345
Organ at St. Mark's Church, Kennington, 128
Organ at York Minster, 218
Organ at Godmanchester Parish Church 379
Organ at Manchester Cathedral, 242, 249, 815
Organ at St. Paul's Cathedral, 311
Organ at Mellor Church, 314
Organ at All Saints, Bolton, 314
Organ at Parish Church, Stoke-upon-Trent, 314
Organ at St. Michael, Cornhill, 361
Organ at Cottingham, 402
Organ at Brunswick Chapel, 432
Organ at St. Paul's, Dublin, 514
Organ at St. Ignatius, Manchester, 770
Organ for a Chamber, with German and English scales of pedals, 232
Organist Election, Town Hall, Leeds, 78, 273, 335, 363, 433.
Organist Election, St. Mary's, Aldermanbury, 127
Organist Election, Thirsk, 296
Organist Election, Christ Church, Marylebone, 379
Ousely, Sir Gore, in Yorkshire, 104

Paine, Mr. John K., 475
Partant pour la Syrie, 626
Paul, Mr. and Mrs. Howard, Entertainment, 41, 255
Philharmonic Society Meeting, 224.
Phillips, Lovell, Death of, 207
Phillips, Henry, 431
Poetry:—
Address on behalf of the Family of Robert Brough, 479. A Warning to Lovers, 58. A Musical Instrument, 459. Albert Smith, 432. Anglo-French Alliance, The, 75. Blind Fiddler, The, 10. Blind Fiddler, Death of the, 43. Happy Swallow, 384. Lines for Music, 496. Love-sick Sol cured by a Cloud, 168. Marietta Alboni, 384. Mechanic, The, to his Sweetheart, 560. Poetry v. Prose, 627. Prologue to The Enchanted Isle, 480. Parody on "Sweet love, good night," 618. Trinummus of Plautus, 818
Provincial:—
Armagh, 815. Barnsbury, 159, Bath, 24. Belfast, 64, 96, 218, 272, 283, 402, 673, 706, 721. Berkhampstead, 723. Birkenhead, 160. Birmingham, 11, 65, 219, 257, 339, Bradford, 632. Brighton, 104, 753, 782, 801. Bristol, 24. Bury (Lancashire), 12. Cambridge, 385. Chatham, 283. Colchester, 12. Cork, 739. Deptford, 654. Dover, 168. Dublin, 43, 79, 129, 160, 283, 298, 419, 721, 738. Dundee, 105. Durham, 140, 682, Edinburgh, 25, 129, 170, 187, 218, 815. Epping, 578. Exeter, 281, 802. Falkirk, 257. Glasgow, 12. Gloucester, 160, 802. Grantham, 547. Greenwich, 79. Horbury, 513. Hull, 682. Ipswich, 754. Kiddermin ter, 235. Leeds, 105, 203, 218, 235, 513, 531, 642, 704, 754. Leicester, 79, 203, 683. Liverpool, 48, 128, 160, 257, 282, 513, 619. Maidstone, 129, 283, 824. Manchester, 11, 24, 235, 353, 610, 673, 682, 754. Newcastle, 718. Norwich, 64. Oxford, 170. Peckham, 672, 722. Peterborough, 235. Penrhyn, 769. Plymouth, 546, 704. Richmond (Surrey), 353. Ryde, 12, 673. Scarborough, 451, 483. Shrewsbury, 75. Swansea, 331. Tunbridge, 25. Wakefield, 64. Windsor, 12, 24, 112, 782, 783. Woodford, 298. Worcester, 12, 738. York, 129, 546
Poole, Miss, 778
Porpora and Caffarelli, 435
Price's, Captain Morton, Entertainment, 769.
Potter Testimonial, 47, 396, 424
Presentation to Rev. Dr. Miller, Belfast, 611
Professional Singing in Churches, 544, 570
Punch and the new Musical Pitch, 671
Public Exhibition of the "Apollo and Marsyas" at Milan, 225

Ranoe, Miss Kate, 611
Raphael's "Apollo and Marsyas," 416
Reade and more than Reade, 593
Reed's, Mr. and Mrs. German, Entertainment, 363
Reeves, Mr. Sims, 811
Reviews: — A'Beckett, Mrs. Gilbert, 87. Althaus, B. 167. Allen, G. B., 344. Anderson, W. 567. Andrews, Mrs. Holman, 232. Atkins, B. K., 215. Avery, Ellen, 295. Balfe, 3, 55, 88, 151. Barry, C. A., 311. Beddoe, Alfred, 535. Benedict, Jules, 471. Berger, Emile, 21. Berger, Francesco, 263, 567. Boosey's Musical Cabinet, 711. Borschitzky, J. F., 535. Burckhardt, C., 423. Callcott, 55. Campana, F., 151. Chater, W., 119. Chopin, 199. Clark, F. Scotson, 167, 247, 263. Cobham, M., 215. Doran, Dr., 55. Dussek, 183. Endersohn, M., 87. Forbes, G., 215. Gabriel, Virginia, 55. Gear, Handel, 231. Godefroid, Felix, 21. Gollmich, A., 247. Grenier, J. de, 231. Guernsey, Wellington, 567. Hatton, J. L., 87, 215, 263. Hauptmann, C. F., 87, 167; Heller, Stephen, 551, 670, 695. Henniker, H. F., 247. Hills, W. (Songs of Beethoven) 71. Holst, M. Von, 311. Hullah's "Singer's Library," 295. Julien's last Waltz, 305. Kiko, M., 295. Lacy, Rophino, 232. Leftwich, H. T., 55. Linley, G., 231, 535. Loder, E. J. (The Night Dancers), 727. Loder, E. J., 151. Lubeck, E., 343. Luders, C., 567. Lutz, W. Meyer, 343. Macfarren, G. A., 167, 232, 695. Malmene, W., 535. M'Ewan, J., 167. Meyerbeer, 216. Minasi, Antonio, 695. Moore's National Airs, 3, 87. Morgan, W., 232. Mudie, T. M., 167, 695. Mc Korkell, C., 344. Noorden, P. Van, 231. Nordmann, R., 215. Orpheon, The, 87. Osborne, G. A., 151. Ould, Edwin, 535. Psalmodia, Simplex et Selecta, 21. Raikes, 279. Randegger, A., 215, 264. Rée, Anton, 567. Regondi, Giulio, 167. Richardson, J. E., 87. Richards, Brinley, 167, 247. Robinson, Joseph, 282, 343. Ross, R., 87, 343. Rubinstein, A., 247. Sampson, Mrs., 231. Schlösser, A., 344. Schulthes, . Smart, Henry, 103, 167, 215. Smith, W. Seymour, 167. Sudlow, W., 344. Taylor, Bianchi, 55. Wallace, W. V., Lurline, 135. Walker, W., 232. Weisbecker, C., 535. Woelfl, 183.

Rellstab, Herr, Funeral of, 803,
Reynolds, Sir Joshua, 547
Ritter, Theodore, at the Philharmonic (Times), 400
Rome, Philharmonic Society, 824
Rossini and his Imitators, 530
Rossini's Semiramide, by Méry, 472, 505
Rossini's Last, 667
Royal Society of Musicians, 152
Royal Academy of Music Scholarship, 811
Rubinstein, A., 335, 351

Sacred Harmonic Society Annual Meeting, 64
Sainton, M. and Madame, at Toulouse, 568
Schroeder, Devrient, Death of Madame, 330
Schubert and the "Revivals," 460
Scraps from Abroad, 496
Smith, Albert, 9, 384.
Smith, E. T., and his management, 494
Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, 5, 283
Some Heresy from a True Believer, 547
Spark, Mr. W., and Sir Gore Ousely's Testimonial, 562
Spohr's Letters, 120, 177, 249
Spohr and the Violin, 811
Spohr, how he learnt the Horn, 162
Spohr, Passages from his Life, 233
Spontini, 527
Stabat Mater, Sedebat Pater (Punch), 427
Strauss, Herr, the Violinist, 400
Stage and Pulpit, 745
Stanley, Miss E., Entertainment, 703
Strong Prejudice, (Haydn Wilson) 433
Stuntz, J. H., Death of, 456
Sullivan, Arthur Seymour, 434

Testimonial to Mr. A. Finlayson (Broadwood's), 26
The Philosophy of Music (by Joseph Goddard), 791
The Enterprising Impresario, 777, 792, 808. 823
The Concert Season, 520
The largest Concert Speculator in Brighton, 715
The Nine o'clock Bell, 498
The Yankee Opera in difficulties, 681
Theatricals at Windsor Castle, 25, 49
Theatricals at Campden House, 169
THEATRES:—
Adelphi.—It's an Ill Wind that Blows Nobody Good, 382. Family Secret, The, 383. Janet Pride, 561. Bluebeard, from a new point of Hue, 828
Astley's.—Mazeppa, 577
Bijou Theatre (Her Majesty's.—Amateur Performance, 689. French Plays, 719, 747
Covent Garden.—"Romance," 78. Marriage of Georgette, 768. Lurline, 127, 641. Bianca, 784. Close of the Season, 190. Dinorah, 672. Crown Diamonds, 687. Trovatore, 688. Rose of Castille, 719. Night Dancers, 735. Bluebeard, 828
Drury Lane.—A Story of the, '45, 736. Maritana (Conductor, Dr. James Pech), 241. Benefit of the Family of Robert Brough, 489. Mr. and Mrs. Mathews' Engagement, 688, 769. Peter Wilkins, 828
Haymarket.—Love Chase, 688. Lion Slayer, 752. Queen Ladybird, 828
Her Majesty's.—Almina, 273, 287. Barbière, 320, 383, 392. Don Giovanni, 287, 296, 351, 392, 672. Ernani, 362. Fleur des Champs, 240. Favorita, 240, 477. Huguenots, 362, 705. Lucia, 392, 477. Lucrezia Borgia, 273, 287, 338, 687. Matrimonio Segreto, 410. Marta, 240, 752. Norma, 296. Oberon, 426, 477. Otello, 255, 287 Prova d'un Opera Seria, 392. Rigoletto 320, 339. Scintilla, 320. Semiramide, 338, 351. Traviata, 255, 273. Trovatore, 255, 338, 655. Last nights of the Season, 446, 461. Robin Hood, 655, 672, 799. Résumé of the Season (1860), 488. English Opera Prospectus, 642. Christmas Pantomine, 827
Lyceum—. Pioneers of America, 688. Pets of the Parterre, 719. Handy Andy, 769. Secret of a Life, 737. Chrystabelle, 828
Olympic.—Uncle Zachary, 382. Savage as a Bear, 627. Home for a Holiday, 753. Daddy Hardacre, 799. Timour the Tartar, 828
Princess's.—Garibaldian Excursionists, 752. Corsican Brothers, 799. Robinson Crusoe. 828
Pavilion.—The Opera Season, 560, 594
Royal Italian Opera.—Barbière, 297, 337. Dinorah, 240, 297. Don Giovanni, 321, 337. Favorita, 273, 288. Fidelio, 256, 273. Fra Diavolo, 288. Gazza Ladra, 337, 351. Huguenots, 362, 411. Lucrezia Borgia, 427. Martha, 392, 411. Norma, 411. Orfeo è Eurydice, 411, 427. Prophète, 467, 478. Puritani, 383. Rigoletto, 477. Trovatore, 296. Résumé of the Season (1860), 504
St. James's.—La Tentation, 383. Fortunio, 560. Hamlet, 577. Still Waters Run Deep, 752. Smack for Smack, 768. The Loves of Diana and Endymion, 818
Strand.—The Miller and his Men, 383. Hit Him, he has no Friends, 627. Did I Dream It, 752
Theatricals in New York, 562
Theory of Harmonics, by W. W. Parkinson, 408
Thomas, Mr. Harold, 48
Tinney, Death of Mr., 747
Titiens and Alboni in Semiramide, 431
Tonic Sol-fa Association, Letter to Mr. Bowley, 353
Toujours Grisi, 547

Uniform Musical Pitch, 529
Unmusical Poets, 363

Vandenhoff, Miss, Death of, 531
Viardot, Madame, 431
Vivier and Alboni, 368

Wagner, Herr Richard, in Paris, 48, 73, 670
Wagner, Herr Richard, Tännhauser, in Vienna, 107, 609
Wagner, Herr Richard, 706
Wallace, W. V., 499, 512
Ward, Lord, v. Lumley, 103
Weiss, Mr. W. H., 811
West Middlesex Rifle Corps, and their band, 111
Whitty, Miss Anna, 496, 810
Worcester Musical Festival, 466, 498, 554, 583, 599, 656
What is Buffo Singing? 396

York Organ, The, 577

Zingarelli, 483.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 1. SATURDAY, JANUARY 7, 1860. { PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

U. [redacted] R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

1

MDLLE. MARIE WIECK, Pianist (sister to Madame Clara Schumann), begs to announce that she is in Town for the Season. Letters respecting engagements and pupils to be addressed to 14, Leinster-square, Hyde-park, W.

GLEES AND MADRIGALS.—EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, (DUDLEY GALLERY). Change of Programme Mr. Mitchell has the pleasure to announce, that the Entertainment of Glees, Madrigals, and Old English Ditties, by the London Glee and Madrigal Union, under the direction of Mr. Land, interspersed with illustrative remarks by T. Oliphant, Esq., having been received with distinguished favour and approbation, will be continued every evening during the ensuing week, at half-past eight; and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings, at half-past two. Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved, 2s. A few fauteuils, 5s. each, which may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, W.

MISS DOLBY begs to announce that she will give TWO SOIREES MUSICALES at her own residence, No. 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, on the following evenings:—Tuesday, Jan. 10, and Tuesday, Jan. 31, to commence at half-past eight precisely. The following Artists will have the honour of appearing at the first soirée:—Miss Freath, M. Sainton, M. Beseth, Mr. Doyle, Mr. Paque, and Miss Dolby. Accompanyist, Mr. Randegger. Tickets for the two soirées, 15s.; single tickets, 10s. 6d., to be had only of Miss Dolby, at her residence.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield, and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

THE Committee of the former pupils of Mrs. BARCLAY, daughter of the late comedian, John Fawcett, in acknowledging with thanks the kind liberality of those friends who have already contributed to the fund for purchasing an annuity for this deserving lady, desires to make known that the subscription list must shortly be closed, they therefore hope that all who desire to testify their sympathy for this respected lady by subscribing to the fund will kindly forward their donations to Mrs. O. Webb, 36, Green-street, Park-lane, and Messrs. Hatchard, Piccadilly. Total amount received, £250.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day. Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Lent Term commences on Monday, January 16th, 1860. Candidates for admission must attend at the institution on Saturday the 14th of January, at 1 o'clock.

By order of the Committee of Management.

Royal Academy of Music, Tenterden-street, Hanover-square, December 31st, 1859.

J. GIMSON, Secretary.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR. CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR. HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.
Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Principals.
R. Weist Hill. }
Viotti Collins.
M. Beseth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.
Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
R. Payton
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. March.
G. Betjemann.
B. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W. A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.

VIOLI.
Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb.
E. J. Trust.

VIOLONCELLI.
Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. P. Reid.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.

CONTRA BASSI.
Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. C. F. Beresford.
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.
Messrs.
R. S. Prattan.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.
Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.
Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.
Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.
Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.
Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.
Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.
Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.
Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.
Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.
Mr. Walter Hinchey.

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—H. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:

M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

It is proposed to establish, for the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals, on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at St. James' Hall, Regent-street, commencing this evening, January 7th, 1860; and that, during the season, concerts shall be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with the chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

In the profes ional department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two

All communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London Orchestral Association, St. James's Hall, (ticket office) Piccadilly W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER

THREE GRAND MARCHES FOR THE ORGAN, WITH PEDAL OBBLIGATO.—Mendelssohn's Wedding March (Midsummer Night's Dream), No. 1; Beethoven's Marcia Funebre sulla morte d'un Eroe, No. 11; and Meyerbeer's Coronation March from Le Prophète (by permission of Messrs. Cramer and Co.), No 16 of the CLASSICAL ORGANIST, a selection of celebrated compositions from the works of the great masters, arranged from the orchestral scores for the organ, with pedal obbligato, by J. T. STONE. Price 3s. each. Vols. 1, 2, and 3 are now published, price 15s. each. A specimen copy may be had, gratis and postage free, on application to the publishers, or to Mr. J. T. Stone, 40, Berners-street, W. The copyright of the Classical Organist is the sole and exclusive property of Messrs. D'Almaine and Co., 14C, New Bond-street, W.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

NEWEST MUSIC.—W. VINCENT WALLACE'S celebrated DRAWING-ROOM ARRANGEMENTS of the favourite SCOTCH, IRISH, and ENGLISH AIRS. Each 3s. (Index gratis).

"WILLIE, WE HAVE MISSED YOU." For Piano. By W. Vincent Wallace. 3s.

GEMS FROM THE GREAT MASTERS. For Piano. By G. F. West. Twenty-four numbers, each 2s. 6d. and 3s. (Index gratis).

CONTEMPLATION. Andante Cantabile. By Brinley Richards. 3s.

"WARBLINGS AT EVE." Romance. By Brinley Richards. 2s. Duet, 3s.

"SHE NEVER TOLD HER LOVE," and "MY MOTHER BIDS ME" (Haydn). For Piano. By Brinley Richards. 2s. 6d.

MUSICAL WORKS PUBLISHED on the AUTHOR'S OWN ACCOUNT, at moderate charges, with expedition, accuracy, and in a superior style. Estimates supplied by Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, publishers to the Queen.

"ANNIE O' THE BANKS O' DEE," by BRINLEY RICHARDS. (Stephen Glover's admired ballad transcribed for piano). "It lies nicely for the hand, and may be speedily and easily learned."—Lady's Newspaper.

"MY MOTHER'S GENTLE WORD," for piano, by BRINLEY RICHARDS. "Brilliant, and not difficult to play."—Lady's Newspaper. London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, W., music publishers to the Queen; and of all music-sellers.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Fumagalli, price 2s. each:—

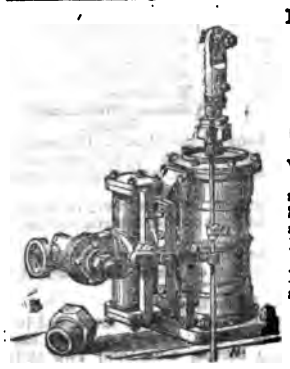
No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

Just published, in post 8vo., cloth,

A COLLECTION OF WORDS OF 2,270 ANTHEMS, with 452 Biographical Accounts of Authors, &c. By R. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain, and Honorary Organist of St. Peter's Church, Manchester. Price 6s. 6d. The Author will be happy to make arrangements for the supply of a number of copies to any cathedral, or other church, either in cloth or sheets.



HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.
JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL, and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply to BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London, sole agents.

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms.

REVIEWS.

"Christmas comes but once a year"—a jovial song—words by John Oxenford, Esq., music by M. W. Balfe. (Boosey and Sons).—A right "merrie carol," most appropriately designated a "jovial song," written in good homely vernacular of the olden stamp, with an exhilarating burthen at the end that might have been indited in the days of Queen Bess. The words are full of "Christmas," as the reader will own when he has devoured them with the same relish as ourselves:

Christmas comes but once a year,
Thus our fathers sung;
With their noisy, jovial cheer
Vaulted ceilings rung.
Boar's head and wassail bowl,
And loving mistletoe,
Joy'd the hearty Briton's soul
In winters long ago.
Christmas comes but once a year,
Hang the holly tree;
Thus our grandfather's sung,
When England was young,
And so sing we!

Wassail bowls no longer flow,
Bristly boars have fled,
Still the loving mistletoe
Dangles over head.
Deeply our fathers quaff'd,
When daintily we sip;
But like them we hail the draught
From beauty's rosy lip.
Christmas comes but once a year,
Hang the holly tree;
Thus our grandfathers sung,
When old England was young,
And so sing we!

Christmas comes but once a year,
Brief his joyous reign!
Shall we all assemble here,
When he comes again?
Some rise while others fall,
As moments swiftly flow,
Yet a living thing to all
Will be the mistletoe!
Christmas comes but once a year,
Hang the holly tree!
Thus our grandfathers sung,
When old England was young,
And so sing we!"

By such suggestive lyrics could Mr. Balfe fail to be inspired? The melody, in fact, smacks of the mistletoe and holly, and is as merry as a "Cricket on the Hearth." The whole song is a perfect "Christmas Carol."

"Moore's National Airs," with symphonies and accompaniments for the pianoforte, edited by Charles William Glover—No. 8. (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas.)

The present number of this edition (the "People's") contains twelve songs, two or three of which, it will be seen, attained great popularity in their day. The set comprises "Those Evening Bells," "When Love was a Child," "See the dawn from Heav'n is breaking," "Oh! come to me when daylight sets," "Oh! days of youth and joy long clouded," "Who'll buy my Love-knots," "Farewell, Theresa," "Bring the bright garlands hither," "Go now, and dream o'er that joy in thy slumbers," "When thro' the Piazetta," "Oh, no! not even when first we lov'd," and "The Bashful Lover." The work will be completed in ten numbers, so that the purchaser, for ten shillings, will become possessor of the entire collection of "Moore's National Melodies," which, if inferior in point of interest and merit to the "Irish Melodies," are at all events deserving of a place in every lady's Canterbury.

HANDEL'S "HERCULES."

(Edition of the German Handel Society, II. 1.*)

WHEN, last spring, the day came round on which, one hundred years previously, George Frederick Handel died, all classes of the German nation were penetrated with anxious fears as to the fate the future might have in store for them. Not that, on this account, they were forgetful of the debt of gratitude they owed the great master;—that they were not, the statue now erected in his native town of Halle bears witness—or that the day was passed over without being duly celebrated. No! from countless throats resounded those tunes which he has bequeathed, like some rich legacy, to us. But men's spirits were bad, their attention was distracted, and the festive sounds, as a necessary consequence, died away only half heard. We have not yet made the legacy, left us by Handel, so entirely our own as to know how to extract from it the utmost profit in every phase of life;—as to know how to derive from it the purest, noblest enjoyment in days of calm, as well as manly strength, combined with confidence, whatever may turn up, at periods of painful uncertainty.

Meanwhile, though, the project of publishing all Handel's creations, and thus naturalising them in the hearts of the people, has progressed bravely. The latter numbers of the work published by the Handel Society have proved beyond a doubt that the future of this worthy monument is assured. On the publication of the first volume, containing the oratorio of Susanna, a practised pen directed public attention to the importance of the undertaking as a whole, and threw out some hints for the conception and rendering of the above work, previously quite unknown to us. The other works for the first year were:—a volume of pianoforte music, part of which was already known in Germany, through an edition published by Peters, Leipsic, and the public performances of artists of repute; and, in addition to this, the pastoral of Acis and Galatea, into which Chrysander enters at length, at the end of the first volume of his Biography of Handel.

A third oratorical work—Hercules was issued, as the first instalment of the series for the second year, a few weeks since. There is hardly any other so well calculated to gain fresh ground for Handel's genius. If we look around the circle of those works of Handel, which are more or less known, we shall find none immediately near which, on account of the mere subject, this powerful Hercules can be placed. This fact affords a proof of the master's boldness, while the manner in which a subject so foreign to our usual train of thoughts is inspired with musical life, and made evident to us, serves the more to dissipate both prejudice and ignorance, and to establish the universal character of Handel's art. The work treats of the return of Hercules to his home, from the destruction of Œchalia, of his wretched end, through Dejanira's jealousy, and of his exaltation into the blessed sphere of the gods. The author of the text—according to the short remarks affixed by Chrysander to the score—a clergyman of the name of Thomas Broughton, found, in the Trachiniæ of Sophocles, a classical model for his task, which, from its nature, requires to be treated with reverential devotion. He had, however, evidently so identified himself with this antique subject that, in his hands, the figures of the heroic world were moulded into a new ensemble, perfectly in keeping with the requirements of the story, and, at the same time, adapted in a manner hardly to be surpassed to the purposes of the composer. If, on the one hand, the merit of the author appears less great than it otherwise would, because he drew his inspiration from a source which furnished him with more than the mere subject, it must, on the other hand, gain considerably in our eyes, when we remember the numerous versions with which we have been favoured of classical models for so-called musical purposes. There is a natural means of satisfying every want, and that musical art which, from its want of character, has lost the art of musical characterisation, would scarcely dare to complain—and, indeed, would never seriously do so—of the barren infertility of the sister muse. Just as, in this case, frivolity and loathsome stagnation on the one side pre-suppose the existence of the same qualities on the other, the skilful, independent, and yet subordinated work of the author of the words, in the case of Broughton and Handel, justify us in concluding that a corresponding standard of æsthetical excellence was adopted by the composer.

* From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.

The personages of the piece are precisely the same as those of the Greek tragedy. Dejanira, Hercules, their son Hyllos, Iole, the Œchalian captive, and the herald Lichas. There is, however, this material difference: Iole, who, in the tragedy of Sophocles, is only a mute personage, is, in the modern piece, more intimately connected with the plot, and thus not only do we gain a series of the most valuable scenes, peculiarly suited to the composer, but, also, an element essential to the symmetrical and harmonious structure of the whole, as a musical drama.

Our attention is first directed to Dejanira, the deeply sorrowing wife of Alcides, who has been absent for several months, and of whom no tidings have reached his home. What the sun is to the world, the hero is to his passionately fond wife. Racked by sad presentiments, she bewails, day and night, the pangs of separation. Meantime, Hyllos has consulted the priests of Jupiter about his father's fate:—

"I see the hero dead upon the ground!
O'er Œta's head the flames rise to the sky."*

Such is the mysterious response, which completely extinguishes all hopes in the bosom of Dejanira. Already does she dream she is united to the beloved-one in the Elysian Fields, to part from him no more. Hyllos, however, a son worthy of his father, acts differently. Neither the biting frost of the North, nor the glowing heat of a Lybian sun, can deter him from resolving to undertake a pious pilgrimage, either to find his father or perish in the attempt. A magnificent chorus, full of solemn earnestness and reverential courage, express their approbation of his resolve. Suddenly intelligence is brought that Hercules is returning from Œchalia, which he has razed to the ground. Dejanira's joy is as boundless as her grief has previously been. Although her presentiments, a short time before, would not yield to comfort, she now giddily banishes from her mind all recollections of the menacing response of the oracle. It is sufficient for her that her husband is returning, returning as a conqueror, and she rushes out hurriedly, with all around her, to receive him; the herald and the chorus of the Trachinians are more moderate in their joy, and, when we hear that, in the eyes of Lichas, the changes of suffering and joy appear as day and night, as ebb and flood, who would not be struck by the idea that the flood of Dejanira's joy, also, will ebb, and her delight be followed by sorrow? We now have a fresh picture; the captive princess, Iole, in the midst of her maidens, bewails the bitter fate which deprives her of liberty. Hercules enters to a grand march. He is full of the joy of victory, and the proud feeling that he has pacified the rage of Juno, and, crowned with fresh glory, reached the end of his labours. He determines that all around him shall rejoice as well as himself, and fancies he can easily dry up Iole's tears by presenting her with liberty. The rough warrior fails to observe the fearful emotion produced in the soul of the unhappy maiden by his appearance. Then again arises in her mind, with irresistible violence, the picture she was once obliged to behold of her father slain by Hercules before the walls of Œchalia, and her fancy once more subjects her to all the pain of this torture, until the vision at length makes way for a calmer and more soothing kind of pain. Who cannot recognise in all this the qualities which stamp it as the peculiar property of the musician? And how indisputably has Handel proved himself the potentate destined to take possession of such a subject, and hold it beneath his sway? What a magic perfume has he not cast over the whole, and with what treasures has he not endowed, from out the inexhaustible abundance of his genius, the songs of the young girl!

Let us come to the conclusion of the act, the chorus: "Crown with festal pomp!" This is one of those pieces which pour forth their golden stores without stint or hindrance, and enchant the hearer with their very first tones. Schœlcher (Life of Handel, page 290) concludes from this chorus, and the march mentioned above—those being the only portions of Hercules he has heard in England—that "If the remainder of the score equal these two magnificent pieces, Hercules is a master-piece unknown to the public." We are quite willing for anyone, allured by these two pieces, to make himself acquainted with the whole, but he must be prepared to find that the magnificence of the apartments will easily cause him to forget the side-door which served him as an entrance.

The second act developes still more closely Iole's purity of soul. Dejanira, her breast heaving with passion, now visits the maiden—gloomy jealousy has gained possession of her mind. She fancies it was simply to obtain Iole that Hercules destroyed Œchalia. On beholding the fair girl, enveloped in the charm of silent and patient grief, she seeks every plausible ground for jealousy, and thus, with busy hand, nourishes the flame destined to bring destruction with it. In vain does the innocent object of her wrath warn the blinded woman of the self-created pangs of groundless suspicion; in vain does Lichas praise the pure fidelity of his lord. The dart has entered too deeply, and she who is wounded by it will not be cured. A most true and touching delineation of this suicidal fancy, which, with contemptible delight, produces horrible torture, from vain deceit, in the heart of its victim, is presented to us in the next chorus, which concludes the scene. But away, for a moment, with such gloomy pictures, and let us unroll a scene full of the purest beauty. Dejanira has a correct estimate of the charm which suffering beauty exercises on the heart of man! The spell in which she imagines, without reason, her own husband to be held, has seized on Hyllos. It is in his heart that Cupid's dart is buried, and the fair creature's sufferings, in which the powerful god has dipped his weapon, have entirely turned the young man's heart to pity and love. He seeks her presence. But a deep abyss separates the two, who appear so completely formed for each other: "How can love exist in the sad heart filled with care—and love, moreover, for the son of the harsh man who slew my father?"—thus does Iole reject his suit. Then begins the lovely air:—

"Banish love from your breast:
'Tis a womanish guest."*

in which she bids the young man renounce love, and, by deeds worthy of his father, prove the vigour of his race. Her warnings and exhortations ill conceal, however, the fact that her heart is fighting a hopeless fight, in order to rescue her from the bonds which are drawing her to Hyllos. Is it astonishing that she merely throws oil on the flame? Her wishes strike him as an act of blasphemy towards the god whose power has driven even the immortal deities themselves from heaven, in order to enjoy, for a while, on earth, the sweeter heaven of love; this thought is taken up by the chorus, who sing, in swelling tones, the praises of the all-powerful boy-divinity. Dejanira re-appears, accompanied, this time, by her husband; the petty punctures of her sarcasm produce no effect upon his calm and great mind; nay, he does not even take the trouble to inquire the cause of her jealousy. He resolves to give a feast, to celebrate his victory, in the temple of Jove; meanwhile Dejanira is left to get rid of her groundless suspicions. She is the only person who remains behind, sinking still deeper in her delusion. It suddenly strikes her that she will employ magic to regain the estranged heart of her husband. She has preserved a rich garment soaked in the blood of Nessus, who was slain by Hercules, and which, according to the dying centaur, is able to revive extinct love. The unhappy woman

* Not having the English original by us, we have been obliged to translate the German version, which is as follows:—

"Ich seh' den Helden todt dahingestreckt!
Es steigt die Flamm' auf Oeta's Haupt empor."

TRANSLATOR.

* "Banne Lieb' aus der Brust;
's ist ein weibischer Gast."

sends this to her husband. She is not aware, however, of its fatal power, nor does she know that, by her own act, she is fulfilling the menacing response of the oracle. A sham reconciliation is effected. This furnishes Lichas with the subject for a beautiful little air ("Lasting love," &c.), and is embodied in a duet between Dejanira and Iole, being taken up by the chorus at the conclusion of the second act.

Meanwhile, the seeds sown by jealousy are shooting up with fearful rapidity. An instrumental symphony serves as the introduction to the third act, and prepares us for the wild deeds of the latter. After Lichas has announced to the Trachinians the fall of their king, a piece of news of which the chorus immediately appreciate the results, the picture of grief itself is presented to us. It is difficult to decide which is the more deserving of the prize: the pourtrayal of the horrible pangs with which the devouring poison racks the body of its unhappy victim, or the fearful picture, worthy the models we have received from Hellenic antiquity, of Dejanira, pursued by the Furies, whom she has herself called up, and in vain seeking repose in the gloomy shade of night. In truth, neither of these delineations is inferior to the other; the most we can perhaps assert is—that, as the pangs of a soul conscious of its guilt far surpass all mere bodily pain, the first place in artistic worth must be assigned to their pourtrayal. Only a short, and very characteristic air of Hyllos ("Be silent, O, be silent,") follows the first of these two pictures, and a charming song of pity, from the lips of Iole, the second. The dénoûment is not retarded by anything else, and particularly not by the chorus, which is silent until nearly the end. The conclusion is rapidly brought about.

The priest of Jupiter announces the elevation of the hero from the flames of the funeral pile to the blessed abode of the gods; and, after this happy event has been eloquently celebrated in an air of Lichas ("He who was the pillar of heaven"), the priest, in obedience to the will of Jove, unites Hyllos and Iole, who express their joy in a charming duet. Now, at length, the chorus again comes forward, and, in a simple and expressive song of praise, extol the glory of the founder of freedom, before whose heroic arm arbitrary caprice and violence have disappeared from the earth.

It is evident that it would be no easy task to find another foundation so well adapted, by its nature and arrangement, for the hand of the musician to rear his structure on. To the four persons whose fortunes constitute the essence of the piece, so to say, Lichas is added as a support, and the representative of the declamatory character. He partly serves to introduce or bring about, in various ways, the different transactions, and partly—this fact more especially constituting his musical worth—mirrors, according to their moral importance, the dreadful deeds that take place; being less affected by the grief and joy they produce than the other characters. His connection with the chorus is thus manifest. Perhaps it may be allowable, while treating of this particular work, to say a few words on the choruses in Handel's oratorios generally. That the directors of musical societies, when selecting a work for performance, mostly first take into consideration the number and musical beauty of the choruses, is an undisputable fact, inasmuch as the solo parts, and the conception of them—whether justly, is another question—are left to the private study of those to whom they are entrusted. Such a course is not only easily to be explained, but is an honourable proof of the endeavour to accomplish, with the means at disposal, as comprehensive a task as possible; but such a course has been, and still is, one of the principal reasons of a number of the most magnificent works being subjected to the great injustice of undeserved neglect, not to mention the disgraceful mutilation of others, which have still to make their way gradually in their original form. If, in Belshazar, the weight of whole nations, in action, as it were, is thrown into the scale; if, in Israel, the chosen people sing the wonders of the land of the Lord, their God, with epic breadth and fulness, before which the voice of a single person must be dumb; if, in Judas Maccabæus and in Joshua, the same people, gathered around their leaders, chosen and inspired by God, undergo sufferings and do deeds—is it so much out of the way to suppose that all these subjects necessarily comprehended within themselves the elements, of their artistic fashioning, and that it is a fundamental error to seek similar combinations from completely different elements, and a similar structure on quite different foundations? Would it not be worth while to follow confidingly the same master, even in those instances when he had neither the wish nor the power to dash in his artistic pictures with so few broad strokes, but when his genius was obliged to work with gentler, more numerous, but wonderfully consistent touches, in order, out of the various individual forms, to produce a rounded whole, full of life and truth? We would have the present work, and particularly the choruses, considered in this light. It would take too long to point out in detail the means the artist's hand has employed, or to enter deeply into the manner in which they are turned to account. Besides, numerous musical examples would be requisite, and what we could give would in some cases be too much, and in others too little; for those who are well acquainted with the work, such examples would be far too much, while they would be too little for those to whom it is quite new. It should be forcibly represented to the persons of the latter class, where they have to seek for beauty and enjoyment; they should be exhorted to remember that no portion of the work, however attractive its charms even when detached, can retain its full value anywhere but in its proper order, in the place which the master assigned it. The work is to be procured; let the public judge for themselves.

Tübingen, 26th November, 1859. G. S.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.

THE adjourned annual general meeting of this society was held on Thursday evening, at the society's rooms, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street; Mr. H. Ottley in the chair.

The Chairman, in opening the proceedings, said that this was an adjourned meeting from the 15th of December last, for the further consideration of the report of the council, adopted upon the motion of a member of the society, seconded by another member, both formerly members of the council; and he regretted to find that neither the mover nor seconder of that motion was present that evening. What grounds they had for moving an adjournment, therefore, he was at a loss to say; and he should regret if members had been, through their action, put to the inconvenience unnecessarily of coming down twice for the one purpose. The council, however, were glad of any indication on the part of members of taking a direct active part in the conduct of the affairs of the society, and he thought it not improbable that some valuable suggestions might be educed through the circumstance of this adjournment. Before formally putting the question that the report be adopted, he might be permitted to make a few observations upon the scope and purpose of the society, which were not fully appreciated by those who had only taken a superficial view of the matter. The promoters of this society went upon the principle that the fine arts were not merely a luxury, an elegant enjoyment, but a necessity in the mental culture of mankind; that they were as necessary to the full enjoyment of our mental endowments as food, raiment, air, and light are to our physical condition. Viewed in this sense, anything which tended to spread the influence of these arts amongst the general community must confer a benefit upon society by enlarging the field of enjoyment, and elevating the character of our kind. By these means, and this was in itself a great consideration, we established a common field open to all—high and low, rich and poor—when the cares of the world and the dross of worldly pursuits are forgotten amid aspirations of beauty, leading to communion with the Creator of all beauty and all good. (Hear, hear). And this position, which he ventured to advance, was no new one; it had been recognised ages ago, in the remote ages of antiquity. Plato spoke of "the beautiful and the good," if not as identical and the same, at least as being inseparably allied, and he described the love of them, which is implanted in the human soul, as "the inextinguishable desire which like has for like, which the divinity within us feels for the divinity revealed to us in beauty." This being recognised as a principle in nature, should it not be held as common to all, of universal influence through all possible forms of manipulation. (Hear, hear.) One essential feature in the organisation of this society was that it recognised and brought together all the fine arts, whether appealing through the ear, or the eye, or the thoughts, in common union; and, curious enough, a modern authority, almost within our time, had, with exquisite naïveté, given an illustration of this idea. Goethe said: "One ought, every day at least, to hear a little song, and read a good poem, and see a fine picture; and, if it were possible, to speak a few reasonable words"—implying that that which tended to elevate and purify the mind through the influence of images of beauty improved the capacity of men for rational discourse. (Hear, hear). He was glad to be able to announce that the opening soirée of the season, to be held on the 26th instant, would be signalised by a union of the arts of music and painting in an agreeable manner. The soirée, by kind permission of Mr. Wallis, would be held at the Suffolk-street Gallery, where that gentleman's splendid collection of modern pictures were exhibited, and the Vocal Association would give a performance of madrigals and other choral music, conducted by M. Benedict and Dr. Pech. (Hear, hear.) There was nothing in the report which was not in strict conformity with what had been set forth by the society in its prospectus on its establishment, and which had been approved and confirmed by the members. One of the most leading features of the society would be the award of prizes, which would not be esteemed so much for their money value as for being sheer testimonals of merit. This practice prevailed in societies in Liverpool, Birmingham, Manchester, Glasgow, and other towns, and the prizes given by the art societies in those places were eagerly sought after by even the highest men amongst artists themselves. The system of prize-giving in the arts had been adopted above 100 years ago by the Society for the Encouragement of Manufactures and Arts, which distributed awards not only in the manufactures and in workmanship, but for productions in painting, sculpture, and engraving. The prizes were, at first, of small value, but they afterwards rose to the sum of £140. Mr. Pye, in his work entitled the "Patronage of British Art," said, "Subsequently, it gave to persons of mature age, as rewards of merit in painting, sculpture, architecture, and engraving, gold and silver medals, and sums of money, various in amount. The premiums of painting and sculpture, as the society acquired strength, ranged from small sums, as high as to £140 each; and manufacturers and commerce were equally encouraged. The annual distribution of prizes was a scene of great ceremony and display, witnessed by an immense number of persons; reports of which being spread throughout the country by the daily papers awakened fresh emulation; whilst the various residences of the successful candidates gave frequent evidence that the society's influence had extended to the continent of Europe and America. And the City of London became so sensible of the society's importance, that in 1765 the Common Council voted to it a benefaction of £500. From its commencement in 1754 to 1778, it distributed in premiums and bounties £24,616 4*s.* 8*d.* of which £16 219 19*s.* 8*d.* was given to reward merit in science, and £8,325 5*s.* to merit in the polite arts." The Society of Arts, in the Adelphi, next gave prizes as encouragement to young students in the fine arts, and he knew personally that Sir Thomas Lawrence greatly prized a silver pallet which had been given to him, when a student, by that society. The Society of Arts, however, had now abandoned that system of prize giving in respect of the Arts of Design, it having been superseded by what was done at the South Kensington Museum in that department of the fine arts. The prizes that their society proposed to give, were not intended for boys, for copies of the antique, but being a society with a high appreciation of art, it would give prizes to the artists of the day, to those who had executed works which brought distinction to the art of the country. A number of unknown critics wrote in the public press on the fine arts, and artists were either gratified or depressed, according to the opinion that was there passed upon their productions, but how much more would artists appreciate the opinions passed upon their works, when the men who passed them were capable of judging of art. This society was at present but in its infancy, but he believed that the day would come when the prizes it awarded would be looked to as the highest honours that artists could receive. A great principle that the council had in view was to unite all the arts, including poetry and music—and, indeed, with respect to poetry, a gentleman had given £5 towards a prize to be awarded for the best essay on the relation of poetry to the fine arts. He would now resume the motion which had been put at the previous meeting—that the report then read be received and adopted.

Mr. C. D. Lewis asked a question as the means of the society to give prizes, and Mr. Alfred Gilbert suggested that a prize be set apart for music.

The Chairman said that the prizes would not be of any intrinsic value, although they would not be beneath notice, and he opined that the society would have ample means to provide them, seeing that it had been calculated, as had been stated in the report, that there would in the ensuing year be a surplus balance of £90. They intended to give two prizes in painting; one would be a square ivory or wood pallet, the "Reynolds pallet," with a silver handle, and that which would be awarded for landscape or genre would be a silver pallet. A bronze medal would be given for sculpture, and the same for architecture. He believed that all the prizes could be given under the stated sum of £40. As to the omission of music among the list of prizes, it struck him as being unjust; nay, considering the valuable assistance they had already received from the members of the musical profession at their soirées, it appeared to him as ungrateful. But it was in a great measure an oversight on the part of the council, as too much importance could not be attached to music as a branch of the fine arts.

After some remarks from Mr. Atkinson,

The Chairman said that on the 26th of this month they were going to have a grand assembly at the Suffolk-street Gallery, by the kind permission of Mr. Wallis, whose splendid collection of modern pictures adorned the walls. The Vocal Association had volunteered their valuable assistance on the occasion. M. Benedict and Dr. James Pech would conduct on this occasion—(Hear, hear)—and there would be sixty of the finest voices of the association. Under such circumstances it could not fail to be a most attractive meeting. A circular would be sent round to all the members, each of whom could have two tickets, which would be transferable. (Cheers.) They had lost some members of the council, who had resigned, but he believed that that would not be productive of any, the least, injury to the society, as it would come out this year with, if anything, a stronger and more vigorous council. The chairman then read a list of the new members, who amounted to twenty-three.

Mr. Gilbert moved a resolution that poetry and music be added on the list for prizes.

Mr. Blakely suggested that until the society gained strength they should be careful as to the adoption of too many proposals, as nothing could be done without means.

The Chairman said the society had the means of adopting their proposals. By their adopting such proposals, the public would know what they were, and in due time would appreciate them. They would not then want to go about and ask noblemen to join them; they would not require tinsel and tawdry; for their value in the art-world would be acknowledged, esteemed, and appreciated.

The amendment having been put, was carried unanimously.

The Chairman said, that as some difficulty might be felt in giving a prize in music, he would like to hear Mr. Gilbert state his views on the subject. Thereupon,

Mr. Gilbert said, men of acknowledged reputation, such as Mr. Balfe, and others, were not at all likely to compete, but that the competition would be very ardent among rising musicians. He would suggest that a prize should be offered for the best essay on the "Science of Music," as in these days music was almost entirely neglected as a science. He would also suggest that there should be a prize for the best production in music, such as for a symphony or an overture; and he believed that there were hundreds in London who had the ability to write symphonies and overtures, but who had not the means of getting them performed.

The Chairman said that the suggestion should be instantly taken into consideration by the council, and he trusted that Mr. Gilbert, from whom the suggestion had come, would help them in carrying it out, by inducing other composers to send in their music, which would be tried by the society once a month at a meeting, when competent judges would be present to decide as to its merit.

Mr. Rosenthal asked why engravers in the fine arts should be excluded, seeing that good engravers must necessarily be good artists. He moved a resolution accordingly, which Mr. Edmeston seconded.

Mr. Stuart said he was glad that engraving had been mentioned, as he considered that it was in need of encouragement, line engraving particularly, which, unless encouraged, threatened soon to expire. By their encouraging line engraving, the society would really be doing a great deal of good.

After some further discussion the motion that engraving be added to the list of prizes was carried unanimously.

The Chairman said that the council would take into consideration these suggestions, and if they found a difficulty in carrying out the scheme which had been just proposed, they would take an early opportunity of communicating with the members; though they would certainly make great exertions to accomplish what had been suggested. He believed that another matter worthy the consideration of the society was whether cases of struggling genius should not be singled out for wrapping the bronze prize in a £5 bank note, and whether a small subscription should not be raised for that purpose. He knew artists who were now living in flourishing circumstances, who, a few years ago, were involved in the greatest difficulties. There were many such cases, and he thought that if in such instances, besides giving a prize testimonial of merit, they gave, say a £10 note, the money would be valued at that time more than it would be at any other period of life.

Mr. Z. Bell moved a resolution that the prize committee consist exclusively of professional men.

Mr. Rosenthal seconded the motion.

A discussion ensued, in which the Chairman, Mr. Edmeston, Mr. Rosenthal, and other gentlemen took part, and Mr. Bell, at last, at the suggestion of the Chairman, agreed to withdraw his motion, in order that it might be more fully discussed at a special meeting on the subject. It was further agreed that in the circular convening the meeting, which would be sent to all the members, notice would be given of the motion.

The report, as amended, was then agreed to, and there being no further business to be transacted, the meeting separated, after a vote of thanks to the Chairman.

CHURCH MUSIC.—HARMONIUMS FOR CHURCHES.

(From The Church Remembrancer.)

An acquaintance with the mechanism of musical instruments, and the physical agency by which "effects" are produced, very frequently imparts a new pleasure to the music itself, and the intelligent listener may, to a great extent, realise the gratification of the more amply endowed artist, who by lip, bow, or touch of finger, has the power to call sweet sounds into being. But there is one instrument from which neither has, till very recently, been able to derive unalloyed gratification—one whose inventor had to do fierce battle with strong prejudices, as well as with sound objections, being meanwhile sensible of an existing defect beyond the grasp of a countervailing remedy. We allude to the Harmonium. When first introduced by M. Debaine, the inequality of power distributed through the key-board, and the peculiar character of sound, which was harsh and disagreeably metallic, left a strong impression on the mind that such an instrument was not likely ever to become a favourite one with the public, or that it would ever extend itself beyond the rank of a huge sound-creating toy. Once brought into notice, other minds beside that of M. Debaine were exercised upon improvements, and thus the first crude idea gradually unfolded itself, until M. Alexandre, of Paris, and Mr. Evans, of London, succeeded in bringing its powers and beauties into full view, and have thereby given instances of the triumph of genius to an extent bordering on the marvellous. Notwithstanding the various changes and extensions made during this progress towards perfection, the original principle pervades the entire range, whether the instrument be confined to a scale of four octaves, or is by some clever contrivance spread out to seven. The sounds are not produced from wood or string, but by metal strings termed reeds, which are made to vibrate by a current of air generated from bellows put into motion by the feet of the performer. By this contrivance the powers of the instrument are rendered subservient to an individual, and a complete band of music can be represented without any assistance from a second party. Armed with such an advantage, in conjunction with others yet unnamed, the harmonium is really an instrument of great value, and, becoming rapidly known as such, the progressionists—those whom we have specially quoted—are now "leading the world in their train."

The uses to which the harmonium chiefly commends itself are the church, the drawing-room, and the school-room. That designed for the services of the sanctuary does not possess the compound stops of the organ. It has only double and single octave stops; any note may be made to produce its octave and double octave: nothing more. Very satisfactory reasons are given for this, but chiefly that the harmonic thickening would produce disorder by the inevitable inversion and spreading of the chords—ninths would give out seconds and sevenths; seconds, sevenths, and ninths; and so with regard to the whole series—and because, in order to remain in true musical condition with such stops, it would be needful to use them only in pieces written in counterpoint invertible in octave, which is not done. The drawing-room harmonium differs from that of the church in its varieties of tone and power to imitate different instruments. With a full complement of fifteen stops the music of a complete band is at the disposal of a single performer, although a critical ear would very soon discover the distance of the relationship assumed by some of the solo stops to their great orchestral prototypes. For educational purposes the school harmonium is admirably adapted, seeing that it has sufficient capacity for the carrying out many a needful and an invaluable project. There is also another well worthy of attention viz., the Piano-Harmonium, an invention that gives the player the power of sustaining for an indefinite time a note, chord, or an arpeggio extending through the compass of the key-board after the fingers have ceased to press the keys. The prolongation of sound may occur with different degrees of intensity according to the register appended to it. Affixed to this instrument are two "knee-pieces" put in action by the knees of the player; the one to the right produces a prolongation of the sounds on the treble side; that on the left applies to the bass register: the swell and diminuendo are blended in a way similar to that of the ordinary harmonium, viz., pressure of the foot upon the bellows. The instruments thus far referred to, are of French manufacture under M. Alexandre; but there is yet another and a more extraordinary one named "The New Patent English Model Harmonium," with two rows of keys; and, as if to anticipate every want of the highly skilled as well as of the less gifted organist, this admirable deputy for the king of instruments is supplied with a complete set of German pedals of two octaves and a fourth, with independent pedal reeds—so that the Organo-Harmonium which owes its paternity to Mr. Evans may and ought to be considered as the ne plus ultra of the art, as it is in fact the nearest approach to the organ, both in point of delicacy, beauty, and usefulness, that has hitherto courted public examination.

Varied as the purposes are to which the instrument may be made available, its own proper sphere is that where sacred vocal music requires artificial aid. The sounds of the harmonium, being of rather slow emission, are better adapted for the legato style than any other, and peculiarly suitable to tender melodies and slow movements. It also possesses other important claims to notice, especially from those who take an interest in the singing in churches "remote from cities." The time has passed away when the clerk was your only singer, or the few unskilled monopolists in the gallery were allowed to distract the mind of the devout worshipper with conflicting ideas of music by their unmeaning sounds. The time has arrived for "the art divine" to assert its power, and to show its importance when rightly directed. Who can calculate its future triumphs, or set limits to its reign? Musical knowledge must extend; and it is incumbent upon all who are able, to aid in its diffusion. The efforts that are being continually made by the clergy and others in crowded districts, in order to further congregational singing, are well worthy consideration by every true friend of the Church in every nook and corner of this highly-favoured isle; and there appears to be no impediment whatever to successful attempts. In small country churches, where there are no funds to purchase an organ, or where, if a patron be found to present one, an organist could not be paid, the harmonium ably supplies its place. The ease with which sufficient knowledge of the instrument for playing purposes can be obtained, is another strong recommendation for its adoption. Some clergyman's family may readily be found to carry out the service. A few simple chords, that produce but little effect on the pianoforte would, if transferred to the harmonium, make "heavenly music." For the sum of ten guineas, an instrument of five octaves can be obtained, and this is quite capable of guiding the congregation in the way to singing "with the spirit and with the understanding also." A greater outlay would purchase greater power and a richer quality; but, as before remarked, the same principle exists in all. The vocal services in many of our country churches require attention; and as the mission of music will be incomplete until from the united family of man ascend the morning and evening hymn of praise to the beneficent Creator, the introduction of the harmonium appears to have been invented as likely to work out, in a great measure, so desirable an end.

DEATH.

ON 4th inst., Mr. William Appleby, aged 41 years, the faithful and devoted servant of Messrs. Davis and Phillips, of 25, Berwick-street, music-printers.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 7TH, 1860.

LAST week we quoted a French advertisement, or rather, an advertisement in the French tongue, as something to be admired; this week we introduce to the notice of our readers a concert programme, as something to be contemned. While music is making such strides over the length and breadth of the United Kingdom, it is sad to find one of our literary and scientific institutions entertaining its subscribers and patrons with such an interminable and uninteresting hodge-podge as the following:—

PART I.

Solo, Organ, Overture to the opera of "Oberon" ...	Weber.
Song, "Rage, thou angry storm"	Benedict.
Song, "Crossing the moor"	Weiss.
Grand Scena, "Softly sighs the voice of evening" ...	Weber.
Song, "Sally in our alley"	Old Air.
Canzonet, "Ye maidens in spring time"	Meyerbeer.
Aria, "Ombre légère," (Shadow song)	Meyerbeer.
Scena, "Still so gently o'er me stealing"	Bellini.
Solo, Trumpet	Harper.
New Song, "We were boys together"	Weiss.
Song, "Where art thou wandering, little child?" ...	F Mori.
*Quartette, "Spinning-wheel"	Flotow.

PART II.

Solo, Organ, Selection from "Acis and Galatea" ...	Handel.
*Duet "The Rataplan"	Donizetti.
New Ballad, "Margaretta"	Balfe.
Ballad, "The beating of my own heart"	Macfarren.
Ballad, "Thou art so near and yet so far"	Reichardt.
Christmas Song, "What bells are those"	B. Richards.
Song, "The queen of the sea"	Schlosser.
Naval Song, "Tom Bowling"	Dibdin.
Air, "Let the bright seraphim"	Handel.
Old English Song, "The wolf"	Shield.
Scotch Song, "Bonnie Prince Charlie"	Old Air.
*Quartet, "The fisherman's good night."	Bishop.

Four-and-twenty solos, "all in a row." We should have preferred the same number of blackbirds, in accordance with the old song. Not that the blackbirds would have warbled more sweetly than Mad. Lemmens Sherrington, or shouted more mellifluously than Mr. Sims Reeves (who, like Bottom, can, when it pleases him, "roar ye like any sucking-dove"), but that they would have warbled and shouted, for the major part, in a less monotonous tone. The "blackbirds" would, doubtless, now and then have twittered and sung in pairs, chirped inquartet, or screamed simultaneously, the whole "24" —if not in pedagogic harmony, at any rate in ornothologic unison. That is what we mean by being less monotonous. But at the Beaumont Institution, Beaumont-square, Mile-end, every feathered biped (except in the three instances signalised by asterisks)—from Mr. Reeves and Madame Lemmens to Miss Robina (Robin?) Bellingham—made melody in egotistic solitude, and thus, in the end, wearied and palled upon, instead of continuing to ravish and delight, the ears of the packed and solo-ridden witnesses. Two of these solos, too (for example the overture to Oberon on the organ!), were more curious than enchanting—"not quite beautiful," as Herr Molique would have said.

One might have imagined that the premonitory bit of counsel which stood at the head of the programme was wholly superfluous:—

"On account of the length of the programme, visitors are requested to refrain from encoring; they are respectfully reminded that the artists, and many of the public, reside at a long distance."

Not so, however; the Eastern dilettanti have very eager stomachs at a feast of music, and scarcely aware, perhaps, of the glut in store for them, began "encoring" at an early stage of the repast—in other words, insisted on being helped twice to more than one of the "plats" served up for their gratification. Thus before the second course (which contained, as may be gathered from the programme—carte? several "pieces of resistance"), the majority had had their fill, and with hunger and thirst assuaged, and stomachs overcharged, felt indifferently apathetic about what was to come after. To speak in trope—they had swallowed six dozen of oysters before they commenced dining. This the case, it might have been concluded that the author's premonitory piece of advice at the "heels" of the programme was just as oppressive as the one that figured at its "nob" was superfluous:—

"NOTICE.—Ladies and Gentlemen are respectfully but earnestly requested not to leave their seats until the conclusion of the Concert, as much annoyance and confusion is sometimes caused amongst the audience by persons moving in front of them a few minutes before the conclusion."

Such, however, was evidently the opinion of no end of yawning amateurs, whose ears were loth to drink in further sounds, whose eyes began to wink, whose heads to droop—in spite of Miss Robina Bellingham, when she tripped on to sing of Christmas and its bells. "What bells are those?"—sang the lady of the red-breast prename; but the assuaged mob, or rather the most thoroughly used-up section of it, would not wait till she had answered her own question, in the epigrammatic words of the poet, around whose neck Mr. Brinley Richards, while under the influence of the festive season, has, on this occasion, hung his lyre. How, indeed, was it possible to sit out, stand out, or even gape out, such a heavily multifarious infliction as this same banquet of solos?

Seriously, an institution like that in Mile-end-road ought to set a better, if not a graver, example. Why should they look at every other subject from a dignified point of view, and treat music as a toy with hardly skill enough in its construction to attract the curiosity even of thoughtful children?

THE death of Mr. Edward Wright is not so much felt as an actual loss by the playgoers of the present day, as it awakens a melancholy reminiscence of past merriment. For some time the prince of farceurs had been afflicted with a malady from which recovery was deemed impossible, and his name therefore had not lately stood on the list of our effective histrionic force.

If the demise of most other actors has caused us to lament an irreparable gap in the ranks of theatrical art, the death of Mr. Wright may be compared to the cessation of a dynasty. The late Mr. John Reeve, in the zenith of his popularity, connected with the post of Adelphi low comedian a sort of supremacy over the London public to which there was no parallel in any other theatre. To the holder of this exalted post belonged, of right, a freedom of dialogue which would not have been tolerated elsewhere, for a strict adherence to text was altogether impossible, where the mirth-seeking audience expected their despotic humorist to entertain them with a perpetual succession of new pleasantries. As the so-called "tyrant" of the ancient world was generally dependent on the democracy, so did the leading comedian of the Adelphi depend less on the rulers of the establishment than on the mass of the public who applauded. He was not only the admired artist; he was the merry companion, the jovial friend who made his hearers laugh away the troubles of the day, and was always ready to devise a new joke for their refreshment. That abnegation of individual identity, that absorption of self in the assumed part, which we admire so much in the Daddy Hardacre or the Sampson Burr of Mr. Robson, was not required in the Adelphi low comedian; nay, it would have been completely adverse to his interests. "The pet" theatre of London—loved on account of its very ugliness—was expected to show the pet actor himself unobscured by any artificial disguise. When Mr. J. M. Morton gave to one of his best farces the title Seeing Wright, he exactly expressed the humour of the Adelphi. The admirers of the great farceur actually did go to see Wright; not such and such a personage, sustained by Wright, but Wright himself. Those parts which will go down to posterity in connection with his name are precisely those in which he was most free to exhibit his own idiosyncrasy,—Muster Grinnidge, in Green Bushes, and the rheumatic gentleman in Harvest Home.

The Adelphi throne, left vacant by the death of John Reeve, was exactly fitted for Wright. The theatre seemed to have been made on purpose for him, and he to have been born for the use and behoof of the theatre. His début at the St. James's, more than twenty years ago, successful as it was, did not raise him to anything like a first position among the comedians of the day; his migrations, after he had once established himself at the Adelphi, were rather unfortunate than otherwise. As Ravel belongs to the Palais Royal, so did Wright belong to the Adelphi. There he shot up like a rocket to the acme of his fame: moved from the old boards, his lustre at once began to lose its brilliancy.

The curious in coincidences may dwell upon the fact that Mr. Wright did not long survive the demolition of the old theatre in which he gained his glory. We have said that he belonged exclusively to the Adelphi—we are inclined to limit the expression, and say that he belonged exclusively to the old Adelphi. The new house, admirably qualified for spectacle on the grand scale, is not favourable to the establishment of that intimacy between audience and actor which belonged to the days of Reeve and Wright.

No, the dynasty of farce despots is extinct. New generations bring with them new manners. Not only is the monarch dead, but the throne is crumbled away.

MR. ALBERT SMITH.—It gives us infinite pleasure to make known that Mr. Albert Smith has entirely recovered from his late severe attack, and that he has announced the resumption of his entertainment in the Egyptian Hall next week.

LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.

THIS now well-established institution has taken up quarters at the Dudley Gallery, Egyptian Hall, where its first concert for the season was held yesterday afternoon in presence of an audience both numerous and appreciative. Mr. Land, to whose talent, industry, and zeal the London Glee and Madrigal Union owes its honourable position, and who, besides performing excellent service as tenor, presides with musicianly skill at the pianoforte whenever accompaniments are required, was again at his post as director; while Mr. Thomas Oliphant (Hon. Sec. to the Madrigal Society), one of the most noted of our musical antiquarians and commentators, officiated with his accustomed earnestness and ability as literary illustrator,* prefacing each composition with apt and interesting remarks, and conveying a good deal of valuable information in a manner at once intelligible and unobtrusive. Mr. Oliphant touched briefly upon several important subjects connected with the rise and progress of vocal music in this country, in the course of his observations paying a marked and deserved tribute to Mr. William Chappell's admirable work called Popular Music of the Olden Time. The respective appreciations of Samuel Webbe's glee, "When winds breathe soft," and of the late Dr. Horsley generally as a glee composer, may have exhibited Mr. Oliphant rather in the light of an enthusiast for particular manifestations of somewhat ordinary (however respectable) talent than as a severe critical judge; but such enthusiasm as his tends in a healthy direction, and cannot possibly be injurious.

The first part of the programme yesterday—comprising specimens of an early period, up to the beginning of the seventeenth century—is worth quoting:—

Ancient Round (six voices), "Summer is icumen in"	Unknown.
The Kynge's Balade, "Passetyme with good companie"	Attributed to Henry VIII.
Madrigal, "Down in a flow'ry vale" (as originally set for the voices of men	Festa.
Kentish Wooing Song and Chorus, "I have house and land in Kent"	Unknown.
Madrigal, "In going to my lonely bed"	R. Edwardes.
Maypole Song and Chorus, "To the maypole, haste away"	Unknown.
Three Men's Song, "Strike it up, neighbour." (From T. Weelkes's "Ayres or Fantastic Spirits.")
Song, "My song's of a maid that charms our vale"	Traditional.
Dialogue, "In the merry spring"	T. Ravenscroft

The round for six voices ("Summer is icumen in") is one of the oldest specimens of English vocal part-music extant, and

* "PROLOGUE.

"My title here is of a novel nature,
They've dubb'd me Literary Illustrator:
But what that means is rather undefined,
In fact, I've not yet quite made up my mind.
'Twould seem that I'm to play a part like Chorus,
Who in the ancient drama comes before us
(Whene'er the audience are with doubts perplext),
To tell them plainly what is coming next.
Or like policeman, who with lantern dark,
In hidden nook or corner placed to mark
The movement of some thieving, roguish elf,
Turns his light full on all things but himself!
If such my duty here—then be it so.
I am content, if light I can put throw
On our performance—and will not complain,
Though I, policeman like, in shadow still remain."

fully as quaint as it is ancient. "The Kynge's Balade," though attributed to Henry VIII.,—a famous musician for a king—was known in the time of Henry VII.; its precise origin, however, is scarcely worth disputing, its merit being by no means on a par with the curiosity excited by its reputed authorship. Of all the compositions introduced in the first part—the incomparable madrigal of Festa, and the delicious Elizabethan "Maypole Song" (the solos in which were delivered carefully, if a little too slowly, by Miss Wells) excepted—the madrigal of Edwardes, "In going to my lonely bed," was the most attractive, both as an example of what sort of music could be written at the very commencement of the sixteenth century, and as a model of lyrical expression. Such words, it is true, might have inspired a contemplative musician in an age when music was still young:

"In going to my lonely bed
As one that would have slept,
I heard a wife sing to her child
That long had mourn'd and wept.

She sighed sore, and sang full sweet,
To lull the babe to rest,
That would not cease, but cried still
Upon its mother's breast.

She was full weary of her watch,
And grieved with her child;
She rocked it, and rated it,
Till that on her it smiled.

Then did she say, 'Now have I found
This proverb true to prove,
The falling out of faithful friends
Renewing is of love.'"

All the above pieces were sung in a very efficient manner, more especially the madrigals, which, nevertheless, we are accustomed to hear with a large number of voices to each part—certainly a more effective if not a more legitimate method. (It should be mentioned that the London Glee and Madrigal Union includes two ladies, Miss J. Wells and Miss Eyles, and four gentlemen, Messrs. Baxter, Cummings, Lawler, and Land, who are employed, according to the number of voices which the various compositions may call into request.) In the second part, familiar (too familiar!) glees of Webbe, Horsley, and Bishop, and Webbe's excellent catch, "Would you know my Celia's charms"—in which, notwithstanding her "fortit(y)-tude," and her "thirty lovers," the age of Madame Celia, the tender point of the argument, is shown to be "fifty-five"—were hit off to perfection. The solo-ballads, too, were remarkable, and above all, "Barbara Allen"—to the English (and as Mr. Chappell truly says, the best) melody, although Mr. Oliphant's compression of the Scotch words was used. This was sung with exquisite feeling by Miss Eyles, who imparted both to the poetry and the music the true and genuine expression, the audience being so pleased that they called upon her to repeat it. Miss Eyles was no less successful in "Weel may the keel row;" while Mr. Lawler, in Mr. Oxenford's capital song to the old tune of "Three merry men of Kent" ("May he who wears a sulky face") evinced the right kind of spirit. Encores were also awarded to Bishop's glee "The Fisherman's good night," and to the merry catch already cited, the salient points in which were "caught up" with infinite zest and humour by Messrs. Baxter, Cummings, Land, and Lawler, the usual hilarity being provoked at Celia's expense. Altogether the entertainment was first-rate of its class, and worthy the growing reputation of the "London Glee and Madrigal Union."

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Mr. Brinley Richards' "New Year's Concert" (so-called) on the 2nd instant, partook largely of the character formerly denominated "popular," ere that term had become associated with those Monday evening gatherings now familiar to every lover of good music. Not that we would thereby infer that the selection was by any means un-popular, as the crowded state of the room and warm applause frequently testified that a large section of the public can be delighted with a programme made up almost exclusively of light materials. The name of the bénéficiaire is of itself sufficiently popular to bring many of Mr. Brinley Richards' admirers, while the announcement of Miss Balfe, Mesdames Badia and Fiorentini, Herr Reichardt, Signors Sivori and Bottesini, would add considerably to the attraction. The audience, however, were doomed to be disappointed of the first-named lady, for reasons which were extensively circulated all over the room by means of a printed statement, with copies of the correspondence between Mr. Willert Beale and Mr. Balfe. Mad. Corbari (who will be remembered at the Italian Opera) supplied the place of the absentee, but was prevented from doing herself full justice by the fatigue under which she was evidently suffering, consequent upon a long journey, and to which allusion was made in an apology delivered by a gentleman evidently "unaccustomed to public speaking," and which only provoked a general titter. The "tempestuous" speech was, moreover, quite unnecessary, as the facts had already been made known by means of the circulars above mentioned.

Mr. Brinley Richards contributed two solos: the first, Mendelssohn's Andante and Capriccio; the second, of his own composition, a clever and brilliant fantasia on airs from Lucia di Lammermoor; both were heartily applauded. Signor Sivori, who has not been heard in England for some years, gave La Clochette of Paganini, and his own Tarantella, in a style which drew forth the warmest approbation; while Signor Bottesini, in his marvellous contra-basso solo, on airs from Beatrice di Tenda, evoked a furor, but wisely resisted the attempted encore, contenting himself with bowing his acknowledgments, in which example he was followed by the famous violinist. Mad. Badia displayed great energy in her chansons, "Nenella," and "Vive la belle," and was also recalled. Herr Reichardt, in his own charming and deservedly popular song, "Thou art so near and yet so far," produced a marked sensation, and elicited an encore so unanimous that it could not be resisted, and the Hungarian tenor repeated the last two verses to the delight of all. Mad. Fiorentini's scena from Maria di Rohan, and Herr Engel's harmonium solo, gave much satisfaction; and Mr. Benedict conducted with his well-known ability.

A YOUNG ENGLISH MUSICAL GENIUS.—The Impartial de Boulogne sur Mer, of the 29th Dec., contains the following paragraph:—"Several musicians and amateurs of this town have spoken to us of the very extraordinary talent manifested by a young child of eleven years of age, Mdlle. Annie C——, brought up in Boulogne, and belonging to an English family. This surprising child is endowed with the sentiment of music to so eminent a degree, that she reads and sings at sight music the most difficult, by whatever master, and of whatever style. She is likewise a pianist of considerable proficiency and power, but it is especially as a singer that she displays exceptional and most astonishing qualities. We are led to hope that this young artist will be allowed to sing at one of our forthcoming Philharmonic Concerts, for the benefit of the poor."—[We believe that the young child referred to in the foregoing paragraph is the daughter of a gentleman connected with the London press, who is well known in musical, dramatic, and literary circles.]—Morning Star, January 5.

THE BLIND FIDDLER.

THE wind rudely whistles, whilst here I sit alone;
As mocking my misery, in harsh exulting tone,
But, though friendless and poor, and none to care for me,
Rude Boreas shall hear, I still can happy be.

Through the crannies of my hovel, he sports with my rags,
And laughs down the chimney, with voice like some old hag's;
Let him laugh, let him howl, 'tis nothing unto me;
My fiddle and my bow shall bid him blush and flee!

No fire is in my grate, no firing in my store;
Nor had I so much food, but I could have taken more:
So I'll warm and fill my soul—this, this must do for me—
Come, old fiddle, you and I will sing right merrily!

Like you, I cannot see; like you, my soul has wings;
And both by music toe are blest, deep down in our heart's strings:
Full many a weary mile, companion—all, to me
And poor, lamented Tray; old fiddle, loved are ye!

We've sang by many a hill-side, in summer's burning heat;
And many a sordid spirit stirred within the busy street:
We've faced cold frost and snow,—in all still true to me,
Old fiddle, thou hast ever been: few couples so agree!

Thy wailings and thy sorrows, thy griefs, thy every joy,
Have all been mine, since when I was a poor blind boy:
Without thee had this world been a desert blank to me—
Kind Providence well mated us in happy unity.

Rememb'rest thou the old churchyard, the cypress trees that wave,
Beneath which we a requiem sad sang o'er my mother's grave,
Ere morning dawned, and ere the sun, which gives no light to me,
Illum'd the west—'tis said, old friend—in glorious majesty?

Oh! when shall I go where she is? and shall I see the light?
Oh, call me, mother, up to thee, from this long, dreary night!
Yet, old companion, oh, that you could go along with me,
And share my joy; for, in my woe, no friend could truer be!

Then, whistle on, rude Boreas! whilst I sit here alone;
Myself and fiddle will, for that, ring out a merry tone:
Though friendless too and poor I am, there's One who cares for me;
He'll call me to my mother yet, and give me eyes to see!

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER.—It is not often, says the Manchester Guardian, at least in the provinces, that such a constellation of vocal talent as that formed by Mad. Catherine Hayes, Mad. Louisa Vinning, Miss Fanny Huddart, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Santley, makes its appearance, and therefore the large attendance at the Free-trade Hall, on New Year's Eve, was a thing safely to be calculated on in this music-loving city of Manchester, especially as the programme was lengthy, miscellaneous, and popular. No tax was laid on the imaginative powers of the audience, who had only to listen and enjoy. The tax was rather upon the artists, for, from the commencement of the concert, a system of encoring began on the part of a small section of the audience, unjust towards the artists themselves, and most offensive to the great bulk of the audience. It might have been thought that a programme consisting of no less than nineteen pieces was sufficient to satisfy even a musical gourmand; not so on this occasion. The tax seemed to press most heavily upon Mr. Sims Reeves. He was set down for three songs, but the unruly section alluded to had determined that these three should be six at least, and not repetitions, but different songs. Mr. Reeves, to his honour be it recorded, did what on a recent occasion he did in London, he made a dead stand against this un-English and tyrannical attempt at coercion. Twice he acknowledged, by a bow, the applause that followed his "Come into the garden, Maud," but resolutely declined either repeating it, or substituting anything else. When he again appeared to sing Dibdin's song of "Tom Bowling," he was greeted with groans and other marks of disapprobation. He had, however, taken up his position, and announced respectfully, but firmly, that when silence was restored, but not till then, he would commence his song. Honour to Mr. Reeves; his is the true English courage, and not the bullying demand for six things when three only have been paid paid for. Facts like these point to the necessity of abolishing the absurd system of encoring altogether. If Mr. Reeves himself will on all occasions do what he did on Saturday evening, and if public artists will always exhibit the same courage, the thing is done. Let us now briefly return to the performances themselves. In the "Irish Mother's Lament," Mad. Catherine Hayes was magnificent; her "Auld Robin Gray" was almost as good; but the beauty both of Moore's melody, "The harp that once through Tara's halls," and "Home, sweet home," was damaged by a dragging of the time for which there does not appear to us any justification. The happy criticism of Dr. Johnson's style by Goldsmith, that the great lexicographer made the little fishes into great whales, might not inaptly be applied to Mad. Hayes. Mad. Vinning's best effort was Bishop's song "The ray of hope," with accompaniment on the clarinet by Mr. Lazarus, which was beautifully sung and beautifully accompanied. Miss Huddart had her usual success in Hullah's "Three Fishers." Not in any way behind the other vocal performances were Mr. Santley's rendering of Mr. Brinley Richards' characteristic "Suliote War Song," and the romance from Meyerbeer's Dinorah, "Ah, now I feel the burthen," both of which exhibited vigour of conception as well as artistic vocalisation. These pieces are, of course, smaller things than the bass songs of the Messiah, which he sung so finely on a recent occasion; but they, too, exhibited, in a marked degree, the stride Mr. Santley has made in his profession. A pianoforte solo, by Mr. Osborne Williams, and two clarionet solos by Mr. Lazarus, agreeably relieved the vocal programme.

BIRMINGHAM—(From a Correspondent).—The concert given by Mr. Glydon, at our Town Hall, on Thursday evening, brought a crowded audience. Rossini's "L' usato ardir," by Mad. Louisa Vinning, Miss Fanny Huddart, and Mr. Santley, was followed by Brinley Richards' spirited "Suliote War song," given in a manner by Mr. Santley that fully confirmed the favourable reports of the metropolitan press. Mr. Santley's rendering of the romance from Dinorah was also excellent. Miss Fanny Huddart, by the pathos she threw into Hullah's "Three fishers," obtained an enthusiastic encore. Madame Vinning won a warm encore in "'T'was within a mile of Edinbro'," to which she responded with "Coming through the rye." The clarinet playing of Mr. Lazarus was marked with its usual beauty of tone and refinement of style. The concert would have been in every respect enjoyable, had not the pleasure of the evening been marred by the disgraceful treatment received by Mr. Sims Reeves at the hands of a portion of the audience. The great tenor, on his entrée, was received enthusiastically; and he gave his first song, "Under the greenwood tree," in a manner that called down immense applause, mingled with cries of "Encore" Mr. Reeves returned to the orchestra, and bowed his acknowledgments. Immediately on his retirement a gentleman appeared and addressed the audience, stating that Mr. Sims Reeves begged indulgence towards himself in the matter of encores, as he had only recently recovered from a long and severe illness; that, however willing he might be to comply with their wishes as to repetitions, he must refrain, inasmuch as, if he did not, he felt he should not be able to fulfil his engagements elsewhere on the morrow. Mr. Reeves' second song was "Margaretta," for which he received a redemand; but, trusting to the effect of the apology which had been made for him, he again merely returned and bowed. Later in the evening, however, on his appearance to sing "Come into the garden, Maud," he was received with applause mingled with loud hisses, and, in two or three instances, with expressions that would have been deemed coarse in a gin-palace. After the symphony had been twice played, Mr. Sims Reeves began his song; but he had not proceeded far when, overcome by his feelings, he fairly broke down, and addressing the audience, inquired why he was to be subjected to such indignities? He stated that he was there to do his duty; he had done it up to that moment, singing everything set down to him to the very best of his abilities; but he frankly confessed, that astonishment at the reception he had just experienced had at once taken away his power of singing altogether. The volley of applause which followed these few words, proved that the bulk of the audience had no sympathy with the assailants, who, we hope and trust, for the character of the musical audience of Birmingham, were strangers to the town, drawn hither by the festive season. Really, it is time that a step should be put to the nuisance of the continual encore system, a system that has been begotten by the vulgar greed of getting from a great singer six songs instead of three, as bargained for, and fostered by the determination of ill-conditioned gents to enjoy frequently the most trashy works at the expense of the time and patience of those who can appreciate music as an elegant art, and enjoy it with moderation. Encores, under such circumstances, must soon cease to be considered an honour by true artists. Mr. Reeves, like most men who have attained eminence by their own exertions, has been subjected to calumny. Habits and caprices, which we are in a position to know are quite foreign to his nature, have been industriously imputed to him. We sincerely trust that, for the future, he will resolutely refuse to comply with the demands of the encore nuisance, and thus prevent his detractors from filching his voice from him as they would his good name. By such a course, he would do justice to himself and to his profession, and confer a benefit on all who can enjoy good music rationally.

COLCHESTER—(From a Correspondent).—The third popular concert of the new series took place in the Public Hall last evening, and was in every respect successful. The hall was filled, while the utmost order was maintained throughout. The programme was of the usual diversified character, the most noticeable piece being Haydn's Toy Symphony, performed by two violins and a violoncello, with accompaniment of penny whistles, Dutch trumpets and other toy instruments. The symphony, though composed by the great musician expressly for the amusement of children, was very successful last evening in affording amusement to hearers of a larger growth. The duet "What are the wild waves saying?" and the song "I cannot mind my wheel," were cleverly sung, and a selection of instrumental music performed in excellent style.

GLASGOW.—The City Hall Concerts maintain their popularity. Change is ostensibly and necessarily the order of the day. From the commencement the Union have seen this, and, consequently, scarcely a night passes without some change, while once a month we have a clean bill of fare. On Saturday last the principal attraction, and for one night only, was Miss Rebecca Isaacs, from Drury Lane and the Italian Opera. We confess we have listened to her in better voice; nevertheless, her performances were rapturously received by the large audience. Mr. Fraser is decidedly the genteelest comic vocalist, we think, yet brought forward at these entertainments. Mr. D. Lambert, by his performances, did not belie his metropolitan celebrity, while the band of the Royal Sussex Militia kept most excellent time and tune.—Glasgow Gazette, Dec. 24th, 1859.

WORCESTER.—The performance of the selection of Handel's Messiah, at the Music Hall, passed off exceedingly well, and added another laurel to the many already won by the indefatigable secretary to the Harmonic Society, the Rev. R. Sarjeant, by whom, and the active members of a committee, all things were arranged. The attendance was very large, there being nearly 700 persons present, the majority of whom were connected with the manufacturing establishments of the city. The performers were local, with the exception of Miss Amelia Hill, of Birmingham, who acquitted herself with great credit. Messrs. Mason and Briggs, of the Cathedral choir, and other gentlemen, aided the managers of the concert with their presence, so that each department was rendered complete. Mr. Jabez Jones ably officiated as conductor.

RYDE—(From a Correspondent).—On Christmas Day a new mass, by Dr. Holloway, M.A., of this town, was performed, for the first time, at St. Marie's Catholic Church. The composer himself presided at the organ. Considering that the music is somewhat chromatic and elaborate, the singers deserve much credit for the careful manner in which it was executed. The cornet-playing of Mr. H. Austin was instrumental in no small degree in promoting the success which attended the first performance of a new work of no small difficulty.

BURY CRITICISM.—Accrington Choral Society.—This society gave, for the first time in Accrington, Haydn's grand oratorio, The Creation, on Friday evening, December 23rd, in the Assembly Room of the Pee Institution. The audience, as usual in concerts, was large, being composed of the élite of the town. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Sunderland, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Weiss; principal instrumentalist, Mr. Carrodus. We have seldom heard Mrs. Sunderland in finer voice. She is an exception to the generality of these designated "stars," for her pronunciation was so distinct and clear—her words so well expressed—that we were not only enabled to admire the beauties of the music, but the sentiment of the poetry. We do not know anything so much overlooked in various oratorios as the clear pronunciation, which, to our ear, is one of the greatest beauties of correct singing. When the pronunciation is associated with musical ability, its effect finds its way both to the head and the heart of the audience. Mrs. Sunderland in this particular is a pleasing exception. Her voice, her gesture, her general intonation in the solo, "The marvellous works," appeared to us to be the climax of sublimity. Mr. Lockey, although not possessing that graceful gesture which distinguishes Mrs. Sunderland, yet the correct taste he exhibits, blended with his fine broad tenor, in a great measure compensates for what is wanted in gesture. His rendering of the air "Now vanish before the holy beams," was a gem, and it fully developed his musical abilities. We should be glad if Mr. Weiss would dispense with that stiff attitude which appears so ungraceful in singers. It is a matter of surprise that that gentleman, possessing great musical abilities, combined with excellent voices, admirably adapted for the part they take, should neglect such an important element as correct gesture. If they would devote a little more attention to the study of nature, observe the various abilities and intonations of voice, as expressed in the development of the passions, such as grief, anger, and joy, and combine these natural intonations with correct musical taste, then what a wonderful effect would be produced upon an audience, to what refinement it would lead in this particular branch of art, which at the present time is so much cultivated by all classes. In spite of these drawbacks, it would be unpardonable were we to say that there was nothing attractive in the singing of Mr. Weiss. The air, "Now Heaven in fullest glory shone," was highly appreciated by the audience, and his powerful bass voice was fully developed. As regards the chorus singer and instrumentalists, it would not be right on our part to begin to distinguish—there was such a just appreciation of the composer's idea, such a unity of action from all the members, numbering upwards of 160 performers, that we do not feel inclined to select any one for particular criticism. Great credit is due to Mr. Barnes, the conductor, whose fine conception of taste, and just execution, are so well known to the musical world. It is really pleasing to note the great improvement that has taken place of late years in reference to the working people's taste for sacred music. A few years back it was considered a prodigy to hear or see any working man take part in Handel's Messiah, Haydn's Creation, or the compositions of Mozart. Not so now. In every town where the population numbers 10,000, a choral society may be found, whose instrumental and vocal performances exhibit a correctness of taste which, a few years ago, would have been applauded in any aristocratic saloon. This proves that the people are growing more refined in their taste for the sublime and beautiful.

[We have copied the above from the Bury Guardian, because it combines with its extreme oddity another welcome proof of the continued advance of musical taste in this country.—ED.]

WINDSOR CASTLE.—The choristers and the following gentlemen of the Chapel Royal, St. George's, viz.: Messrs. Mitchell, Bridgewater, Knowles, Marriott, Dyson, Whiffin, Bransome, Barnby, and Lambert, under the direction of Dr. Elvey, had the honour of singing before Her Majesty, at Windsor Castle, on Saturday, the 24th.

SCHINDLER'S LIFE OF BEETHOVEN.*

(From Dwight's Journal of Music—Boston).

OUR readers have, many of them at least we hope, some acquaintance with an English work known as Moscheles' Life of Beethoven, the name of the real author not appearing upon the title-page. That author is in fact the above named Anton Schindler, and the body, of the English work is but a translation from the German. Schindler's first edition appeared at Münster, in Westphalia, in 1840; a second with a few additions in the appendix, in 1845; and now in October, 1859, a third, "re-written and with additions."

Schindler has for more than twenty years been one of the "best abused" men in Germany. In how far he has deserved the treatment which he has received from Spohr, Mendelssohn, Dorn, and from the partizans of each in the German musical world, it is not our purpose to inquire. He has certainly never hesitated to express his opinion as to the manner in which those great musicians have thought proper to conduct Beethoven's works at festivals, and in terms perhaps more remarkable for plainness than politeness. Musicians in all parts of Germany will warn you against Schindler, as being unworthy of credence—and yet whoever writes upon Beethoven plunders him! From a pretty extensive examination of the musical literature of Germany which can by any possibility throw light upon Schindler's statements, not excepting the controversies, which have appeared between him and others in the Kölner Zeitung, and other non-musical newspapers, we venture to say, that as Wegeler and Ries' Notizen are the grand fountain of our knowledge of the younger years of the great composer, so Schindler's book is the most important work upon his later years. As biographical authorities, the books of Lenz and Marx are contemptible. This new edition of Schindler's work is a new addition to our knowledge of Beethoven, and contains very much important and interesting matter. And precisely because it is so important and interesting, and because we hope it will yet find its way into the world in an English dress, we propose to give our readers the means of correcting certain mistakes into which the author has fallen.

* Biographie von Ludwig van Beethoven, verfasst von ANTON SCHINDLER. Dritte, neu bearbeitete und Vermehrte Auflage. 2 vols. 8vo. Münster, 1860 (59).

Schindler lives near Frankfort-on-the-Maine. He has there revised his work and prepared it for the new edition. But Beethoven lived and died at Vienna, and no one, who has not by long-continued labour collected the scattered authorities in that city, can hope to write of his early life, the period of his great productiveness and activity, without falling into many mistakes. When Schindler speaks from his own observation and experience, we are rarely, if ever, able to correct him: in all other cases he is as liable to be misinformed as any other, who writes without the foundation of broad and comprehensive research. We repeat: because we think so highly of the importance of Schindler's work, it is that we give the following list of some of the principal errors into which he has fallen.

Vol. I., p. 3. For the spider story, see Disjouval's Arachnologie, or Schilling's Lexicon der Tonkunst, where it will be found it rests upon a mistake, confounding the names Berthaume and Beethoven.

P. 4. Schindler supposes Neefe had left Bonn and settled in Frankfort in 1782. The fact is, that Neefe was there only by leave of absence for a short time. Bonn remained his home until August, 1796—nearly four years after Beethoven had left it for ever. This is important, as at once clearing up divers mystifications, in which Schindler is here, on pages four and five, involved.

P. 6. Schindler is a year too late in the date of the publication of the Waldstein Sonata, op. 53,—for 1806 read 1805.

P. 10. The Sonatas copied into Bossler's' Blumenlese, Mr. S. thinks are utterly lost. We have reason to think they are the three youthful Sonatas of which we know one copy of the original edition is to be seen in the Royal Library at Berlin, and which have, within a few years, been reprinted, both in that city, and by Holle, in Wolfenbüttel.

P. 11. Note. The variations on a March by Dressler, we have reason to believe were written when the author was twelve years old, and that they preceded the Sonatas, notwithstanding on the title-page of the latter we read "by Louis van Beethoven, aged eleven years." Our reasons for this opinion we reserve for another occasion and place.

P. 44. Beethoven was in Berlin certainly in June 1796. That this was his first and last artistic tour is not correct, if Tomaschek may be trusted, who says expressly that Beethoven gave concerts in Prague in 1798.

P. 50. Mr. S. says, (referring to his catalogue, pp. 56, et seq.,) "It may be taken for a certainty that no one of the works noted farther on was written before the year 1794." To this we simply say here, "doubted."

P. 54. Mr. S. doubts the anecdote related by Reis, that the Trios, Op. 1, were played in the presence of Haydn, before they were published, on the ground that the great composer left Vienna in 1794, and the Trios appeared while he was still in England, in 1795. Haydn left Vienna, January 19, 1794, and Beethoven advertised his Trios to be printed by subscription, May 16, 1795. This is true, and yet we trust Ries in this case, and that they were already written and played to Haydn before the close of 1793. We have no space here for our reasons.

PP. 55—58. In regard to the date of publication of at least half the works mentioned on these pages, Mr. S. is a year out of the way.

P. 57. The first performance of the first concert for pianoforte in C, says Mr. S., was in spring, 1800. We know of its having been performed in public twice during the year 1795. It was the second concerto which was given with the septet and first symphony.

P. 78. The ballad, "Prometheus," greatly extended in form by Vigana, with much selected music, instead of and in addition to that of Beethoven, was produced at Milan, May 22, 1813, from whence it went the round of the principal theatres of Italy.

P. 93. As to the Christus am Oelberg (Christ on the Mount of Olives), Ries says expressly, that Beethoven was putting the finishing touches to it upon his arrival in Vienna, in 1800, (in the spring). Schindler intimates that it was not performed until 1803—probably correct—and then only once given. We know of three performances of it within the space of a year—from April, 1803 to April, 1804.

P. 95. Mr. S. says, that the "objects of Beethoven's autumnal love was well-known to him," and that she was Marie L. P——r (Pachler). He is nevertheless mistaken. The "autumnal love" dated, as Mr. S. shows upon the same page, at least five years before 1816. We know that Beethoven had a project of marriage in his mind in 1810, from another source—and this must have been with the object of the "autumnal love"—i. e., when he was thirty-nine years of age. "Mark how plain a tale," &c. In 1810, Miss Koschak was sixteen years old, at the age of twenty-two—in 1816 she married Dr. Pachler, and in 1817 came, for the first time, to Vienna! while Beethoven never was in Gratz, her native place.

P. 97. The date of the letters to Julia Gruiciardi was 1801. Of this we have proof.

P. 99. Mr. S. dates the first performance of the second symphony, and the C minor P. F. Concerto, July, 1804. They were both given in the spring of 1803. Before that?

P. 101. We understand Mr. Schindler to make Bernadotte ambassador to the Austrian Court in 1804 or 1805. In fact, he reached Vienna in February, 1798, and left April 15 following.

P. 112. "The American ship-captain Bridgetower." What can Mr. Schindler mean? Bridgetower had been a "wonder child" as violinist, and came to Vienna as a virtuoso, and indeed one in the service of the Prince of Wales (George IV.). Rudolph Kreutzer was not in Vienna in 1805, so far as we can learn—had been there seven years before. As to the variations, op. 35, they preceded the Heroic Symphony—they, were not "etwas später," (somewhat later).

P. 118. Paer and Beethoven were at work, the one upon his Leonore, the other upon his Fidelio, at the same time—although Paer produced his a year in advance of the other.

P. 119. Beethoven's opera was never named Leonore upon the theatre bills—we have seen all that belong to the years 1805-6. Perhaps upon the large street bills, but this we doubt.

P. 126. "So rested the opera again, and again full eight years passed," before it came upon the stage. Not at all; hardly a year of the eight in which it was not given, and in fact several times.

P. 140. "Of the grand works, except the Sonata in F, Op. 55, in this year (1806), none appeared." Our list gives the following:—

Sonata in F. op. 54.
Trio for two oboes and English horn.
Trio arranged for stringed instruments.
Andante Favori, in F 3-8.
Nos. 1, and 2, and 3, of six gr sonatas for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, op. 60.
No. 1, 2, of three grand Trios, op. 61.
16 variations for pianoforte, violin and viol oncello, op. 44.
Sinfonia Eroica.

Quite a difference between us and Mr. Schindler.

P. 141. Four symphonies in one concert! An error, as we think.

P. 184. Beethoven was not in Linz in the spring of 1812, and the memory of Count Brunswick (who is the authority), has here failed him and misled Schindler. But the passage is worth translating. "According to his account (Brunswick's) written me in 1843, the composition of the Ruins of Athens falls into the first month of the year 1812; at the same time the plans of the two symphonies (7th and 8th), of which the eighth, in F, was wrought out during Beethoven's to his brother Johann, in Linz, in the spring. Thence he journeyed to Teplitz, where the overture to King Stephen was written. After his return, the strengthened master went to work upon the symphony in A, No. 7." Now it is curious to see how many errors can be contained in so few words.

1. Beethoven was not in Linz, in the spring of 1812.

2. Both the Ruins of Athens music, and that of King Stephen, had been composed, sent to Pesth, rehearsed, and made ready for performance on the 9th of February.

3. The eighth symphony was not written out in the spring of 1812, at Linz—as Beethoven was not there!

4. The seventh symphony was not written out after Beethoven's return from Teplitz, having been already finished before May 8, 1812.

5. The overture to King Stephen was not written in Teplitz, 1812, having been performed six months before, and not in Pesth alone.

6. The first notice of the eighth symphony is in a letter of Beethoven, written in the spring of 1813.

PP. 207—212. These six pages of the dates of first performances and publication of works by Beethoven, contain many inaccuracies of more or less importance; the more important ones, however, may be corrected from the foregoing.

Having now reached the period at which Mr. Schindler made the acquaintance of the great master, we have only to thank him for the amount of valuable and interesting matter which he gives us in relation to Beethoven's later years. One curious mistake, however, we cannot pass over without notice.

In Vol. II., p. 129, is a note from Beethoven to Stephen von Breuning, which was sent with a picture of the composer. "Behind this picture, my dear good Steffen," &c.

This note Mr. S. dates 1826, and says the picture was the lithograph, by Stieler. In fact, the picture is a miniature on ivory, and was presented to Breuning before 1810.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

BACHIANA, Preludes and Fugues, by John Sebastian Bach (not included in the 48 preludes and fugues), as played at all the classical concerts, in six numbers, each 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

THE HARMONIOUS BLACKSMITH. Composed by Handel for the Pianoforte from his suite de pièces in E major. The only correct edition, as played at all the classical concerts, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SACRED SONG, "Awake, little Pilgrim." Composed by Maurice Cobham; the poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond. Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late.

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MEYERBEER'S Setting of the "Lord's Prayer," for four voices (soprano, alto, tenor, and bass), is published, with English and Latin text, in score, 3s., separate vocal parts, 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S NEW SONG, "Wert thou mine," Composed by Frank Mori, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "ETHEL." Romance for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W. "Mr. Thackery's Ethel Newcombe has inspired the composer with graceful and elegant ideas, in the form of what may be called a romance without words, exceedingly vocal and richly accompanied."—Daily News.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "SULIOTE WAR SONG." Sung by Mr. Santley. Price 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "HARP OF WALES," Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "BLIND MAN AND SUMMER." Sung by Miss Palmer. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR," sung by the Composer, with the most distinguished success, is published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME," sung with the greatest éclat by the composer is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY." The New Song composed by ADOLPH SCHLOESSER, now singing with the greatest success by Madame Lemmens Sherrington, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARROW AND THE SONG," New Four-Part-Song for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses), sung with great success by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, and enthusiastically encored, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"THE FAIRY'S EVEN-SONG," New Four-Part-Song, for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses) sung with great success by the Polyhymnian Choir, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BLUETTES CLASSIQUES, Selected from the Works of the great Pianoforte composers.

		s.	d.
No. 1. DUSSEK.—"Il pastore Alpigiano," Air Varié	.. ..	3	0
2. STEIBELT.—"Papageno" (Zauberflöte)	.. .. ..	2	6
3. " "Monostatos"	.. .. ..	3	0
4. DUSSEK.—"La chasse" .. (In the Press)	..	3	0

"They are quite simple, easy to execute and to understand, and yet the most accomplished performer and the most refined amateur will find them delightful to play."—Daily News.—London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BALFE'S NEW SONGS.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee:
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle sir,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then,
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

London: Duncan Davison, & Co., 241, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONG FOR CHRISTMAS.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." By LOVELL PHILLIPS. Beautifully illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"As graceful and vocal a song as we have met with for a long time."—Musical World.—London: Duncan Davison, 244, Regent-street, W.

BOOSEY'S
CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS'
ALBUMS.

CONTAINING TWENTY FOUR SONGS,

In two books, price 3s. 6d. each, or complete in an elegant volume, cloth and gold, 7s. 6d.

BOOK 1st.

"KISS ME QUICK."
"WILLIE, WE HAVE MISSED YOU."
"HOOP DE DOODEN DO."
"HAZEL DELL."
"WE ARE COMING, SISTER MARY."
"BING DE BANJO."
"HARD TIMES."
"GOOD NEWS FROM HOME."
"WAIT FOR THE WAGGON."
"COME WHERE MY LOVE LIES."
"BEAUTIFUL STAR."
"TOLL THE BELL."

BOOK 2nd.

"GENTLE JENNY GRAY."
"THE MOCKING BIRD."
"THE GREENWOOD DELL."
"ELLEN BAYNE."
"DO THEY MISS ME AT HOME."
"SEEING NELLY HOME."
"GENTLY DOWN THE STREAM."
"MAGGIE BY MY SIDE."
"LET ME KISS HIM FOR HIS MOTHER."
"EULALIE."
"I'M OFF TO CHARLESTOWN."
"MINNIE MOORE."

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

SUNG WITH EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS BY MR. SIMS REEVES.

"MARGARETTA,"
BALLAD,

THE POETRY BY

G. P. MORRIS, Esq.

COMPOSED BY

M. W. BALFE.

When I was in my teens,
I loved dear Margaretta,
I know not what it means,
I cannot now forget her.
That vision of the past
My head is ever crazing,
Yet when I saw her last,
I could not speak for gazing.
Queen of rural maids,
My dark-eyed Margaretta,
The heart the mind upbraids,
That struggles to forget her.

My love I know will seem
A wayward, boyish folly;
But, ah; it was a dream
Most sweet, most melancholy.
Were mine the world's domain,
To me 'twere fortune better
To be a boy again,
And dream of Margaretta.
Oh! mem'ry of the past,
Why linger to regret her?
My first love was my last,
And that is Margaretta.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

LAURENT'S CHRISTMAS WAITS COMIC QUADRILLE, illustrated in colours by Brandard. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S MISTLETOE POLKA. Illustrated in colours. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S DONNA JULIA VALSE. Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELOVED STAR WALTZ (companion to the Maud Valse). Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MADAME OURY'S CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS' GRAND GALOP DI BRAVURA. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM. Twelve Pieces for Pianoforte, bound, with Illustrations. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BALFE'S ALBUM FOR 1860, price One Guinea, superbly bound and illustrated, containing 14 entirely new Songs, Duets, &c. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

100 DANCES FOR PIANOFORTE, 2s. 6d.—Just ready, BOOSEYS' NATIONAL DANCE-BOOK, containing 100 Reels, Country Dances, Jigs, Strathspeys, &c., for Pianoforte, large size, 2s. 6d. Also, just published, Strauss' 25 best Waltzes, 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BALFE'S NELLY GRAY, by BRINLEY RICHARDS. Just published, price 3s., Balfe's celebrated Song, Nelly Gray, arranged for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards. Order Balfe's. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE SERPENTINE QUADRILLE, by Burckhardt, splendidly illustrated by Brandard, in colours, with a comical view of skating on the Serpentine, Hyde-park. Price 3s. This popular quadrille is founded on the following favourite airs:—

Who shall be fairest?
Come into the garden, Maud.
Nelly Gray.
Phœbe dearest.
The green trees.
The Village Blacksmith, &c., &c.

BOOSEY AND SONS, Holles-street.

"HAIL THE SUNSHINE, WARM AND LOVELY." Song. The poetry by Richard Neal. Published this day. Price 2s. Boosey and Sons, Musical Library, 28, Holles-street.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dedicé à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dedicé à Edouard Roedtel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

£6 6S. WHEATSTONE'S 5-OCTAVE HARMONIUM (New Patent) has double pedals, with soft, agreeable quality of tone.

£3 3S. WHEATSTONE'S PATENT CONCERTINA, 3½ Octaves (48 Keys), rosewood, Wheatstone and Co., Inventors, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

MR. HOWARD, Surgeon-Dentist, 52, Fleet-street, has introduced an entirely new description of ARTIFICIAL TEETH, fixed without springs, wires, or ligatures. They so perfectly resemble the natural teeth as not to be distinguished from the originals by the closest observer. They will never change colour or decay, and will be found superior to any teeth ever before used. This method does not require the extraction of roots, or any painful operation, will support and preserve teeth that are loose, and is guaranteed to restore articulation and mastication. Decayed teeth stopped and rendered sound and useful in mastication. 52, Fleet-street. At home from 10 till 5.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS,

MANUFACTURED BY

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

IN giving a final answer to the calumnious statements of Messrs. CHAPPELL and Co., BOOSEY and SONS would like to know what right these gentlemen have to constitute themselves their critics, and to subject them to the expense and trouble of answering a series of malicious libels, which, were it not for the delay, Messrs. BOOSEY would respond to only in a Court of Justice.

Although confident that the animus of Messrs. CHAPPELL'S attack, and the absurdity of their statements, will be thoroughly appreciated—still, to avoid all possible misunderstanding, Messrs. BOOSEY beg again most distinctly to deny having ever published a testimonial obtained from the exhibition of an Alexandre Harmonium. Every testimonial which they have published (with two exceptions,) has been given since the establishment of their own manufactory, and after the examination of a large stock of instruments. The two exceptional testimonials were given to Mr. EVANS, when he introduced for the first time his improvements, and which, as already stated, were added to the skeleton of an Alexandre Harmonium, which he had entirely reconstructed. If these alterations consisted in filing the reeds, it is quite obvious that M. ALEXANDRE, or any other maker, could produce equally good instruments as those of Mr. EVANS, which, hitherto, they have not been able to approach.

The public may not care to know anything about Messrs. BOOSEY'S manufactory, but as Messrs. CHAPPELL have alluded to it, it is necessary to state that it was opened in January last, when Messrs. BOOSEY'S connection with Mr. EVANS began. Owing to the very great demand for his Harmoniums, it had to be removed to more extensive premises in October—a fact which will account for Messrs. CHAPPELL describing it as a few weeks old, and for their animosity in attacking EVANS'S HARMONIUMS.

As to Herr ENGEL, Messrs. BOOSEY and SONS repeat, what they are prepared to prove, that he offered them his exclusive services to perform on EVANS'S Harmonium at the termination of his engagement with his present employer, M. ALEXANDRE, in February next; a fact which they alluded to, not as a compliment to their Harmoniums, but as a proof of the worth of any opinion of Herr ENGEL, whose impudent assertions, that Messrs. BOOSEY applied to him for a testimonial, and admitted to him that Mr. EVANS exhibited an Alexandre Harmonium as his own, are totally without foundation.

In order to understand the value of the authorities quoted by Messrs. CHAPPELL in support of their calumnies, it should be known, that not only is Herr ENGEL the salaried agent of M. ALEXANDRE, but Dr. RIMBAULT (whose name is so much paraded) is regularly in the employ of Messrs. CHAPPELL, while the English Professors, who, so anxious for the truth, are said to have examined the French and English Harmoniums side by side, have never once visited Holles Street, to inspect the instruments of their countryman, and have therefore formed their opinion upon any specimen of EVANS'S Harmoniums which Messrs. CHAPPELL have thought proper to submit to them.

In conclusion, Messrs. BOOSEY and SONS beg to state, that feeling perfectly satisfied with the opinion which the public has already pronounced on EVANS'S Harmoniums (and which is shared by every independent member of the Musical Profession) it is their intention to avoid further discussion, treating with silent contempt these attacks, the object of which is so transparent.

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street.
(MANUFACTORY, WELLS STREET.)

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, January 7, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 2. SATURDAY, JANUARY 14, 1860. { PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE-STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

V. R.

FIRST GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

UNDER THE SPECIAL PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE CONSORT,
AND NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.

(As previously advertised.)

CITY HALL.

TUESDAY,	24th January	"ELIJAH,"
WEDNESDAY,	25th ,, ...	MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT.
THURSDAY,	26th ,, ...	"GIDEON."
FRIDAY,	27th ,, ...	"THE MESSIAH."

The GLASGOW CHORAL UNION beg leave to announce the completion of the general arrangements for the celebration of the FIRST GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL, on a scale suited to the magnitude of the undertaking, and fitted to mark the institution, in Scotland, of Great Musical Festivals, similar to those established, and prosecuted with so much success, in England.

ARTISTES.—PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.

Soprano—Madame CLARA NOVELLO and Miss WHITHAM.
Contralto—Miss DOLBY and Mrs. LOCKEY.
Tenor—Mr. SIMS REEVES and Mr. LOCKEY.
Bass—Mr. WEISS and Mr. WINN.

The BAND will be superior to any which has hitherto appeared in Scotland. The Artistes are Sixty in number—selected exclusively from the

LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY,

And embrace many of the most Eminent Instrumentalists in Europe.

The CHORUS will consist of the GLASGOW CHORAL UNION, numbering Four Hundred Voices.

The entire Orchestra will thus comprise nearly

FIVE HUNDRED PERFORMERS.

Organist	Mr. HENRY SMART, of London.
Conductor	Mr. HENRY A. LAMBETH.

One or more of the distinguished Noblemen announced as Patrons of the undertaking will Preside.

ADMISSION TO NON-SUBSCRIBERS.

	£	s.	d.
Stalls in area and side galleries (seats numbered), single tickets ..	0	15	0
Family tickets (admitting four)	2	15	0
Portion of side galleries, second seats in area, and front of west Gallery (benches numbered), single tickets	0	10	6
Sorial tickets (transferable), admitting one to each concert ..	1	16	0
Back of west gallery, or promenade (unreserved), single tickets..	0	5	0

 Prospectuses, containing all particulars, may be had at 42, Buchanan-street, or sent, post-free, on receipt of sixpence.

Tickets may be had of J. Muir, Wood, and Co., 42, Buchanan-street. As only a very limited number can be issued, early application will be necessary,

HENRY BAXTER, Hon. Sec.

LAURENT'S SECOND GRAND WINTER BALL, at St. James's Hall.—M. HENRI LAURENT has the honour to announce, that in consequence of the distinguished success which attended his grand Christmas ball, he has, at the request of numerous persons of distinction, made arrangements to give a SECOND GRAND WINTER BALL, at St. James's Hall, Tuesday, January 31, on the same scale of magnificence which afforded so much satisfaction on the last occasion. The hall will present the appearance of a beautiful winter garden, being decorated with flowers, plants, and sculpture, arranged by Mr. Hurwitz. The orchestra will be complete in every department, and will perform a variety of novelties composed for the occasion. Conductor—M. Laurent. The supper will be under the entire management of Mr. Donald, the celebrated restaurateur of St. James's Hall. Ball tickets for gentlemen, 10s. 6d.; ladies, 7s.; supper tickets, 7s.: to be had of Mr. Austin, St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, and of the principal musicsellers.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 20, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

TO THE BENEVOLENT.—The lamented death of the late Mr. William Appleby, for thirty years the faithful and devoted servant and foreman to Messrs. Davis and Phillips, of 25, Berwick-street, Music-printers, calls for the sympathy of those benevolent friends and the public, who may be kindly disposed to aid by their contributions in support of his two female orphan children, left totally unprovided for, and in repayment of the funeral expenses incurred. The loss of his wife and two other of their children in one week, after a long and serious illness, attendant with heavy medical, funeral, and family expenses during sickness, so reduced his means and crushed his spirit, that eventually his health sunk, under the heavy load of his troubles and affliction, until he died, in the very prime of his manhood, leaving two female orphan children destitute, for whom the generous support of his friends and the public is earnestly solicited, in endeavouring to raise a sufficient fund, to be placed in a Savings' Bank, in the charge of competent trustees, for their future benefit and support. Contributions thankfully received by Messrs. Davis and Phillips, 25, Berwick-street, Music-printers; W. Lovell Phillips, Esq., 67, Oakley-square; Mr. W. Alston, 7, Sutherland-place, Eccleston-square; Mrs. Davis, 67, Oakley-square; W. Edwin Alston, Esq., Union Bank of London, City; and by such other ladies and gentlemen who may kindly feel an interest in endeavouring to obtain the same.

TO CONCERT AND SOIREE COMMITTEES.

MISS EMMA HEYWOOD, who appeared at the Choral Union Concerts on New Year's Day last, is open to engagements. She will be in Glasgow on the 14th instant. Letters addressed to her, care of J. Muir, Wood and Co., 42, Buchanan-street, will meet with immediate attention.

MDLLE. MARIE WIECK, Pianist (sister to Madame Clara Schumann), begs to announce that she is in Town for the Season. Letters respecting engagements and pupils to be addressed to 14, Leinster-square, Hyde-park, W.

GLEES AND MADRIGALS.—EGYPTIAN HALL, PICCADILLY, (DUDLEY GALLERY). Change of Programme Mr. Mitchell has the pleasure to announce, that the Entertainment of Glees, Madrigals, and Old English Ditties, by the London Glee and Madrigal Union, under the direction of Mr. Land, with illustrative remarks by T. Oliphant, Esq., having been received with distinguished favour and approbation, will be continued every evening during the ensuing week, at half-past eight; (except Wednesday evening the 18th instant) and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings, at half-past two. Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved, 2s. A few fauteuils, 5s. each, which may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, W.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL. CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield, and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

THE Committee of the former pupils of Mrs. BARCLAY, daughter of the late comedian, John Fawcett, in acknowledging with thanks the kind liberality of those friends who have already contributed to the fund for purchasing an annuity for this deserving lady, desires to make it known that the subscription list must shortly be closed, they therefore hope that all who desire to testify their sympathy for this respected lady by subscribing to the fund will kindly forward their donations to Mrs. O. Webb, 36, Green-street, Park-lane, and Messrs. Hatchard, Piccadilly. Total amount received, £250.

CAPITAL ORGAN FOR SALE OR HIRE.—2 rows keys—11 stops—GG; also another, 1 row—GG—7 stops. Price 120 and 65 guineas. Hiring, 9 and 6 guineas per annum. Address, S., 2, Nugent-villas, Kingsdown, Bristol.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day. Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR. CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR. HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.
Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Principals.
H. Weist Hill. }
Viotti Collins.
M. Bezeth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.
Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
E. Payton
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. March.
G. Betjemann.
R. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W. A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.

VIOLI.
Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb.
H. J. Trust.

VIOLONCELLI.
Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. F. Reed.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.

CONTRA BASSI.
Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. G. F. Beresford.
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.
Messrs.
R. S. Pratten.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.
Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.
Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.
Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.
Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.
Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.
Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.
Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.
Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.
Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.
Mr. Walter Hinchey.

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:
M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

It is proposed to establish, for the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals, on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at St. James' Hall, Regent-street, commencing this evening, January 7th, 1860; and that, during the season, concerts shall be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with the chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

In the professional department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two violas.

All communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London Orchestral Association, St. James's Hall, (ticket office) Piccadilly W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S SOLOS.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER'S TROVATORE, as performed by Miss Goddard at the Bradford Festival, 5s.

BENEDICT'S TWO NEW FANTAISIES:

ERIN, on Irish Airs .. .. 4 0 | CALEDONIA, on Scotch Airs .. 4 0

Composed expressly for Miss Goddard, and performed by her throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland.

NE PLUS ULRA, by WOLFFL.—A new edition of this celebrated Sonata as performed by Miss Goddard, with a very interesting Introduction by J. W. Davison, Esq., containing an account of the Composer's Life and Compositions, Price 5s.

THALBERG'S THREE FANTASIAS on "Home Sweet Home," "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Lillie Dale," in one book (large size), price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

NOTICE.

"NELLY GRAY"

BY

BALFE.

The only song of this name as sung by the "Christy's Minstrels," is composed by Balfe, and the public and trade are therefore requested to order Balfe's "Nelly Gray," to avoid the substitution of another song of the same name.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S

CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 3s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

SONGS FROM MR. AND MRS. HOWARD PAUL'S ENTERTAINMENT:—

"THE UNPROTECTED FEMALE."
"BETSY WARING."
"THE RED PETTICOAT."
"THE AWKWARD SQUAD."
"THE MAN WHO KNOWS EVERYBODY."
"DOG AND CAT," Duet, &c., &c.

Written and arranged by HENRY WALKER. All with highly finished colored illustrations. Price 2s. 6d. each. Metzler and Co., 37, 38, and 35, Great Marlborough-street, W.

ENGEL'S HARMONIUM TUTOR is the best book published for this instrument; containing a good selection of popular music. Price 3s. Metzler and Co., 37, 38, and 35, Great Marlborough-street, W.; Wholesale Importers of Alexandre's Harmoniums.

ENGEL'S METHOD FOR THE ALEXANDRE DRAWING-ROOM MODEL HARMONIUM. Price 2s. Metzler and Co., 37, 38, and 35, Great Marlborough-street, W.

ALEXANDRE'S HARMONIUMS.—METZLER & Co., The original Importers of these admired Instruments, which are admitted by the most competent judges to be superior to any others that are made, have always on hand a very large assortment, including the new "Drawing-room Model," at the importation prices. Descriptive and illustrated lists on application. Metzler and Co., 37, 38, and 35, Great Marlborough-street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC.

		s.	d.
Adolphe Bies—	Fantasia on Rigoletto	3	0
,,	Fantasia on Linda di Chamouni	3	6
,,	Fantasia on Der Freischutz	3	0
,,	Fantasia on Il Don Giovanni	3	0
,,	Fantasia on German Airs	2	6
Jules Brissac's	Fantasia on Les Huguenots	3	0
,,	Fantasia on Le Prophète	3	0
,,	Fantasia on Martha	3	0
,,	Fantasia on Lucia di Lammermoor	3	0
,,	Fantasia on L' Etoile du Nord	4	0
,,	Fantasia on La Traviata	3	0

London: DUFF & HODGSON, 65, Oxford street.

BALFE'S NEW AND CHARMING COMPOSITIONS.

"SO LONG AS MY DAUGHTER LOVES ME." Price 2s.
"I AM THE SPIRIT OF LIGHT." Price 2s. 6d.
"THREADS OF GOLD." Price 2s.
"ONE SMILE FROM THEE." Price 2s.
"I'M LEAVING HAME, MY WILLIE." Price 2s.
"SUNSET" (words by Ellison). Price 2s.

London: Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street.

"O THE JOY OF TRULY LOVING. Sung by Sims Reeves. From "The Dream," a Serenata, composed by M. Costa. Price 2s. Original key, E flat; transposed key, C. London: Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street.

HENRY FARMER'S highly successful Ballad, "THE LUCKY STARS." Sung by Miss Mascall, in Mr. J. E. Carpenter's popular entertainment. Price 2s.

"WINNING THE GLOVES," and "THE LOVER OF SEVENTY-TWO." By the author of "The Wishing Gate." Mr. J. E. Carpenter has, in these, produced two comic ballads that will rival that far-famed song in popularity. The music by Charles Glover. Price 2s.

"I LOVE TO SING." Edward L. Hime's much admired Song, sung by Miss Mary Mascall, in Mr. J. E. Carpenter's new entertainment, and invariably encored; also his new ballad, "I FORGIVE HIM," sung in the same. Price 2s. each.

CHARLES W. GLOVER'S NEW DUETS.—"Music's Mission." "The Return of The Flowers," "To the fields, to the fields," and "Night and Day." Price 3s. each.

"MATRIMONY," or "MR. AND MRS. BROWN." Comic duet, the great hit of the season; and "COURTSHIP," comic duet, sung by Miss Mascall and the author. Words by J. E. Carpenter. Music by Charles Glover. Price 2s. 6d. each.

London: Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, W.

BLACK NET DRESSES, for Evening Wear, made after patterns of the latest mode, but not expensive.
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
247, 249, and 251, Regent-street.
JAY'S.

BLACK FRANCOIS Iere HEAD DRESSES, Gold and Velvet. Messrs. JAY have just imported a case of these novelties.
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE.
247, 249, and 251, Regent-street.
JAY'S.

BLACK FRENCH MANTLES.—Messrs. JAY respectfully announce that they have a few of this season's pattern mantles left on hand, which they are now selling considerably under cost price.
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
247, 249, and 251, Regent-street.
JAY'S.

JAY'S MOURNING WAREHOUSE.—The proprietors respectfully announce that the London General Mourning Warehouse offers advantages both to families of the highest distinction, and to those of limited means. Appointments for Ladies Mourning attire of every requisite quality, and suited to any grade or condition of society, may be had, and made up if required, on the most reasonable terms, and the shortest notice, at
THE LONDON GENERAL MOURNING WAREHOUSE,
247, 249, and 251, Regent-street.

£6 6S. WHEATSTONE'S 5-OCTAVE HARMONIUM (New Patent) has double pedals, with soft, agreeable quality of tone.

£3 3S. WHEATSTONE'S PATENT CONCERTINA, 3½ Octaves (48 Keys), rosewood. Wheatstone and Co., Inventors, 20, Conduit-street, Regent-street.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON CONVERSAZIONE.—NOTICE.—The First Conversazione of the present season will be held at St. James's Hall, on Wednesday evening next, the 18th inst., at half-past eight o'clock. Fellows, Associates, Lady Associates, and Nominated Annual Subscribers (escorts to Lady Associates) are alone privileged to attend. No person will be admitted without a ticket for 1860. Tickets are not transferable, except to the Five Concerts of the Society. The Annual Subscription of Members is now payable at Messrs. Cramer and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street, W., and should be paid on or before the 1st February. N.B. Entrance in Regent-street.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec., 36, Baker-street, Portman-square.
St. James's Hall, 28, Piccadilly, W.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC PERRY.

			s.	d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to		Miss Baron	3	0
The Wardour Mazurka,	,,	Lord Arundell	4	0
The Vancouver Quadrille,	,,	T. B. Chilty, Esq.	3	0
The Valentia Polka	,,	George Griffiths, Esq.	3	0
The Augusta Mazurka,	,,	Miss C. A. Thistlethwayte ..	2	6
The Avondale Schottische	,,	Miss Barron	2	0
The Helena Polkas	,,	The Misses Northey	3	0
The Pauline Valses	,,	The Misses Warner	3	0
The Castellon Polka	,,	Miss Fanny Hutchinson	2	0
The Cotham Polka	,,	Miss Mary Lorymer	2	0
The Promenade Polkas	,,	Miss Kirwan	2	0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

"I HAVE ALWAYS A WELCOME FOR THEE." New Ballad, by Langton Williams. "One of the sweetest ballads of the day."—Review. Price 2s. Free for stamps. W. Williams and Co., 221, Tottenham Court-road, London.

"EFFIE SUNSHINE." New Ballad, by Langton Williams. Sung by Miss Poole, with the greatest success. Beautifully illustrated. Price 2s. 6d. Free for stamps. W. Williams and Co., 221, Tottenham Court-road, London.

MUSIC.—A NEW CATALOGUE OF DRAWING-ROOM MUSIC, for the Pianoforte and Voice, just issued, may be had, gratis and postage free, by addressing as under.

NOTE.—This Catalogue, intended for the drawing-room table, embraces a choice selection of the most elegant and fashionable novelties recently published.

THE most infallible and expeditious Guide to a knowledge of music and pianoforte playing is HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. 242nd Edition. Price 4s.

MUSIC.—Professors and the Retail Trade are (in consequence of important alterations in terms) invited to apply for ROBERT COCKS AND CO.'S NEW CIRCULAR OF TERMS. A Card must accompany such application.

London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, Regent-street, W., Publishers to Her Majesty.

MEYERBEER'S "SHEPHERD'S SONG (Des Schäfers Lied), sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, at the Monday Popular Concerts (with clarionet obbligato) is published, price 4s. (extra violin or violoncello, in lieu of clarionet, 1s. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

LAURENT'S CHRISTMAS WAITS COMIC QUADRILLE, illustrated in colours by Brandard. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S MISTLETOE POLKA. Illustrated in colours. Price 8s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S DONNA JULIA VALSE. Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELOVED STAR WALTZ (companion to the Maud Valse). Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MADAME OURY'S CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS' GRAND GALOP DI BRAVURA. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE SERPENTINE QUADRILLE, by Burckhardt, splendidly illustrated by Brandard, in colours, with a comical view of skating on the Serpentine, Hyde-park. Price 3s. This popular quadrille is founded on the following favourite airs:—

Who shall be fairest?
Come into the garden, Maud.
Nelly Gray.
Phœbe dearest.
The green trees.
The Village Blacksmith, &c., &c.

BOOSEY AND SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS' ALBUMS.

CONTAINING TWENTY FOUR SONGS,

In two books, price 2s. 6d. each, or complete in an elegant volume, cloth and gold, 7s. 6d.

BOOK 1st.

"KISS ME QUICK."
"WILLIE, WE HAVE MISSED YOU."
"HOOP DE DOODEN DO."
"HAZEL DELL."
"WE ARE COMING, SISTER MARY."
"RING DE BANJO."
"HARD TIMES."
"GOOD NEWS FROM HOME."
"WAIT FOR THE WAGGON."
"COME WHERE MY LOVE LIES."
"BEAUTIFUL STAR."
"TOLL THE BELL."

BOOK 2nd.

"GENTLE JENNY GRAY."
"THE MOCKING BIRD."
"THE GREENWOOD DELL."
"ELLEN BAYNE."
"DO THEY MISS ME AT HOME."
"SEEING NELLY HOME."
"GENTLY DOWN THE STREAM."
"MAGGIE BY MY SIDE."
"LET ME KISS HIM FOR HIS MOTHER."
"EULALIE."
"I'M OFF TO CHARLESTOWN."
"MINNIE MOORE."

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

SUNG WITH EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS BY MR. SIMS REEVES.

"MARGARETTA,"

BALLAD,

THE POETRY BY

G. P. MORRIS, ESQ.

COMPOSED BY

M. W. BALFE.

When I was in my teens,
I loved dear Margaretta,
I know not what it means,
I cannot now forget her.
That vision of the past
My head is ever crazing,
Yet when I saw her last,
I could not speak for gazing.
Queen of rural maids,
My dark-eyed Margaretta,
The heart the mind upbraids,
That struggles to forget her.

My love I know will seem
A wayward, boyish folly;
But, ah; it was a dream
Most sweet, most melancholy.
Were mine the world's domain,
To me 'twere fortune better
To be a boy again,
And dream of Margaretta.
Oh! mem'ry of the past,
Why linger to regret her?
My first love was my last,
And that is Margaretta.

Price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM. Twelve Pieces for Pianoforte, bound, with Illustrations. Price 5s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BALFE'S ALBUM FOR 1860, price One Guinea, superbly bound and illustrated, containing 14 entirely new Songs, Duets, &c. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BALFE'S NELLY GRAY, by BRINLEY RICHARDS. Just published, price 3s., Balfe's celebrated Song, Nelly Gray, arranged for the Pianoforte by Brinley Richards. Order Balfe's. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

"HAIL THE SUNSHINE, WARM AND LOVELY." Song. The poetry by Richard Neal. Published this day. Price 2s. Boosey and Sons, Musical Library, 28, Holles-street.

REVIEWS.

"Les Arquebusiers;" "La Fandango;" "Brise Mystérieuse;" "Hymne à la Vierge;" "Air de Danse;" "La Ronde des Clochettes;" pour piano—par Felix Godefroid—Ops. 82, 83, 84, 85, 86, and 87—(Cramer, Beale, and Chappell). Mozart and Beethoven used to make six elaborately-contrived quartets stand for a single opus. M. Felix Godefroid (the Belgian Parish Alvars) here allows six little bagatelles to pass for six opera. Not much lamp oil, or sweat of the brow, can have been wasted on them. N'importe; these six bagatelles have the merit of being original as well as pretty. They are not hashes, concocted of the leavings of the Opera, nor glasses of punch mixed from the rinsings of Meyerbeer's bottles, Such as they are, they belong exclusively to M. Godefroid. Though all of them are comparatively easy, not one of them is, in a strictly musical sense, uninteresting. Besides being well composed, there is a certain freshness of thought about every one of them which alone would render them acceptable. Les Arquebusiers is a spirited march, with a thought timidly stolen from Auber—at the top of page 3. La Fandango, less new in its allure, while styled Danse Péruvienne, is so Spanish in character as to yield presumptive evidence, were presumptive evidence needed, that the Spaniards had set foot in Peru. Brise Mystérieuse is styled a caprice, the "caprice" seeming to be involved in the following direction :—

"Ce morceau doit être éxécuté très légèrement, et constamment avec la pedale sourde,"— which, as we have no great faith in a perpetual employment of the deaf pedal, and as the caprice is attractive enough without having recourse to any such expedient, we recommend the player to disregard, if not wholly, at any rate in part. Hymne à la Vierge is in some respects the best morceau of the six; nevertheless, the following progression is objectionable (we have transposed it an octave higher) :—

and the subjoined fragment of melody (a remarkably melodious fragment), is (less timidly) stolen from Schubert's Ständchen :—

The Air de Danse is a tolerably happy (but not so happy as we should have expected from M. Godefroid) imitation of the ordinary theatrical pas de—no matter how many—of which Rossini, Auber, and Meyerbeer have produced the most faultless and genial examples. The Ronde des Clochettes—of course in B minor, with F sharp for the clochettes—though not by any means so good as the rondo from Paganini's famous concerto, is, for a piece of such moderate difficulty, both brilliant and effective. In conclusion, though not quite so sterling as some pieces of similar pretensions from the same pen which were reviewed about two years since in these columns, these new compositions of M. Godefroid are so much superior to the ordinary run of such trifles that they may be conscientiously recommended to masters and students.

"Psalmodia, simplex et selecta"—"consisting of a very choice selection of psalm-tunes, adapted for four voices, with an accompaniment for piano; interspersed with numerous interludes and preludes, attached to each tune respectively, and a double set of words IN LARGE PRINT" (Tallant and Allen). The preface appears to us the most valuable feature of this compilation. That others are not of the same mind, however, may be gathered from the following advertisement (puff?) which the publishers have printed on the back of the cover :—

"The following critical remarks on Psalmodia have reached the author through the medium, and great kindness, of the printer. They are of the most disinterested nature, and were never intended to meet the public eye, having been elicited spontaneously, from the pen of a gentleman (who is utterly unknown to the author, except by name and reputation) on his perusing a copy of the prospectus prior to its publication :—

"'I may be mistaken, but I fancy this work must become a popular one. The whole arrangement, which is at once novel, interesting, and useful, strikes me as being 'just the thing that is wanted.' An organist, or pianist, has before him (or her), the tune itself, a prelude, and interludes, (containing, in my humble opinion, really lovely bits of harmony), and, on the opposite page, two sets of words in most unmistakeable characters. So excellent an arrangement has certainly never come under my notice before. The truth is, I could look upon this book as upon a pet child of my own, in which I should have much hope of a fine career.

Regent's Park.'"

We also "may be mistaken" (who among mortals is infallible?); but surely the following prelude would not be lightly put forth (even "through the medium and great kindness of the printer") by ever so spontaneous and disinterested a gentleman, as either a "lovely bit of harmony," or as "just the thing that is wanted :"—

If so, we own that Psalmodia, simplex et selecta, would not be "a pet child of ours," nor could we reasonably predict for it "a fine career."

In "selections," from Dinorah, Martha, and Satanella, M. Emile Berger has culled, with great industry, all the flowers of tune from each opera, and arranged them in so familiar a manner as to come within reach of even the most amateur-aspirant to honours as a drawing-room pianist. M. Berger has not missed a single favourite bit; so that each of his selections may fairly be likened to a Christmas pudding gorged with sweets, the most luxurious pudding of the three being unquestionably the Dinorah, which is so full of plums and spices of all kinds that you can scarcely believe that it has been made up of anything else.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

January 12th.

LAST week very few novelties occurred in the lyrical world. At the Italian Opera the Puritani was revived with complete success. Signor Giuglini was charming as ever, and surpassed himself in the air of "Cerca il sonno." He was ably supported by Madame Penco, Signors Graziani and Angelini. He will, however, soon be missed by his admirers, if it be true that he is only engaged for twelve performances, as he has already sung seven times in the Trovatore and three times in the Puritani. The curiosity with which the public have been waiting for the new opera by M. G. Braga has at length been gratified. But whether the opera itself has afforded much gratification, I doubt. The first performance was given on the 2nd January. The libretto is written by M. Viave. The principal parts were filled by Mesdames Borghi-Mamo, Nardi, and Leva; and Signors Gardoni, Graziani, Zucchini, and Casaloni. Although the great expectations that had been raised concerning this new composition have only been partially realised, that it possesses merit and is the work of a man of talent, no one can deny. But it is wanting in those brilliant flashes that raise the man of genius at once out of the crowd of ordinarily talented men, and place him, like Meyerbeer, far above his compeers. Marguerita la Mendicante, the title of M. Braga's work, is a lyrical melodrama in three acts. The principal defect of the piece is that it has no striking or dramatic situations. The interest of the work is concentrated in one person, and that of course renders the piece monotonous. It has evidently been the object of the authors to create a part in which Madame Borghi-Mamo can display her talent in all its fulness; and they have done it in such a manner that but little is left for the others. There is no doubt that, to a certain extent, to compose on such a system must result, as experience has ever shown, in failure. The favourite operas are those in which there are several good parts, and in which the interest is kept alive in all the varied details of the piece. In the first act, the opening chorus of the journeymen armourers, "Armajuolo canta e ridi," and the air, sung by Othon (Signor Graziani), "Fu perfido con noi troppo il destino," gave fair promise of what the opera would be in the hands of such artists. The second scene, which passes in the Palace of Mulrose, between Rodolphe Berghen and his wife Marguerite, is also good. In the second act Signors Gardoni and Graziani did their best, but all their efforts could not throw into it that fire and passion which a melo-dramatic work demands, not having the materials to work upon. The second scene in the act is the best. It is the fair at Leipsic: the chorus of the miscellaneous crowd of people who compose the attendants of a fair is well and tellingly written, and the entrance of Margherita, as a mendicant afflicted with blindness, is a very striking situation. Madame Borghi-Mamo sang the air (in which she asks alms) "Tu nome del Signore, udite I miei sospiri," in a highly artistic manner. Zucchini sang a buffo air very well. The finale of this act obtained a well-merited encore. The third act, which brings about the dénoûment of the piece, is the weakest and least interesting of the three. That M. Braga can compose, various parts of this opera prove, and also that he is capable of something superior.

At the Grand-Opéra the Trouvère, Guillaume Tell and Sylphide succeed each other, and the rehearsals of Prince Poniatowski's opera go on actively.

The Opéra-Comique gives us nothing new. At the Théâtre-Lyrique, the Reine Topaze will be revived, in which Madame Miolan-Carvalho obtained such a brilliant success. Meyerbeer's Dinorah, now making a continental tour, with ever-increasing success, has just made its appearance at Rennes, and will shortly visit various other great French towns.

In the drama little of any importance has taken place lately. A piece, called the Marchand de Coco, in five acts has been brought out at the Ambigu—but brought out from where, or brought out from what, it were difficult to say. The trash and refuse of the present literature of fiction, which even the least particular of authors have left in its native mire, MM. Dennery and Duqué have served up, without any of those condiments that help to disguise the equally nasty dishes of MM. A. Dumas, &c. Another drama is shortly to be brought out at the Théâtre du Cirque Impérial. It is said to be one of great interest. The title is L'Histoire d'un Drapeau. Of course the victories of "La Belle France" will occupy a very prominent part—indeed, form the basis of the piece. While the rehearsals are actively going on, the theatre is being re-decorated and improved in a very superior style.

The concerts here are numerous, and some of them well attended. It is a source of general regret that those of Sivori and Ritter have come to an end. Sivori is called to London; Ritter has left for Marseilles. Their concerts here, however, will recommence on the 1st of February.

I think I told you some little time since of the great displeasure the King of Naples had manifested at seeing how badly the theatre of San Carlos was managed. It has been going on from bad to worse; and a correspondent of L'Europe Artiste, gives a rather absurd account of its proceedings. All confidence has been lost in the Duke de Satriano, the manager, and he has been obliged to resign his post. For a long time a system perfectly ruinous to the interests of the theatre has been pursued, and so great was the mistrust of each other exhibited by the members of the committee, that none were sent to other countries to see and judge for themselves of the merits of the various artists they engaged. A rather curious scene took place some little time since at the San Carlos. According to L'Europe Artiste, Signor Negrini forgot for a moment the respect due to the public, during the first act of Norma, which he sang in a very unsatisfactory manner; he was hissed, and replied to the hisses by bowing ironically to the audience in a manner expressing the utmost indifference to their opinion. Upon this, there were redoubled hisses and cries of disapprobation. The tumult was at its height, when fortunately the arrival of the Court put an end to the disgraceful scene. Their Majesties were warmly received; their arrival had not been expected, and now came another scene. In the programmes sent to the Court, it was announced that the principal performers in the ballet would be Mdlle. Boschetti and M. Walpot. The play-bills, on the contrary, had announced Mdlle. Salvioni and M. Baracana, who accordingly appeared. The displeasure of the King, on the appearance of these second-rate artists, was so great that he rose and left the theatre, after expressing great displeasure to the Duke of Satriano. The audience applauded this mark of the King's disapprobation in the most enthusiastic manner; and when the Duke de Satriano appeared in his box, the hisses and groans gave him to understand that his reign was over. He sent in his resignation, which has been accepted. It is not yet known who is the new manager.

M. Roger is engaged at the Italiens, and will make his first appearance as Don Giovanni, in Mozart's opera.

COLOGNE.—The third Gesellschafts Concert, under the direction of Herr Ferdinand Hiller, took place on the 22nd ult., in the Gürzenich Hall. The programme was as follows:—

FIRST PART.—1. "The Naiads," overture by W. Sterndale Bennett. 2. Aria, from La Donna del Lago, Rossini, Mad. de Luigi, from Paris. 3. Symphony, No. 3, by J. Rietz (first time).

SECOND PART.—4. Concerto for the violin, by Beethoven, played by Herr J. Grunwald. 5. "Frühlingsbotschaft, concert-stück for chorus and orchestra, by W. Niels Gade (first time). 6. Variations from Rossini's Cenerentola, Mad. de Luigi. 7. Overture to Spontini's Cortez.

This concert offered two novelties, which the public here, though, as is well known, not very eager for anything new, received very favourably, welcoming Gade's charming idyll with manifest pleasure and fond applause, and greeting Rietz's symphony with marks of appreciative admiration of the whole, the second movement (scherzo) being more especially distinguished. The same may be said of the adagio. The work has all the merits of an interesting and clever composition, as was to be expected from such a master as Rietz; there is, however, we think, more thought than "dash" in it, so that it may, perhaps, be properly classed among those works which improve upon acquaintance.

The gem of the evening was Beethoven's violin concerto, and the beautiful manner in which it was rendered by Herr Grunwald. This gentleman possesses a peculiar strength of tone, which is capable, however, of all the more delicate touches, without becoming effeminate, and this quality is necessary in order to do justice to the noble style of the concerto. Correct conception, perfectly pure and sterling play, and beautiful, feeling expression, very rightly gained for the artist thunders of applause, especially in the adagio.

Mad. de Luigi, by the mere choice of the pieces she selected, carried us back to an antiquated period of art, though out of the varied crop it produced we still admire some magnificent and lasting shoots; we need mention only Guillaume Tell and the Barbiere di Siviglia. But the two pieces this lady sang in no way belong to the cheques upon immortality which the muse of music has drawn for her favourite, Rossini. It is possible that Mad. de Luigi was a popular singer, when the above period was at its best, but, in her performance on this occasion, there were only a few faint indications which could justify such a supposition. Unfortunately so evident and general a feeling of dissatisfaction as that excited among the audience, is often not to be pacified by the best productions of a different kind. This should not be, it is true, but, as men are constituted, it cannot be prevented.

The chorus had but little to do. It sang, however, the "Frühlingsbotschaft," by Geibel and Gade, very beautifully; the audience would willingly have had the piece repeated. The orchestra was excellent in the two overtures and the symphony; the last, especially, had been rehearsed with great care.

The fourth concert of this series was given on Thursday, the 6th inst. The following was the programme:—

FIRST PART.—1. Beethoven's overture to Coriolanus. 2. Air of Clytemnestra from Gluck's Iphigenia in Aulis (Mdlle. Emilie Genast). 3. Concerto for the violoncello by Molique (andante and finale), played by Alfred Piatti. 4. "O weint um sie," words from Byron, for solo, chorus and orchestra, composed by F. Hiller. 5. Fantaisie on a theme from La Sonnambula, for violoncello (A. Piatti). 6. Cavatina, "Una Voce," by Rossini (Mdlle. E. Genast).

SECOND PART.—Symphony, No. V., in C minor, by Beethoven.

The existing telegraphic arrangements now render it possible to send an intimation of an artist's being indisposed four-and-twenty hours before a concert, even from Berlin to the Rhine. The directors of these concerts were on this occasion reminded of the above fact, seeing that the singer engaged for the baritone part in Hiller's Ver Sacrum begged to be released from his engagement on the score of sudden hoarseness. However, a chorus and orchestra such as ours valiantly go through their task, when such a course is absolutely necessary, without any long preparation. We were obliged, it is true, to forego the performance of the Ver Sacrum at this concert, but, instead of it, we had the short, though exceedingly beautiful and popular vocal piece by Heller, "O weint um sie," and Beethoven's Fifth Symphony. As the solo performances, also, were very favourably received, the concert proved one of the most successful and satisfactory of the season.

This could be the case only with an audience which, fortunately, is always inspired and carried away by works like Beethoven's overture to Coriolanus and the C minor symphony; which follows with the most anxious attention the excellent performance presented to it; and, by the interest visible on every countenance, is raised to that elevated frame of mind which such productions cause in persons possessed of an undepraved feeling for what is really beautiful and lofty in music.

Mdlle. Genast, from Weimar, manages with skill and science her voice, which, though not powerful, is very pleasing. The consequence is that her execution in the kind of song to which Rossini's air belongs, as well as of the German Lied—of which we have heard some very praiseworthy specimens in private circles—possesses a certain charm and nobleness of character, rendered still more captivating by a natural manner and an absence of pretension.

Besides hearing Herr Alfred Piatti at the Gesellschafts Concerts, we heard him several times at the first concert of the Männergesang-Verein, on the 8th inst., besides listening to him at private houses, where he played in Beethoven's A major sonata, in a sonata by Hiller (Op. 22), for pianoforte and violoncello, and in quartets by Mozart and Beethoven. His most eminent technical skill, his certainty in every possible case, his magnificent purity, etc., call forth the admiration both of the general mass and of professional judges; but we place his rendering of the melody, his way of singing on the strings, which sounds as of the best period of the Italian vocal school, and which every singer now-a-days should take as a model, and, combined with this, his peculiarly fine quartet play, far higher than his mere technical skill, although the latter is certainly most admirable. In his quartet play the manner in which he devotes his energies to the success of the composition as a whole is truly artistic. Never does he show us with an air of contempt what a virtuoso he is; but he proves himself to be really a master, capable of embodying in tune, most nobly and purely, the spirit of Mozart and Beethoven, and of rendering it manifest in the most beautiful form. There is, probably, no one equal to him for modern virtuosity and classical play, in the whole sphere of stringed instrumentalists.

STUTTGARDT.—Meyerbeer's Dinorah has been produced here with immense enthusiasm. The composer was present at the first performance, and was called before the curtain several times.

MUSIC AND MYSTERY.

(From Punch.)

PERSONS who like puzzles might often find amusement in the musical advertisements which are put forth in some of the weekly prints. Here is one, for instance, which contains so hard a nut that even Notes and Queries would find it difficult to crack:—

EWER'S ROYAL PAVILION, SHAFTESBURY, DORSET.—WANTED, Three Musicians to join immediately, double-handed would be preferred. For particulars, &c., address as above.

Does the advertiser mean to say, that musicians with two hands are so seldom to be met with, that he thus avows his preference for those who are so gifted? If it be true that as a rule musicians have one hand more commonly than two, the College of Surgeons should be acquainted with the fact, and should set their wits to work in some way to account for it. As far as our experience and memory will carry us, we cannot call to mind that we have ever seen a one-handed musician, and this makes us the more curious to hear, if we can do so, some statistics on the subject.

In the same paper we find another nut to crack, which, for hardness of its shell, compared to the foregoing, is as a Brazil nut to a Kentish filbert:—

TO PIANOFORTE PLAYERS.—WANTED, in a first-class establishment, in the North, for a Spirit Bar-parlour, a good pianoforte player who can also sing. A lame man would be preferred, the salary being moderate. The party suiting the engagement would be permanent. Address, &c.

Why a lame man should be here preferred because the salary is moderate, is a problem of more puzzlement than we have brains to solve. A lame man might indeed find it hard to use the pedal, and his piano-playing therefore might be somewhat imperfect. But this does not account for the preference professed for him; because, however moderate the salary might be, one would fancy that the advertiser would wish to get as good a player as he could for it; and might just as well have tried to get an able-legged performer, supposing one were not more expensive than a lame one. If we wished to please the public we should certainly not choose a lame performer for so doing; for however good a hand he might be with his fingers, he never could make much of a quick running accompaniment.

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER.—The annual oratorio, usually given at the Concert Hall, took place on Wednesday night, the composition chosen being the Creation of Haydn. There has been shown, of late years, a disposition on the part of certain critics to depreciate this beautiful music. Comparisons are made between Haydn and Handel, and between Haydn and Mendelssohn; but one thing is very certain, that so long as a taste exists for what is truly beautiful, in a simple form, so long will Haydn's oratorio hold its place. The directors of the Concert Hall showed much discrimination in their selection of the solo vocalists on this occasion. Madame Louisa Vinning essays everything, and every style. The music, however, of the Creation might have been written for her, so thoroughly does she enter into the spirit of the work. Mr. Cooper and Mr. Santley were the other vocalists. The band and chorus were excellent, and it may be added, that few representations of Haydn's Creation, in Manchester, have been more entirely satisfactory.

THE BEALE TOUR.—Notwithstanding the contretemps, to which we need not allude, the touring party, under the management of Mr. Willert Beale, have met with that eminent success which invariably attended their progress in former seasons. They have already visited several towns in the provinces, and the impression they created may be gathered from the following account of their doings at Manchester, which we glean from one of the local journals :—

"FREE-TRADE HALL.—There has been no concert given in Manchester for many years past which has included a combination so varied in talent and novelty of character as that of Saturday evening last, at the Free-Trade Hall; and it was gratifying to find such enterprise so warmly appreciated, the applause, on more than one occasion, rising to enthusiasm. Sivori, the genius of the violin, received quite an ovation on presenting himself to the audience. Striking as are all his accomplishments, he never lets you suppose for a moment that they are difficulties; he commands your attention rather with the music of his instrument than startles you with his skill, though the latter exceeds, perhaps, that of any other living violinist. Next to this talented player came the astounding Bottesini on the contra-basso, who was rapturously applauded in his solo, the people becoming wild with excitement, whilst the duet with Sivori could scarcely be said to have been less fortunate in the pleasure it afforded. All who have listened to the very agreeable compositions of Mr. Brinley Richards, would be glad to see him in such goodly company, and to find that he is a most accomplished pianist. He selected his own arrangement of 'Cujus animam,' and a clever original composition, entitled 'The bird and the rivulet,' in which imagination, as well as the imitative art, are called into requisition. The style and touch of Mr. Richards are elegant and brilliant, and we shall be glad to hear him again. Herr Engel contrived to bring out the qualities of the harmonium with remarkable skill. The audience were much pleased with his 'Operatic airs.' The vocalists were all of high character. Mdlle. Corbari, with her rich voice and legitimate style, won considerable applause for Verdi's 'Sempre all' alba' (Giovanna d'Arco), and most deservedly, for it was most ably rendered. It is some years since Madame Fiorentini visited Manchester; we feel disposed to think that her voice since that period has developed in volume, and found greater richness of tone. She gave the grand scena from Der Freischutz, the Italian version, and brought down, loud plaudits. Madame Badia, the third lady on the list, is a novelty in this country. The Brindisi, 'Viva la belle amanti!' is the composition of the husband of Madame Badia, and we venture to think will become a favourite morceau. We regret it was not repeated for the encore. All know the value of Herr Reichardt in a concert room, and we have only to add that he sang his well-known and much-admired ballad, 'Thou art so near,' in a manner that delighted his auditors to the extent of a recall. The humour of Tagliafico is of the right order, and we never heard his voice tell so well as in the Free Trade Hall, where he sang for the first time. He gained a warm encore for Rossini's exquisite 'Tarantella.' The ensemble of the vocalists and instrumentalists in two or three pieces during the evening, and more particularly in the finale, 'Dal tuo stellato,' proved how much can be accomplished with first rate talent, however limited the group. Let us not overlook the ability of Mr. J. L. Hatton as conductor, nor refuse our thanks to him for adding to the pleasure of the evening by his facetious songs. The concert was a great success, and the audience sufficiently large to show that good music is duly appreciated in Manchester."

BRISTOL.—(From a Correspondent).—Mendelssohn's Elijah was given at the Clifton Victoria Rooms, on Monday evening, the 26th inst., the principal vocalists being Mrs. P. J. Smith, Miss Julia Bleadon, Miss Dolby, Mr. W. Cooper, and Mr. Weiss; instrumentalists, Messrs. Blagrove, Reynolds, Nicholson, Hutchins, Mann, and T. Harper. The full band and chorus were supplied by the Clifton and Bristol Harmonic Society. The whole performance was most excellent, the choruses being rendered with an effect seldom surpassed, and Miss Dolby, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Weiss, as usual, were admirable in their respective parts. One of the most interesting features of the performance was the execution of the principal soprano music, by Mrs. P. J. Smith, wife of the conductor, who acquitted herself in such a manner, as to command the hearty applause and elicit the highest encomiums from amateurs and professors. Her reading and general conception of the music allotted to the Widow were of the most appropriate character, while the vocal ability with which the great song, "Hear ye, Israel," was delivered, met with unanimous and marked encomium.

BATH.—(From a Correspondent).—A grand performance of Handel's Judas Maccabæus was given at the Assembly Rooms, on Thursday evening; the principal vocalists being Madame Weiss, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss. A good band, led by Mr. Blagrove, and a small but efficient chorus, under the direction of Mr. Bianchi Taylor, materially enhanced the well-going of the oratorio. The room was crowded to excess.

LEEDS.—EXCITING SCENE AT AN ORATORIO PERFORMANCE.—The Messiah has for many years past been given in this town on the Saturday evening nearest to Christmas Day; and before our noble Town Hall was built, there was no room large enough to contain the thousands who were desirous of hearing that ever-fresh and glorious creation of Handel. Last year the annual performance was first given in the Town Hall, which was comfortably filled by about 2,000 persons. Last Saturday, however, a scene occurred of the most exciting description, and one plainly indicating the immense popularity of the Messiah, and its Yorkshire interpreter, Mrs. Sunderland. During the week, a report was assiduously spread to the effect that Mrs. Sunderland (who was engaged for the Saturday performance) had died suddenly. This was discovered to be untrue; and it is thought that the report had its origin with some persons who had arranged an "opposition" performance of the Messiah on Wednesday. However this may be, the rumour re-acted in favour of the Christmas Eve oratorio, and coupled with the fact that the other artistes were our great English basso, Mr. Weiss, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Miss Crosaland, with Mr. Spark, the popular conductor, an immense demand for tickets sprung up. The doors of the Town Hall were besieged for an hour before the time fixed for the opening, and the crowds extended across each street. Within a short time after the audience were admitted not a seat could be obtained; and ultimately, not only every inch of ground, but even the pilasters around the hall, the orchestra steps, and the organ recesses, were crowded with music-loving people. Still more room was required, and, to gain this, the doors at the south end of the hall were thrown open, and about two hundred persons were content to stand in the vestibule, where, by the bye, the effect of the choruses was truly magnificent. The number of persons crammed into the hall was no less than 3,300, being 1,300 more than were present at any of the grand festival performances, and at least 500 persons were unable to gain admission. Mrs. Sunderland and Mr. Weiss never sang better; and the choruses, rendered by the Leeds Madrigal Society's Concert Choir, aided by a few singers from Bradford, created immense enthusiasm. Mr. Spark performed his work admirably; and the band, led by Mr. Broughton, contributed to ensure success throughout.

WINDSOR—(From a Correspondent).—The second of the Concerts for the People took place on Tuesday evening week, at the Town Hall, like the previous one, under the patronage of Thomas Nixon, Esq., Mayor. Notwithstanding the exceedingly unfavourable state of the weather, the hall was again well filled—the middle of the room and the sixpenny seats being much crowded, while the stall seats were occupied by a large and respectable audience. There were several improvements effected in the arrangements and details, foremost of which was the erection of a small platform for the performers. The instrumental part of the entertainment was also increased, being taken by Mr. Schroeder, of Her Majesty's private band, on the violoncello, Mr. G. Pearson and Mr. Custard, pupils of Dr. Elvey, on the pianoforte. The vocalists were, Miss Ransford, Miss Louise Jarrett, Mr. Dyson, and Mr. Lambert. The singing of Miss Ransford is entitled to much praise. Mr. Schroeder's execution on the violoncello was one of the chief attractions of the evening; while both pianists acquitted themselves in a highly creditable manner. The most attractive pieces of the evening were Adolph Adams' aria, "Love rules the palace;" the Scotch song, "Logie o' Buchan"—both of which were most spiritedly given by Miss Ransford; "The Village Blacksmith," and "All in the Rifle Corps," by Mr. Dyson; and the buffo duet, "The A B C," by Miss Ransford and Mr. Lambert. Sir Henry Bishop's well-known trio. "Maiden fair, a word I pray," by Miss Ransford, Messrs. Dyson and Lambert; Lover's Irish song, "I'm not myself at all," and "The bashful man," by Mr. Lambert; the song of "The two cousins," by Miss Ransford and Miss Jarrett; and the ballad, "A young Lady's No!" by Miss Louise Jarrett, who accompanied herself on the pianoforte, were more or less applauded. The whole concert passed off in a most satisfactory manner.

EDINBURGH— (From our own Correspondent).—Among the recent musical doings to be chronicled, are a series of four classical chamber concerts, which were given in the Freemasons' Hall under the direction of Mr. G. Hausmann. No better proof could be given of the rapid advance in musical taste here, than the manner in which these concerts have been supported. The audiences were large and fashionable, and listened with the deepest interest to the admirable selections provided for them by Mr. Hausmann. At the first, among other pieces, were performed Quartet (Mozart), No. 1, in G, for two violins, viola, and violoncello; Quintet (Beethoven), in E flat, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello; and sonata for violin by Tartini, "Le Trille du Diable." At the second, Quartet (Mendelssohn), in D, for two violins, viola, and violoncello; Larghetto, for violoncello, by Mozart; Duetto, for two violins, by Spohr; Solo, violin, by Sainton; and Double Quartet, by Spohr, No. 3, in E minor. At the third, Quartet, by Haydn, No. 78, in B flat, for two violins, viola, and violoncello; Adagio and Fugue, for violin, in G flat, S. Bach; Quartet (Schumann) for pianoforte, violin, viola, and violoncello; and arrangement, by Gounod, of quintet from Mozart's Cosi fan Tutte, for pianoforte, harmonium, violin, and violoncello; and Quartet (Beethoven), No. 9, in C, for two violins, viola, and violoncello; and at the fourth, Beethoven's Quartet in D, No. 3, Op. 18; Trio, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by W. S. Bennett; Duo, by Kummer, for violin and violoncello, "Sur Guillaume Tell;" and Quintet (Mozart), in G minor, for two violins, two violas, and violoncello. Vocalist, Miss Witham, who sang "Vedrai Carino," "Die Post," by Schubert, and "Frühlingslied," by Mendelssohn. The talent engaged for these concerts was such as to cause the rendering of the various morceaux to be highly satisfactory. The violins were M. Sainton, Herr Carl Deichmann, Mr. William Howard, and Mr. Otto Boothe; Violas, Mr. R. B. Stewart and Mr. Taylor; Violoncellos, Mr. G. Hausmann and Mr. F. Boothe; while Mrs. James Cotton and Mr. C. J. Hargitt officiated at the pianoforte. M. Sainton, who appeared at the Second Concert, was in splendid tone, and fully sustained his great reputation. Herr Carl Deichmann, who played throughout the series, made his first appearance in Edinburgh, and created a most favourable impression by his pure tone, his skilful execution and refined taste. His performance of Bach's Fugue, and his share in Spohr's Duet, won for him the highest encomiums. Mr. Hausmann has added to his great popularity, not only by organising these delightful concerts, but by the way in which he sustained his part in the performance. His playing of a Larghetto, by Mozart, was graceful and expressive. I cannot omit to mention the excellent, though unobtrusive, viola playing of Mr. R. B. Stewart, whose services were invaluable.

Among other events have been the Matinée Musicale of Miss De Fabeck, a young pianist of much promise: and the First Lecture—Recital of Mr. J. Thorne Harris, which I was unfortunately prevented from attending. We have just had a performance of The May Queen, of which, more anon.

TONBRIDGE.—Tonbridge School.—The seventh annual concert by the school choir, given on Tuesday last, was in every respect a most successful affair. The chief applause fell to Estridge's solo, the duet by H. and R. Bird, and Neville's solo, in Part I.; and to Smith's and Nussey's solos, and "Come where my love lies dreaming," in Part II., all of which were encored; but we may also single out Horsley's "See the chariot at hand," and Stevens's glee, "Ye spotted snakes," and the two pianoforte solos, as remarkably well done. Indeed, the whole concert went off in such a manner as to reflect the highest credit on Mr. Gilbert, the conductor.

ROYAL WINDSOR THEATRICALS.

THE third dramatic performance this season took place at Windsor Castle on Wednesday evening. The following was the programme:—

A Play, in Five Acts, by Mr. James Sheridan Knowles, entitled,

"THE HUNCHBACK."

Master Walter	Mr. Howe.
Sir Thomas Clifford	Mr. W. Farren.
Lord Tinsel	Mr. E. Villiers.
Master Wilford	Mr. Braid.
Modus	Mr. Buckstone.
Master Heartwell	Mr. Cullenford.
Gaylove	Mr. Courtney.
Holdwell	Mr. Wetten.
Simpson	Mr. Moyse.
Fathom	Mr. Compton.
Thomas	Mr. Clark.
Stephen	Mr. Coe.
Williams	Mr. Weathersby.
Waiter	Mr. Hill.
Servant	Mr. Lane.
Julia	Miss Amy Sedgwick.
Helen	Miss Swanborough.

Under the management of Mr. George Ellis; and under the direction of Mr. W. B. Donne, her Majesty's Examiner of Plays.

The theatre arranged and the scenery painted by Mr. Thomas Grieve.

Shortly after eight o'clock the Queen and Prince Consort, with the Duchess of Kent, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, Prince Arthur, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, Prince Leopold, attended by the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, and accompanied by the dinner party, entered the theatre in St. George's Hall, when the performance immediately commenced.

The orchestra was composed of Her Majesty's Private Band.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

AT the seventh concert, on Monday evening, the instrumental pieces were by Mozart, and comprised his quartet in D minor (dedicated to Haydn), his quintet in A for clarionet and stringed instruments, his great sonata, for pianoforte alone, in F, and his little sonata (quite as beautiful as the great), for piano with violin. Herr Becker led the quartet, joined Mr. Lindsay Sloper in the violin sonata, and played first fiddle in the quintet; in all, giving satisfactory proofs that the praise which has been awarded him was not undeserved. Mr. Lindsay Sloper played the solo sonata in that finished style for which he is noted; and Mr. Lazarus executed the clarinet part in the quintet as only he could have executed it. The second violin, viola, and violoncello, were, as usual, in the hands of Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti—in better hands they could hardly have been.

The vocal music comprised, among other things, Meyerbeer's delicious "Shepherd's Song," and Spohr's no less delicious "Bird and maiden," both with clarinet obbligato (Mr. Lazarus), the former sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, the latter by Madame Lemmens Sherrington, who, together, gave Rossini's chamber-duet. "Mira la bianca Luna." Madame Lemmens also introduced "Ombre légère," from Dinorah, while Mr. Sims Reeves repeated the "two lieder of Beethoven, "The Savoyard," and "The stolen kiss," which at a previous concert gained him so many laurels, and which, to judge from the enthusiastic encore bestowed upon the last named, lost nothing on more familiar acquaintance. Mr. Benedict accompanied the vocal music, and the audience, which filled St. James's Hall in every part, were evidently delighted with the whole entertainment.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Last night Handel's oratorio, Samson, was performed, with Miss Banks, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Signor Belletti, and Mr. Weiss as principal vocalists.

CONCERT AT THE NEW ST. PAUL'S SCHOOLS.—On Monday evening the Choir of St. Paul's, assisted by Miss E. Ward and Mr. P. Williams, entertained an audience of upwards of 500 persons with a performance of Glees, Madrigals, and Part-Songs, under the direction of Mr. Frederick Kinkee, organist. The programme was well arranged, the music efficiently rendered, and thoroughly appreciated. "Here in cool grot" was amongst the pieces encored, and the laughing chorus by Miss Ward, Messrs. Williams and Kinkee, was repeated three times. Mrs. and Mr. Kinkee presided alternately at the pianoforte and harmonium.

ORGANIST AT BRUNSWICK CHAPEL.—(From a Correspondent) —The organist's situation at Brunswick Chapel, Upper Berkeley-street, having become vacant by the sudden death of Mr. Abbott, was competed for on Thursday evening, the 5th inst. Each candidate played a chant, hymn tune, and a piece. At the conclusion of the trial the vestry sat, and announced Mr. A. H. Lowe as the successful candidate. The organ is a very old one, but capable of very beautiful effects.

A TESTIMONIAL, in the shape of a valuable gold watch and chain, was presented by the Messrs. Broadwood, on Saturday, Jan. the 7th, to Mr. Alexander Finlayson, a foreman, and for many years employed in the establishment at Westminster. Mr. Finlayson's father had been a workman in the manufactory, and his son and grandson are in the Messrs. Broadwood's service. The following inscription is engraved on the inner case of the watch:—

"Presented to Mr. Alexander Finlayson, by Messrs. John Broadwood and Sons, as a mark of their appreciation of his integrity and worth, on his entering his 60th year in their employment, 1860."

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words)	0*s.* 6*d.*

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

R. G. C.—As our correspondent magnanimously informs us that he "does not require payment," not to be behindhand in magnanimity, we have inserted his brief communication gratis.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 14TH, 1860.

MR. CHARLES HALLÉ'S Manchester concerts are becoming the vogue with all classes, from the rich merchant and manufacturer to the middle-class tradesman and bourgeois, and from the middle-class tradesman and bourgeois to the respectable and thrifty, albeit humbler, artisan. His last essay, the Iphigenia in Tauris of Gluck, appears to have been a positive triumph. The fact of such a work producing so great an effect in a concert-room should put to shame the managers of our lyric theatres, Italian and English, who have so obstinately presented a "cold shoulder" to the Patriarch of dramatic music—to Christopher Gluck, immediate predecessor of Mozart (though not of the same family), legitimate father of Spontini, and no less legitimate grandfather of Giacomo Meyerbeer.

The principal characters of the dramatis personæ were thus sustained at Manchester:—

Iphigenia (High Priestess in Tauris)...	Mad. Catherine Hayes.
The Goddess Diana	Mdlle. Merei.
Priestess of the Temple	Miss E. Thorley.
Orestes (brother of Iphigenia) ...	Mr. Santley.
Pylades (his friend)	Mr. Sims Reeves.
Thoas (King of the Scythians)... ...	Mr. Thomas.
Minister of the Sanctuary	Mr. Arnold.

From a very interesting account of the performance in the Manchester Guardian (of Thursday) we extract the following:—

"In our impression of Saturday last we gave a brief account of Gluck and his works, and a statement of the principal incidents of his Iphigenia in Tauris, the opera performed last night. It will easily be seen what scope they afforded to a musician of Gluck's calibre. The emotional elements are many, and of the most interesting and exciting character. Iphigenia is alternately agitated by grief at her unfortunate position, the loss of her country, the anguish on learning the fate of her kindred, especially of her dearly-loved brother Orestes, pity for the unknown Greeks who have landed on the fatal shores of the Scythians, and misery at being called upon to sacrifice her new-found brother; Orestes is filled with remorse for the murder of his mother Clytemnestra, and by having led his friend into such imminent danger; while the heroic breast of Pylades is filled only with love for Orestes and a desire to save him at all hazards. Around these three principal characters are grouped the Priestesses of the Temple, who reflect the feelings of Iphigenia; the superstitious and bloody Scythians, with Thoas at their head, and the dread avenging Furies.

"The Iphigenia, first produced at Paris in 1779, consists chiefly of airs, but they are short, and while they carry on the action of the drama, express in the happiest and most striking manner the feelings of the soul. There is but one duet, and one trio, which are not concerted pieces, but rather dialogues. The choruses are several; indeed, they play an important part. The principals are named above; in addition to these, there was a chorus of about 180, Mr. Hallé's own fine orchestral band being employed in rendering the accompaniments. This was, strange to say, the first performance of Iphigenia in Tauris in England;* and, considering how little Gluck and his works are known here, it must be a gratifying fact to Mr. Hallé, who has been at infinite pains in getting it up, and to all acquainted with the transcendent character of the music, to find so very large an audience assembled to hear it, especially considering that it was denuded of all stage accessories. The performance was entirely successful, principals, band and chorus exerting themselves to the utmost to do it justice. The whole being uniformly of the highest character, it is difficult to select special points for commendation. One of the most striking pieces is a chorus supposed to be sung by the Scythians on learning that Orestes and Pylades are about to become their victims. The thing is savagely grand, and called forth warm plaudits from the audience. It was not a little heightened by what is called 'ballet music' being introduced. It is, however, very unlike what is understood by that in modern acceptation, being a series of war dances, of a strange but very exciting character. We may also refer to the invocation of Orestes to the gods to let loose their wrath upon the bloody Scythians, magnificently given by Mr. Santley—as indeed was the whole of the music allotted to him; the chorus of the Furies, in which the band accompaniments are appalling; the entire third act, which embodies the struggle between Orestes and Pylades as to which shall be sacrificed; and a beautiful hymn to Diana—simplicity itself—which was enthusiastically re-demanded. The greatest enthusiasm was manifested by the immense audience, who paid Mr. Hallé a perfect ovation at the close of the opera; which will, we hope, determine him to give another performance. The production of such a work for the first time in so complete a manner, very strikingly exhibits the musical resources of this city; and, if it have the effect of calling forth other performances elsewhere, with or without the aid of stage resources, it will be a benefit conferred on musical art."

The Manchester Examiner and Times, in the midst of a glowing and enthusiastic panegyric, transfers to its columns the narrative of the plot of Iphigenia in Tauris, from Boosey's Standard Lyric Drama,† which, on another

* This is erroneous. Iphigenia in Tauris was given at the St. James's Theatre, in 1840, by a German company, which first made Herr Staudigl known to the English public.

† "Iphigenia in Tauris is considered one of the finest productions of the classical drama of ancient Greece. The libretto to which Gluck Sweetheart.

A BIRD'S SONG.

The Poetry by AUGUSTUS GREVILLE. The Music by M. W. BALFE.

Allegretto Moderato.
VOICE.
PIANO.
There is a lit - tle bird that sings— "Sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet-heart!" I know not what his name may be; I on - ly know he pleas - es me, As loud he sings— and thus sings he— "Sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet - heart!"

SWEETHEART.

I've heard him sing on soft Spring days—mf
mf
"Sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet-heart!" And when the sky was dark a - bove, And Win - try winds had stripp'd the grove, He still pour'd forth those words of love—dim.
pp
cres.
"Sweet-heart! sweet - heart! sweet- heart! sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet - heart."
cres.
f p
cres.
f dim.
p
pp

SWEETHEART.

SECOND VERSE.
And like that bird my heart, too, sings— "Sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet-heart!" When heav'n is dark or bright and blue, When trees are bare or leaves are new, It thus sings on— and sings of you— "Sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet - heart!"
What need of o - ther words than these—

SWEETHEART.

"Sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet-heart!" If I should sing a whole year long, My love would not be shown more strong, Than by this short and sim - ple song—dim.
pp
cres.
"Sweet-heart! sweet - heart! sweet- heart! sweet - heart! sweet - heart! sweet - heart."
cres.
f
p
cres.
f dim.
p
pp occasion, we recommend M. Charles Hallé to print in the programmes of the evening.

An amateur, who was present at the performance in the Free Trade Hall, writes as subjoined :—

"I was really very sorry not to see you on Wednesday evening at Manchester. You would have been highly pleased with the whole performance. I have seldom witnessed such enthusiasm, such waving of hats and handkerchiefs, such unanimous applause and cheering. It was a sight worth a journey to Manchester, more especially when it is considered that the demonstration in favour of the music of Gluck (so subtle and grand a master—so profoundly dramatic a genius) was made by an audience of more than 3,000 persons, an audience that filled the large hall from extremity to extremity. With regard to the performance itself, I can assure you it was admirable, and you would have found very little indeed to criticise. The success was so unequivocal that I am informed it is the intention of Mr. Hallé to repeat the same opera, with the same performers, on the 8th of next month."

Mr. Hallé is entitled to our heartiest good wishes, as he is entitled to those of all real lovers of genuine music—music that, not only time, but the universal verdict of civilised Europe (in accordance with that of Gluck's own "Fatherland") has proclaimed "classical"—or, in plain language, imperishable.

---

composed his music, was adapted by the French poet Guillard from a poem by Goethe, who has, of course, observed the main incidents and treatment as developed by Euripides. Orestes, coming to Tauri, in Scythia, in company with Pylades, has been commanded to bear off the image of Diana; after which he is to meet with a respite from the avenging furies of his mother. His sister, Iphigenia, carried away by Diana, from Aulis, when on the point of being sacrificed by her father, is expiating a dream that led her to suppose Orestes dead, when a herdsman announces the arrival and detection of two strangers, whom she is bound by her office to sacrifice. On meeting, a mutual discovery takes place, and the brother and sister plot their flight. Iphigenia imposes on the superstitious fears of Thoas, and, removing to the sea coast, they are on the point of making their escape, when they are surprised, and driven back by stress of weather. Thoas is about to pursue them, but Minerva appears, and restrains him, at the same time procuring liberty of return for the Grecian captives, who form the chorus.

"Gluck's opera opens with an instrumental movement, depicting alternate calm and tempest, during which a prayer is offered up by Iphigenia and her priestesses to Diana; we have then a succession of fragmentary recitatives, interspersed with choruses for the priestesses, until Thoas appears, and expresses to Iphigenia his dread of the danger impending over himself and house. His entrance is followed by a chorus of Scythians, introductory to the entrance of Pylades and Orestes. A wild burst of joy from the Scythians, at the prospect of being able thus to propitiate the Deity, closes the first act. Act the second opens with the display of mutual friendship between Pylades and Orestes; Orestes loading himself with reproach for having been the instrument of hurrying his friend into danger. Pylades endeavours to console him; when the friends are parted, as if for ever, by the edict of their barbarian foes. Orestes, left to himself, becomes a prey to the avenging Furies; Iphigenia appears in time to soothe his half-maddened brain; and elicits from him, without apprising him who she really is, the destinies of her father Agamemnon's family since she herself was snatched from the sacrifice at Aulis. The act closes with the lamentations of the priestess for the sorrows of her race, and her grief at the supposed death of Orestes. In Act III., Iphigenia, interested in Orestes, but still ignorant that he is her brother, endeavours to save him; Orestes declines to avail himself of a rescue which Pylades cannot share, and the two refuse, each in behalf of the other, the boon held out to them by Iphigenia. The act ends by Pylades, at the earnest entreaty of Orestes, consenting to take a letter to Electra, Iphigenia's surviving sister, at Mycenæ. During the absence of Pylades, the preparations for the sacrifice of Orestes are carried on. Iphigenia delays the rite; but when at last she is advancing towards Orestes with uplifted knife and faltering step, he declares himself her long-lost brother. Their mutual transports are cut short by the entrance of Thoas, who determines, in his blind fury, to sacrifice indiscriminately both priestess and victim; but at this juncture Pylades stabs the barbarian monarch to the heart, and delivers the sister of his friend and her attendant captives from the thraldom that has so long oppressed them. Diana then appears, and directs the Greeks to set sail, bearing with them the statue erected to her honour in the Temple of Tauris."

WHEN the "Classical" Series of the Monday Popular Concerts was commenced last season at the St. James's Hall, the question naturally arose whether the epithets "classical" and "popular" could be applied with appropriateness to the same entertainment. The word "classical" is variously interpreted, and is frequently employed in a sense manifestly incorrect (as in the case of certain orchestral and chamber compositions which resemble the works of the great masters only in form); and it would be easy to prove that what often passes for classical music, is not at all popular. If a work is to be called "classical" merely because it is correct in form, and written in intelligent and more or less exact imitation of undeniable master-pieces; and if by "popular" is meant that alone which appertains to the mob, then it is evident that "popular" and "classical" are incompatible terms. But no production of art can fairly be spoken of as classical until it has stood the test of time, and also, we are inclined to think, of expatriation—perhaps transpatriation would be a better word. Racine, for whom the taste, in Madame de Sevigné's opinion, was to pass away like that for coffee, is still considered a classic in France; but while all Europe retains the use of the berry which heats but not enlivens, not one foreign nation has adopted Racine, or any other of the French poets. The great comic dramatist* of France, on the other hand, is known and appreciated everywhere. "Every man who learns to read," says M. Sainte-Beuve, with almost as much truth as ingenuity, "is another reader for Molière," and it is quite true that thousands of playgoers who have never even heard his name are familiar with jokes, scenes, and characters which are borrowed or imitated from Molière's plays. Shakspere has passed more triumphantly than any other poet what may be called the tests of time and space; for no other writer is so much read in the present day, and while some of the greatest authors of modern Europe, from Göethe to Victor Hugo, and from Göethe to M. Guizot, have made his works the subject of their earnest study, his dramas are played in some form or other in the "popular" theatres of Germany, France, Russia, and probably many other countries.

If we turn to what is vulgarly and absurdly called "art"—as if to the exclusion of all other kinds—we find in Raphael an example of a painter whose works seem to acquire fresh vitality with each succeeding century, which live equally in all civilised countries, and which delight all classes of men. M. Ingres, who by the consent of his own countrymen, is the greatest, or one of the two greatest painters of modern France, has dedicated his whole life to Raphael; even the pre-Raphaelites do not spurn him—they only wish modestly to go before him, which, according to them, means beyond him; the photographs from the cartoons are ordered (thanks to the enormous demand for them they cannot now be bought) by thousands at the South Kensington Museum; and there is not a more "popular" design for the picture-brooches sold in the Palais Royal at Paris than the world-famed "Virgin of the Chair."

The notions expressed in the above remarks, however much they may partake of the nature of truisms, deserve to be repeated from time to time if only for the benefit of those who maintain that works of the highest genius cannot be appreciated by the great bulk of mankind, and they have been suggested to us by the enormous attendance at the Mozart concert last Monday at St. James's Hall, when the whole of the area was filled long before the entertainment commenced; and by the applause with which the various compositions were received, the slow movements of a quartet and a sonata being positively redemanded. We suppose if any music can be called "classical," it is that of the composer who ceased to write seventy years ago, and whose melodies are still as fresh as any—the most beautiful or the most recent—that have been given to the world since his death; whose pre-eminence as a "great master" is acknowledged by all musicians; whose tunes are known in all civilised lands; and whose operatic works are played in every European language. Nor can the epithet of "popular" in its widest sense be applied to any composer, classical or unclassical, so justly as to Mozart, inasmuch as his works, whether heard in the theatre, in the concert-room, or in the humblest private dwelling, through the medium of an orchestra, a quartet, a single instrument, or a voice that is capable of ordinary musical expression, are more generally appreciated and admired than the productions of any other master, great or small.

---

* Query—How about Beaumarchais?—Printer's Devil.

Of course it would be a sad error to argue from this coincidence in respect to one great composer, between the most thoroughly educated and only very slightly educated tastes, that any fair estimate of the value of works of art can be arrived at by taking the opinions, or rather the likings and dislikings, of the masses. We have no doubt that if the votes of Mr. Bright's friends could be collected on the subject, they would prefer some nigger insipidity or monstrosity not only to the Jupiter symphony—which would also be the case with numbers of their superiors—but even to "La ci darem" or the "Addio;" while in France the seven millions who elected Louis Napoléon to the Imperial throne would probably pronounce in favour of "La cus-quette du père Bugeaud" if called upon to choose between that and "Il mio tesoro." An utterly uneducated boor at a concert of high class music hears no more than a cow sees in presence of a magnificent landscape; but there is this important difference between the two animals—the latter can never become a connoisseur in painting, whereas the former, if he possesses the ordinary qualities of a man, may learn little by little to love music, and thus acquire a new and elevating pleasure. As every individual partakes of a common nature, there cannot be any very wide fundamental differences in matters of taste and sentiment. In nature similar objects produce similar emotions in all men; thus, all are impressed by objects of striking grandeur or of surpassing beauty. And, in the same way, every one a little removed from the condition of the brute finds something to charm him or to excite his admiration in the music of Mozart. Sunrise, the stars, lofty mountains, the sea, have beauty for every human creature, and, by analogy, it is easy to understand how the greatest of composers must, in a liberal interpretation of the word, be also the most popular.

RARELY do we see general delight more plainly and strongly manifested than we did on Tuesday last, when Mr. Albert Smith re-appeared before the public in his own Egyptian Hall. In the applause of the audience, and in the look of the "entertainer," there was something that seemed like the whole world joining together in the brief proposition, "It's all right," uttered with a vast deal of emphasis.

The great Albert was affected; there was a friendliness in the greeting which could not escape his notice, and which brought the tears to his eyes. And he hit the right nail on the head when he declared his conviction that there is a sort of friendship between himself and his patrons, this conviction being based on the receipt of divers letters during his illness, written by persons of whom he had never heard, and all expressing the deepest anxiety for his recovery.

Certainly no one is more widely known in this country than Mr. Albert Smith, or enjoys a more extensive popularity. First in the field of all the modern "entertainers"—sedulous in keeping his entertainment distinct from that of all competitors—combining the character of the traveller with those of the comic vocalist and actor,—provided beforehand with a large circle of private friends,—Mr. Albert Smith has unquestionably made of himself a metropolitan institution of no small importance. Photographic artists have been anxious to catch the similitude of his physiognomy, and to suspend it among the choice works, wherewith they would engage the attention of the passer-by. We will run the risk of an Hibernicism, by declaring that everybody has seen Albert Smith, and everybody else has seen his portrait. If a child of five years old, looking at the likeness of Albert Smith, professed ignorance of the person represented, it would denote a state of benighted ignorance, demanding the immediate attention of the Earl of Shaftesbury. When Albert Smith had newly returned from the oriental trip, on which he based his first entertainment—the "Overland Mail"—some folks laughed at the beard, which covered his previously smooth chin. Short-sighted mirth! With that beard will Albert's face go down to a posterity who will believe that he never existed without it. There is now in our possession a portrait of Albert without a beard—but this is not the Albert of Mont Blanc, of Baden-Baden, of Canton; not the Albert who threatened to depart from us a fortnight ago, and and thus caused all London to shudder.

While the recovery of the popular idol was yet uncertain, we abstained from remark on the subject of his universally lamented illness, beyond the mere record of the fact, thus avoiding the gross indecency of the many newsmongers, who no sooner heard of the calamity than they at once inferred the most lamentable results, and spread their surmises about the town. On Christmas Eve the decease of Mr. Albert Smith was asserted in every place where men connected with periodical literature do congregate, as the great occurrence of the day, with all the aplomb of the most profound conviction. Had we chosen to follow in the train we might easily have filled our columns with all sorts of sepulchral bubbles, which would have been regarded with grim interest by a gaping multitude. But we have reserved the record of these impertinences till the present time, when Albert Smith is on his legs again, and he may fairly laugh at them as gabblings representing no truth, save only the interest with which he was universally regarded.

Yes, we will tell thee now, dear Albert, that on that dismal Christmas Eve thy untimely end was bewailed to an extent, far beyond any extent thou couldst have surmised, even on the receipt of thy numerous letters, the very rapidity with which the sad rumour was circulated amply demonstrating how much thou art cared for. The news of Wright's death had already depressed the spirits not a little, but Wright had for some time been withdrawn from public gaze, whereas thou, Albert, wert in the plenitude of thy glory.

Not a whit too far do we go, when we assert that the supposed decease of Albert Smith was one of the mournfulest instances of the uncertainty of human affairs. Had an unprecedented combination of rare talent and singular good fortune led to no other result than this? Was the Egyptian Hall to be prematurely closed, and stand like a sort of modern antique mausoleum, marking the site of the merriment and good-humour which had promised to delight the London public for many years yet to come?

There is an old proverb to the effect that we only know the value of our treasures by the loss of them; and we have had an opportunity of testing this proverb in the case of Albert Smith, without experiencing the calamity that usually pertains to such trials. Thanks to over-busy tongues, the world was made to fancy for a moment that it was without an Albert Smith;—and, lo! here was a gap in the cycle of entertainments,—nay, more, here was a gap in the many, many circles over which the genial Albert, in his private moments, was wont to shed the radiance of his hilarity. The solar system, with one of the principal planets knocked out by an intrusive comet, would not look more incomplete than the London season bereft of Albert Smith by the untimely snatch of destiny. Only fancy, all those portraits in the shops changed into semblances of one who was no longer living. Should we not seem to be walking in a city of tombs, as one would wander through the mazes of that great Pyramid, which itself grew lively under the footstep of the ever-cheerful Albert?

We would not venture on these ghastly reflections, did they not refer to a calamity that has proved itself unreal, like one of those ghosts that vanish as soon as the investigation dares to touch them. Christian is allowed to smile at the Valley of the Shadow of Death when he has left its terrors behind; nor is whistling, when one is fairly out of the wood, ever deemed presumptuous. We dwell on the dismals, that we may be the better able to appreciate the joy we now feel, pleased to realize the old Virgilian consolation—Hæc olim meminisse juvabit.

Yes, we write these lines shortly after a visit to the Egyptian Hall, where we have seen the Achilles of "entertainers," not as Odysseus saw the Achilles of Greece, amid the shades, but alive and kicking the weight of uneasiness from the hearts of countless admirers. He is not only well planted on the surface of this sublunary globe, but he looks, talks, and laughs, as if he did not mean to be uprooted in a hurry, and we still feel the effect of the pleasant apparition. A word that, by the way, is here to be deprived of its common connection with ghosts.

A happy new year to Albert Smith, and may it be long before we are terrified again with even a dream of losing him.

THE LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.—The first meeting of this Society took place on Saturday evening at St. James's Hall, when upwards of sixty amateur instrumentalists were present, and very creditably performed several overtures and symphonies under the able direction of Dr. James Pech. The next meetings are announced to take place every Saturday evening, terminating in June.

LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION.—The performances of the Union at the Egyptian Hall during the past week having proved eminently successful. Mr. Mitchell, of Bond-street, has made arrangements for a second series of entertainments, commencing on Monday next, when the programme will be varied. The audiences have been numerous and fashionable, including many of the nobility at present in the metropolis.

GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

SCOTLAND, at last, seems bent upon acquiring musical distinction. The prospectus of the forthcoming musical festival at Glasgow looks like a genuine festival prospectus; and to show that we have none of the ill feeling towards our Transtweedian neighbours which divers irate personages from Aberdeen, and sundry less irate, but more sulky, from "Auld Reekie," have chosen to insinuate, we insert the introductory remarks without suppressing a word, not even excepting a paragraph which is manifestly an advertisement:—

"The musical festivals held triennially in England have been productive of results so generally appreciated in the South, that their non-introduction into Scotland has been matter of frequent regret. It was well understood, however, that the production of celebrated musical works north of the Tweed, on a scale sufficiently great to constitute a festival, involved an extent of risk which rendered the undertaking all but impossible. Indeed, until within a comparatively recent period, the performance of a single oratorio in a suitable manner, generally resulted in pecuniary loss, and as a natural consequence, works of that class have been produced less frequently than their pre-eminent merit demands. But during the last few years a gratifying improvement has been perceptible in the public taste; an increased interest has been manifested in the highest class of music; and it is therefore believed, that the time has now arrived when the design of a musical festival will obtain adequate support, and be regarded as an appropriate expression of the public appreciation of one of the most ennobling of the fine arts. And while the fact will record the progress of that taste for classical compositions expected in a country so peculiarly rich in national music, the result of such a festival must operate powerfully in advancing the study of music, and in extending its elevating influences.

"These considerations have induced the proposal to celebrate, on the 24th and three following days of January, 1860, and under the auspices of the Glasgow Choral Union, the first Glasgow musical festival, in aid of the funds of the Glasgow Royal Infirmary and the Asylum for the Blind. The musical arrangements are on a scale suited to the character of the undertaking. The festival will embrace three complete oratorios and a grand miscellaneous concert; and the Directors have satisfaction in stating that a new oratorio entitled Gideon, written for the occasion by Charles E. Horsley, Esq., the eminent composer of David, Joseph, and other sacred works, will be produced for the first time, along with the Messiah and the Elijah,—the chefs-d'œuvre of Handel and Mendelssohn. It is apparent, however, that the practice followed on such occasions in England, where the oratorios are generally performed during the day, is impracticable in Scotland, and the concerts will, therefore, take place on the evenings of Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday.

"Eight solo vocalists have been engaged, of acknowledged excellence, accustomed to interpret the works of the great masters in sacred music; and it may be stated, that the principal soprano, Madame Novello, comes from her residence in Italy for the sole purpose of attending the festival. The band is composed exclusively of eminent artists, from the London Philharmonic Society; and the chorus will consist of the Glasgow Choral Union, numbering four hundred voices.

"At English festivals, with most extensive hall accommodation, the price of reserved seats is one guinea each, and at such a rate, it is evident, not only that a heavy expenditure can be sustained, but that a considerable surplus can be available for charitable purposes. In Scotland, on the other hand, the adoption of such a price would, to say the least, be a hazardous experiment, though the public halls will not contain audiences so large as can be accommodated in Birmingham, Leeds, or Bradford: the City Hall of Glasgow, where the concerts will be held, being capable of containing, at such performances, only from 1700 to 1800 persons. From calculations made by the directors, however, it was found that they were in a position, from various circumstances, to organise a musical festival, in every respect worthy of the name, at the published rates of subscription; but it is presumed that many will be disposed to promote the objects in view, by increasing their subscriptions, in which event a corresponding supply of additional tickets will be issued.

"The Subscription Book closed on the 21st December, and the remaining tickets will now be issued by Messrs. J. Muir Wood and Co., 42, Buchanan-street, Glasgow. The subscriptions are deposited in the Commercial Bank of Scotland, at Glasgow, in an account styled 'The Festival Fund.' And, in conjunction with the treasurer and secretary of the Choral Union, Alexander Harvey, Esq., Govanhaugh, James M'Clelland, Esq., accountant, and William Paul, Esq., Commercial Bank of Scotland, honorary members of the society, have consented to act as trustees of the fund so created, and to issue the necessary drafts for the purposes of the festival.

"The free proceeds of the concerts will be devoted to the Glasgow Royal Infirmary and to the Asylum for the Blind, in equal proportions; and the attention of the public is respectfully directed to the fact, that the festival is not merely a great musical demonstration, but a medium through which, it is expected, a surplus will be available for the most important charities connected with the West of Scotland.

"For the information of those who may not be conversant with musical matters in Glasgow, it will be satisfactory to describe, shortly, the character and objects of the Society under whose auspices the proposed festival will be conducted. The Glasgow Choral Union was instituted in 1843, for the purpose of diffusing a knowledge of classical works, and cultivating the public taste for sacred music—a subsidiary object being to aid the benevolent institutions connected with the city. Previous to the formation of the Society, the oratorio and works of a similar character were almost entirely unknown in the West of Scotland; but, since that period, the Association has produced, in many instances repeatedly, the oratorios of the Messiah, Israel in Egypt, Judas Maccabæus, Creation, and Elijah, besides the Dettingen Te Deum, the Lobgesang, Mendelssohn's Antigone, and other miscellaneous works of Handel, Haydn, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Spohr, Horsley, &c. And though many difficulties have been encountered by the Society in prosecuting the objects embraced in its constitution, it is gratifying to find that by its efforts the cultivation of music in Glasgow has been powerfully and successfully promoted.

"It has been impossible to contribute so much to benevolent objects as could be desired—not only in consequence of the difficulties referred to, but also from the expensive nature of the arrangements necessary for first-class concerts—all the profits, however, have been devoted to charitable purposes. And it is important to add, that the society is composed entirely of amateurs, and that the exertions of the members are disinterested; gentlemen pay an annual subscription, and no member derives pecuniary benefit."

The above may stand both as an apology for the past and a promise for the future—and in both instances may be accepted as eminently satisfactory. The only obscure point is that which explains (or rather fails to explain) why the oratorios cannot be performed in the morning just as conveniently in Scotland as elsewhere.

The Festival is to be held on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday, the 24th, 25th, 26th, and 27th of this month. The principal singers are: Mad. Novello (with an honorarium, we hear, of 400 guineas—a costly item, where so many others have to be reckoned), and Miss Whitham, sopranos; Miss Dolby and Mrs. Lockey, contraltos; Messrs. Sims Reeves and Lockey, tenors; Messrs. Weiss and Winn, basses; Mr. Henry Smart to preside at the organ; Mr. H. Albert Lambert (organist of Glasgow Cathedral), to be conductor. The executive committee is composed of the members of the Glasgow Choral Union; the trustees of the Festival Fund are as follows:—

Alexander Harvey, Esq., Govanhaugh.
James M'Clelland, Esq., President of the Institute of Accountants and Actuaries in Glasgow.
Wm. Paul, Esq., Commercial Bank of Scotland.
The Treasurer and Secretary of the Choral Union.

To show that the band will be very efficient—"superior" (as the prospectus states), "to any which has hitherto appeared in Scotland"—we append the list of players, all of whom are members of the London Philharmonic Society:—

VIOLINS.—Messrs. H. Blagrove (Principal), J. H. B. Dando, J. T. Willy, J. T. Carrodus, Pollitzer, R. Clementi, J. B. Nadaud, Jacquin, Wickett, Max. Vogell. SECOND VIOLINS.—Messrs. W. Watson (Principal), J. Newsham, E. Perry, S. Bort, J. Schmidt, J. Kelly, J. J. Calkin, J. P. Colchester, J. B. Tourneur, Zerbini, jun. VIOLAS.—Messrs. R. Blagrove (Principal), W. H. Webb, J. Westlake, Boileau, Tolhurst, W. W. Waud. VIOLONCELLOS.—Messrs. G. Hausmann (Principal), W. F. Reed, Daubert, A. Guest, Goodban, H. R. Reed. CONTRA-BASSES.—Messrs. J. Howell (Principal), J. Reynolds, T. Edgar, W. J. Castell, Blakiston, J. P. Waud. FLUTES.—Messrs. B. S. Pratten (Principal), and Rockstro. OBOES.—Messrs. A. Nicholson (Principal) and T. Smith. CLARIONETS.—Messrs. H. Lazarus (Principal) and Tyler. BASSOONS.—Messrs. Anderson (Principal) and Nobbs. HORNS.—Messrs. C. Harper (Principal), J. W. Standen, Hayward, A. Kielbach. TRUMPETS.—Messrs. T. Harper (Principal) and J. B. Irwin. TROMBONES.—Messrs. Hawkes, Webster, Healy, jun. EUPHONIUM.—Mr. Phasey. DRUMS. Mr. Chipp.

The members of the Glasgow Choral Union number 400, which will thus make a vocal and instrumental orchestra nearly 500 strong. The players are already "proven;" let us hope the singers may be found their worthy associates.

The order of the programme is as subjoined:—

Tuesday evening ...	...	Elijah.
Wednesday evening	...	Grand Miscellaneous Concert.
Thursday evening ...	...	Gideon.
Friday evening ...	...	The Messiah.

The miscellaneous concert is remarkably well selected, and presents both interest and variety, the only thing wanting being a solo or two for pianoforte or violin—a point to the great importance of which, as an agreeable relief, Festival Committees are not always sufficiently alive. The welcome afforded to a new oratorio from an English pen is honourable to the Glasgow people, and as Mr. Horsley will conduct the performance himself, it will be his own fault if the execution is not all that could be desired. As a grand rehearsal is announced to take place in St. James's Hall, on the evening of the 19th instant (Thursday), our readers may possibly like to know how Mr. Horsley (or rather, the Rev. Archer Gurney, his poet) has arranged the materials yielded by the subject he has had to treat. We therefore append a digest:—

"The subject of the oratorio is taken from the sixth and four following chapters of the Book of Judges, and forms, with a few inevitable modifications, a somewhat faithful reproduction of the sacred narrative.

"The poem comprises three parts:—The first is opened by the wailings of the people of Israel for their sins, under the dread of the invading hosts of Midian, followed by the denunciation of God's anger against His people, from the lips of a prophet; the reckless scorn and revelry of the worshippers of Baal—Ebed, and the rest: and the expostulations, on God's behalf, of his prophetess Zillah. We then trace the fears and aspirations, in solitude, of Gideon, and his call by angels to the field; the overthrow, by himself and his servants, of the altar of Baal, the erection of an altar to the Lord, with songs of praise; and the part concludes with a chorale, sung in the dead of night, by the servants of Gideon, to the honour of the Lord Jehovah.

"In the second part,—we have the fierce cries of the worshippers of Baal—their demand for vengeance upon Gideon,—the reply of his father Joash,—and the summons of Israel to the field, by the chosen warrior, who speaks under the inspiring influence of the Spirit of God, and calls forth an answering fervour in the hearts of all His people.

"The Third Part embraces the crisis of the sacred story, preceded by the War March and Song of Midian, and the midnight commune of Gideon with God and his own heart. And after a scene embodying the descent of Gideon, with his servant Phurah, into the enemies' camp, and the prophetic dream or vision of the man of Midian, the final judgement, ushered in by the divinely-ordered war-cry,—'The sword of the Lord and of Gideon,' is depicted through the medium of choruses, uttered by angelic witnesses; and the poem concludes with the triumphant return of the conquerors, and the prophetic and exultant lays of Zillah and her companions, foreshadowing the coming of a greater Conqueror and Deliverer in the person of the Son of David."

The above—although we find the somewhat hacknied incident of the "War March," with its stereotyped belongings, and although we find traces, here and there, of the dramatic conduct of Elijah and of Eli—certainly looks promising. At any rate, if rumour errs not, Gideon is by many degrees Mr. Horsley's best oratorio.

To conclude—as we have initiated our readers into so many particulars, we may as well let them know all, and by annexing a list of the charges for admission, allow them an opportunity of comparing the Glasgow fiscal policy with that of Birmingham, Norwich, Bradford, Leeds, and the Cathedral towns :—

Stalls, in area and side galleries (seats numbered), single	£0	15	0
Family tickets (admitting four)	2	15	0
Portion of side galleries, second seats in area, and front of west gallery (benches numbered), single tickets ...	0	10	6
Serial Tickets, transferable (admitting one to each concert)	1	16	0
Back of west gallery and promenade (unreserved), single	0	5	0

And now, as with paste and scissors we have rendered our own copy of the Glasgow prospectus to all intents and purposes valueless, perhaps the Festival Committee will have the courtesy to forward us another, courier par courier—in other words, immediately after they receive the present number of the Musical World.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each :—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

Just published, in post 8vo., cloth,

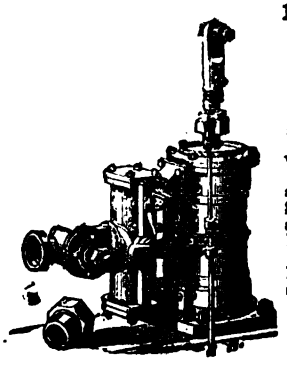
A COLLECTION OF WORDS OF 2,270 ANTHEMS, with 452 Biographical Accounts of Authors, &c. By B. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain, and Honorary Organist of St. Peter's Church, Manchester. Price 6s. 6d. The Author will be happy to make arrangements for the supply of a number of copies to any cathedral, or other church, either in cloth or sheets.

NEW SONG FOR CHRISTMAS.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." By LOVELL PHILLIPS. Beautifully illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"As graceful and vocal a song as we have met with for a long time."—Musical World.—London: Duncan Davison, 244, Regent-street, W.



HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.
JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL, and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply t BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London sole agents.

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms.

100 DANCES FOR PIANOFORTE, 2s. 6d.—Just ready, BOOSEYS' NATIONAL DANCE-BOOK, containing 100 Reels, Country Dances, Jigs, Strathspeys, &c., for Pianoforte, large size, 2s. 6d. Also, just published, Strauss' 25 best Waltzes, 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dedié à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dedié à Edouard Rocckel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

DONALD DUNCAN'S
PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,
ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit ..	15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit	18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age	20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

BACHIANA, Preludes and Fugues, by John Sebastian Bach (not included in the 48 preludes and fugues), as played at all the classical concerts, in six numbers, each 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

THE HARMONIOUS BLACKSMITH. Composed by Handel for the Pianoforte from his suite de pièces in E major. The only correct edition, as played at all the classical concerts, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SACRED SONG, "Awake, little Pilgrim." Composed by Maurice Cobham; the poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond. Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late.

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MEYERBEER'S Setting of the "Lord's Prayer," for four voices (soprano, alto, tenor, and bass), is published, with English and Latin text, in score, 3s., separate vocal parts, 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S NEW SONG, "Wert thou mine," Composed by Frank Mori, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "ETHEL." Romance for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W. "Mr. Thackery's Ethel Newcombe has inspired the composer with graceful and elegant ideas, in the form of what may be called a romance without words, exceedingly vocal and richly accompanied."—Daily News.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "SULIOTE WAR SONG." Sung by Mr. Santley. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "HARP OF WALES," Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,
USED IN THE ROYAL LAUNDRY,
AND PRONOUNCED BY HER MAJESTY'S LAUNDRESS, to be
THE FINEST STARCH SHE EVER USED.
Sold by all Chandlers, Grocers, &c.[&c.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "BLIND MAN AND SUMMER." Sung by Miss Palmer. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR," sung by the Composer, with the most distinguished success, is published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME," sung with the greatest éclat by the composer is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY." The New Song composed by ADOLPH SCHLOESSER, now singing with the greatest success by Madame Lemmens Sherrington, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARROW AND THE SONG," New Four-Part-Song for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses), sung with great success by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, and enthusiastically encored, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"THE FAIRY'S EVEN-SONG," New Four-Part-Song, for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses) sung with great success by the Polyhymnian Choir, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BLUETTES CLASSIQUES, Selected from the Works of the great Pianoforte composers.

		s.	d.
No. 1.	DUSSEK.—"Il pastore Alpigiano," Air Varié	3	0
2.	STEIBELT.—"Papageno" (Zauberflöte)	2	6
3.	.. "Monostatos"	3	0
4.	DUSSEK.—"La chasse" .. (In the Press) ..	3	0

"They are quite simple, easy to execute and to understand, and yet the most accomplished performer and the most refined amateur will find them delightful to play."—Daily News.—London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BALFE'S NEW SONGS.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee!
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle air,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then,
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

London: Duncan Davison, & Co., 241, Regent-street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

FOR THE

DRAWING ROOM.

GOLLMICK.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Vive la Danse, Valse ...	3	0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3	0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3	0	Azelia	3	0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3	0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3	0

ASCHER.

Thou art so near ...	3 0	Un Ballo in Maschera	3 0
Dinorah	4 0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes	3 0

SCHLŒSSER.

Les Boutons de Roses	3 0	Deodora, Caprice ...	3 0
Souvenir du Rigi ...	3 0	Fleurs Animées ...	3 0

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Nelly Gray	3 0	Santa Maria	2 6
Shadow Air, Dinorah...	3 0	Maud	3 0
The Power of Love ...	3 0	Bolero "Les Vespers"	3 0

MADAME OURY.

Christy's Minstrels Galop	3 0	Valse Sympathique ...	4 0
Martha	4 0	Dinorah	5 0
Air de l'Ombre ...	4 0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes.	5 0

BENEDICT.

Caledonia	4 0	Erin	4 0

TALEXY.

Eva Polka Mazurka ...	2 6	Dinorah Polka Mazurka	2 6

BERGER.

Selection, Dinorah ...	4 0	Selection, Satanella ...	4 0
Selection, Martha ...	4 0	Garibaldi's March ...	2 6

KUHE.

Satanella Grande Valse	4 0	Dinorah Fantaisie ...	3 0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

EVANS'
ENGLISH HARMONIUMS,

MANUFACTURED BY

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET, LONDON.

IN giving an answer to the unfair statements which Messrs. Chappell and Co. have lately published, Boosey and Sons would like to know what right those gentlemen have to constitute themselves their critics, and to subject them to the expense and trouble of answering a series of false assertions, which Messrs. Boosey could only respond to in a court of justice, unless they availed themselves of the present means of totally denying them.

Although confident that the animus of Messrs. Chappell's attack, and the absurdity of their statements, will be thoroughly appreciated, still, to avoid all possible misunderstanding, Messrs. Boosey beg again most distinctly to deny having ever published a testimonial obtained from the exhibition of an Alexandre Harmonium. Every testimonial which they have published (with two exceptions) has been given since the establishment of their own manufactory, and after the examination of a large stock of instruments. The two exceptional testimonials were given to Mr. Evans, when he introduced for the first time his improvements, and which, as already stated, were added to the skeleton of an Alexandre Harmonium, which he had entirely reconstructed. If these alterations consisted in filing the reeds, it is quite obvious that M. Alexandre, or any other maker, could produce equally good instruments as those of Mr. Evans, which hitherto they have not been able to approach.

The public may not care to know anything about Messrs. Boosey's manufactory, but as Messrs. Chappell have alluded to it, it is necessary to state that it was opened in January last, when Messrs. Boosey's connection with Mr. Evans began.

Owing to the very great demands for his Harmoniums, it had to be removed to more extensive premises in October, a fact which will account for Messrs. Chappell describing it as a few weeks old, and for their animosity in attacking Evans' Harmoniums. As to Herr Engel, Messrs. Boosey now repeat (what they are prepared to prove) that he offered them his exclusive services to perform on Evans' Harmoniums at the termination of his engagement with his present employer, M. Alexandre, in February next: a fact which they alluded to not as a compliment to their Harmoniums, but as a proof of the worth of any opinion of Herr Engel, whose assertions that Messrs. Boosey applied to him for a testimonial, and admitted to him that Mr. Evans exhibited an Alexandre Harmonium as his own, are totally without foundation.

In order to understand the value of the authorities quoted by Messrs. Chappell, it should be known that, not only is Herr Engel the salaried agent of M. Alexandre, but Dr. Rimbault (whose name they have united with his) is regularly in the employ of Messrs. Chappell; while the firm of Cramer, Beale, and Co., includes a member of the Chappell family among its partners. These are the authorities Messrs. Chappell have thought fit to quote in support of their false assertions, while professing to expose the improper use of testimonials by others. Messrs. Boosey and Sons are prepared to give a flat contradiction to the whole of the statements of these gentlemen, and beg to quote a letter just received from Mr. Cipriani Potter, who (according to Dr. Rimbault) gave Mr. Evans a testimonial two years ago on his exhibiting an Alexandre Harmonium as his own in Dr. Rimbault's presence :—

39, Inverness Terrace, Bayswater, W., Dec. 29, 1859.

DEAR SIR,—As there appears to exist some misunderstanding relative to my testimonial of your "Harmoniums," I beg to state in explanation, that, having received an invitation from you to inspect them, I called in your shop in Holles-street last April, and examined them in the presence of yourself and Mr. Evans. Mr. Evans tried them, and explained to me their peculiarities and improvements, with which I was very much pleased, and, in consequence, sent you a testimonial to that effect.

I remain, yours truly,

To C. BOOSEY, Esq. CIPRIANI POTTER.

After reading the above, the public will not be surprised to learn that the professional gentlemen who have signed Messrs. Chappell's document, stating that they have examined the instruments side by side—have never once visited Holles-street, to inspect Evans' Harmoniums. Their opinion may be therefore estimated at the same worth as the statements of Herr Engel and Dr. Rimbault.

Evans' Harmoniums are used at the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, by direction of Mr. Costa, who has paid frequent visits to Boosey and Sons' establishment, to examine the various instruments, and the many novel features they present. Mr. Costa's high opinion of these Harmoniums is shared by every independent member of the Musical Profession, the Clergy, and the Press.

Feeling perfectly satisfied with the decision at which the public has already arrived, as to the merits of Evans' Harmoniums, it is Boosey and Sons' intention to avoid further discussion by treating with the contempt they merit any future attacks of disappointed rivals and prejudiced professors.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.

TESTIMONIALS AND CRITIQUES.

From the Rev. HENRY F. WARDLE.

December 30th.

GENTLEMEN,—I most willingly add my testimony to the worth of your Harmoniums. I consider them pre-eminently superior in tone to any others I have ever tried; while their external and internal finish is equally in advance of other instruments at the same price. Their peculiar merit seems to me to consist in the absence of that metallic, cacophonous drone which has always been with myself the peculiar drawback of Harmoniums; and I can scarcely conceive any notes, not actually coming from pipes, more clear and soft than those of the Instruments manufactured by you.

Equally successful are the larger instruments to which you have applied the hitherto peculiarly Organic appendage of Pedals; and though of course no instrument can ever supply the place of a good organ, nor any mechanical contrivance can ever supply the want of the 32-feet pipe, I am of opinion that the Organ Harmoniums I had the gratification of hearing at your Works came as near the grand instrument as anything can; and I strongly advise that when the funds for a new organ are under £100, your Organ Harmonium should be adopted, as most effective and most likely to afford permanent satisfaction.

I remain, Gentlemen, yours truly,
HENRY J. WARDLE, M.A.
Precentor of the Forest School, Walthamstow.

Messrs. Boosey and Sons.

From the Rev. MARK NEWBY.

The Rectory, Crosby Garrett, Westmoreland, Dec. 19th, 1859.

The instrument gives great satisfaction. I have heard many, but never one, however high in price, that I liked at all comparably to this, in point of sweetness, clearness, and harmoniousness of tone. I have great pleasure in remitting you the price in a ten-pound cheque.

From the Rev. A. E. FOWLER, Widdington, Essex.

I hereby certify that Messrs. Boosey and Sons have supplied us with one of Evans' Harmoniums with ten stops, which is now placed in our church, and I have great pleasure in stating that the instrument is highly approved for its excellence of tone, and for its great power—being quite equal to filling our church and to leading the village choir.

From the Rev. H. GALE, Treborough Rectory, Taunton.

Your Harmonium is infinitely superior to those of any other maker I am acquainted with.

From CIPRIANI POTTER, Esq.

Having heard your improved Harmonium, I state with much satisfaction that the advantages I discovered were numerous, the agreeable smooth tone, void of all harshness; the quality of the treble with the bass retaining a proper equilibrium throughout the compass, very rare in keyed instruments; also the sound responding quickly to the touch, necessary for the performance of different styles of music.

The second row of keys is a great boon for the execution of Melodies, or Solo parts with an accompaniment, often avoiding the necessity of crossing the hands. With all these advantages your Harmonium must become a drawing-room instrument.

From Professor STERNDALE BENNETT.

I have the greatest pleasure in giving you my opinion upon your improved Harmonium. The instrument you left with me I enjoyed playing on extremely, and several professional friends who saw and heard it at my house, agreed with me entirely in considering your improvements very striking and valuable. I must confess that I had before entertained some prejudice against this class of instrument, from its monotonous character, but which you have now completely removed.

From ALFRED MELLON, Esq.

I have much pleasure in giving you my opinion upon your Harmonium; it is the best instrument of the kind I have ever heard.

From HENRY SMART, Esq.

I have examined the Harmonium with the modifications introduced by Mr. EVANS, of Sheffield, and have no hesitation in giving a high opinion of its quality and capabilities. Its tone is more than ordinarily delicate, and yet with sufficient power for any purpose to which instruments of this description can fairly be applied; while satisfactory means are adopted to ensure punctuality of articulation without the use of what is termed the "percussion action."

The Harmonium, in particular, as arranged by Mr. EVANS with two claviers, is a great improvement on the ordinary construction, and will be found capable of beautiful effects.

From M. W. BALFE, Esq.

I was truly delighted yesterday listening to your new Harmonium. I think it perfection, and feel quite sure of your carrying all before you with it.

From W. T. BEST, Esq.

The improvements made by Mr. EVANS in the construction of Harmoniums are important and of great value.

One of these instruments, with two claviers, and a pedal board, would be a much better substitute for the Organ in a drawing-room than the ordinary Chamber Organ with four or five stops.

From the "MORNING HERALD."

ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Our attention has been called to this instrument, in consequence of what we consider the great improvement effected by Mr. Evans. The impression left on our mind, after hearing the French harmonium in public, was anything but favourable, from the monotonous nasal tone, deficiency of power, and the style of music attempted. We certainly consider the province of the harmonium to be that of sacred and sustained music, and not the flippant style we heard on the occasions we allude to. On hearing Evans' improved harmonium we were greatly surprised at the quantity and quality of tone; and we fully concur in the opinion expressed by many of our first organists, that it is by far the nearest approach and the best substitute for the organ that has yet been brought before the public. We were struck with, we may say, the majestic effect of the full organ, while the delicacy of the swell was charming. To Mr. Evans we are indebted for having produced an instrument calculated to improve our psalmody, and raise the taste for a style of music hitherto difficult to produce in the social circle. We allude to the concerted works of the great masters written for the organ, the effect of which can be very faithfully given on the improved harmonium.

From the "ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS."

We have examined several of the most recently constructed of these instruments, and have been greatly struck with the improvements which, during the course of nearly twenty years, Mr. EVANS' persevering efforts have succeeded in making. The great difficulties with which he has to contend were the harsh metallic tone caused by the peculiar mode of generating sound; the inequality in the scale arising from the preponderance of the bass over the treble; and the slowness of the sounds in answering the touch of the keys, whereby an effect of heaviness was produced, and light, rapid passages were almost impracticable. These defects have been got rid of in a surprising manner. The tone, throughout the entire compass of the scale, is pure, sweet, mellow, and free from that nasal sound which has hitherto clung so obstinately to the instrument, while the mechanical action has become so prompt that the most brilliant pianoforte music can be executed with clearness and precision. The impressions which we derived from our observations are entirely consonant with those of some of our greatest musical authorities who have borne testimony to the qualities of the instrument.

From the "CLERICAL JOURNAL."

There is yet another and a more extraordinary one named "The New Patent English Model Harmonium," (with two rows of keys; and, as if to anticipate every want of the highly-skilled as well as of the less-gifted organist, this admirable deputy for the king of instruments is supplied with a complete set of German pedals of two octaves and a fourth, with independent pedal reeds—so that the Organo-Harmonium, which owes its paternity to Mr. Evans, may and ought to be considered as the ne plus ultra of the art, as it is in fact the nearest approach to the organ, both in point of delicacy, beauty, and usefulness, that has hitherto courted public examination.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.

MR. EVANS IN 1844.

IN proof that Mr. EVANS is not a copyist of M. ALEXANDRE, nor dependent upon him for his ideas or materials, it must be stated that Mr. EVANS invented an instrument on entirely the same principle, resembling in every respect the Harmonium, in the year 1844, and which he called the Organo-Harmonica. Being without the means of carrying on a Manufactory, Mr. EVANS was unable to introduce his inventions on a large scale; but a few extracts from letters and critiques which he received at the time when he exhibited his instrument (long before M. ALEXANDRE was heard of), will satisfy any person that Mr. EVANS is something more than the filer of M. ALEXANDRE'S reeds:—

From VINCENT NOVELLO, ESQ.

Craven-hill, Bayswater, London, Feb. 17th, 1844.

SIR,—In compliance with your request, I have played upon your newly-invented instrument, the Organo-Harmonica, and, in further compliance with your wishes, I have now the pleasure of telling you frankly my opinion of its capabilities and peculiar qualities. I consider your Organo-Harmonica as being much superior in every way to the "Seraphines" and other petty instruments of that class which have been hitherto attempted as substitutes for that most noble of all instruments, the Organ, but which have always appeared to me to be vexatiously monotonous and totally deficient in the grandeur of tone that is absolutely requisite in any instrument that is intended to be used as a genuine Organ. I think it but justice to add, that the mechanical parts of your invention seem to me to be admirable specimens of ingenuity and excellent workmanship: the touch is remarkably crisp, elastic, and pleasant under the finger, materially assisting the performer in the attainment of a distinct articulation and precision in the execution of the most rapid passages; the pedals act with freedom and facility, and speak their notes with a promptness and decision that will render them a most important and valuable acquisition to those who are studying the difficult obbligato pedal figures of Sebastian Bach and other great composers, whose works of this nature demand such diligent and constant practice.

In conclusion, I have no hesitation in saying, that, for considerable power condensed into a comparatively small compass—for equal and steady supply of wind—for the capability of sustaining full chords combined with pedal-like effect—and for its efficiency as a support to a choir in a small church or chapel, your invention is, by many degrees, the nearest approach to the real Organ that I have ever heard; and I have no doubt that wherever the latter instrument is not attainable, the "Organo-Harmonica" will be found by far the best substitute that can be obtained.

If you think that this candid opinion of mine can be rendered of any service to you in promoting the success of your clever and meritorious invention, you are at perfect liberty to make whatever use of this letter you may deem advisable.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

To Mr. W. E. Evans. VINCENT NOVELLO.

From Sir GEORGE SMART.

London, 91, Great Portland-street.

SIR,—I think it but justice to state, after having heard and played upon the Organo-Harmonica, that I consider it possesses great power for the size. The touch answers readily, and the Pedals act well. In any place where there is not room for an organ, in my opinion, this instrument will be an important acquisition.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,

GEORGE SMART,

Organist and Composer to Her Majesty's

To Mr. W. E. Evans, Cheltenham. Chapel Royal.

From J. CALKIN, ESQ.

London, Feb. 15, 1844.

SIR,—In reply to your letter, I take the earliest opportunity to state how much I was gratified in hearing, and playing upon, your newly-invented instrument, the Organo-Harmonica. Its sweetness of tone I think charming; and the power it possesses truly surprising for so small an instrument. I was much gratified at the rapidity with which it answered to the touch, both as it regards the keys and pedals, and, in this respect, much reminded me of a fine pianoforte. Sincerely wishing you success with your praiseworthy invention,

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,

JAMES CALKIN,

To Mr. W. E. Evans. Organist of Regent Church.

From G. COOPER, ESQ.

25, Ely-place, February 26th, 1844.

DEAR SIR,—It was with great pleasure I tried one of your newly-invented instruments, the Organo-Harmonica, and I confess I was much surprised and delighted with the purity of tone, the rapidity of speech, and, particularly, the rich and beautiful effect of the swell. It is, in my opinion, the best substitute for the organ that has yet appeared before the public; and in these days, when organ-playing is so much on the increase, and the difficulty of getting large organs to practice upon is so great, I have no doubt the value of your instrument will be daily felt and acknowledged.

Wishing you every success, I remain, your obedient servant,

GEORGE COOPER,

Organist of St. Sepulchre's, and Assistant Organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, and Her Majesty's Chapel Royal.

To Mr. W. E. EVANS.

SPECTATOR, February 17th, 1844.

THE ORGANO-HARMONICA.—This instrument, lately exhibited at the Hanover-square Rooms, and now removed for inspection to Novello's, in Dean-street, is an improved kind of Seraphine, of greater compass, and more rapid in answering to the touch. It contains two manuals—the upper one a swell of considerable extent: the lower one extending to CC, with rather more than two octaves of pedals. This unusual compass is obtained without unmanageable bulk; and the effects of grand organ music, fugues, trios, &c., together with all the evolutions of the pedals, may be thus studied in the quiet and comfort of the drawing-room. Its scales being exactly that of the great organs now built, it is calculated materially to advance the power of execution on that instrument. Independently of this, the Organo-Harmonica is capable of very pleasing combinations and effects; it is well adapted to accompany sacred singing, and is likely to become more various and effective for that purpose than a very small organ. In recommending this instrument to the notice of amateurs and organists as a cheap and convenient succedaneum for grand organ practice, we confess that its contingent advantages are uppermost in our mind: we expect to hear more of the fugues of Bach, and better played.

TIMES, January 23rd, 1844.

THE ORGANO-HARMONICA.—This is a newly-constructed Instrument, the invention of Mr. Evans. It possesses the power of an Organ of considerable size, and is played by means of keys, in the same manner as an Organ, and also by Pedals, by which variety and scope of tone are assisted to a very great degree. To describe it more technically, it will be proper to say that it has two sets of manuals; that the compass is from CCC to F in alt. There are two octaves and a major third of pedals, four stops, two diapason, a principal and posaune, a swell coupler and an octave pedal coupler. This instrument is fitted for large rooms, for churches of moderate space, and for chapels, and has power to be used as an accompaniment to upwards of 200 voices. It can be sold at a moderate price. One of these instruments was yesterday tested in the great concert room in Hanover-square, in the presence of a great number of musical persons, both amateurs and professors, and was unanimously admired and approved as an ingenious and meritorious invention.

 It will be observed in the above Notices that the remarks on the peculiar characteristics of the ORGANO-HARMONICA, are almost identical with the observations which EVANS' HARMONIUMS have elicited.

EVANS'
ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.

SERIOUS defects having been observed in all the Harmoniums hitherto known to the public, Mr. W. E. EVANS, who was the first to discover and apply the principle of that Instrument, in 1844 (when his Organo-Harmonium was invented), has now, after many years' experience, succeeded in completing a perfect Instrument.

The defects which persons of musical taste have invariably found in the ordinary Harmonium are—their harsh metallic sound—the excessive power of the bass over the treble—and a great difficulty in the management of the wind, causing many notes to be silent when soft and expressive playing is attempted. The Harmonium, although tolerated in places of worship, on account of its low price, has been all but excluded from the drawing-room. Mr. EVANS, having entirely overcome the objections which have impeded its general popularity, believes that the Harmonium will become as great a favourite in the drawing-room as the Pianoforte.

Without increasing the size of the Instrument, he has extended its compass by an additional octave (to CCC) in the bass, and at the same time has so improved the treble, that even with the bass thus deepened, every note in the air is heard with perfect distinctness even when played pianissimo. By careful improvements in the management of the wind, he has given the power of modulating the tone from the strongest to the tenderest expression, these changes being guided and facilitated by his newly-invented "Wind Indicator;" and with these improvements he has combined an elasticity of action suitable for the lightest and most rapid touch, quite superior to any mechanical percussion action.

SCALE OF PRICES:

COMPASS 5 OCTAVES FROM CC TO C, 61 NOTES.

No.		OAK. Guineas.	MAHOGANY. Guineas.	ROSEWOOD. Guineas.
1	One Row of Vibrators and the newly-invented Wind Indicator	10	12	15
2	With Thirteen additional Bourdon Notes to CCC, and the Wind Indicator	14	1	1
3	With Three Stops ditto, ditto, ditto, and Unison Trebles, very powerful; especially adapted for leading public Worship. Wind Indicator, &c.	19	20	22
4	With Five Stops, Diapason Treble, Diapason Bass, Bourdon, Principal, and Expression, Wind Indicator, &c.	22	23	24
5	With Eight Stops, Diapason Treble, Diapason Bass, Double Diapason, Bourdon, Expression, Sordine, and Two Fortes, Wind Indicator, &c.	25	26	28
6	With Ten Stops, Diapason Treble, Diapason Bass, Double Diapason, Bourdon, Voix Celeste, Sordine, Expression, Full Organ, and Two Fortes, Wind Indicator, &c. ..	30	31	32
7	With Fourteen Stops, Diapason, Treble, Double Diapason, Principal, Oboe, Diapason Bass, Bourdon, Clarion, Bassoon, Voix Celeste, Sordine, Expression, and Two Fortes, Full Organ, Wind Indicator, &c.	40	42	44
	THE NEW PATENT ENGLISH MODEL HARMONIUMS WITH TWO ROWS OF KEYS.
8	With Nine Stops, Diapason Treble, Diapason Bass, Double Diapason, Bourdon, Dulciana Treble, Dulciana Bass, Sordine, Expression, Knee Pedal, and Wind Indicator. The Dulciana Stop on the upper row of keys forms an accompaniment to the softest voice, or to any stop on the lower row used as a Solo	45	46	47
9	With Fourteen Stops, Diapason Treble, Double Diapason, Principal, Oboe, Diapason Bass, Bourdon, Clarion, Bassoon, Voix Celeste, Sordine, Dulciana Treble, Dulciana Bass, Expression, Knee Pedal, and Wind Indicator. The Dulciana Stop on the upper row, the same as No. 8.	60	62	65
	This Instrument is also made with a complete set of German Pedals of two Octaves, and a fourth with independent Pedal Reeds	85	90	100

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street.
(MANUFACTORY, WELLS STREET.)

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, January 14, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 3. SATURDAY, JANUARY 21, 1860. { PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

3

V. R.

FIRST GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL,

UNDER THE SPECIAL PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
HIS ROYAL HIGHNESS THE PRINCE CONSORT,
AND NOBLEMEN AND GENTLEMEN.
(As previously advertised.)

CITY HALL.

TUESDAY,	24th January	"ELIJAH,"
WEDNESDAY,	25th ,, ...	MISCELLANEOUS CONCERT.
THURSDAY,	26th ,, ...	"GIDEON."
FRIDAY,	27th ,, ...	"THE MESSIAH."

The GLASGOW CHORAL UNION beg leave to announce the completion of the general arrangements for the celebration of the FIRST GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL, on a scale suited to the magnitude of the undertaking, and fitted to mark the institution, in Scotland, of Great Musical Festivals, similar to those established, and prosecuted with so much success, in England.

ARTISTES.—PRINCIPAL VOCALISTS.

Soprano—Madame CLARA NOVELLO and Miss WHITHAM.
Contralto—Miss DOLBY and Mrs. LOCKEY.
Tenor—Mr. SIMS REEVES and Mr. LOCKEY.
Bass—Mr. WEISS and Mr. WINN.

The BAND will be superior to any which has hitherto appeared in Scotland. The Artistes are Sixty in number—selected exclusively from the

LONDON PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY,

And embrace many of the most Eminent Instrumentalists in Europe.

The CHORUS will consist of the GLASGOW CHORAL UNION, numbering Four Hundred Voices.

The entire Orchestra will thus comprise nearly
FIVE HUNDRED PERFORMERS.

Organist	Mr. HENRY SMART, of London.
Conductor	Mr. HENRY A. LAMBETH.

One or more of the distinguished Noblemen announced as Patrons of the undertaking will Preside.

ADMISSION TO NON-SUBSCRIBERS.

	£	s.	d.
Stalls in area and side galleries (seats numbered), single tickets ..	0	15	0
Family tickets (admitting four)	2	15	0
Portion of side galleries, second seats in area, and front of west Gallery (benches numbered), single tickets	0	10	6
Serial tickets (transferable), admitting one to each concert ..	1	16	0
Back of west gallery, or promenade (unreserved), single tickets..	0	5	0

 Prospectuses, containing all particulars, may be had at 42, Buchanan-street, or sent, post-free, on receipt of sixpence.

Tickets may be had of J. Muir, Wood, and Co., 42, Buchanan-street. As only a very limited number can be issued, early application will be necessary,
HENRY BAXTER, Hon. Sec.

LAURENT'S SECOND GRAND WINTER BALL, at St. James's Hall.—M. HENRI LAURENT has the honour to announce, that in consequence of the distinguished success which attended his grand Christmas ball, he has, at the request of numerous persons of distinction, made arrangements to give a SECOND GRAND WINTER BALL, at St. James's Hall, Tuesday, January 31, on the same scale of magnificence which afforded so much satisfaction on the last occasion. The hall will present the appearance of a beautiful winter garden, being decorated with flowers, plants, and sculpture, arranged by Mr. Hurwitz. The orchestra will be complete in every department, and will perform a variety of novelties composed for the occasion Conductor—M. Laurent. The supper will be under the entire management of Mr. Donald, the celebrated restaurateur of St. James's Hall. Ball tickets for gentlemen, 10s. 6d.; ladies, 7s.; supper tickets, 7s.; to be had of Mr. Austin, St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, and of the principal music-sellers.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 28, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater. W.

GLEES, MADRIGALS & OLD ENGLISH DITTIES.—Egyptian Hall, Piccadilly (Dudley Gallery).—In consequence of the very distinguished and increasing success which continues to attend the performances of the London Glee and Madrigal Union, they will repeat their entertainment under arrangemen· with Mr. Mitchell, this and the ensuing week. Every evening at half-past eight; and on Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, at half-past two. Conductor, Mr. Land. Literary illustrator, T. Oliphant, Esq. The programme will include old english ballads, catches, madrigals and glees, by ancient and modern composers. Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved, 2s.; a few fauteuils, 5s.; which may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street.

TO THE BENEVOLENT.—The lamented death of the late Mr. William Appleby, for thirty years the faithful and devoted servant and foreman to Messrs. Davis and Phillips, of 25, Berwick-street, Music-printers, calls for the sympathy of those benevolent friends and the public, who may be kindly disposed to aid by their contributions in support of his two female orphan children, left totally unprovided for, and in repayment of the funeral expenses incurred. The loss of his wife and two other of their children in one week, after a long and serious illness, attendant with heavy medical, funeral, and family expenses during sickness, so reduced his means and crushed his spirit, that eventually his health sunk, under the heavy load of his troubles and affliction, until he died, in the very prime of his manhood, leaving two female orphan children destitute, for whom the generous support of his friends and the public is earnestly solicited, in endeavouring to raise a sufficient fund, to be placed in a Savings' Bank, in the charge of competent trustees, for their future benefit and support. Contributions thankfully received by Messrs. Davis and Phillips, 25, Berwick-street, Music-printers; W. Lovell Phillips, Esq., 67, Oakley-square; Mr. W. Alston, 7, Sutherland-place, Eccleston-square; Mrs. Davis, 67, Oakley-square; W. Edwin Alston, Esq., Union Bank of London, City; and by such other ladies and gentlemen who may kindly feel an interest in endeavouring to obtain the same.

PIANO, GUITAR, and BANDOLEAN.—A Gentleman wishes to receive Three Lessons, weekly, upon the above instruments. Send the lowest terms per quarter, by letter only, which must be very moderate, to W. Wallace, Esq., Cannon-row, Parliament-street.

WANTED, a situation as Organist, by a young man, aged 22, capable of conducting a small choir. Good testimonials. Nearly seven years in his last appointment. Address, stating salary, to H. M., Pagett's Musical Repository, 7, Brompton-road, S.W.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

CAPITAL ORGAN FOR SALE OR HIRE.—2 rows keys—11 stops—GG; also another, 1 row—GG—7 stops. Price 120 and 65 guineas. Hiring, 9 and 6 guineas per annum. Address, S., 2, Nugent-villas, Kingsdown, Bristol.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

MUSICAL [illegible] VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons [illegible] instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and [illegible] approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at [illegible] to the regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, [illegible] to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent [illegible] any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey [illegible] London.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MDME. ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR. CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR. HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.
Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Principals.
H. Weist Hill. }
Viotti Collins.
M. Bezeth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.
Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
E. Payton.
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. Marsh.
G. Betjemann.
B. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W. A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.
T. Wells.
J. Zerbini, Jun.
Ambrose Haynes.
S. Bort.
F. J. Amor.

VIOLI.
Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb.
H. J. Trust.
J. Thompson.
H. Tothurst.

VIOLONCELLI.
Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. F. Reed.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.
R. Reed.

CONTRA BASSI.
Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. C. F. Beresford.
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.
Messrs.
R. S. Pratten.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.
Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.
Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.
Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.
Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.
Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.
Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.
Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.
Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.
Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.
Mr. Walter Hinchey.

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:

M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

For the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals will be held on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, and during the season, concerts will be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with the chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

In the professional department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two violas.

All communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London Orchestral Association, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

NEWSPAPER

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE CHORD OF THE SIX-FOUR.

SIR,—Can you, or any of your readers, inform me whether the chord of the $\frac{6}{4}$ is rejected by the strict church writers or not, except in cases where it is used as an appoggiatura, or where it comes in a cadence on the dominant, followed by the $\frac{5}{3}$ which is its resolution?

I was present, not long since, at the opening of the St.— church, Newcastle, where full choral service was rendered by the choir of St.— church. A response in the Litany, "Good Lord deliver us," began on the chord of the $\frac{6}{4}$, on the dominant, in the key of E minor. I listened and listened again, for I thought the basses must have been refractory, but there was no mistaking it.

Farrant in his anthem, "Lord, for thy tender mercy's sake," has several times avoided this chord, and even modern composers use it very carefully, never without preparation. I never heard of any composer violating the rule, that "no composition must begin or finish on the chord of the $\frac{6}{4}$."

I beg you will pardon my trespassing on your valuable space, but your willingness to assist in the diffusion of musical knowledge encouraged me to ask this question, in the hope of its being useful, not only to me but to others.

I am, sir, yours respectfully,
A SCHOOL-BOY.

[Beethoven begins and ends the slow movement of his seventh symphony—in A—with the chord of the six-four.—ED. M. W.]

AN UNINTENDED OMISSION.

SIR,—I trust you will pardon the liberty I have taken, but having seen a notice in your publication of the 7th, mentioning the names of the gentlemen of the choir of St. George's Chapel as having the honour of singing before the Queen and court at Windsor Castle, on the eve of Christmas Day, I find my own name omitted. I trust you will kindly correct the error, as I was present on that occasion.

I remain, sir, your obedient servant,
JOSEPH ADAMS,
Cloisters, Windsor. Lay Clerk of St. George's Chapel.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE concert on Monday last—the eighth of the season—was dedicated in the vocal part to Beethoven. The selection, we need hardly add, was first-rate. Let the programme show:—

PART I.

Quartet in E flat, for two violins, viola, violoncello	Mendelssohn.
Song, "Andenken"	Beethoven.
Song, "Hope"	Beethoven.
Sonata in B minor, Op. 40 (first time)	Clementi.

PART II.

Sonata in A major, for pianoforte and violin ...	Mozart.
Lieder Kranz ("Lover to his Mistress")	Beethoven.
Song, "Know'st thou the land," Madame Lemmens Sherrington	Beethoven.
Quintet in F minor, for pianoforte, two violins, viola, and violoncello, (first time.)	Dussek.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

The executants in the quartet were Herr Becker, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti, who almost surpassed themselves in the performance, and really did so in the scherzo, which was in every way incomparable. The artists in the quintet were Mr. Charles Hallé, and the quartet of "strings" just named. This glorious composition of the old master—not quite so fashionable as he might be; but, thanks to the directors of the Monday Popular Concerts, now likely to become fashionable—was hailed with boundless delight by all the amateurs present. The execution was admirable. Mr. Hallé, in Clementi's very grand sonata—another novelty—played with great power and expression, and achieved an unmistakeable triumph.

Madame Lemmens Sherrington and Mr. Sims Reeves were again the vocalists. Beethoven's two songs are hardly in their manner suited to the lady's brilliant style; nevertheless, both were artistically given, and "Know'st thou the land," was most charmingly sung. Mr. Sims Reeves is at home in all sorts of music. He sings Handel, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, Bishop, and Balfe, with equal discrimination and equal effect. On Monday night last, one might have supposed that his special mission was to interpret Beethoven's music and no other. More magnificent singing we never heard from any tenor than in the Lieder Kranz, which literally made the audience tempestuous in their delight, and induced the singer to return to the platform. The "Hope" song, also most exquisitely rendered, resulted in a recall. In the Lieder Kranz, Mr. Reeves was accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. Charles Hallé. Mr. Benedict accompanied Mr. Reeves and Madame Lemmens Sherrington in the other songs.

MISS DOLBY'S SOIRÉES MUSICALES.

MISS DOLBY is always early in the field with her annual concerts; and, indeed, of late years we have been accustomed to look upon her soirées as the veritable dawn of the season proper. The season, therefore, may be said to have been inaugurated with special brilliancy on the evening of Tuesday, the 10th instant, at 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, the private residence of Miss Dolby, when the following admirable programme was given:—

PART I.

Quartet in G major, Messrs. Sainton, Bezeth, Doyle, and Paque	Haydn.
Aria, "Cangio d' Aspetto" (Admetus), Miss Dolby	Handel.
Solo, pianoforte, Miss Freeth.
Song, "The Pilgrim," Miss Dolby	J. M. Mudie.
Fantasia, violin, Solo de Concert, M. Sainton ...	Sainton.

PART II.

Trio in B flat, Op. 97, pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, Miss Freeth, M. Sainton, and M. Paque ...	Beethoven.
Serenade, "Sleep, dearest, sleep," Miss Dolby ...	Randegger.
Solo, violoncello, M. Paque.
Scotch Song, "Here about, and far awa," Miss Dolby	Old Air.
Duettino, violin and violoncello, "Mira la bianca luna," M. Sainton and M. Paque	Rossini.

At the Pianoforte—Herr Meyer Lutz.

With four such sterling performers the fine quartet of Haydn could hardly have been executed to greater perfection. M. Sainton, who possesses that peculiar gift—bestowed on none but the most accomplished artists—of adapting himself to the style of the composer he is interpreting, without losing his own specialty and individuality—led like a giant of the instrument, and seemed to inspire his coadjutors—all men and true—with his own fire and enthusiasm. The trio of Beethoven exhibited a decided improvement in the young pianist, Miss Freeth, the talented pupil of M. Alexandre Billet, and excited even a more marked sensation than the quartet, attributable in a great measure to the pianoforte being the instrument of predilection to the majority of Miss Dolby's visitors. Miss Freeth, with her talents, aided by zeal and perseverance, cannot fail to make her way with the public; nor need her friends have recourse to laudatory advertisements to notify her capabilities.

M. Sainton's performance of his own popular fantasia, "Solo de Concert," was inimitable as a bravura display, and excited the utmost astonishment and delight.

The duettino for violin and violoncello—founded on that favourite and most charming duet, by the author of the Barbiere, "Mira la bianca luna," which on two occasions created so great a sensation at the Monday Popular Concerts—constituted an excellent show-piece for both violin and violoncello, in which M. Sainton and M. Paque, both Frenchmen, demonstrated in an unmistakeable manner their feeling for Italian sentiment.

Miss Dolby's four songs were skilfully chosen to exhibit her versatility. Handel's song has been always one of her finest performances, and we do not remember having heard her sing it more splendidly, or with more legitimate effect, than on Tuesday evening week. Handel himself would have been more than satisfied. "The Pilgrim" is a charming song, written in Mr. Mudie's most expressive style, and promises to become a favourite, more especially if recommended by the fair artist's singing. We have before pronounced Miss Dolby's warbling of Herr Randegger's "Serenade," incomparable. It is, indeed, one of her most perfect efforts. The poetry of the Scotch song has been written by Mr. T. Oliphant in praise of Burns. Sweeter tunes we have heard, and verses of greater pith, though these are by no means devoid of sentiment; but Miss Dolby's fine singing would have rendered acceptable a ballad of far less pretensions.

The rooms were crowded by an elegant and fashionable assembly, who appeared throughout to enjoy the refined and admirable entertainment provided by the gracious hostess.

The second and last soirée takes place on the 31st instant.

CONCERTS.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Whatever may be said of the merits of Haydn's Creation as an oratorio, one thing is quite certain, and that is that it has the power of attracting and delighting vast numbers of people; and, if any proof were wanting to confirm this idea, the densely packed crowd of Wednesday last would be sufficient evidence. Not only was the building crowded almost to suffocation, but hundreds turned away, money in hand, unable to gain admission. No doubt the names of the principal singers had no small share in the attraction, for the announcement of such artists as Mad. Lemmens Sherrington, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss is a guarantee for a performance of the highest efficiency. Nor were the hopes of the audience doomed to be disappointed, for all concerned exerted themselves to the utmost, and, consequently, the highest satisfaction was afforded. Frequently as we have had to speak of Mad. Lemmens Sherrington in terms of warm praise, we have never heard her to greater advantage than in the light, elegant, and florid music of Haydn, which shows all the best qualities of her voice and powers of execution to perfection. "With verdure clad," of course drew forth rapturous applause, and some considerable attempts at an encore, wisely resisted. Even stronger efforts were used to induce Mr. Sims Reeves to repeat the air "In native worth," but a politely bowed acknowledgment was the sensible response to the compliment. Mr. Reeves seems, if possible, to be singing more magnificently than ever, and was as enthusiastically received and vigorously applauded as at Exeter Hall on Friday. St. Martin's does not promulgate the same edict as Exeter, and perhaps Mr. Hullah is wise in his generation, for after all if an audience thoroughly enjoys a thing, solo, chorus, or whatever it may be, they will applaud, despite all laws, provided the performance be in a secular building; although we have heard at the festivals of the chorus, the murmured audible sensation involuntarily bursting forth after some grand display, so carried away by enthusiasm as to forget that a cathedral was the scene of triumph. Mr. Weiss is thoroughly at home in the bass music of the Creation, and gave the recitatives and airs, especially "Roaming in foaming billows," with great energy and musician-like feeling, and was warmly applauded. Miss Gray (a pupil, we believe, of Miss Rainforth's) appeared in the third part, joining Mr. Weiss in the duets, and singing the recitative, "O thou for whom I am," in a style that gained the approbation of the audience, especially after "Graceful consort." Band and chorus rendered ample justice to their task, and drew forth their share of the popular suffrages—"Awake the harp," "The heavens are telling," and "Achieved is the glorious work"—coming in for the largest portion.

MYDDLETON HALL, ISLINGTON.—Mr. Lazarus gave his first concert in this neighbourhood on Tuesday last, and was honoured with a crowded audience—by no means a common occurrence, we believe, in the North London district. The programme was of a miscellaneous character, chiefly abounding in solos, and by no means of the class to which the Monday Popular have accustomed us. Nevertheless it appeared to afford high satisfaction, if we may judge from the hearty applause with which every piece was received. In addition to the bénéficiaire, whose name itself would be a powerful attraction, Miss Dolby, Madame Louisa Vinning, M. Sainton, Mr. Winn, &c., were engaged, besides which Mr. Lazarus's daughter also contributed her aid in a pianoforte solo on Dinorah, a duet and trio with her father, and a song. We do not know whether this young lady is destined for a pianist or vocalist, but would strongly recommend the former, as, although yet very young, she evinces ability and intelligence which may enable her with careful study to do better things than sing a third-rate ballad, or play a fantasia on operatic airs. There is plenty of good music for the piano, which will serve as a far better school either for training or display than the mere show-pieces which are but too much the fashion. Miss Dolby and M. Sainton both evoked the warmth of the audience, the former being encored in one of her songs. Mr. Guest (violoncello) joined Mr. and Miss Lazarus in the trio, Beethoven in D. Miss Harrington, Mr. Suchet Champion, and Mr. Lester, sang various solos of the popular (not "Monday") stamp, and Mr. Winn was encored in the old English air "Come lasses and lads." Mr. Lazarus gave only one solo (modestly placed in a very bad position, nearly at the end of a programme already too long), but played in such a style as fully to justify us in endorsing the opinion of a contemporary just given, that, on the clarinet, he is undoubtedly the first artist, not only in England but in Europe. Mr. C. Severn, of the Opera and Philharmonic bands, and organist of St. Mary's, Islington, made a most efficient conductor and accompanyist.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—A more unexceptionable performance has seldom been listened to than that given at Exeter Hall, on Friday se'nnight, to an audience which literally crammed the building to overflowing. The oratorio was Handel's Samson, with Mr. Costa's additional accompaniments. With respect to Samson (commenced eight days after the completion of The Messiah, and finished in five weeks), the immortal composer confessed he did not know whether or not he preferred it to The Messiah. Nearly one hundred and seventeen years have elapsed since its first production at the Theatre Royal, Covent Garden (Feb. 18th, 1743), and so little attention was then given by the London journals to matters musical, that not one word was said by any of them, of either Samson or The Messiah, produced during the seasons '42, '43. Now the case is very different. Half a score newspapers proclaim the fact to every breakfast table the following morning, and twice-a-score weeklies announce all particulars for the edification of readers by the million. Compare again the number of performances. From 1743 to Handel's death in 1759, he only gave one hundred and ninety-two performances, among which The Messiah, Judas, and Samson count for eighty-seven. It would be hard to say how many performances of Handel's oratorios have been given during the last sixteen years; but amongst all of them it would be difficult to find any that have afforded more unequivocal satisfaction than that on Friday week last.

To Mr. Sims Reeves must be assigned the place of honour, sustaining as he did the part of Samson in a manner impossible to praise too highly. His rendering of "Total eclipse" was most pathetic, and if ever artist did justice to "immortal music married to immortal verse," it was upon this occasion. What the original tenor in Handel's time—Mr. Beard—was, we have no means of ascertaining, but with the remembrance of the elder Braham yet in our minds, we must award the palm to Mr. Reeves. No less admirable was his singing "Why does the God of Israel sleep," and the air "Thus when the sun." The recitatives and duets, not the most grateful in all cases, were delivered in a style equally irreproachable, and throughout the frequent applause testified that the audience thought a deal more of Mr. Reeves's singing than the Exeter Hall regulations, which are supposed to forbid all demonstrations of the kind. In other instances the rule was set aside, for there were two encores—one to Miss Banks (who has hitherto been heard only at Mr. Hullah's), in "Let the bright Seraphim," the matchless trumpet obbligato accompaniment being played by Mr. T. Harper, as perhaps no other artist living can play it, and the other re-demand to Signor Belletti in "How willing my paternal love." The young lady, upon whom the entire weight of the soprano music rested, may be congratulated upon her successful début at Exeter Hall, for, although evidently at first suffering from nervousness, she regained her courage, and was enabled to display her clear and telling (though not powerful) voice to decided advantage; the trying air above named showing executive powers of no mean order. Miss Dolby's artistic excellence was never shown to greater perfection than in the contralto music; while Mr. Weiss's fine voice and vigorous declamation did excellent service, and evoked loud plaudits, in the energetic air "Honour and Arms," dividing the suffrages with Mr. Reeves in the duet "Go, baffled coward." To Signor Belletti must also be given the highest commendation for his artistic conception, and no less artistic delivery of all the music assigned to him, and especially of the air which was redemanded. The band was thoroughly up to its work, while the chorus, with one or two exceptions, went admirably, both showing the invaluable result of constant training and practice. The next performance will be on February 3rd, when Mendelssohn's Song of Praise and the Dettingen Te Deum will be given, with Madame Clara Novello, Mr. Sims Reeves, &c., as principals.

MR. AND MRS. HOWARD PAUL'S ENTERTAINMENT.—Campbell's American Minstrels have been succeeded in St. James's Hall by Mr. and Mrs. Paul's clever and amusing Patchwork, which is now quite established in public favour. Every night finds the room filled by an elegant audience. Among Mrs. Howard Paul's new characters that hit the popular taste, we may mention that of an Irish nursemaid, who, while rocking her young charge to sleep, recalls to mind that she has a sweetheart, a drummer, who, before he went to join his regiment in India, leaves her a few keepsakes, including an old drum, an old military coat and hat, &c. (what was his colonel about, to let him give away his "perquisites" so freely?), in which the fair daughter of the Emerald Isle soon equips herself, and then sings a song in praise of a soldier's life. Mrs. Paul gives this with such archness, and accompanies herself on the drum so capitally, that the audience are fairly carried away, and the burst of applause that follows is richly merited. Mrs. Paul also sings (in imitation of Mr. Sims Reeves) Mr. Balfe's new song of "Margaretta." Mr. Howard Paul, in his impersonation of a go-a-head Yankee, sings a "patter song," à la Charles Mathews, with extraordinary volubility. Patchwork concludes with a "danse des folles," by Mr. and Mrs. Paul, which has but one fault, that of being too short. One of the most remarkable features of the entertainment is the very rapid way in which the changes of costume are managed.

MANCHESTER.—At the last Monday Evening Concerts, Miss Banks was unable to sing from indisposition, and Miss Susannah Cole was substituted. The patrons of the Free-trade Hall had no cause for disappointment, if we may judge from the following account, which we transcribe from the Manchester Times of Tuesday last:—

"In consequence of a telegram announcing the indisposition of Miss Banks, the director was fortunate enough to meet with Miss Susannah Cole, a young vocalist who made a first appearance in Manchester. We venture to prophecy that it will not be the last. Miss Cole possesses a pure soprano voice, soft and fluty in quality, with considerable facility of execution, and she gives decided evidence of careful cultivation. In Rossini's 'Di Piacer' she was rapturously encored. In 'The beating of my own heart,' there was shown good taste; and in the popular 'Shadow Song,' from Dinorah, a decided brilliancy of execution."

Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. W. Harrison are announced to appear at the Free-trade Hall on Monday.

FOREIGN.

BERLIN—(From a Correspondent).—In my last I omitted a musical event of very considerable importance, to wit, a very clever organ performance by a young English—I beg pardon—American gentleman, of remarkable musical abilities. The novelty of seeing an English name "in print" out here, and particularly where musical execution is concerned, induces me to send you the programme.

1. Prelude and Fugue (in G minor) ... ... J. K. Paine.
2. Choral varied: "An Wasserflüssen Babylon" Seb. Bach.
3. Trio Sonata in C (For two keyboards and pedals) "
4. Toccata in F ... ... "
5. Trio Sonata in E flat ... ... "
6. Chromatic Fantasie (in A minor) ... ... Thiele.

The first piece proves Mr. Paine to be not only a player, but a thorough comprehender of the king of fugues. The subjects are well chosen, and treated with all the skill of an experienced contrapuntist. Thanks to Mr. Best, it is not requisite to say a single word of the four numbers by Sebastian Bach, but I cannot resist just saying that the varied chorale is most surpassingly beautiful. Of the Fantasia by Thiele, much might be said if space were granted me. This not being the case, however, I must content myself by saying that it is a work of as great beauty as talent and invention. Thiele is a name quite unknown in England, if I mistake not. This is not much to be wondered at, for, were we to ask a hundred persons in Berlin who he was, the probability is that no single individual would know. Like many talented men, he died young, very young, but not before he had raised himself to the highest point of his profession. As a practical and theoretical musician he had few rivals. His compositions bear the stamp of immortal genius, such as the gods vouchsafe but seldom to man. His profundity was only exceeded by his inventive talents: the fact that the great Bernhardt Klein was his instructor guarantees the solidity of his acquirements. Had he not had so excellent a preceptor his vivid and unbounded imagination might have led him into extravagances, such as, in later days, have tried hard to create a sensation in the neighbourhood of Weimar. Even Bach himself does not surpass him in effects powerfully sublime.

One chromatic passage in contrary movement, with full chords and pedals, had an unspeakably powerful effect. It was, indeed, sufficient to melt the soul in extacies! Mr. Paine's playing was perfection: the resonance, however, marred the effect greatly. If I am rightly informed this young gentlemen will pass through England on his way home, and I hope most devoutly he may make the acquaintance of our best player and the incomparable Liverpool organ. It is to be feared, however, that considerable delay in his departure would ensue if he once gave the Lilliputians an opportunity of hearing his superb playing. He is a pupil of the well-known Haupt of this city, and, if that veteran is not proud of his pupil, he ought to be. The learned Belario might say of Paine: "I never knew so young shoulders with so old a head."

Were it possible to send you a daily letter, it might be possible to give you an idea of all the musical events which transpire in this most (musically) favoured city. This very evening there are three very attractive concerts, and Don Juan at the opera, besides an Italian version of the Barbiere at the newly-opened Victoria Theatre, and unnumbered musical attractions elsewhere of a less select character. Of recent events, the chief are as follows:—The performance of Bach's Christmas oratorio by the Sing-akademie. As I premised, at the rehearsal the effect produced was not near so great as that by the mighty Gmass, or the Passion music of the same master. It cannot be denied that there are many great beauties in the work; that some of the choruses are not a whit less majestic than the grandest of the masters; yet it is equally incontrovertible that a character far too secular pervades many, if not most, of the pieces. If a composer's works—and unquestionably they are—be influenced by the humour in which their author writes them, what a really merry one must Bach have been in when he wrote much of the work in question! I will only mention the freaks he has taken with the trumpets. Goodness save me from having to blow principal trumpet in Bach's Christmas oratorio! Could any of your readers have seen that worthy member of M. Lieley's band at the memorable performance, he would most certainly have said, "Amen!" to my petition, with all brief and due conveniency. The lovely pastoral symphony is certainly the gem of the whole work, and bears remarkable similarity to Handel's pastoral: had the two masters not have been contemporaneous and unknown to each other, one of them would most surely have been accused of plagiarism. Generally speaking, perhaps no two great musicians are more widely different in point of style; but in this particular pastoral Bach has descended one step from the coldly classic, approaching, in so doing, the majestic heights from which Handel surveyed the insignificant ordinary world with disdainful eye, yet sympathising heart.

The next in importance comes the performance of a cantata of Bach's, and "L'Allegro" of Handel, by the Bach society, under Herr Vierling's direction. The cantata, Werdaglaubt, is one of those immense works of Bach which he wrote every week for performance on the Sunday then following. It contains one masterly chorus, and a finely scored chorale. Bach's hand is written on every page of the score. No one else could have made so much from such little means. I will dismiss Handel by saying that he is unquestionably much better understood in England than here, at any rate judging from this performance in question. There was first of all a want of right conception of many of the pieces, and, secondly, a want of firmness in the conductor's hand. Such an unsteady performance I should not again like to hear. The solo singers (Madame Tuczek-Herrenburg, and Messrs. Krause and Osten), did all they could to redeem the affair, but signally failed. There was no fiasco, properly speaking, but just such an unsatisfactory performance as might be expected when there is no decisive wielder of the bâton. Herr Vierling is one of the best composers living, and as thorough a musician as Germany possesses at this moment; but he is not fit to conduct, nor will he be till he rids himself of his nervous irritability.

At a concert of Madame Burchard's a new oratorio was performed (Solomon's Song), by the respected veteran, Dr. Löwe, who came expressly from Stettin to conduct it. I could not attend the performance, and can only record the fact that while the critics here give the learned Doctor credit for the most consummate skill in writing ballads, they do not seem struck by his latest oratorio. His earlier works (purely vocal oratorios) seem to be almost entirely forgotten. His ballads are the most popular in Germany, and deservedly so. How many of our ballad fabricators have studied him to advantage, I hardly dare venture to think of.

The last symphony concert of the royal band was also not without its novelty. This was a symphony from the prolific pen of Niel Gade, entitled, "In the Highlands." It is characterised by more peculiarity than beauty, and more noise than either; there is, however, much beautiful music in it, and it would reward the labour of sifting and clipping. Of virtuosi, there has been no lack. Of violinists alone there have been four: David (from Leipzig), Vieuxtemps, Ruppoldi (Vienna), and a young Moldavian named Candle—no, Candella! Vieuxtemps carried away the palm. Nothing could surpass his faultless execution and his decided good taste. He never failed to create a furor. As I hear, he is now taking his last farewell of the public. He starts for St. Petersburgh in a few days. Could he not be induced te pay London also a farewell visit? See to it, Mr. E. T. Smith. There has been a wondrous succession of novelties at the Opera: Iphigenia, Idomeneo, Lohengrin, Jessonda, La Favorita, Tannhäuser,* and, last, but not least, Gluck's imcomparable Orfeo. Johanna-Dachman Wagner played superbly, but, alas! that once magnificent voice, where is it? Alas, echo answers where? As coming events cast their shadows before, I may safely predict the temporary retirement of this lady from the stage. Need I say another word? Two, I may say three, events of quite a festive character have also taken place at the Opera-house. The first was the marriage of the fascinating young and talented prima-donna, Fräulein Wippern; and the second, in the celebration of the completion of a half-a-century's service on the boards of the Opera by Herr Zschiescfe.† Well-merited honours were paid to the worthy and much-esteemed veteran, not the least of which was a letter from the Prince Regent's own hand, conveying something more than mere thanks. It is gratifying to see what a lively interest the new premier takes in matters of art. This morning's Voss announces the fact of H.R.H. having conferred the honour of the Red Eagle on two worthy musicians—the one an organist, the other a singer. After such facts as these, why will people persist in asking if Germany cares any more for her "art-treasures" than England does for hers?

The third event was a similar tribute of respect paid to the veteran contrabassist, Herr Schlechte, who joined the ranks of the present Opera at the same time as Herr Zschiescfe. May they both live long and happily to enjoy the benefit of well-earned repose! The new opera by Graf v. Redern is in active rehearsal, and will, I believe, be performed for the first time next week. Hope to send a detailed account of this long-expected and much-talked-of work in my next. Our Princess attended the performance of Shakspere's Midsummer Night's Dream the other evening, and I must say looked perfectly blooming with health. Her embonpoint was the subject of general remark. H.R.H. attended service at the English chapel on Sunday last, when Boyce's "Te Deum" in A was sung for the first time. It "went" in a most creditable manner, without men's voices, however, be it remarked.

I cannot close without calling your attention to an error which crept in my last (p. 780, vol. 37). The "R. I. P." I had appended was simply intended for the benedictory "Requiescat in pace;" for poor Wolff, who fell gloriously at Solferino, and was not at all intended to convey any idea of your correspondent's initials, his name being, as every one knows, simply JONES.

COLOGNE.—The fourth soirée of chamber music, on Tuesday, the 10th instant, was very well attended. Both the programme and the manner in which it was executed gave general satisfaction. A quartet by Haydn, in D major, and a qurtet in D minor, by Franz Schubert, were excellently played (first violin, Herr Grunwald); although the many separate beauties of Schubert's composition, especially the variations of the andante, were fully appreciated, Haydn's quartet produced a greater impression of completeness and unity. Why? Because, in it, invention and character are combined with perfect artistic form, each being thoroughly imbued with the other. The interest of the evening was greatly enhanced by the performance of MM. Hiller and Grunwald, on the pianoforte and violin, first of the graceful and dreamy sonata in G major, Op. 96, by Beethoven, and then of three pieces from the Canonical Suite for Pianoforte and Violin, Op. 86, by F. Hiller, No. 5, andante canon, on the fourth—No. 6, menuetto canon on the fifth—No. 7, alla tarantella canon, in the sixth. In these compositions, the melodious matter and charm—and the strictly canonical form—at one time modulated between violin and bass, at another between treble and violin, and then between bass and treble of the pianoforte—are connected in so masterly a manner with each other, and, at the same time, such a different character is impressed on each separate piece, that the layman is delighted with the musical thoughts, and is hardly aware of the way in which they are intertwined, while the musician enjoys the double pleasure produced by the said thoughts, and the artistic, most skilful, and in no wise stiff and scholastic, although perfectly normal and contrapuntal, mode in which they are worked out. They are small gems in a style of composition which musicians are not so often found attempting now-a-days.

The pianist, Hans von Bülow, is now on his way from Berlin, viâ Basle, to Paris, where he will give a series of soirées in the Salle Pleyel. In the beginning of February he will perform here, at the second concert of the Männergesang Verein. The last concert in the Gürzenich, on Tuesday, the 17th ult., was rendered especially brilliant by the co-operation of Herren Joachim and Niemann, from Hanover. In addition to this, a new symphony by Gade, and Mendelssohn's Psalm for two choruses and orchestra, were performed.

According to report, Mad. Clara Schumann is expected, in February, at Vienna, where she thinks of settling permanently.

ST. PETERSBURGH, January 3rd.—(From a Correspondent.)—On Saturday, the 31st December, Don Giovanni was performed, for the benefit of Sig. Debassini, to a house crammed to the ceiling. Several members of the imperial family honoured this solemnity with their presence, and frequently gave the signal for applause. It is true, however, that the flower of the Italian company interpreted Mozart's masterpiece, and the Italian theatre of St. Petersburgh is, perhaps, the only establishment of the kind in Europe which can show such an array of talent. Mad. Lagrua, in the part of Donna Anna, did not belie the high opinion she inspired at her very first appearance; her entrée was superb, and in the air which follows, in her duet with Ottavio, as well as in the trio of the masks, rendered with a perfect ensemble by herself, Tamberlik, and Mad Bernardi, and enthusiastically encored, she exhibited a superiority, which obtained for her numerous recalls. Mad. Charton-Demeur, in the character of Zerlina, was exceedingly graceful, and sang deliciously—the consequence being that the audience insisted on her repeating the famous duet with Don Giovanni, "La ci darem la mano," as well as that which follows with Masetto (Everardi). Mad. Charton gave these two admirable pieces their true character, and the frequent applause, followed by reiterated recalls, proved how great was the satisfaction she caused. The part played by Tamberlik (Don Ottavio) is somewhat eclipsed by the others in this opera, but it contains the incomparable "Il mio tesoro," which is sufficient to raise it to the level of the rest, and Tamberlik gave it in the grandest manner, with irreproachable charm and purity. Debassini, the bénéficiaire, sang his romance, "Deh! vieni alla finestra," very well, and we mention this piece without prejudice to the others, in which he was heard to no less advantage. When people have heard Lablache as Leporello, they are difficult to please; but we must say that, though Marini is far from equal to that great model, he contributed very fairly to the ensemble of the performance. The part of Donna Elvira was well sustained by Mad. Bernardi, in whom we must blame, however, a coldness comparable only to her beauty.

M. de Sabouroff, director of the imperial theatres, gave, last week, in his magnificent mansion on the Moïka Quai, a grand dinner to the artists of the Italian theatre. There was music afterwards, and Mdlle. Victoire Balfe, who was invited with her father, sang. She obtained, on the spot, a promise that she should appear shortly in the Traviata. Next week, Der Freischütz will be given, for the benefit of Mongini; and the 9th or 16th of January is the day fixed on for the production of Le Pardon de Ploërmel, the rehearsals of which are being pursued with great activity. Olosanti,* who possesses, on the ophicleide, a talent analagous to that of Bottesini on the double-bass, and who has played in Paris, has just arrived in St. Petersburgh, where, also, he proposes playing. On Sunday, Mdlle. Ingeborg-Starck, who, likewise, was applauded, in Paris, last winter, gave, in the Rooms of the Nobility, a concert. The young lady was highly successful.

* Which is losing its novelty.

† A very vocal name!

* One of M. Jullien's countless discoveries.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From our own Correspondent.)

I MUST give you a few lines this week relative to the two very successful débuts that have just taken place in Paris, for, though one of the débutants is not exactly, in theatrical parlance, a débutant, still the part he has been obliged in so unexected a manner to assume, entitles him to be so called. Monsieur Troy, for it is of him I speak, has been obliged, by the continued indisposition of Faure, to fill, on a short notice, his part in the Pardon de Plöermel, and his success has brought overflowing houses; the first time he assumed the character of Hoel, he was naturally more agitated than at the other representations. At the Italian Opera it is really a débutante who has appeared. Mdlle. Marie Bathe, a pupil of Duprez, who as yet had only made her appearance, in a little theatre built by her master in the Rue Turgot. Much has been expected of her, and all expectations have been fully realised. In appearance she is tall and slender, with an expressive face, and is extremely dramatic in her acting. The part of Amina, in the Sonnambula, suited her admirably; rarely has the exquisite music of Bellini been interpreted with better taste or more feeling. The young artist was recalled several times. Gardoni, who played the part of Elvino, shared the honours of the evening, and indeed Elvino is one of his best parts.

Giuglini bade his farewell to the Parisian public in the Trovatore. He was warmly received, and many tokens of regret for his departure mingled with the plaudits. Roger, who has been performing at Havre in the Dame Blanche, and Lucia di Lammermoor, has concluded definitely his engagement with the Italian Opera here, and on the 2nd of February he will appear in Lucia di Lammermoor, and Mademoiselle Bathe will play also the principal part. After his second performance at Havre the artists of the theatre presented Roger with a wreath of oak-leaves and gold. The Huguenots has just been performed at the Grand-Opéra, and Madlle. Brunet, who has been singing lately at Marseilles, has made her début here in it. On Saturday next, the opera of MM. Crémieux and Gaspars, Ma Tante doit, will be brought out at the Théâtré-Lyrique. A great deal is expected of this work. The parts are confided to the following artists:—Mad. Ugalde, Madlle. Durant (a débutante), and Madlle. Vadé, MM. Meillet and Legrand. Meanwhile Mad. Carvalho has been performing with all her original success the part of La Reine Topaze. A young artist, Madlle. Marimon, has been playing her part of Cherubino, in the Noces de Figaro.

We are to have some very good concerts soon, amongst others, Richard Wagner is going to give one on the 25th at the Italian Opéra. He will have several fragments of his own works performed, amongst others the Tannhaüser and the Lohengrin. M. Alard and M. Franchomme have commenced their concerts; they are held in the salons of Pleyel, Wolff, &c., and will be given every fortnight. Your old favourite, Jullien, also intends giving a series of grand concerts. They will commence in March; he intends giving parts of the oratorios of Eli, The Messiah, The Creation, Paulus, &c. And under such an able hand, they will doubtless meet with great success. Emile Prudent has left for the provinces, where he is going to give some concerts. M. Fiorentino has just received the order of the Maison Ernestine from the Grand Duke of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha; and the King of Bavaria has just given a hint it would be well for you to follow. He has charged people of competent authority with the mission of selecting from amongst young musicians (of the country) those who appear possessed of the most ability and merit, to be placed under the especial patronage of the government.

The Pardon de Plöermel is being performed with ever-increasing success in the provinces and in various foreign towns, Brussels, Metz, Stutgardt, Mannheim, &c. The programme of the Société de Concerts ran thus on the first performance:—1. Symphony in A minor of Mendelssohn. 2. Motet of S. Bach (double chorus). 3. Concerto of Haydn, performed by Norblin. 4. Près du fleuve étranger, by Gounod, translated from the psalm Super flumina. 5. Lauda Sion; duet by Cherubini, sang by Mdlle. Ribault and Mdlle. Rey. 6. Symphony in C major of Beethoven. The piece by M. Gounod, which has already been performed in the concerts of the Orphéon, produced a great sensation on the audience.

In the budget of 1860, the chapter under the head of which is mentioned the subventions to the Imperial theatres, and to the Conservatoire de Musique, the figure is stated at 1,705,000 francs; the sum given as indemnity or help afforded to artists, dramatic authors, composers and their widows, at 137,700 francs; that for encouragement and subscriptions exceeds 200,000 francs.

The very interesting and important work of Mr. F. J. Fétis, the first volume of which has just been published, fulfils in every way the expectations formed of it. Its title is "Biographie Universelle des Musiciens et Biographie Générale de la Musique." Numbers of books have been written on this theme, but none that can be compared to the very complete work now given us, for in this case the talents of the writer vie with his merits as artist.

DEATH OF THE BLIND FIDDLER.

(A SEQUEL.)

THE wind still rudely whistled, as the Fiddler sat, alone;
And heeded not his misery, his hopes, or merry tone;
But hurled fast down the chimney a shower of frozen rain,
To chill the heart and voice of him who raised the joyous strain.

Still more melodious grew the tongue, the chords more brilliant grew,
As, like a demon, Boreas, his harshest airs still blew:
His wants and woes, though numberless, yet leagued they all in vain
To stay his voice and harmony—upward still rose the strain!

"Almighty Father of mankind! to Thee, to Thee I cry;
Though notest e'en a sparrow's fall, and art for ever nigh.
Then sure I am Thy angels bright Thou'lt yet send down for me,
And take me to the realms of light, my mother kind to see!"

Thus sung the suff'rer, weary, and thought himself alone;
But in his hovel, dreary, around him, pleased, there shone
Bright spirits from the happy land, where wants and woes are o'er,
Inspiring him with visions grand of heaven's blissful shore!

Enraptured was the blind man's soul—he cried, "I see, I see "My mother dear, in garments pure: and, oh, she beckons me!
'Mid flowers and foliage sweet reclines her bright angelic form;
A glorious sun above her shines—a sun, and no more storm!

"But, hark! what sounds now greet mine ear?"—"Celestial sounds are those:—
A spirit said: "Farewell, all fear; farewell, your many woes:
Thy mother strikes her golden harp, to welcome up her boy
To heaven above, where all is love, and purity and joy!"

Rude Boreas madly whistles on; the sleet and hail fast fall,
The Fiddler's frozen body rests in silence by the wall:
A placid smile beams o'er his face, as calm in death he lies,
His soul has gained its long-sought place—its mansion in the skies!

DUBLIN—(From a Correspondent).—A very pleasant concert was given by the University of Dublin Choral Society on Friday, 13th inst. A copious selection from Der Freischütz formed the first part. The second comprised Spohr's Hymn to St. Cecilia, for soprano solo, chorus, and orchestra; "Aurora che sorgira," Rossini; "Breezes of evening," a short cantata by Oberthür; "Soave sia il vento" (the terzetto from Cosi fan Tutti), Mozart; choral glee, "Now the bright morning star," Greville; "Le Papillon," song, Blumenthal; choral glee, "To all you ladies," Callcott; and for finale, Bishop's excellent and spirited chorus (with solos), "Vengeance we swear." The band performed their part well, and under the guidance of the conductor, Dr. Stewart, executed the Freischütz overture with great spirit. They were equally to be commended in the rendering of the works by Spohr, Oberthür, and Sir H. Bishop, which had not been heard before. All passed off well: the next concert is intended to be of sacred music, and to contain works by Handel, Mendelssohn, and Spohr, which have not been performed here previously.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

X. Y. Z.—The meetings of societies not being public transactions, all such announcements are, essentially, advertisements.

J. W. P.—Most certainly the instrument named in the letter of our correspondent has been used in the manner he alludes to. Can J. W. P. be unacquainted with the admirable concerto, with orchestral accompaniments, composed by Herr Molique for Signor Regondi, and played in so marvellous a manner by that gentleman?

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words) ...	0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 21ST, 1860.

WHETHER our rulers take into sufficient account the claims to consideration of our fiddlers has long been a moot question. The counsel of this journal to each individual member of the harmonious calling has always been, and always will be—"Musician, help thyself." There is no palpable reason why music as an art, or professors of music as artists, should enjoy less consideration in England than is their just due, and than they enjoy elsewhere. That such is the case, however, would appear from the persistent howl with which musicians in this country (like certain grumblers on the other side of St. George's Channel) have, time out of mind, assailed the unapprehensive ear of the body social. For our own part we could never find out what they had to complain of. If it is of the want of Government patronage (and it can surely be of nothing else), we own no sympathy with their cry. How is Government to aid them? What, indeed, has Government to do with them and their fortunes or misfortunes?

The talk about foreign musicians being so much better off is all moonshine. No foreign musician ever owed anything substantial either to the patronage of Governments or to that of the aristocratic class. We should like to put Mr. Balfe for a year or two on the Esterhazyan rations (which nourished Haydn), or Professor Sterndale Bennett on the salary which Joseph II. thought fit to squander on Mozart. Why, the one would not pay for Mr. Balfe's kid gloves, nor the other for Professor Bennett's (indispensable) "Brougham." In sober truth, Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven, compared with some of our more prosperous musicians, were little better than paupers; and yet (with all deference to the spirited gentleman whose letter to the Times we are about to cite) they were cleverer (far cleverer) fellows than any of the race of modern English practitioners, whose sufferings are so frequently paraded by advocates with more florid enthusiasm than clear-sighted judgment.

Cite Handel, if you please. Handel made two fortunes; granted: but, except in one or two instances to the munificent Duke of Chandos, whom had he to thank? Himself and none other; for by his own genius and his own industry he amassed both the fortune he squandered in unsuccessful speculation, and the fortune he was enabled to amass and put by. What—we look at another sort of men—does Rossini owe to Government patronage?—what Meyerbeer?—what Auber? Literally nothing; and yet the first and last have risen from a condition of comparative need to be wealthy among the wealthy, while the second has built an artistic fortune on the top of an hereditary fortune. What these great men have obtained from the liberality of high personages, or from places under government, is a mere flea-bite compared with what they have earned by their own unaided toil.

But let the correspondent of the Times speak for himself:—

"SIR,—At a time when the representatives of the country are so soon to meet for the discussion of subjects with the view of promoting the welfare and happiness of the various classes of the community, I venture to address you, in the hope that I may be able to call public attention to the fact that an art, which is exercising no small amount of good moral and social influence, is wholly ignored by the powers that be. I allude to music. While annual motions are made on many other subjects, and while large sums are annually granted for 'Science and Art,' 'Education,' and other such laudable purposes, there has been no hon. member to bring forward the claims of music, and there have been no grants for that pursuit, which is in itself both a science and an art. And yet, when there is any great national celebration, is not music first thought of, and are not musicians gathered together? Without music, what would such celebration be?

"Look to the great progress that has, during the past few years, been made in Great Britain. In every corner of the land are societies diffusing a better taste, and what good might not be done were but the Government to lend a helping hand to those who so much help themselves? Foreign artists who have lately been in England, after an absence of some years, are astounded when they observe the great stride that has been made in an art of which they not very long ago deemed themselves the only exponents.

"Though I do not write for the purpose of bringing forward hobbies of my own, but with an earnest hope that the subject may receive that share of attention that it merits, still I cannot refrain from suggesting that the first step in the matter should be the establishment of a Conservatorium, which should be a Government institution. A subsidised theatre should follow.

"The present Royal Academy of Music has undoubtedly done much good, but the want of something of a larger scale, the management of which shall be conducted on the broadest possible basis, is severely felt. We have among us musicians (I use the word in its most comprehensive application) second to none in the world, and an institution might readily be formed that should offer advantages to students such as no other existing institution could do. The Royal Academy of Arts has enjoyed for a great length of time the support of the Government of the country. Who could possibly regret such support, after seeing the noble collection of English paintings that was drawn together at the Manchester Exhibition? Will not Parliament afford a like assistance to music?

"I appeal to you, sir, to help the attainment of an object that would conduce so very much to the formation of an English school of music. Years must necessarily be occupied in so great and important an undertaking, but that is only an additional argument in favour of immediate steps being taken to effect its fulfilment.

"A royal commission, or a Committee of the House of Commons, would bring together a mass of evidence that would be most valuable. All that we require is a rallying point—a common centre—to which the attention of musicians may be directed. That being obtained, the day will not be far distant when an Englishman will be proud of the musical genius of his country.

"I inclose my card, and have the honour to remain, sir,

"Your most obedient servant,

"London, Jan. 12." "MUSICIAN.

"Look to the great progress that has, during the past few years, been made in Great Britain." Precisely. That is what we should do; and mature reflection cannot fail to engender the belief that all is going on well, and that if Parliament will be kind and considerate enough to leave us alone, we shall in the end have little or nothing to deplore—at least, nothing that we shall not be able to amend without the officious interference of meddling and inefficient officials.

Our weak point just now is the national opera; but far off is the day when an English Opera, or an English theatre of any kind, is made to depend upon a Government subsidy. Glance at the Paris theatres (the lyrical theatres we mean), and see what they are doing. Notwithstanding the Government subsidy, both the Académie-Impériale and the Opéra-Comique, are staggering—on their last legs indeed, unless Meyerbeer, an alien, shall come to help them.

Apart from the national opera, which is as yet with us a chateau en Espagne, musical institutions generally are flourishing. A successful professor in this country amasses thrice the income the most prosperous foreigner can obtain in his own, while such undertakings as the Sacred Harmonic Society, the Monday Popular Concerts, the Philharmonic Societies, old and new, the various Choral Societies, the Musical Union, are as unknown (if not indeed impracticable) in continental capitals as they are great facts in our own metropolis.

And then—to crown all—we have the Musical Society of London, without exception the most important institution of the kind in the world. Let us first see what that is going to achieve, before resigning ourselves to despair, or handing about the begging-box ("faisant la quête") in company with "A Musician."

WE have no wish to publish anything that may have an injurious effect on what are called the festivities of the season, but far from that, we are convinced that we shall receive the thanks of all who love pleasure and hate to be bored, if we make use of an influential organ like the Musical World, to protest against what are called "musical parties." Literary parties—which must not be confounded with meetings of literary men—are bad enough, and so, in fact, are all large assemblies at which it is proposed to do anything that the majority of the educated classes cannot do with readiness and ease. Now the only things in the way of entertainment that every one can do, are, to drink, to gamble and to dance; and as the two first of these accomplishments are confined for the most part to the male sex, it follows that, as a general rule, wherever ladies are present, there should be dancing—which, once commenced, means not mere saltatory exercise, but opportunities for conversation. If the dancing could be suppressed, and the sort of conversation for which it is now made the pretext, be retained without the gymnastics, that would, doubtless, in the opinion of many persons, be an improvement; but civilisation has not yet said its last word, and we have no doubt that, some day or other, before Mr. Bright is prime minister, we shall hear of balls without dancing, which will, in fact, be what actual conversazioni ought to be, but are not.

Card-playing leads not only to conversation, but sometimes to conversation of a very animated kind—except where the stakes are merely nominal, when it is an occupation fit only for lunatics, who if they were not playing at cards, would be playing with straws. But we have already erased gambling and drinking from the list of permissible enjoyments (and for what we hope will be considered a very polite reason); and having said our say about balls, it only remains for us to explain on what ground we object to parties of a special character, and especially to those at which it is expected that a certain proportion of the guests will play or sing.

Literary and artistic reunions have, at least, this advantage—that the distinguished visitors who are intended to give the necessary artistic or literary colour to the entertainment, however much they might bore you if you were to listen to them, do not holloa to you. Now that is just what musical visitors make a point of doing. There is no escaping them, and as they are almost invariably amateurs of imperfect education, the punishment they inflict is very severe. Sometimes a professional artist is induced to come, but it is sure to be either a gentleman who has just lost his engagement, or a lady who has never had one—or, worse still, both. Why should people whom you would not willingly hear in a concert-room, and certainly would not tolerate at the Opera, be allowed to attack you in private life, where there is no possibility of redress, either with the pen or with the hiss? Ought not something to tell them (and the Musical World will do so, if nothing else), that they have no right to torment those who, not intending to be musicians, have certainly done them no harm? If perverse and uncontrollable amateurs choose to meet from time to time, for purposes of mutual annoyance, and make no endeavour to entrap others not of the same class into their society, surely there can be no objection to such an arrangement; and we would as soon think of remonstrating with them, as of interfering between the Benicia Boy and Tom Sayers. If A attacks with the piano, B will reply with the violin, C knows that he can take his revenge with a song, and D, E, and F will be sure to pay all three of them out with a glee. All this may be cacophony, but it is at least fair play, as long as amateurs, who can defend themselves after their own manner, are alone invited to be present. When, however, unoffending singers are enticed to these unseemly exhibitions of want of skill, positive cruelty is committed. It must be remembered that amateur playing and singing is not like amateur acting. In bad tragedy or comedy we may be amused by the awkwardness and incapacity of the performers, but there is no fun whatever in bad music.

Now Pantagruel was sitting at his ease in the long parlour of the Edinburgh Castle, smoking an huge pipe, the fumes whereof rolled down the Strand, and produced one of those fogs that have lately caused such suffocation in Cockayne, when in rushed Panurge in the most frantic manner, upsetting the ample glass, whence his master imbibed vast quantities of toddy, and breaking off the large bowl of his pipe.

"Profane wretch!" bellowed Pantagruel, "What meanest thou by thus spilling the sacred drink and scattering the holy incense? What should hinder me from placing the bowl of my pipe on thy pitiful head, and thus causing thee to expire amid lingering tortures?"

"The cause of thine abstinence in that particular" said Panurge, "is the fact, that the bowl in question hath rolled out of the door, and down the steps of Waterloo Bridge, till it hath descended hissing into the bowels of Father Thames. But even were it otherwise thou wouldst not harm me, for lo! I bring thee good tidings."

"The tidings must indeed be good," muttered Pantagruel, "to compensate for this heavy damage, wherein is comprised the cost of a broken tumbler."

"Know then," shouted Panurge at the top of his voice, "that Augustus Mayhew and Sutherland Edwards have written a new play, and that it is now acted at the Strand Theatre."

"The same who wrote The Goose with the Golden Eggs?" asked Pantagruel, gasping with anxiety.

"Even so," replied Panurge.

"Then come to my arms—bearer of the most blessed tidings that ever consoled the melancholy of desponding mortal!"—(and at these words he gave him an huge hug, that squeezed him as flat as a pancake, so that he only returned back to his own figure by slow degrees)—"Yea, thou mightest have smashed all the plates in the world that bear the willow pattern, including the big one at Albert Smith's—thou mightest have spifficated all the squares of glass in Regent-street, and I would have made good thy destructiveness, and also have given thee the sixpence, which I declare I owe thee now. Well do I mind me, how my soul was refreshed and invigorated by the same Goose with the Golden Eggs. Night after night did I go to draw wisdom from that sparkling fount, so similar to the ancient Hippocrene, and on every occasion did I retire to rest a wiser and a better man. But tell me of the new piece. What is it called? Is it quite equal to that wondrous tale of the stuffed goose?"

"It is called Christmas Boxes," said Panurge, reflectively, "and I think I must avow that it scarcely equals that marvel of dramatic literature."

"I should opine not," said Pantagruel, with a resigned expression. "We scarcely look for a mountain with two summits of the same altitude. Two tops of Mont Blanc, with two Albert Smith's to attain them, and two Egyptian Halls, wherein to recount the exploit, would be beyond the just limit of human hope."

"Yet is Christmas Boxes well worth a profound study," remarked Panurge. "The personages involved in the fable move in a higher region of society than that immortal goose, and in more polished fashion do they point their stern moral."

"And that moral is——" said Pantagruel.

"Sound as the prosperity of Mr. E. T. Smith's pantomime," observed Panurge; "or the success of the Dead Heart at the Adelphi, or as that of Robert Brough's new burlesque at the Olympic. It showeth us the great inconvenience of vicious propensities, when they are accompanied by a straitened pocket."

"A most healthful moral too!" exclaimed Pantagruel. "Let them that are penniless have the virtue of abstinence from cakes and ale. Execrable is the clerk who dares to be vicious on £70 a-year. As for me, who own broad acres in Eldorado, regarding the Koh-i-noor as a vile pebble, which would disgrace my garden walk, and having in my commonest snuff-box more precious metal than is to be found in the whole stock of Roskill and Hunt,—shall I curb my inclinations,—shall I put a restraint on my pleasure? Not I. As Hamlet, who built the Princess's Theatre, says, "Let the galled jade wince"—I will sit and smile cheerfully at the new work of Mayhew and Edwards, and applaud, while they lash the peccadilloes of sinners with limited incomes."

"I must tell thee one joke," said Panurge, wistfully. "There is a maid-servant, who when her master upbraideth her, signifieth the narrowness of his means by declaring that 'he could not have blow'd her up more had she been the man come for the poor-rates.'"

"Instantly give me a pen and a sheet of paper," cried Pantagruel, beaming with admiration.

"Why?" asked Panurge.

"That I may instantly write to Mr. W. S. Swanborough, and tell him I engage a private box for the entire run of Mayhew and Edwards' new play. The one touch of nature thou hast revealed showeth me that it contains a mine of wisdom.

WE observe with regret that our light literature is gradually acquiring a certain religious tinge, which, however novel, is by no means appropriate to that species of composition. We need scarcely assure our readers that we are not of those who associate satire with profanity, and we are convinced that the prayers of a humorist avail as much as those of the most serious poet or philosopher. But neither should pray in public, and the impropriety and ridiculousness of doing so ought, one would think, to strike none so forcibly as those writers who belong to the same intellectual class as the author of Tartuffe. We are not surprised at Mr. Tupper, or at any other notoriously dull writer, praying in print, but that authors of acute wit and delicate comic perception should fall into such an error is astonishing. It is amazing that the incongruity which attaches to a mixture of light literature, however pure, with adoration, however unemphatic, should escape writers whose peculiar talent must include as one of its most essential elements a keen sense of the incongruous. It is intelligible that solemn verses should be published from time to time in Punch, if only as a foil to the articles whose style is characterised by a deliberate intention to amuse. But what can be the meaning of the devotional tone which marks the concluding paragraphs of Mr. Dickens's entertaining "Haunted House"—the Christmas number of All the Year Round. What signifies the psalm published in the Christmas number of the Illustrated Times? Why did a hymn appear in the Christmas number of the Welcome Guest? Mr. Dickens terminates his interesting ghost-stories with this "Christmas greeting" which he "derives from the 'Haunted House,'" and "affectionately addresses with all his heart to his readers." This is the greeting: "Let us use the great virtue, Faith, but not abuse it; and let us put it to its best use by having faith in the great Christmas book of the New Testament, and in one another." With such an example as this, there is no saying where the taste for religiosity in out-of-the-way places will stop; and unfortunately it has since met with further encouragement in what we should have considered a most unlikely quarter, and from no less a personage than the editor of the Cornhill Magazine. That phenomenal publication contains an article—the last in the number—which to our mind is the most graceful that ever proceeded from Mr. Thackeray's pen; but it terminates with a prayer for success—a sort of ora pro nobis addressed to each of those saints the readers—which, naturally and sympathetically as it is introduced, seems to us scarcely justified by the importance of the object prayed for. If it were a question of Mr. Thackeray's health or genius—which, as long as it lasts, must speak to us in some form or other—it would be different, and no appeal for our prayers would be necessary; but the Cornhill Magazine is, after all, only a commercial speculation, and though we are delighted that it has succeeded, we should never think of praying for its success.

If this new inclination towards the devout should spread from literature to other forms of art, the effect would be very objectionable indeed, for we should have picture exhibitions and concerts opened with prayer. We are afraid already that the directors of the Glasgow Festival will take the hint from the Christmas periodicals already alluded to, and implore the blessings of Providence on their monster music meeting. All appeals to a higher power on behalf of such enterprises have, however, been shown, over and over again, to be fruitless. Indeed there is only one instance on record of prayers for money being attended with success, which happened when Peter, wishing to pay tribute, caught a fish, and found within its mouth one solitary piece of silver.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

THE first Conversazione of the season was given on Wednesday evening in St. James's Hall, when between seven and eight hundred persons were present. The Hall was fitted up with great magnificence, as at the former conversazione, under the management of the secretary, Mr. Charles Salaman, and exhibited, among other things, some rare and antique musical instruments, manuscripts, and articles of vertu, together with some valuable and curious oil-paintings, and water-colours. In the course of the evening several pieces of music were sung or performed by various professional and non-professional members of the society. Three choral part-songs were given, viz.—Mendelssohn's "Season of Pleasure;" Mr. Henry Smart's "Joys of Spring," and Mendelssohn's "Opening buds." Luca Marenzio's Madrigal, "Lady, see on ev'ry side," was also sung, as well as Mr. Henry Smart's choral trio (three-part song?) "Rest thee on thy mossy pillow." Both Mr. Smart's pieces were encored.

Miss Freeth played a solo on the pianoforte, and Mr. Lazarus an adagio and polonaise (Baermann) on the clarinet. Miss Parepa sang Verdi's "Sempre all' Alba," from Giovanna d'Arco, and Mr. Santley the stornello "Giovinettina della bella voce," by Angelo Mariani.

The Hall presented a splendid appearance, the ladies and gentlemen being costumed with especial care as for the ball-room; and the whole affair passed off with exceeding brilliancy, constituting a most éclatant inauguration to the season.

THE POTTER TESTIMONIAL.

A MEETING of the subscribers for the testimonial to Mr. Cipriani Potter was held (by the permission of the Committee of the Royal Academy of Music) in the concert-room of that institution on Monday last, at which Mr. Lucas, the treasurer of the Testimonial Fund, was unanimously called to the chair. The minutes were read that were passed when the Professors of the Academy met at the institution, by the request of Mr. Macfarren, on the 26th of September last, to consider the offering of some token of esteem and regard to their late Principal, on his retirement from the office, after twenty-seven years service. The Report of the Committee for carrying out the Testimonial was then submitted to the meeting as follows:—

"Your committee have the pleasure to report that their willing exertions to carry out the resolutions of the meeting held in this room on the 26th of September last, have been rewarded with the most gratifying success. They have made known the purport of those resolutions by means of public advertisements, of circular letters, and of personal correspondence, and they have been delighted to find that the spirit which unanimously actuated the meeting of September has been very cordially shared, not only by the past and present students and professors of the Academy, but by many persons not thus related with the institution, who were equally anxious to join in an expression of admiration and regard to the distinguished musician, who, as principal and professor of the Royal Academy of Music, has exercised an influence not less powerful than beneficial on the progress of his art in this country.

"The subscribers' list contains 284 names, and the total sum at present subscribed amounts to £498 5*s.*, of which £400 has been already received by the treasurer. The various means employed to invite subscriptions have occasioned an expenditure, which, so far as can at present be calculated, amounts to £31 1*s.*, the balance of £467 4*s.* is therefore available for the testimonial. Your committee believe that the amount of this balance may even yet be greatly increased, and they found their belief on the possibility that there may be still many persons who would wish to subscribe but have not yet been canvassed—upon the likelihood that some members of the Academy, now residing abroad, to whom invitations have been addressed, have not had time to remit their subscriptions—and upon the fact that sum of £100 has been subscribed since the first of January, on which day it was generally understood that the list would be closed. Your committee will therefore suggest the desirability of extending still further the limit to the period for receiving subscriptions.

"There is the best reason for supposing that both the forms of testimonial discussed at the September meeting, namely, the founding an exhibition, to be called "The Potter Exhibition" (for the reduction of a student's expenses in the Academy), which should be open to annual competition, and also a personal present, with a list of the contributor's names, would be eminently agreeable to Mr. Potter, but especially the former, respecting which he has expressed his feelings to more than one member of your committee. With regard to this idea of an exhibition, however, your committee have collected many valuable opinions, to the effect that, desirable as it is to perpetuate Mr. Potter's name in connection with the Academy by means of such an endowment, it is equally desirable that any money so appropriated should not be merged in the funds of any institution, but should be so invested that some musical students should, for all time, be annually chosen in Mr. Potter's name, to receive the dividends of this money to assist in defraying the cost of study.

"Your Committee congratulate you upon the warm feeling that has been expressed, and upon the large sum which is its substantial expression; and they are proud to think that, in whatever form, you are able to offer Mr. Potter a testimonial worthy of your attachment to him, as an artist and as a friend, and worthy of his acceptance as a token of your esteem."

The following resolutions were adopted:—

I. Proposed by Mr. Alfred Gilbert, and seconded by Mr. George Parker, of Northampton:—That the Report be received.

II. Proposed by Mr. Harold Thomas, and seconded by Mr. Jewson:—That a sum not exceeding £100 be expended on plate, which shall be presented to Mr. Potter; and that the names of all the subscribers be engrossed on vellum and handed to him, together with the plate.

III. Proposed by Mr. W. Macfarren, and seconded by Mr. H. Groves:—That after paying the expenses, and deducting the cost of the plate and the engrossment, the balance of the money subscribed be vested in the hands of three trustees, for the endowment of an exhibition, to be called "The Potter Exhibition," to assist in defraying the expenses of a student in the Royal Academy of Music, which exhibition shall be open to annual competition for a lady and a gentleman in alternate years, the candidates being students of the Academy who shall have been not less than two years in the institution; and that, if ever the Academy shall cease to exist, the trustees for the time being appropriate "The Potter Exhibition" (which shall still be open to annual competition alternately for ladies and gentlemen), to assist in the education of a musician elsewhere.

IV. Proposed by Mr. Jewson, and seconded by Mr. A. Gilbert:—That Mr. Lucas, Dr. Sterndale Bennett, and Mr. G. A. Macfarren be appointed Trustees of the Exhibition Fund; and that these gentlemen and their successors, when any vacancy occurs in their number, to appoint some person to fill the place.

V. Proposed by Mr. C. L. Stevens, and seconded by G. L. Newson:—That the subscription list remain open till the day of presenting the plate to Mr. Potter.

VI. Proposed by Mr. H. D. Banister, and seconded by Mr. H. Goodban:—That the presentation of the testimonial take place in May next, when Mr. Potter will be invited to meet the subscribers.

VII. Proposed by Mr. C. E. Stevens, and seconded by Mr. G. Pucker:—That the thanks of this meeting be voted to the Committee for their exertions in carrying out the resolutions passed in September last.

VIII. Proposed by Mr. Dorrell, and seconded by Mr. H. Goodban:—That the special thanks of the meeting be voted to the Honorary Secretary for the particular pains with which he has promoted the testimonial, and that the name of the Honorary Treasurer be coupled with his in this acknowledgment.

IX. Proposed by Mr. Dorrell and seconded by Mr. Goss.—That the thanks of the meeting be offered to the committee of the Royal Academy of Music for the kind permission to assemble in the concert-room of that institution.

The unanimous thanks of the meeting were then voted to Mr. Lucas for his able conduct in the chair.

MR. HAROLD THOMAS.—At the last general meeting of the Philharmonic Society, Mr. Harold Thomas was elected a member.

HERR RICHARD WAGNER is about to give a series of concerts and operatic performances at the Théâtre-Italien, in Paris.

Mr. HORSLEY'S "GIDEON."—A full, and "full dress," rehearsal of Mr. Charles Horsley's new oratorio, Gideon, took place on Thursday evening at St. James's Hall, preparatory to its performance at the approaching Glasgow Festival. Nearly fifteen hundred persons were present, and the greatest interest seemed to be excited for the success of the new work. The solo singers were Madame Clara Novello, Miss Witham, Mrs. Lockey, Messrs. Sims Reeves, Lockey, and Weiss. Of course we cannot venture to pronounce critically on the merits of so grave a composition, after a solitary trial. The opinion of the majority of the audience, however, was unanimous, and at the end of the performance Mr. Horsley was summoned to appear, and received with loud and long-continued cheering.

ROYAL THEATRICALS AT WINDSOR.

THE fourth dramatic performance this season took place at Windsor Castle, on Wednesday evening. The following was the programme :—

A Comedy in two Acts, by Tom Taylor (adapted from M. Octave Feuillett), entitled,

THE HOUSE, OR THE HOME.

The Right Hon. Horace Chetwynd, M.P. ...	Mr. Wigan.
General Witherington, C.B.	Mr. C. Selby.
Frederick Wardour (Clerk to the Foreign Office)	Mr. Billington.
Lady Helen Chetwynd	Miss H. Simms.
The Hon. Mrs. Wardour (Mother to Frederick)...	Mrs. Wigan.
Hopwood (Lady Helen's Maid)	Miss Laidlaw.

After which, a Petite Drama, in one Act, by Mr. Benjamin Webster, entitled,

ONE TOUCH OF NATURE.

Mr. William Penn Holder...	Mr. Benj. Webster.
Mr. Beaumont Fletcher (Barister and Dramatic Author...	Mr. Billington.
Mr. Belgrave	Mr. W. H. Eburne.
Jones (Porter to the Adelphi Chambers)... ...	Mr. C. J. Smith.
Miss Constance Belmour	Miss H. Simms.

Under the Management of Mr. George Ellis; and Under the Direction of Mr. W. B. Donne,
Her Majesty's Examiner of Plays.
The Theatre arranged and the scenery painted by Mr. Thomas Grieve.

Shortly after eight o'clock, the Queen and Prince Consort, with the Prince of Wales, Princess Alice, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Arthur, Princess Helena, Princess Louisa, and Prince Leopold, attended by the Ladies and Gentlemen in Waiting, and accompanied by the dinner company, entered the theatre in St. George's Hall, when the performance immediately commenced.

LIVERPOOL—(From our own Correspondent.)—The adjourned annual meeting of the proprietary of the Liverpool Philharmonic Society was held on Monday, at the Cotton Sales Room, Mr. P. G. Heyworth presiding. The report, which had been printed and circulated amongst the proprietors, was taken as read. The following are extracts :—

"The expenditure of the society has slightly increased during the past year, but the excess has arisen from the extraordinary outlay required for repairs consequent upon painting and decorating the hall. The Committee have much pleasure in drawing the attention of proprietors to the increased sum received from the sale of extra tickets, showing that the concerts have proved more attractive to the public. The proprietors will also notice the increased sum received for the letting of the hall. Six stalls have been forfeited to the society for the non-payment of the year's subscription; there now remain two boxes and 251 stalls the property of the society. The practical members have rendered very valuable services during the past year, and your committee have pleasure in recommending that a resolution be passed embodying the thanks of the society. Your committee have again to record the efficiency and zeal displayed by Mr. Henry Suddlow in the discharge of his duties as secretary and treasurer. Referring to their circular to the proprietors of October 12, 1859, regarding the state of the roof, the committee have to announce that Messrs. Tite and Clifton's detailed report has just been received, in which they repeat their opinion that the existing condition of the hall is perfectly secure, but they recommend a periodical inspection, and propose certain remedies in the event of any weakness being hereafter detected.

"Your committee recommend that twelve concerts, all full dress, be given durnig the present year, and that the subscription be as follows:—Boxes and stalls, £3 3s; gallery stalls, £2; gallery, £1; annual subscribers to the stalls, £4 4s. They also propose that proprietors should be allowed to transfer their right of entrée for the season to resident gentlemen, upon payment of 5s. as before; and that any resident gentleman, approved of by the committee, and not in business for himself, should be allowed the privilege of purchasing a ticket, or making use of a member's ticket at the subscription concerts, upon payment of 10s. 6d. for the year, in accordance with the resolution passed at the annual meeting in January, 1856.

"The members of committee who retire by rotation, but who are re-eligible, are as follows:—Francis Braun, Esq., Louis Grüning, Esq., Benjamin Heywood Jones, Esq., H. W. Meade King, Esq., A. G. Kurtz, Esq., James Lister, Esq., C. W. Neumann, Esq., Henry Rankin, Esq., James Smith, Esq. But as the practical members, in accordance with their privilege, have nominated Mr. Rankin to represent them on the committee, only eight other gentlemen can be elected.

"The financial statement showed a balance against the society of £126 19*s.* 6*d.*"

The report and accounts were adopted, and the thanks of the society given to the practical members. The Chairman moved that twelve subscription full-dress concerts be given during the year.

Mr. R. King said it was thought, last year, when the committee fixed to have eight full-dress and four undress concerts, that the undress concerts would be availed of by the subscribers and others, but they had been disappointed. The tickets had been given away to people they had not been in the habit of seeing at the full-dress concerts.

Mr. R. Walmsley called attention to the exertions made within the last few years to pay off the debt, in which they had been successful, and did not see why, with a reduced cost, they should pay the same subscription. Another thing working against the interests of the society was the gradual lapsing of shares into the proprietors' hands through the non-payment of subscriptions. This year there had been six, last year eight, and the previous year three. Since 1848 or 1849 there were thirty or forty shares less paying subscriptions. Gentlemen who allowed themselves to lose their shares only did so because they could get an equal quality of music at a less cost. A reduced subscription would benefit the society. As to the letting of the hall, it had only been used two or three times, owing to the high price, which the majority were unwilling to pay. He proposed, as an amendment, that subscriptions during the ensuing year be two guineas and a-half for stalls, and that no change be made in any portion of the arrangement. Mr. Sharpe seconded the amendment.

The Chairman thought such remarks tended to damage their property. A great many stalls were forfeited, some from holders becoming bankrupts, or proprietors deceased. As to extra expenses, they had been increased by joiners' and plasterers' work, &c., consequent on the decoration of the hall, besides coal and gas.

Mr. H. Banner thought it might be well to consider whether they could not with profit let the building at a less cost. Fifty pounds was a large sum, and they could not compete with St. George's Hall when they made such charges.

The Chairman replied that the committee were not desirous of making the hall too common. They wished to make it select.

Mr. H. W. M. King said that the question as to letting the hall had been under consideration, and the committee would agree with some of the remarks that had been made. But the Philharmonic could never compete with St. George's Hall, seeing that the latter paid no rent.

The amendment was lost by a large majority, and the original motion carried. Some conversation followed as to the price of stalls, which the chairman stated to be the same as last year, 18 guineas. The committee for the ensuing year were then appointed, and after a vote of thanks to the chair the proceedings terminated.

LEEDS—(From a Correspondent).—Dr. Mark and his Little Men drew nearly 3,000 persons at the Town Hall, last Saturday, when the annual Juvenile Night was given by the Town Hall Concert Society. With the exception of The Messiah night on Christmas Eve, this is the largest audience ever drawn at a concert in the Town Hall. Dr. Mark's visits here are always looked forward to with pleasure, and his juvenile band really play capitally. Miss Clara Wight sang two songs with excellent taste, and was warmly encored in "I cannot mind my wheel."

DRAMATIC DOTTINGS.

(From a Melodramatic Contributor.)

I MUST plead guilty to an inbred weakness for tracing effect to cause. I do not remember the time when it did not, in a greater or less degree, influence the waking moments of my life. But here I am simply about to record one little example of this weakness, and it will serve as a key to the general tenor and habit of my being.

When a boy, I was deeply struck by the horror exemplified in the souls of most pious persons at the mere mention of the ominous words: "theatre"—"opera"—"play"—"stage"—"boxes" (not collecting)—"pit" (not bottomless)—"gallery" (not chapel). Knowing very little then what those terms really signified, so soon as opportunity offered, I set myself to attempt the discovery, with an ardour that would have done honour to Columbus in his search for a new continent. My first essay being made in a very provincial theatre, and my exchequer compelling me to patronise the lofty region of the gods, which was peculiarly airy above and around, successfully producing the effect of a huge pair of bellows, defying sound to reach our elevated position, I returned with little addition to my knowledge on the point; whilst the little I did get served to stimulate my "young idea" into a still stronger desire to "shoot."

I pass silently over the lapse of time during which I fed the flame of inquiry by all possible means lying in my path; and few and far between they were. Till, having amassed a sufficient sum wherewith to purchase Shakspere (ah! unhappy thought—my "uncle" has him now!), yes, Shakspere entire—and the reader must remember there were then no "People's Editions" to be heard of, far less bought. Here, then, was the cause of the effect I had so long been in search of. Oh, but I had been more fortunate than Diogenes—I did find my honest man. I perused the ever-living, ever-mighty bard with a relish I shall never again experience over another author, past, present, or future. I imagined myself standing in the presence of something more than human—a demi-god at least. I marked and marvelled how he played upon the heart-strings of proud humanity, and bid them give out their true and proper sound—its too-weak will unable to resist him. Then could I understand the why and wherefore those pharisees, hypocrites, shied so terribly whenever anything having reference to the temple of Momus crossed their line of vision. Yes! yes! time and circumstances had thrown me much in the way of the soi-distant saints, and I could well understand how they were unable to sit within such walls bon grè! I could easily fancy how, like the Queen of Denmark—though from a cause not equally foul, indeed, yet for a cause—they would mentally, at least, exclaim:—

> "Oh, speak no more,
> These words like daggers enter in mine ears.
> No more, sweet Hamlet!"

Oh! no! The walls of a conventicle, doubtless, may be pleasing; and pulpit platitudes, from whence come weekly absolution without extra payment, makes sweetest music to such dwarfish minds. But, heavenly powers! hold not the "mirror up to nature!" Show not the "very age and body of the time" to such as these; lest, like the king, in terror they inquire, "Have you heard the argument—is there no offence in it?" Solomon has put on record the truism (with exceptions), "He that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow," and these have a sufficiency of the yet coveted product, knowledge, to influence them in religiously shunning the temple of the great philosophical poet, fearing that the combination of the two would so increase as inevitably to sink them down into perdition. Yet, Iago-like, should there remain sufficient courage within them to peruse my dottings, will they not, in whining accents, cry, "You charge us most unjustly!"

W. D.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each:—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.,
Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dediée à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dediée à Edouard Roeckel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

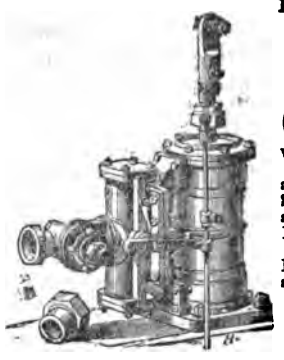
DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBRAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.



HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.

JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL, and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply t BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London sole agents.

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S SOLOS.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER'S TROVATORE, as performed by Miss Goddard at the Bradford Festival, 5s.

BENEDICT'S TWO NEW FANTAISIES:

ERIN, on Irish Airs .. .. .. 4 0 | CALEDONIA, on Scotch Airs .. 4 0

Composed expressly for Miss Goddard, and performed by her throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland.

NE PLUS ULRA, by WOELFFL.—A new edition of this celebrated Sonata as performed by Miss Goddard, with a very interesting Introduction by J. W. Davison, Esq., containing an account of the Composer's Life and Compositions, Price 5s.

THALBERG'S THREE FANTASIAS on "Home Sweet Home," "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Lillie Dale," in one book (large size), price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

To be ready in a few days, a Second and Cheaper Edition of the celebrated

OPERATIC ALBUM,

In crimson cloth, price 12s.

The original edition, with illustrations, and superbly bound, may still be had.

This unrivalled collection of operatic music contains 100 Gems from the whole of the best Modern Operas, including, Martha, La Traviata, Il Trovatore, Louisa Miller, Rigoletto, Ernani, Les Vêpres, Sonnambula, Norma, Puritani, Don Pasquale, Lucrezia Borgia, Lucia di Lammermoor, Linda, Elisire, Fille du Régiment, Robert le Diable, and Les Huguenots, all arranged for the Pianoforte Solo, by Nordmann.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.

Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.

Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

LAURENT'S UNRIVALLED WALTZES.

 The average sale of the following Waltzes is from 4,000 to 20,000 each set.

	s.	d.
Sicilian Vespers Waltz .. .. (Illustrated in colours) ..	4	0
Donna Julia Waltz .. .. ,, ..	4	0
Beloved Star Waltz (on "Thou art so near" by Reichardt) ,, ..	4	0
Dinorah Waltz .. .. ,, ..	4	0
Satanella Waltz .. .. ,, ..	4	0
Lord Lovell's Waltz .. .. (Illustrated) ..	3	0
Christy's Minstrels' Waltz .. .. ,, ..	3	0
Summer Bloom Waltz .. .. ,, ..	3	0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELOVED STAR VALSE (companion to the Maud Valse). Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. From the Liverpool Mail:—"Reichardt's beautiful Lied ('Beloved Eye'), deservedly one of the most charming and popular songs of the day, has been transformed by Mr. Laurent into a most suave and well-marked waltz, which we may naturally hope to find in scores of ball programmes this and succeeding winters." Boosey and Son's, Holles-street.

THE SERPENTINE QUADRILLE, by Burchardt, on the most popular melodies of the day, with a comic illustration of skating on the Serpentine, in colours by Brandard. Price 3s. From the Liverpool Mail:—"'The Serpentine Quadrille,' by Carl Burckhardt; 'Beloved Eye,' Waltz, by Laurent; Grand Galop di Bravura, by Madame Oury. London: Boosey and Sons. These three compositions are the newest and best dance music we have met with for some time. 'The Serpentine Quadrille' (which is, by the way, illustrated with much humour and spirit), contains some two dozen of the most popular airs of the day, and so admirably have they been blended by the musical 'cook,' that the result is a mélange which will at once set feet in motion and call up most pleasant reminiscences, for though the ear is tickled every few minutes with a new—or rather old—tune, the whole of the quadrille is eminently dansante, which is more than can be said of some dozens of so-called pièces de danse." Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MUSIC.—PROFESSORS and the RETAIL TRADE are (in consequence of important alterations in terms) invited to apply for ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S New Circular of Terms. A Card must accompany such application.

MUSIC.—A NEW CATALOGUE OF DRAWING-ROOM MUSIC, for the Pianoforte and the Voice, just issued, may be had, gratis and postage free, by addressing as under.

NOTE.—This Catalogue, intended for the drawing-room table, embraces a choice selection of the most elegant and fashionable novelties recently published.

The most infallible and expeditious Guide to a Knowledge of Music and Pianoforte Playing is HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE. 242nd Edition. Price 4s.

Published by Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London, and to be had of every bookseller and musicseller throughout the kingdom.

MEYERBEER'S "SHEPHERD'S SONG (Des Schäfers Lied), sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, at the Monday Popular Concerts (with clarionet obbligato) is published, price 4s. (extra violin or violoncello, in lieu of clarionet, 1s. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

NEW SACRED SONG, "Awake, little Pilgrim." Composed by Maurice Cobham; the poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond. Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late.

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MEYERBEER'S Setting of the "Lord's Prayer," for four voices (soprano, alto, tenor, and bass), is published, with English and Latin text, in score, 3s., separate vocal parts, 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S NEW SONG, "Wert thou mine," Composed by Frank Mori, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "ETHEL." Romance for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W. "Mr. Thackery's Ethel Newcombe has inspired the composer with graceful and elegant ideas, in the form of what may be called a romance without words, exceedingly vocal and richly accompanied."—Daily News.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "SULIOTE WAR SONG." Sung by Mr. Santley. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "HARP OF WALES," Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BACHIANA, Preludes and Fugues, by John Sebastian Bach (not included in the 48 preludes and fugues), as played at all the classical concerts, in six numbers, each 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

THE HARMONIOUS BLACKSMITH. Composed by Handel for the Pianoforte from his suite de pièces in E major. The only correct edition, as played at all the classical concerts, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONG FOR CHRISTMAS.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." By LOVELL PHILLIPS. Beautifully illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"As graceful and vocal a song as we have met with for a long time."—Musical World.—London: Duncan Davison, 244, Regent-street, W.

Just published, in post 8vo., cloth,

A COLLECTION OF WORDS OF 2,270 ANTHEMS, with 452 Biographical Accounts of Authors, &c. By B. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain, and Honorary Organist of St. Peter's Church, Manchester. Price 6s. 6d. The Author will be happy to make arrangements for the supply of a number of copies to any cathedral, or other church, either in cloth or sheets.

BOOSEYS PART-SONG MISCELLANY: a Collection of Original Compositions by celebrated composers. Price Fourpence each number:—

		Poetry by	Music by
No. 1.	"Welcome, Heavenly Peace"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
2.	"The Bud is on the Bough"	Frances Bennoch	Frank Mori.
3.	"And were they not the Happy Days"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
4.	"Beauty is Dead"	Charles Swain	Frank Mori.
5.	"Who shall be Fairest"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
6.	"O spare my tender Flowers"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
7.	"Ripe Strawberries"	W. S. Passmore	J. L. Hatton.
8.	"Smile, O Heaven! upon the Day"	E. Falconer	M. W. Balfe.
9.	"Sancta Maria"	H. F. Chorley	Meyerbeer.
10.	"A Legend of the Rhine"		Henry Smart.
11.	"The Hostess's Daughter"	Uhland	Henry Smart.

(To be continued.)

The above are supplied to the Profession and Societies at the rate of 13 as 12 at 3d. each, or 50 copies at 2d. each. Any number post-free for 4d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

Lately published,

THREE NEW SONGS

BY

EMILE BERGER.

Price 2s. each.

SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.

From the Daily News.

"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.

A COMPLETE EDITION OF

GLUCK'S OPERA,

IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,

FOR

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE BEST QUADRILLE OF THE SEASON,

LAURENTS'

CHRISTMAS WAITS QUADRILLE,

ON POPULAR AIRS,

Beautifully illustrated in Colours by Brandard. Price 3s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 6s.

BOOSEY'S

500 SONGS, DANCES AND OPERATIC AIRS,

FOR THE VIOLIN.

ARRANGED BY GEORGE CASE.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S

CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 3s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

OSEY & SONS, Holles-street

NOTICE.

"NELLY GRAY"

BY

BALFE.

The only song of this name as sung by the "Christy's Minstrels," is composed by Balfe, and the public and trade are therefore requested to order Balfe's "Nelly Gray," to avoid the substitution of another song of the same name.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S

CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS'

ALBUMS.

CONTAINING TWENTY FOUR SONGS,

In two books, price 2s. 6d. each, or complete in an elegant volume, cloth and gold, 7s. 6d.

BOOK 1st.

"KISS ME QUICK."
"WILLIE, WE HAVE MISSED YOU."
"HOOP DE DOODEN DO."
"HAZEL DELL."
"WE ARE COMING, SISTER MARY."
"RING DE BANJO."
"HARD TIMES."
"GOOD NEWS FROM HOME."
"WAIT FOR THE WAGGON."
"COME WHERE MY LOVE LIES."
"BEAUTIFUL STAR."
"TOLL THE BELL."

BOOK 2nd.

"GENTLE JENNY GRAY."
"THE MOCKING BIRD."
"THE GREENWOOD DELL."
"ELLEN BAYNE."
"DO THEY MISS ME AT HOME."
"SEEING NELLY HOME."
"GENTLY DOWN THE STREAM."
"MAGGIE BY MY SIDE."
"LET ME KISS HIM FOR HIS MOTHER."
"EULALIE."
"I'M OFF TO CHARLESTOWN."
"MINNIE MOORE."

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

SUNG WITH EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS BY MR. SIMS REEVES.

"MARGARETTA,"

BALLAD,

THE POETRY BY

G. P. MORRIS, Esq.

COMPOSED BY

M. W. BALFE.

When I was in my teens,
I loved dear Margaretta,
I know not what it means,
I cannot now forgot her.
That vision of the past
My head is ever crazing,
Yet when I saw her last,
I could not speak for gazing.
Queen of rural maids,
My dark-eyed Margaretta,
The heart the mind upbraids,
That struggles to forget her.

My love I know will seem
A wayward, boyish folly;
But, ah; it was a dream
Most sweet, most melancholy.
Were mine the world's domain,
To me 'twere fortune better
To be a boy again,
And dream of Margaretta.
Oh! mem'ry of the past,
Why linger to regret her?
My first love was my last,
And that is Margaretta.

Price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles Street.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "BLIND MAN AND SUMMER." Sung by Miss Palmer. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR," sung by the Composer, with the most distinguished success, is published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME," sung with the greatest éclat by the composer is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY." The New Song composed by ADOLPH SCHLOESSER, now singing with the greatest success by Madame Lemmens Sherrington, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARROW AND THE SONG," New Four-Part-Song for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses), sung with great success by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, and enthusiastically encored, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"THE FAIRY'S EVEN-SONG," New Four-Part-Song, for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses) sung with great success by the Polyhymnian Choir, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BLUETTES CLASSIQUES, Selected from the Works of the great Pianoforte composers. s. d.

No. 1. DUSSEK.—"Il pastore Alpigiano," Air Variée 3 0
2. STEIBELT.—"Papageno" (Zauberflöte) 2 6
3. .. "Monostatos" 3 0
4. DUSSEK.—"La chasse" .. (In the Press) .. 3 0

"They are quite simple, easy to execute and to understand, and yet the most accomplished performer and the most refined amateur will find them delightful to play."—Daily News.—London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BALFE'S NEW SONGS.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee:
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle air,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then,
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

London: Duncan Davison, & Co., 241, Regent-street, W.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

FOR THE

DRAWING ROOM.

GOLLMICK.

	s. d.		s. d.
Vive la Danse, Valse ...	3 0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3 0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3 0	Azelia	3 0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3 0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3 0

ASCHER.

Thou art so near ...	3 0	Un Ballo in Maschera	3 0
Dinorah	4 0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes	3 0

SCHLŒSSER.

Les Boutons de Roses	3 0	Deodora, Caprice ...	3 0
Souvenir du Rigi ...	3 0	Fleurs Animées ...	3 0

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Nelly Gray	3 0	Santa Maria	2 6
Shadow Air, Dinorah...	3 0	Maud	3 0
The Power of Love ...	3 0	Bolero "Les Vespers"	3 0

MADAME OURY.

Christy's Minstrels Galop	3 0	Valse Sympathique ...	4 0
Martha	4 0	Dinorah	5 0
Air de l'Ombre ...	4 0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes.	5 0

BENEDICT.

Caledonia	4 0	Erin	4 0

TALEXY.

Eva Polka Mazurka ...	2 6	Dinorah Polka Mazurka	2 6

BERGER.

Selection, Dinorah ..	4 0	Selection, Satanella ...	4 0
Selection, Martha ...	4 0	Garibaldi's March ...	2 6

KUHE.

Satanella Grande Valse	4 0	Dinorah Fantaisie ...	3 0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex. Saturday, January 21, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 4. SATURDAY, JANUARY 28, 1860. { PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland,
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

4

LAURENT'S SECOND GRAND WINTER BALL, at St. James's Hall, Tuesday, January 31st.—M. HENRI LAURENT has the honour to announce, that in consequence of the distinguished success which attended his grand Christmas ball, he has, at the request of numerous persons of distinction, made arrangements to give a SECOND GRAND WINTER BALL, at St. James's Hall, Tuesday, January 31, on the same scale of magnificence which afforded so much satisfaction on the last occasion. The hall will present the appearance of a beautiful winter garden, being decorated with flowers, plants, and sculpture, arranged by Mr. Hurwitz. The orchestra will be complete in every department, and will perform a variety of novelties composed for the occasion. Programme: Quadrille, Dinorah, Laurent; Valse, Reigning Beauty, D'Albert; Quadrille, Satanella, Laurent; Polka, Marguerite, Laurent; Lancers, Original; Valse, Sicilian Vespers, (first time) Laurent; Galop, Satanella, Laurent; Quadrille, Christmas Waits, Laurent; Polka, Persian, D'Albert; Valse, Donna Julia, Laurent; Lancers, Second Set, Laurent; Galop, Four-in-hand, T. Browne; Quadrille, Martha, Laurent; Valse, Christy's, Laurent; Polka, Mistletoe, Laurent; Lancers, New, Tinney; Valse, Dinorah, Laurent; Quadrille, Serpentine, Burckhardt; Valse, Satanella, Laurent; Quadrille, Kenilworth, Tinney; Valse, Undine, Coote; Galop, Avalanche, Coote; Polka, Soldiers, D'Albert; Lancers, ——— D'Albert; Valse, Maud, Laurent; Galop, Argyle, Laurent. Conductor—M. Laurent. The supper will be under the entire management of Mr. Donald, the celebrated restaurateur of St. James's Hall. Ball tickets for gentlemen, 10s. 6d.; ladies, 7s.; supper tickets, 7s.; to be had of Mr. Austin, St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, and of the principal music-sellers.

MISS DOLBY begs to announce that her SECOND and LAST SOIREE MUSICALE will take place at her residence, 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, Tuesday, 31st inst., to commence at half-past 8 precisely. The following artists will have the honour of appearing:—Messrs. Sainton, Bezeth, Schreurs, Paque, and G. A. Osborne; Vocalist, Miss Dolby; at the pianoforte, Signor Randegger and Mr. Francisco Berger. Tickets half-a-guinea each, to be had of Miss Dolby at her residence.

MYDDLETON HALL, ISLINGTON—NORTH LONDON MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS. A series of Monday Evening Concerts under the direction of Mr. H. Davis, will be commenced in the above Hall on Monday evening the 6th Feb., 1860. A number of artists are engaged, amongst whom are the following established favourites: Mad. Louisa Vinning, Mdlle. Vaneri, Miss Fanny Reeves, Miss Messent, Mr. Allan Irving, J. G. Patey, and Elliot Galer, Viotti Collins, Medora Collins, J. D. Davies (harpist), R. Glenn Wesley. Conductor, Mr Frank Mori. Admission one shilling and two shillings.

MONSIEUR ET MADAM RIEDER beg to announce that they have arrived in London, where they intend passing the season. Letters respecting lessons or engagements, may be addressed to the care of Messrs. Chappell & Co., 50, Bond-street; or Messrs. Schott & Co., of 159, Regent-street.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted by a first-class Tuner a situation: undeniable references will be given. Address, K., Musical World Office.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MDME. ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR. CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.

Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Principals.
H. Weist Hill. }
Viotti Collins.
M. Bezeth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.

Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
E. Payton.
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. Marsh.
G. Betjemann.
B. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W. A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.
T. Wells.
J. Zerbini, Jun.
Ambrose Haynes.
S. Bort.
F. J. Amor.

VIOLI.

Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb.
H. J. Trust.
J. Thompson.
H. Tothurst.

VIOLONCELLI.

Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. F. Reed.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.
R. Reed.

CONTRA BASSI.

Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. C. F. Beresford.
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.

Messrs.
R. S. Pratten.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.

Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.

Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.

Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.

Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.

Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.

Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.

Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.

Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.

Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.

Mr. Walter Hinchey,

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:

M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark, that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

For the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals will be held on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, and during the season, concerts will be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with [illegible] chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

[illegible] professional department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two [illegible]

[illegible] to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London [illegible] Association, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

NEWSPAPER

THE COLOURED OPERA TROUPE—Wm. Albain, Proprietor. All the songs of this celebrated party (50 in number) can be had in a neat book, set to music, for thirteen stamps. Address to Wm. Albain, 21, Newington-crescent, London. S.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

NEW ANTHEM.—"BY THE WATERS OF BABYLON," for four voices, W. Chuter. Published by Novello, 69, Dean-street.

POPULAR JUVENILE MUSIC.

PIANOFORTE RECREATIONS FOR JUVENILE PERFORMERS.

Price One Shilling each number.

FIRST SERIES—"SATANELLA."

1. The Power of Love.
2. The Slaves' Chorus.
3. Our hearts are not our own.
4. Oh would she but name.

SECOND SERIES—"DINORAH."

1. The Shadow Air.
2. Santa Maria.
3. Fanciulle (canzonet).
4. Hunting Song.

THIRD SERIES—"MARTHA."

1. M' appari tutt' amor.
2. Drinking Song.
3. Servants' Chorus.
4. Finale to First Act.

FOURTH SERIES—CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.

1. Beautiful Star, and Ring de Banjo.
2. Good News from Home.
3. We are coming Sister Mary, and Wait for the Waggon.
4. Nelly Gray.
5. Hard Times.
6. I'm off to Charlestown.

FIFTH SERIES—DANCE MUSIC.

1. Maud Valse.
2. Königsberg Polka.
3. Satanella Quadrille.
4. Pantomime Galop.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.
JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL, and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply t BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London sole agents.

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms.

REVIEWS.

Judging from the number of pieces forwarded to our office for review, by the last mail, we are warranted in believing that our musical composers (amateurs especially) wish us to regard their contributions in the light of (as the French say) "étrennes," or of (as the English say) "New Year's gifts." As such, then, they must be welcomed with politeness, if not with warmth—with courtesy, if not with enthusiasm. It behoves, nevertheless, to turn them over in as little time as possible—a mere glance at their contents being all that we can spare (and, in most instances, all that is requisite).

First appears Mr. J. G. Callcott, with "Come in, and shut the door" (Cramer, Beale and Chappell), a song to some lively verses by "J. P. H." The music—even livelier than the words—though simple as a hammer, is by no means ungenial. It contains, however, a progression, from the key of C major to that of E major, (Page 2, line 2); and another from the 6-4 on G natural to the common chord of A minor, by means of a harmony with G sharp in the bass, and F natural and G natural as melody; both of which might be advantageously reconsidered. At the same time let us thank Mr. Callcott for a really appropriate new year's gift.

Next comes the very prolific Mr. Balfe, with a couple of bran-new ballads (this gentleman's ballads are in number as the herrings), and neither of them in his least successful manner. "The Rose on the Heath", indeed (Cramer, Beale and Chappell)— to a neat translation, by Mr. Alfred Baskerville, of a well known lyric of Goethe—is one of the prettiest and freshest that has recently dropped from the Balfic pen. As a no less tasteful, though perhaps less racy compound of materials, which, in Mr. Balfe's hands, would appear inexhaustible, "Farewell, dear home" (Cramer, Beale and Chappell)—a setting of some very well-turned lines by Mr. W. H. Bellamy, on a somewhat threadbare subject, will also find admirers.

Mr. H. T. Leftwich—"composer," as the foot of the title-page assures us, "of the favourite song of 'The Fountain,'"—presents us with a river. "The River" (Clinton and Co.)—styled "canzonet"—an apostrophe to some inland water, name unmentioned, if not equal to that other and renowned apostrophe by Laureate Tennyson (who has four times successively immortalised himself in The Idylls of the King), is creditable to the poetic feeling of Mrs. Southey, the authoress. The music of Mr. Leftwich is attractive if not new, and singable if not always grammatical. The hidden octaves between bass and voice (page 2—last bar of line 2, and first bar of line 3), to single out an example, considerably damage the effect of a not ungraceful phrase of melody.

Mr. Bianchi Taylor—of whom the erewhile fashionable town of Bath is (and with reason) as proud now as at any foregone period—has made us a most acceptable offering, in the shape of a duet for treble voices, called "The Bird and the Blossom" (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell), which has the double merit of being genuinely melodious and irreproachably scholar-like. The effect of this charming trifle, well sung, either in public or private, would be unquestionably good. But why suppress the name of a poet who makes the bird address the flower in such mellifluous epigram?

In "Aletheia"—nocturne pour le pianoforte (Clinton and Co.)—Mr. H. T. Leftwich—"Examiner," as the foot of the title page assures us, "to the College of Preceptors"—presents us with a veritable cadeau and a French inscription. We like his English token better. "Aletheia" (what a far-fetched name for a near-fetched piece!) belongs to the ordinary—very ordinary (extra-ordinary?)—sort of florid, ornamental, sentimental, instrumental (detrimental—to taste?) drawing-room nocturne, in the drawing-room key of D flat major, the type of which is absolutely worn to tatters, and of which the patch now sewed on by Mr. Leftwich by no means lessens the general seediness. "Aletheia" sounds new; but "Aletheia" sounds old. Per Bacco!

The dear old nursery-rhyme sets out as follows:—

> "First came the ladies, prim, prim, prim;
> Then came the gentlemen, trim, trim, trim;
> Then came the country-folks, &c."

But we have inadvertently reversed the order, and given precedence to the "gentlemen" (Messrs. Balfe and Co.) and "country-folks" (Messrs. Taylor and Co.). Soliciting "mille pardons" (which, we presume, means begging pardon 1000 times), we now acknowledge, with gratitude, Miss Virginia Gabriel's slightly tormented, a thought over-modulated, a trifle unfinished (see bars fourth—page 1, line 3, bar 3), but otherwise graceful and expressive song, called "ONE passed by" (Hale and Son—Cheltenham),—which, but that the monosyllable, "One," is too frequently underlined—after the manner of the epistles attributed to ladies, generally, by the caustic and illustrious author of Pendennis—would be as creditable to the poet (Edward Maitland, Esq.) as to the fairer minstrel who has married his lines to music. If Miss Gabriel would confer still less she would confer still more on her admirers. There is too much "fluster" in her method of harmonising. She should peruse the lines (we forget which) of (we forget what) Roman poet.

Dr. Doran's fragrant "Summer Flowers," set to music by Sarah Gilbert (Hale and Sons), would have been a more acceptable present had the compositress submitted her work to a pedagogue, able to detect, and willing to point out for reconsideration, such faults as occur in page 1, line 1, bar 2 (consecutive fifths); page 2, line 2, bars 2, 3 (bad harmony on the words, "lilies wreath"); and elsewhere. At the same time, we regret to add, the song is in any case irredeemably common-place.

Mr. Balfe has transmitted us another New Year's gift, in the shape of "Songs for the New Year; Album of Vocal Music" (Boosey and Sons). This Balfe-Annual is to be recommended in every way—recommended (with little reserve) for its music; recommended (except in one or two instances) for its poetry; recommended (unconditionally) for its engravings,—pictures, we mean; and recommended for the elegance of the designs, covers, and general getting-up. The front cover is curiously devised in Alhambraic fashion, the prevalent colours being scarlet, blue, and white on a gold ground. The Title and Presentation Pages are designed with infinite taste, white and gold alone being employed, with the exception of a delicate light pink, which is used to bestow a bloom on violets—whose hue, we have hitherto taken for granted, is generally deep blue. The Album contains fourteen pieces—songs duets, &c.,—the poets being Tennyson, Longfellow, Kingsley, John Oxenford, Jessica Rankin, Henry Neale and Uhland. In short, it may be commended as one of the most elegant musical offerings of the season.

And now, with an acknowledgement of yet two further presentations from the same source, we must conclude our chapter of thanks, until renewed strength, in our next number, allows us to resume it. These are, "Fortune and her Wheel"—poetry by Alfred Tennyson—music composed and dedicated to the Earl of Hillsborough by M. W. Balfe; and "The Song of Love and Death"—Poetry by Alfred Tennyson—music composed and dedicated to Lord Arthur Hill by M. W. Balfe. (Boosey and Sons.)

Mr. Balfe exhibits a more poetical feeling in some of his recent ballad compositions than even in his operatic works. This, no doubt, may be attributed to the higher class of poetry on which his muse has been employed. In Longfellow's lyrics, the composer of The Bohemian Girl first proved that he could divest himself of that leaning towards the modern sentimental school—himself the originator—which, however it may have tended to augment his popularity, has gained him but a questionable reputation with the thinking world. The vein, once discovered, has not been allowed to lie unexplored. In Tennyson's exquisite poem, "Come into the garden, Maud," and in others by the same illustrious poet, Mr. Balfe has achieved unwonted honours. These he has followed up with some characteristic ballads, to verses of striking beauty, by the Rev. Charles Kingsley—such as "The Sands of Dee," &c. The two songs before us are from Tennyson's grand poem, The Idylls of the King—a work, though not yet thoroughly appreciated, destined to never-dying renown. That Mr. Balfe has succeeded in realising the ideas of Mr. Tennyson we will not assert; but that he has indicated a loftier aim in the compositions under notice than in his most favourite contributions to the stage or concert-room, cannot be denied. At all events, the songs from the Idylls of the King possess such merit as must raise Mr. Balfe in the estimation of all lovers of real melody.

Of the two songs, we prefer "Fortune and her Wheel." The air has caught with much felicity the self-reliant tone of the verses. The words it is impossible to refrain from quoting :—

"Turn, Fortune, turn thy wheel and lower the proud;
Turn thy wild wheel thro' sunshine, storm, or cloud;
Thy wheel and thee we neither love nor hate.

"Turn, Fortune, turn thy wheel with smile or frown;
With that wild wheel we go not up nor down;
Our hoard is little, but our hearts are great.

"Smile and we smile, the lords of many lands;
Frown and we smile, the lords of our own hands;
For man is man, and master of his fate."

"The Song of Love and Death" is neither so simple nor so spontaneous, although the feeling is undeniable. Both songs are in 3-4 time, but the measured march of one, and the broken flow of the other, form an appropriate contrast. The poetry of the last is again so exquisite, that we must quote it, like its predecessor—

"Sweet is true love, tho' giv'n in vain;
And sweet is death, who puts an end to pain;
I know not which is sweeter; no, not I.
Love, art thou sweet? Then bitter death must be;
Love, thou art bitter; sweet is death to me.
O Love, if death be sweeter, let me die!

"Sweet Love, that seems not made to fade away;
Sweet death, that seems to make us lifeless clay;
I know not which is sweeter, no, not I!
I fain would follow love, if that could be;
I needs must follow death, who calls for me;
Call and I follow; let me die!"

Both of these songs are written—as one of Shakspere's commentators said of some of the Sonnets—in the "repetitive style," meaning thereby, we suppose, to point to the frequent reiteration of the same word. Mr. Tennyson seems, indeed, to have caught the very spirit which pervades that wondrous series of heart-yearnings, in the songs of the Idylls of the King, and to have employed his pen on the same subjects—Love and Melancholy—"Fortune and her Wheel" constituting a solitary exception. The two lyrics under review form companions to the song "Trust me not at all, or all in all;"—another exquisite piece from the Idylls of the King, of which Mr. Balfe first made choice to exercise his art upon. The three should never be separated, for it is difficult to say which is most to be commended, each having its special excellence. "Fortune and her Wheel," and "The Song of Love and Death," do not differ more widely from each other than "Trust me all in all, or not at all," differs from both.

Thus Mr. Balfe's étrennes are in a style of munificence becoming his con-spicuous station.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

UNIT BASSES.

SIR,—To illustrate the remarks in my last respecting the various systems of sounds, I subjoin the following :—

SYSTEMS OF SOUNDS.

Primary Bases.	Primary Chords.	Derivative Chords.	Unit Sounds.
E flat	E flat, G flat, B flat E flat, G, B flat	G flat, B flat, D flat B flat, D, F B flat, D flat, F G, B flat, D	B flat
B flat	B flat, D flat, F B flat, D, F	D flat, F, A flat F, A, C F, A flat, C D, F, A	F
F	F, A flat, C F, A, C	A flat, C, E flat C, E, G C, E flat, G A, C, E	C
C	C, E flat, G C, E, G	E flat, G, B flat G, B, D G, B flat, D E, G, B	G
G	G, B flat, D G, B, D	B flat, D, F D, F sharp, A D, F, A B, D, F sharp	D
D	D, F, A D, F sharp, A	F, A, C A, C sharp, E A, C, E F sharp, A, C sharp	A
A	A, C, E A, C sharp, E	C, E, G E, G sharp, B E, G, B C sharp, E, G sharp	E
E	E, G, B E, G sharp, B	G, B, D B, D sharp, F sharp B, D, F sharp G sharp, B, D sharp	B

The unit-sound, with which all the other sounds in the same system are consonant, is known by its appearance in each chord, primary and derivative, and is always a 5th above the primary basis. The primary chords in one system form the principal derivative chords (known by their having the same sound for their fundamental bass) in the adjacent system, the two systems being thus closely connected. It will be perceived that, if we take any primary basis on which to construct a distonic scale, the whole of the sounds forming the scale are contained in the primary chords connected with that basis, and those of the two adjacent systems; these primary chords forming the most simple and natural harmonies of the scale. When these proceed from one system to the one adjacent, the harmonies flow in a natural and connected manner, but when they pass over the intermediate system the harmonies are unconnected—not one sound in the primary chords of one system being found in those of the other. Thus from C, the primary basis, the scale of C is formed from the primary chords of C, F, and G.

In the attendant harmonies we proceed from system to system by single degrees unto A, the sixth of the scale, which is contained in F; the next sound, B, not being found in the adjacent system, C, but in that of G, the second from F. This disagreeable effect of the unconnected harmonies is avoided by passing through some of the derivative harmonies, in addition to the primary, connected with these systems, more generally by retaining the primary basis F in combination with the primary major chord of the system G, thus forming the chord of the dominant 7th. It will now be perceived that this introduction of the primary basis F immediately leads the ear to the sounds and harmonies of that system, to which it is, as it were, the key; the resolution of the discord being upon any of the derivative chords belonging to that system, but usually upon one of the principal of these. The chord of the 7th thus becomes the fundamental principle of all modulations or transitions from system to system. When the 3rd of the primary chord is introduced in addition to the basis, it forms the chord of the 9th. If upon the unit-sound of the system as a bass, the chords of the 7th and 9th become the chords of the 11th and 13th, and like the chord of the 7th, the resolution of the discord is upon the derivative harmonies. I may here remark that sounds, although nominally the same, are not always the same in reality; but so long as any sound appears in adjacent systems it is exactly the same; when it re-enters after a disappearance, it is invariably changed. If the table were extended in both directions, it would be perceived that each note enters three different times; if we take the pitch of any sound when it enters as a primary, at unity, or $\frac{81}{80}$, then when it enters any system below the primary it is $\frac{81}{80}$, and when any above it is $\frac{80}{81}$, every sound, according to the order of the primaries, entering and disappearing under three distinct forms. Thus the sound G appears first in the system E, to which basis it is a minor 3rd, and has the form $\frac{6}{5}$, which is continued in the adjacent system A; it disappears in D, and re-enters G as a primary, having the form $\frac{3}{2}$, or unity, which is continued in the systems C and F; it again disappears in B flat, and enters again in E flat as a major 3rd, having the form $\frac{5}{4}$, which is continued in A flat, after which it finally disappears. It is remarkable that under whichever form the note appears in any chord, the forms of the other notes in that chord are varied accordingly, making the ratios of the minor 3rd, major 3rd, and 5th constant, a fact for the consideration of Mr. D. C. Hewitt, who will perceive that the sound F in the system G is not the same as the primary basis F, which is the true dominant 7th, and is always a major-tone (ratio $\frac{9}{8}$) below G; the other being a minor-tone (ratio $\frac{10}{9}$) below. Similar remarks apply to every dominant 7th, which sound and the 5th of the dominant chord never appear together in any system. I think Mr. Hewitt will now fully comprehend the true character of the chord of the 7th, and that the interval D F in this chord (his examples 3 and 7) is not a minor 3rd (ratio $\frac{6}{5}$), nor is it his minor 3rd (ratio $\frac{19}{16}$), although it is nearly so—the ratio of this interval being $\frac{32}{27}$, which, as compared with his ratio, is as 512 : 513. Most unfortunate is it for him, and for his idea, that his prime 19, in connection with his unit-basis, should be so near and yet not quite agree with the ratio even of this interval. It is evident from the preceding, that the true fundamental bass of this chord (his Ex. 3 and 7) is G, the F not being naturally connected with the concord D, G, B, but is the basis of another system added to the concord, leading the ear to the harmonies connected with that system, as has been previously shown. This will appear plainly to the eye by writing down the ratios,

D	F	G	B
1	$\frac{32}{27}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{5}{3}$

which, by eliminating the octave sounds, and giving all the same form of denominator, are—

$\frac{3}{3}$	$\frac{32}{27}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{5}{3}$

The sounds which belong to the same system have the same denominator 3, which are the sounds of the concord; the numerator 3 of the unit-sound refers downwards a 5th, to G, the fundamental bass, which is also the bass of the primary chord, or which is the same thing, the basis of the system; for the primary basis being a 5th below the unit-sound has always the form $\frac{1}{3}$. The sound F also appears as a primary basis, but being in a modified form, the factor 9 in the denominator points upwards two-5ths (or a major tone) to the fundamental bass of the chord with which it is connected; also, the numerator being unity, the complete denominator 27 points upwards three-5ths to D, the unit-sound. The same facts will appear on writing down the ratios of his equivocal chord (Ex. 9):—

B	D	F	A flat
1	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{32}{27}$	$\frac{128}{81}$

eliminating the octave sounds, and giving all the same form of denominator, they would be—

$\frac{3}{3}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{3 \cdot 9}{3 \cdot 9}$	$\frac{3 \cdot \frac{16}{9}}{3 \cdot 9}$

the numerator 5 of the unit-sound B refers a major 3rd below to G, the fundamental bass; the factors 9 under F, and 16 under A flat point upwards respectively two-5ths and a major 3rd and 5th to G, as before; the complete denominators of the two last point upwards to B, the unit-sound. The equality of the numerators of F and A flat denotes them to be a minor chord; also, the numerators being unity, show that it is a primary, which will be evident on separating the denominators into their respective factors—

F	A flat
$3 \cdot \frac{3 \cdot 3}{3}$	$3 \cdot \frac{4}{3} \cdot 3$

and combining the same factors in each—

$3 \cdot \frac{1}{3}$	$3 \cdot \frac{4}{3}$

Whence the relation of F, A flat, and their connection with the other part of the chord is evident; F being the primary, and A flat the minor 3rd of the primary chord of the system F, added to the major chord of G, the discord resolving as before upon the derivative chords of F. The ratios of this chord admit of other forms being given to them, showing why it is an equivocal chord, but which it is unnecessary to enter upon, as they do not affect the fundamental bass of the chord in this form, which is one of transition.

Mr. Hewitt will perceive that in the preceding, and in my last letter (Musical World, December 24th), I have given the true basses of all the chords in his examples (November 19th) derived from the true ratios, by giving their true interpretation, and therefore am perfectly justified and correct in asserting that the ridiculous basses are the "genuine fruits" of his false theory, and derived from the ratios by a false interpretation. In saying this, I do not appear as the advocate of any particular theory, but as the upholder of truth, the foundation of every science. The discrepancy in his minor 3rd he has not yet explained, nor can explain without stultifying himself, seeing that he has admitted the ratio of the major 3rd to be 5·4, in first asking for this explanation. I have now made it clear that I struck at the very root of his theory—error, "the nucleus to innumerable other similar errors." The other remarks in his letter (M. W., Dec. 10th), are almost too puerile to deserve attention, being evidently written, not with a view of eliciting the truth, but for the purpose of drawing attention from the main points of the question, which are not in any way affected by his remarks. However, I will just notice them, that I may expose their puerility. The ratio $\frac{1}{1}\frac{0}{0}\frac{0}{0}\frac{0}{0}\frac{1}{1}$, if expressed as a decimal fraction, is 1·20001 (true to five places of decimals), $\frac{5}{4}$ being 1·20000, which as they stand are in the ratio of 120001 : 120000, the remaining portion of the first would be less than $\frac{1}{2}$; therefore if $1\frac{1}{2}$ nearly be substituted for one vibration or beat, all the rest is strictly correct, and would agree with his statement, that it is one vibration in 98304, which is the exact truth; the two sounds (E flat) would then give one beat in $5\frac{1}{2}$ minutes, when the C above gives 512 vibrations per second. Mr. Hewitt must excuse me correcting his corrections! but I advise him to try again, and not to confound the vibrations of E flat with those of the C above, but look at the figures as the representatives of certain facts, and not as mere figures. Even supposing his computations were correct, the difference in the two sounds would still be "a minute quantity far beyond the power of the finest ear to detect," and the question would still remain, as before, which I now leave him to reply to. As regards the ratio $\frac{1}{1}\frac{0}{0}\frac{0}{0}\frac{0}{0}\frac{1}{1}$, it was never proposed by me as a substitute for the true ratio, $\frac{5}{4}$, but as an instance of the nearness to which that ratio could be approached by ratios "cast in his mould"—that is, the first term must be a prime number, and the second must be one of the series 1, 2, 4, 8, 16, &c. There is no difficulty in finding ratios to agree with the form of the second term, they being, as I before stated, infinite in number; but, as there is no direct rule for finding prime numbers, there is a little trouble in verifying the primes by those who do not possess extensive tables of them, as Mr. Hewitt will find if he attempt to give a few more nearer to $\frac{5}{4}$ than the one just mentioned; and though he says that "prime numbers give original sensations," he has not yet given, nor can he give, any reason why the sensation of the minor 3rd should be represented by the prime 19 rather than the prime 19661, which is to 16384 the unit-basis nearly as 6.5, the true ratio. It is almost unnecessary to state that his "mare's nest" ratio ~~1048576~~ 1048577 does not correspond with the preceding in form, the first term not being a prime number, and the second term forms no part of the series 1, 2, 4, 8, &c.; and does not Mr. Hewitt perceive that in even naming this ratio as a "good substitute" for $\frac{4}{5}$, he is, in fact, undermining the very pedestal which he has so elaborately, so cunningly, and so mystically embellished, and on which he has raised and enthroned his "idea."

I remain, sir, yours truly,
W. W. PARKINSON.

Cheetham-hill, Manchester, Jan. 14th, 1860.

THE CHORD OF THE SIX-FOUR.

SIR,—The correspondent who writes under the modest signature of "A School-Boy," may not be quite satisfied with your quotation from Beethoven, who was rather a free than a strict contrapuntist. He may think, too, that what would do in a symphony, might not be good in a church.

The fact is, that the perfect fourth, though a consonant interval (except when naked, or when a mere suspension of the third) used to be classed amongst the dissonances, and is called a dissonance by Mozart in his "Thorough-Bass School." To their different views of this interval may perhaps be attributed its difference of treatment by the ancients and moderns. Not only the strict old church composers, but also Handel and his contemporaries avoided writing an unprepared perfect fourth to the bass. Hence, in the chord of the six-four-three, in four-part music, they omitted the root of the chord, and doubled the seventh to that root. The moderns, following Kollman, write the root without scruple, but disallow the doubled seventh.

A "Response" is something like a "chant." Now, it was forbidden to begin a chant with a discord, or to have a discord on either of the reciting notes. But the perfect fourth was considered to be a discord, and therefore the chord of the six-four would come under prohibition.

As for the reason of the thing, to end a piece of music with the chord of the six-four, would hardly be possible, because it would be like leaving off speaking in the middle of a sentence; but to begin with such a chord would be simply to solicit attention, which can hardly be considered improper.

When a practice is condemned by the ears of one generation, and ratified by the ears of another, perhaps the safest way will be to put it in the category of things indifferent. Let then your querist, discarding prejudice and the trammels of rule, ask himself whether the effect of the "Response" seemed to him good or bad. If the former, no rule is sufficient to condemn it, since there can be no greater authority for any chord than that it has a good effect; if the latter, no rule can justify it; since the avoidance of bad effects is the object of every rule.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
THOS. D. EATON.

Norwich, 23rd Jan.

A WARNING TO LOVERS.

(BY A LOVER WHO HAS BEEN WARNED.)

Dearest Agnes, whence that tear?
Whence those sighs I needs must hear?
Say, can I your griefs dispel?
Speak! and all your sorrows tell.
Keep no secret
From the heart that loves you well!

Aught that mortal man can do,
Your adorer will for you:
Speak! and call the blessing down;
Speak, and smile—oh, why that frown?
"Wretched trifler!
Where's the music promised when you went to town?"

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.—We perceive that this Association has permanently taken up its quarters at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street—an extremely spacious and elegant room. On the first Saturdays in every month, concertos for the piano, accompanied by the amateur full orchestra, are amongst the features of this useful body of aspirants of art.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.

THE first performance this season of Handel's Samson, by the members of the Sacred Harmonic Society, was, on the whole, the most satisfactory that has taken place since Mr. Costa was appointed conductor, and, indeed, since the society was instituted. Of the oratorio itself—now happily becoming more and more familiar to the musical public, and gradually vindicating the high opinion entertained by its composer, who (perpetually, it would seem, overlooking the still more magnificent Israel) hesitated whether to accord his preference to Samson or the Messiah—we need say very little. That Samson is the most essentially dramatic of those compositions, the subjects of which Handel was enabled to gather from Sacred Writ, will be generally admitted; nor can the fact of two such vast and elaborate works as this oratorio and its immediate precursor, the great musical epic of Christianity, having been commenced and terminated within the incredibly short interval of 10 weeks (from August 22, when the Messiah was begun, to October 12, when Samson was finished) be too often dwelt upon, with wonder and admiration at the genius that conceived and the art that accomplished such a herculean labour.

The additional accompaniments supplied by Mr. Costa, the claims of which to favourable consideration have been more than once discussed, would appear now to be indispensable at every performance of Samson by the Sacred Harmonic Society; and certainly the splendid band of instrumentalists under that gentleman's vigorous control take pains that no effect contemplated by their much respected chief shall be lost or slurred over; so that while strict Handelians may indulge in a notion that, here and there, a little too much had been added by the ready and skilful hand of a modern Italian musician to the original granite structure of an old Teutonic giant, few could have been otherwise than pleased at the perfect manner in which the interpolations, such as they are, were allowed to assert their intrinsic value on the occasion under notice. The choruses were worthy all praise, and the immense benefit derived from the private meetings of the London contingent of the Handel Commemoration Choir for practice and rehearsal again received unanimous acknowledgment. Not to enter into minute details, the whole of that stupendous scene, at the end of Part II., in which the rival apostrophes of Israelites and Philistines are exhibited, now alternately, now combined in one colossal burst of harmony; in which are set forth the antagonistic protestations of Micah, friend of Samson, and of Harapha the giant; in which the solemn choral invocation of the Hebrew, "Hear Jacob's God!" meets a derisive comment in the riotous epithalamium of the idolators, "To song and dance we give the day;" and lastly, in which a triumphant climax is attained in "Fixed in His everlasting seat" (a masterpiece of choral effect, unsurpassed even by Handel)—all this revealed the utmost possible efficiency; and the impression produced on an audience that filled Exeter Hall to the doors was indescribable. But the great choral displays in the first and second parts of the oratorio, from "Awake the trumpet's lofty sound" (the celebration, by the priests of Dagon, of the festival in honour of their idol), to "Then round about the starry throne" (the prophecy of celestial glory, with which the Israelites stimulate the religious zeal of Samson) in the one, and from "To dust His glory they would tread," to the "Fixed in His everlasting seat" in the other—have obtained frequent and enthusiastic acknowledgment. Less generally appreciated, considering their excellence, have hitherto been the picturesque choruses in Part III., "With thunder armed, great God arise," ending with a musical embodiment of the act of prayer in the highest degree impressive; "The Holy one of Israel be thy guide," spirited enough to arouse the dormant energies of the most crestfallen hero; "Great Dagon has subdued our foe," and "Hear us, our God, O hear our cry," the first expressing the joy of the Philistines at their supposed victory, the last their despair at the unexpected catastrophe, which has involved their enemy and prisoner, Samson, with themselves, in one common ruin, both masterpieces; "Weep, Israel, weep," the lamentation of the Israelites for their lost champion, in pathos not to be excelled; "Glorious hero," following the "Dead March" (rival to the more noted one in Saul), with which chorus the oratorio originally terminated; and "Let their celestial concerts all unite," a happy after-thought, by means whereof the composer averted an anti-climax, and brought his great work to a conclusion with becoming pomp and brilliancy. These—excepting "Weep, Israel, weep," which was occasionally out of tune, and "Glorious hero," in certain parts unsteady—were so finely executed by the chorus in the present instance that their merits were just as sensibly felt as those of any of the more celebrated choral pieces preceding them, and with which they are in all respects worthy to be associated. In short, this performance of Samson may be fairly set down as one of the most honourable achievements of the Sacred Harmonic Society—an achievement, indeed, to which they are entitled to look back with pride.

The solo music was, for the most part, equally successful. Miss Banks—soprano (one of Mr. Hullah's most clever and promising singers)—although slightly disconcerted at first by the unaccustomed largeness of the arena, in "Let the bright seraphim" (deriving, it should be stated, no small advantage from the way in which the famous trumpet part was given by Mr. Harper), elicited the sympathy of the audience to such an extent that Mr. Costa deemed it expedient to allow her to repeat the air, although it directly ushers in the final chorus. The same favour was shown to Signor Belletti in "How willing my paternal love," the last song of Manoah (Samson's father). in accordance with a still more unanimous manifestation of approval; and rarely has approbation been extorted by a more legitimate and truly artistic display. The other bass was Mr. Weiss, who, in the music of the giant, Harapha, has maintained his ground against every rival, and who never sang "Honour and arms," and "Presuming slave," his part in the duet with Samson, "Go, baffled slave," or the declamatory recitatives, with greater animation and dramatic power. To Miss Dolby was allotted the part of Micah, which is as much as to say that the airs, "Return, O God of Hosts," and "Ye sons of Israel, now lament," were rendered with a classical purity of style that left no room for criticism. Indeed, the expression infused into the last was on a par with that which gained such warm approval for Signor Belletti; but as this air and the succeeding chorus form but one piece, there was no opportunity for the audience to be equally "demonstrative." The part of Samson is one of the grandest ever imagined by Handel, and at the same time one of the most arduous to the singer, whose physical force and intellectual capacity are alike severely tasked. The elder Braham could at once understand what Handel intended, and render the great composer's meaning plain to every intelligent hearer; but, since Braham, one singer alone has been found with the requisite gifts of voice, intelligence, and executive skill to give the music of Samson with proportionate effect. That one, it is scarcely necessary to add, is Mr. Sims Reeves, who alike in the sombre and desolate pathos of "Total eclipse," the religious and at the same time passionate fervour of "Why does the God of Israel sleep?" and the fierce impetuosity of "Go, baffled coward, go!" rises to the height of the situation, depicts every shade of sentiment and emotion, and thus thoroughly realizes the design of the composer. How finely Mr. Reeves delivers recitatives we need not insist. Of these in Samson there are enough and to spare; but when so simply and unaffectedly declaimed, their prolixity is in a great degree lost sight of. Again, in the long and not very invigorating dialogues with Harapha and Delilah, the same rare talent almost closes the lips of the well-intended councillor, about to utter a recommendation to unsparing curtailment. Even the comparatively unthankful air, "Thus when the sun in 's watery bed," which prepares the final "exit" of Samson (Part III.), was made impressive by the peculiar significance given to the last lines—

"The wand'ring shadows ghastly pale,
"All troop to their infernal gaol,
"Each fetter'd ghost slips to his sev'ral case"— which, though without precedent, materially enhanced the interest of the song, and brought the situation it is meant to illustrate more vividly before the mind. The setting of the sun, as an image of the hero's approaching departure for another sphere, had clearly in this instance suggested nothing to the composer too subtle or profound for the comprehension of the singer. The reading of the entire passage was in the highest sense poetical.

A word of well-merited praise for Mr. Brownsmith, who presided with his accustomed ability at the organ (which, by the way, is now and then over-taxed in the additions to the score of Samson), must end our notice of this really admirable performance. Mendelssohn's Lobgesang and the Dettingen Te Deum are announced for the 3rd of February.—Times.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

January 25th.

A PERFECT shower of débutants and débutantes seems to have fallen on the theatrical world of Paris, for every week one has to signalise the rise of some new star, or at least of nebulous appearances who hope to become stars. The week before last a Madamoiselle Battu obtained a complete success at the Italian Opera, (a success that has gone on increasing) and will shortly fill the part of Lucia di Lammermoor, Roger taking that of Edgardo. The performance is fixed for February 2nd, and will be preceded by the revival of Il Matrimonio Segreto, of Cimarosa, which has not been performed in Paris since the seasons of 1846-47. Then, on Monday week, another débutante, of the name of Mademoiselle Marie Brunet, made her appearance at the Grand-Opéra as Valentine, in the Huguenots. She is fresh from Marseilles, where she has been playing. Mademoiselle Brunet was a pupil of Madame Damoreau's, and then took lessons of Duprez. She is agreeable and modest looking, but her voice, though possessing many of the qualities necessary to a singer, is not equal to the exigencies of a part like that of Valentine. Monsieur Gueymard sang charmingly: the rest of the performance was not quite so satisfactory. A very sad event occurred in the course of the evening, and one that has been the subject of universal regret. M. Narcisse Girard (the successor of Habeneck at the Opéra, and also at the Société de Concerts) was at his post as usual, at the Opéra, conducting the orchestra, up to the third act of the Huguenots, when, at the end of the septuor of the Poignards, he felt himself giving way, and was obliged to resign his bâton to M. Millot. In the lobby he became extremely ill, and was obliged to be conveyed home. Three hours later he was dead. His affection was aneurism of the heart. The death of M. Girard is considered an irreparable loss in the musical world, and the élite of the profession were assembled at his funeral, to testify the respect they had held him in while living. The chef-du-cabinet of the Emperor, M. Mocquard, was also there. M. Alphonse Royer, M. Leboue, M. Deldevy, and M. Trianon pronounced funeral orations.

The Opéra-Comique goes on steadily and successfully with the Pardon de Ploërmel; meanwhile the rehearsals of the new work by Ambroise Thomas are being actively pursued. At the Théâtre-Lyrique, we may soon expect the Baucris and Philemon of M. Charles Gounod. A little work of MM. Crémieux and Caspars, Ma Tante Dort, has just been brought out. Mad. Ugalde sings in it. Madame Carvalho is able to take a little rest from her arduous labours for a short time, as Mdlle. Marimon is performing her part of Cherubino in the Noces de Figaro very successfully. Two little operettas have also been brought out at the Bouffes-Parisiens, one of the Nouveau Pourceaugnac, written by MM. Scribe and Poisson, and set to music by M. A. Hignard, has completely succeeded, as well as Croquignolle trente sixième du nom, written by MM. Gastineau and Deforges, and set to music by a young beginner, M. Ernest Lépine.

The Théâtre-Français, ever faithful to the traditions of Molière, has been playing the Femmes Savantes, and the Folies Amoureuses. A young débutante, Mdlle. Rosa Didier, was warmly received, and gained much applause by her acting.

The Théâtre du Vaudeville has given the public another drama de genre. The Pénélopé Normandé of M. Alphonse Karr, founded on his novel, and which he has dramatised for this theatre, has just been brought out. The principal parts were played by MM. Lafontaine, Munié, Felix, Aubrée, and by Mesdames Doche and Alexis Pastolet. Lafontaine and M. Munié were the the two characters that came out most strikingly in the piece; the part of the heroine is so odious a character, and one almost impossible to play any amount of tact, so as in any way to render it agreeable, that Madame Doche did not obtain so great a triumph as she had doubtless anticipated. The Emperor and Empress were at the second performance.

The Théâtre-Imperial opened its doors on the 17th of January. One month has sufficed M. Holstein to prepare his drama, L'Histoire d'un Drapeau, and when one sees how much has had to be done in that time, it appears marvellous. L'Histoire d'un Drapeau, as its title indicates, is a military piece, and abounds in charges of cavalry, regiments marching to martial music, attacks at the point of the bayonet, combats, banners waving, cannons firing, in fact, all that military show, glitter and tumult, that the soul of a Frenchman delights in. It has one advantage over other dramas of this class; the plot is clear. The story runs thus:— Two Parisian workmen, François Beaudoin and Frédéric Wolf, are in love with the same girl, Marie, whose father is an emigrant, and who has been brought up by Madame Wolf, the mother of Frédéric. Several young workmen in the shop of Madame Wolf have embroidered a magnificent tri-coloured flag, whilst the lovers have manufactured the silk and forged the steel of which the rest of it is composed. This flag is destined for the battalion of Parisian volunteers, and is received by them from the hands of General Bonaparte on the bridge of Arcola. Before the departure of the troops, Francois Beaudoin receives the assurance of love from the lips of Marie. Frédéric, who thus sees all his hopes vanish, swears a mortal hatred to his rival, and goes over to the enemy. Thus the whole drama turns on the enmity of these two rivals; but the authors (MM. A. Dennery and * * *), however, have made a pleasant ending to it, by bringing about the sincere repentance of the traitor, and the happiness of the lovers. The piece was entirely successful, though, of course, a great deal is due to the attraction that lies in the many brilliant phases of French history which are visibly presented. A panorama of glorious events is unfolded, exhibiting successively the Pyramids, Cairo, Vienna, Moscow, the Kremlin, the return from the Island of Elba, and the apotheosis of the battle of Solferino. Every scene is splendidly got up and displays fresh marvels. The most remarkable were, Cairo, the Retreat from Moscow, and the Apotheosis. There is constant movement on the stage, and about three hundred soldiers (theatrical ones) are employed. The piece, there is no doubt, will have a long run.

I hear that Giuglini is engaged at the Scala of Milan for twelve performances; he is to be paid 2,000 francs a night. He will make his first appearance in the Favorita. The programme of the concert Richard Wagner is going to give at the Italian Opera runs thus:—1.—the overture to the Vaisseau Fantôme; 2.—Marche et chœur; 3.—Introduction to the third act of the Pèlerinage; 4—Song of the pilgrims; 5—Overture to Tannhäuser; 6—prelude to Tristan and Isolde; 7—Introduction; 8—March of the betrothed (with chorus); 9—Nuptial Feast (introduction to the third act), and epithalamium of Lohengrin. The orchestra and the choruses will be conducted by Richard Wagner. Ritter has just returned from his excursion to Marseilles, were he made a very successful stay. Jullien is still trying for a tenement large enough to contain the 500 musicians who are on dit to compose his orchestra, and the audience his name will draw.

The prefecture of the Seine has just published the following notice:—A competition (concurrence) for choral compositions with accompaniment, by the committee for the teaching of singing in the commercial schools; two gold medals, of the value of 150fr. each will be awarded, one to the author of a song for male voices, and the other to the composer of a song for first and second tenors and bass. The composers are to have the liberty of choosing their own words, but they are to reject immediately any poetry which in subject or style would not suit their music, destined for the primary educational establishment of the town. The pieces that have won the prizes will be performed at the public meetings of the Orphéon, and will remain the property of the composer. The manuscripts are to be sent to the Hotel de Ville, before the 15th of March. The composer's name is not to be signed on his work, but each composition is to be accompanied by an epigraph or motto, which motto is also to be copied in a sealed letter, with the name of the composer underneath. I hear M. Lefèbre Wély is composing an opera entitled Les Paysans de Nivelle.

The receipts of the various operas, theatres, concerts, balls, &c., arose during the month of December to the amount of 1,359,619fr. 85c.

The Pardon de Plöermel meets with as great success in the other continental towns as it does here, especially at Hamburgh and Dresden. Meyerbeer was staying in the latter town when it was brought out, and was present in the theatre, the public calling for him after every act. The King of Saxony sent for him to his box, and expressed the warmest admiration of his work. Madlle. Burde-Ney was the Dinorah.

The Italian papers tell us that the Duke of Satriano, ex-manager of the San Carlos, has been replaced by a very estimable and intelligent man. The accounts from Venice are not so smiling. The theatres have been shut up for the moment by orders, on account of some disturbances that arose in the San Benedetto. The Venetians, who seize every allusion that they can apply to the Austrians, began shouting out in that part of the Barbiere where these lines occur:—

"Maledetti, andate via Ah! Canaglia, via di qua!"

"Fuori, i Tedeschi! fuori, fuori!" Immediately the audience were made to evacuate the theatre, which has remained closed since.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words)	0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JANUARY 28TH, 1860.

WE have, during the week, received several communications respecting the leading article in our last impression, in which we commented on the letter of "Musician," which appeared in The Times of January 12th. Most of these are favourable to the grant of a subsidy from Government for educational purposes, and the writers lay much stress on the fact, so oft insisted upon, that Music alone of all the Fine Arts is ignored by our legislators. The reasons advanced are neither new nor weighty, or we should have found room for the letters which contain them. The question of a subvention, or a non-subvention, after all, is scarcely so much a matter of policy as of speculation. We may argue for a thousand years, but, until a trial be made, no good results can follow. Nevertheless, as, in a controversy of such interest, the arguments on both sides are worth hearing, let us suppose ourselves advocating a somewhat different opinion from that we have always considered it our duty to support.

Were, then, Government to hold out its hand to Music, as it does to Painting and Sculpture, we should be among the foremost to bestow our praise; nor are we disinclined to allow the advantages likely to accrue. Music, as an art, is unquestionably not inferior to Painting or Sculpture; while it has a scientific basis to which neither can lay claim with anything approaching the same degree of truth. But this is hardly what our legislators have to consider. The support of an Academy for the purpose of training pupils for the stage, and the concert-room, or making them teachers, is the only means by which Government can forward the interests of Music. But this would not place Music on the same basis as the sister Arts. Painting and Sculpture would still have their exhibition galleries and museums set apart for them, and Music be consigned to the theatres and concert-rooms. A mistake is committed by placing all the arts in the same category. Music is not merely an acquired pleasure, a feeling derived from observation and attention, involving judgment and intelligence no less than taste and sensibility, but an instinct of the soul, born with our very being, instilled into us with our first hearing, and made the vehicle of our earliest lispings, until it grows into a requirement, a necessity of our existence. It may be said—we speak with reverence—that Music is the only earthly enjoyment we know we shall possess hereafter. A special taste is necessary to understand and appreciate the beauties of the brush and chisel. Curiosity will not become admiration except through the medium of enlightenment. Education must prepare the way before delight can be received from a picture or a piece of hewn marble; but the savage will melt into tears at the first hearing of a simple air; and birds, beasts, and even fishes, have been attracted by the irresistible power of melody.

The passion for Music is so universal, as absolutely to become antagonistic to its progress as an art. What everybody loves and desires, the legislature sees no reason for protecting or interfering with. When the list of candidates for advancement in the army was submitted to Napoleon, he selected those only who had no names to recommend them. There was wisdom as well as generosity in this. Our lawgivers, not without reason, conclude, that that which has so many friends and sympathisers stands in no need of extraneous assistance. When it is considered what sums of money are annually lavished on Italian Operas, Musical Festivals, Anniversaries, Concerts public and private, teaching, &c., &c., and what numbers of foreign professors flock to this country from all parts of the world, and live on the fat of the land, it is not at all surprising that Parliament should turn a deaf ear to every application for a grant. The splendour exhibited at the Italian Opera, and the immense expenditure incurred in keeping it up—the failure being attributable to mismanagement only—incapacitate our rulers, themselves, in all probability, subscribers, from perceiving that there is another and more important branch of Music in which their co-operation might be usefully employed. As a school, the Royal Academy of Music has done little for the reputation of the country, and of late years has sunk into comparative insignificance. Its incompetence may, as "Musician" seems to think, proceed from the want of finances. We are not exactly of that opinion, but, nevertheless, should have no objection to see Government take the Institution under its wing. That the same patronage and support could be extended to Music as to Painting and Sculpture, it is reasonable to imagine. But in the administration of musical affairs, what would represent the National Gallery? what the British Museum? Could symphonies, oratorios, and operas be hung round the walls of buildings with the same advantage as paintings? Could manuscript scores be exhibited in underground places, with the same profit to the multitude, as the Elgin marbles or the excavations from Nineveh? "Musician" was hardly in a logical mood, when, alluding to the Royal Academy of Music, he asks the question, "Will not Parliament afford a like assistance to Music?" By all means, let us have a "Royal Commission," or "A Committee of the House of Commons," if we can get it; but let us never lose sight of the important fact, that music cannot be legislated for like Painting and Sculpture. It must have a special statute of its own, or none. It remains to be seen whether Parliament will entertain the views of "Musician," which our correspondents unanimously share. We shall wait until the application for a subsidy be made, of which, by the way, we foresee no indication. It will be then time enough to discuss the subject at greater length; at present, discord, not music, is likely to assert dominion over the determinations of the House, so that we must not be too eager in our hopes. For our own part, like Lear, we can be patient.

WHEN, a short time since, while lamenting the death of Mr. Wright, we compared the position of the inimitable London comedian at the Adelphi to that of M. Ravel at the Palais-Royal, we little thought that we should speedily have to record the demise of an artist at the latter theatre. On Wednesday the 18th instant, after an illness of two months, expired the great popular farceur M. Grassot, so long identified with the honours of the merriest theatre in Paris. It seems but the other day that he took a new lease of his reputation by singing the famous "Gnouff! Gnouff!" which was for the time the rage of the French metropolis.

A Parisian critic speaks of him thus: "He was not an artist in the strict sense of the word, but a singular and eccentric individuality. He did not bring to the theatre any result either of study or of observation, not even a talent for any kind of combination, but simply the good and bad qualities of his own nature. He was Grassot—nothing more. He had an odd, original turn of mind; he talked a language of his own; he discovered words that no vaudevillist could have imagined, expressions of a bizarre, picturesque kind, which gave a particular character to his conversation, and of which great use has been made in composing parts for him. Now he is dead; his parts may be played by others, but the personages, whom he has created, will not be resuscitated—those personages were himself."

When we read the above, we almost feel that we were wrong in placing Ravel by the side of Wright, and that death has corrected our error by associating him with Grassot. The antecedents of the French comedian, prior to his appearance at the Palais-Royal, are wholly without importance; so are the pre-Adelphian days of Wright. There is however, this difference in the beginning of their career, that Grassot started with a failure. The piece in which he made his début was the first vaudeville from the co-operating pens of MM. A. Lefranc, Labiche, and Marc Michel, and certainly if he did them any damage by his early break-down, he has since made ample amends; for, without Grassot, where would have been many of the works of those indefatigable writers?

The disease of which he died he used to term his "laryngite," but it was, in fact, a consumption, and many who saw him immediately after his return from Italy, where he sojourned for some time to promote the restoration of his health, predicted that his end was close at hand. And this was in the midst of the furor occasioned by the "Gnouff, Gnouff."

During the last weeks of his life he lived on a pension accorded him by the management of the Palais-Royal, on the delicate pretext of allowing him time for his recovery, but there is no doubt that the pension was really a recompense for past services.

I' faith, Thalia has now-a-days so many tears to shed, that it will be hard to distinguish her from Melpomene.

THE Saturday Review, which has often called attention to the general immorality of French comedies, and which by way of teaching its readers what to avoid in the way of modern French literature, gives them the earliest information of the appearance of such books as Madame Bovary, Fanny, Les Filles de Plâtre &c., published, a few weeks since, some objections to a new piece by M. Léon Laya, entitled Le Duc Job. Our able contemporary does not say of M. Laya's play that it is one to which a mother cannot, without danger, conduct her daughters, &c., but complains that its morality is of a low order, and, moreover, false. Now, Le Duc Job is the most successful piece that the Théâtre-Français has produced during the last few years, and the author evidently intends it to be regarded not merely as a comedy of intrigue, nor as one depending solely on the exhibition of character, but, above all, as a moral comedy. Consequently, if its moral is trivial or, worse still, erroneous, the work is an utter failure from M. Laya's point of view, whatever applause the audience may bestow on the acting of M. Got, the representative of the principal character. We have seen and read Le Duc Job with equal interest, and are prepared to do battle for it on the ground that it is written with a healthy object, and that its morality is neither common-place nor unsound.

Le Duc Job is directed against one of two great evils by which—to judge from the novels and comedies published during the last few years in Paris—the whole of contemporaneous French society is affected. The first of these is the passion of even old men for "dames aux camélias;" the second the mania of even young men for gambling on the Bourse. The former of these pleasing subjects was pretty well exhausted for dramatic purposes when the author of this same Duc Job produced a few years since, at the Gymnase, his Cœurs d'Or. The public had already had the Lady of the Camelias, and its still more immoral antidote (as it was considered) the Marble Maidens; M. Léon Goslan had taught the audience of the Theâtre-Français "Comment on se débarasse d'une maîtresse," by marrying her, and M. Emile Augier had shown the public of the Gymnase how to dispose of her afterwards, by first allowing her to disgrace her husband's name, and then shooting her. In the Cœurs d'Or, M. Laya pointed out that marriage was the sort of thing most young men would have to come to at last; that they ought to be prepared for it; but that if they were not, and there were obstacles in the way—why then (without going into further particulars), that all women were not tigresses deserving to be shot down like wild beasts, but that some had "hearts of gold," and would sacrifice their own happiness to secure that of their not very estimable lovers. There was some honourable feeling in this, and at least as much truth as in the Dame aux Camélias—of which the groundwork is simply that of the Vie de Bohéme, rendered unnatural through the breach between the hero and the heroine being made the result, not of a misunderstanding, but of an intention on the part of the latter to appear faithless when she is in her heart faithful. The Cœurs d'Or was the last remarkable piece suggested by the peculiar arrangements of that "thirteenth" arrondissement—which never had a mayor, and the dwellers in which are neither married nor given in marriage.

The production of La Bourse by M. Ponsard, at the Odéon, was the signal for a number of other pieces on the same subject. Here, however, there was no opportunity for argument. The most determined dealer in paradox would scarcely dream of maintaining (in public) the advantages of reckless gambling on the Stock Exchange. Besides, we all know which of the two passions—that for money or the other one—is strongest, and above all the most interesting. The Bourse comedies could not obtain the same success as those of the Thirteenth Arrondissement, but more than one has attracted attention, and that by M. Laya is certainly a production of considerable merit.

It is easier to turn a story into a drama than to turn a drama into a story (consult, however, Mr. Charles Reade on this point), and as we never could perform either of those operations with facility, we shall not attempt to give the entire plot of Le Duc Job. It will be enough to say that the hero, the Duc de Rieux, owes the name of "'Job" to his poverty. He is "as poor as Job;" for, being a duke, he has only six or seven thousand francs a-year on which to support his title. Like another duke of our acquaintance (not in actual life, elated reader, but in Le gendre de M. Poirier) de Rieux has enlisted in an infantry regiment, has seen service in Algeria, and has already attained the honourable rank of sergeant. He returns to France, sees once more his beautiful fair-haired cousin, Emma, whose vision has haunted him throughout the African campaign, and tries to persuade himself that he is not in love with her. For if, as has been clearly proved in the columns of the Times, a mere roturier cannot get married on three hundred pounds a-year, what is a duke to do with only from two hundred and forty to two hundred and eighty. He might, perhaps, barter his title, but de Rieux's noblesse "obliges" him to do nothing of the kind. Besides, his cousin is already engaged to be married to a successful speculator on the Exchange. The accepted lover (accepted by the parents, after the French custom) is a friend of the duke's, but when de Rieux hears from his own lips by what means he has contrived in a few months to make his fortune, he can only reply—"Well, you are a very good fellow, but what you have done I confess I would not do for a million." De Rieux conceals his love and mourns in secret, but cannot bear the thought of his darling Emma marrying this man of the Bourse. Emma, who admires her cousin, and has every confidence in his advice, divines, from his manner, that he has no respect for her destined husband, and at last questions him on the subject. De Rieux will give no direct answer, but from the nature of his replies, and from his agitation, the young girl discovers that he has no esteem for her intended, and that he loves her. Hitherto the moral effect of the drama has been to enlist the sympathies of the audience on behalf of an honourable man in misfortune, and to show them how little, in comparison, a rich speculator appears, who has amassed a fortune, not dishonestly, but by pursuing a course which no man of delicate feeling could have adopted.

In the remaining portion of the play we find de Rieux still unwilling, on account of his poverty, to marry Emma, while Emma is hesitating (a little) between a wish not to be eclipsed in splendour of living by her rich female relatives and her love for "the Duke Job." It is of course very mean of Emma to calculate whether it is possible to live on her dowry and the duke's two hundred a year (he has lost some forty pounds a year by the death of a friend to whom he had lent a portion of his capital), but, prompted by her affection, she decides that she can—and we may remark that in this very worldliness of the young girl, which for a time threatens to obscure her better nature, the hateful effect of the money atmosphere by which she is surrounded is exhibited. After Emma has determined to marry de Rieux, and will hear of no refusal on his part, the duke receives a legacy, which we are happy to say is of large amount, and which the dramatist bestows upon him with the greatest skill.

The writer in the Saturday Review is annoyed at the simple-hearted duke getting this money, sneers at M. Laya for giving it to him, and points out that good people are not, as a matter of course, rewarded in this world with riches. We know this, and deeply regret it, but we also know that Le Duc Job has done all its work as a comedy when Emma gives de Rieux her hand, and that the legacy is merely a bonus offered to the hero by the author, for the special gratification of the audience. Clarissa Harlowe ends with the death of Lovelace, but Richardson did not write his great work in order to prove that seducers are sure to get killed in duels. We are at a loss to understand how any critic could imagine that Le Duc Job was written for the sake of showing that virtue is the high road to wealth.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE ninth concert differed somewhat from its predecessors, in which the entire vocal or instrumental music has been by one composer, whereas the programme on this occasion was devoted to various masters. The selection was, however, admirable, and afforded no less delight to the audience. The quartets (Spohr in G major, Op. 58, and Beethoven in C sharp minor, Op. 132, hitherto classed as "Posthumous") were heard for the first time at the Monday Popular Concerts, and quite as keenly relished as those works with which the public has been rendered more familiar. The former is one of the most spontaneous and graceful compositions of the late lamented master, and in the hands of Messrs. Sainton, Goffrie, Doyle, and Piatti, was interpreted to absolute perfection. No less admirable was the rendering of the Beethoven quartet—one of the series (if we remember rightly) given by Herr Joachim last year, at Willis's Rooms. This was listened to throughout with the most profound attention, and the discriminating applause evinced an appreciation, on the part of the audience, which strongly marks the advanced musical taste of the age. M. Sainton's leading of this masterpiece was faultless throughout—as intellectual as mechanically irreproachable—in short, a thing not easily to be forgotten.

Herr Pauer made his first appearance at those concerts, in Hummel's very fine pianoforte sonata in F minor—also heard for the first time—playing so admirably and affording so much satisfaction as fully to entitle him to the applause and recall with which he was honoured at the end. Herr Pauer also joined Messrs. Sainton and Piatti in Haydn's trio in G major, which brought the concert to a close.

Miss Theresa Jefferys and Miss Palmer divided the vocal music, the former lady singing in Macfarren's charming song, "Canst thou deem my heart is changing?" (from Charles the Second), and Haydn's canzonet, "In thee I bear so dear a part," an encore being unanimously awarded to the last. This young lady bids fair to become a valuable acquisition to the concert-room, her unaffected style telling considerably in her favour, Shelley's "Lament," called "Swifter far than summer's flight," (set by Mr. J. W. Davison) has been previously sung by Miss Palmer at these concerts, and was on Monday night given with such genuine pathos and artistic feeling, that the young lady was compelled to return to the platform and bow her acknowledgments. Miss Palmer also gave Mr. Vincent Wallace's new and beautiful song, "The Bell-ringer" (words by John Oxenford), with no less success. In Mendelssohn's genial and characteristic duet, "Maybells and the Flow'rets," the two ladies acquitted themselves admirably. At the next concert the instrumental portion of the programme will be selected from the works of Beethoven, comprising amongst other things the Pastoral Sonata in D Major for pianoforte, the trio in C Minor, and the quartet in F (op. 18). Mr. Hallé and Herr Molique are engaged.

CONCERTS.

EYRE ARMS CONCERT ROOM.—Mr. George Forbes gave his second subscription concert in the above room on Monday evening. The singers were Miss Clari Fraser, Miss Gerard, Miss Lascelles, and Signor Belletti; the instrumentalists, with Mr. Forbes, MM. Sainton and Bezeth (violin) and M. Papé (clarinet). The audience were more attentive than enthusiastic, and were elevated into excitement by two performances only—M. Sainton's solo, and the duet from Rossini's Matilda di Shabran, "Di capricci," sung by Miss Clara Fraser and Sig. Belletti, both of which were encored tumultuously, and most deservedly. We never heard M. Sainton play more splendidly. The brilliant duet of Rossini was admirably sung by both artists, it being, we believe, the lady's first essay in florid music in the concert-room. That it will not be her last, the eminent success she achieved will ensure. Miss Clari Fraser also sang Haydn's canzonet, "My mother bids me bind my hair," Balfe's song, "There is a name I never breathe," Alexander Lee's ballad, "Meet me in the willow glen," and joined Miss Lascelles in the duet "Ah! perdona," from Mozart's Clemenza di Tito. Haydn's song was beautifully given, and with that earnestness of feeling without the least display, which makes this young lady's singing so remarkable. Mr. Balfe's song was also charmingly sung, and pleased universally.

Miss Lascelles sang the contralto song from Dinorah well, but took it somewhat too slow; and Miss Gerard attempted, in vain, Pacini's cavatina, "Il soave bel contento." Signor Belletti gave the magnificent air of the Count "Mentro io sospiro," from the Nozze di Figaro, and the air "Il mio piano e preparato," from the Gazza Ladra, both very finely, in a manner, indeed, hardly to be surpassed by any living barytone.

The principal instrumental piece was Dussek's sonata in B flat, for violin and piano, played by Mr. Forbes and M. Bezeth, with which the concert opened, and which on both hands was remarkably well executed. Mr. Forbes also played a solo of his own, and M. Papé two fantasias, one of which would have been quite enough.

THE SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.—On Thursday evening this society held its "opening soirée for the season 1860," at the Suffolk-street Gallery, Pall-mall East; pictorial and vocal attractions of no ordinary interest being provided for the occasion. The former consisted in the extensive and choice collection of pictures of the modern British school, belonging to Mr. Wallis, which covered the walls, and at whose invitation the réunion took place at these rooms; the latter, of a performance of madrigals, part songs, and other choral music, by some sixty or seventy members of the Vocal Association, who had volunteered their services for the occasion. We shall confine our critical observations to the choral display, which was the feature of the evening, and, amongst many musical performances, was striking, for its novelty, uniformity, and purpose. Mr. Benedict and Dr. James Pech were the conductors of a choir which they had evidently sedulously trained. The volume of tone, and the precision and expression displayed by them were at once striking and gratifying in the highest degree. About a dozen pieces were performed, being selections from Bortniansky, Bishop, Smart, Benedict, &c., and included new four-part songs by Dr. James Pech, now sung for the first time, entitled respectively "Three Wishes," a spirited motive, and "The Bridal Morn," a melody of a more sentimental class. One or two of the pieces were encored; all went off amidst applause—the two novelties, in particular, being eminently successful. Upwards of eight hundred persons—members and their friends—assembled at this agreable soirée, which may be said to have gone off with distinguished éclat. The council promises six conversasioni of a similar character at one or other of the various exhibition galleries of the metropolis in the course of the season.

CONCERT AT BROADWOOD'S—(From an Occasional Contributor).—On Monday evening, the 23rd inst., a concert of peculiar interest took place at the Hanover-square Rooms, in which the performers, as far as the gentlemen were concerned, were in Messrs. Broadwood's employ, and the ladies were either their relations or friends. The sale of tickets had been strictly private, and confined to Messrs. Broadwood's establishment; hence much of the interest of the performance, as testifying largely to the increasing taste, in this country, for music. A few years ago the concert could not have been possible, nor could so appreciative an audience, of its class, have been gathered together. The prices of tickets were low, 1s., 1s. 6D., and 3s. 6D. By-the-bye, the notion of reserving seats for an additional sixpence must have been borrowed from the New Adelphi; be that as it may, the greater portion of the room was so reserved, it must, therefore, have been found convenient. The room was full to the highest seat in the orchestra, but no inconvenience was felt as, at a certain point, the sale of tickets was stopped. The boxes were occupied by members of the firm and their friends. It must have been very gratifying to them to see so large an audience, the connection of which with themselves was more or less immediate, respectable and happy. Strikes can never be known when such intimate relations between the employers and employed exist. A more good-tempered and determined-to-be-pleased audience could not well have been assembled, nor could a better performance, under the circumstances, have been expected. Some madrigals and part-songs were very well sung. A Miss Fanny Herbert (?) sung the "Zingara," by Donizetti, and "Where art thou wandering," by Frank Mori. We should almost think the latter were her master. Miss Herbert has a sympathetic and flexible soprano voice, and must yet be a valuable addition to our Concert Rooms. A great success also, was the earnest singing of Mr. French in the ballad of "The Willow Tree," composed by Mr. S. Pratten, for Mr. Santley, a year or so since. Why is it still MSS., Mr. Pratten? The words were, with many others, contributed to these columns, by Mr. James Hipkins, who is, we believe, engaged in Messrs. Broadwood's manufactory. It was vociferously re-demanded, and was repeated in extenso. Good voices seemed plentiful. A Mr. Brook displayed a very powerful tenor voice in "Come if you dare," and "The Death of Nelson." A Mr. Garnett also, a lighter tenor, gained much applause in "My pretty Jane." The face of Mr. Murray, one of the basses, has surely been, for years, before the public. Mr. Murray gave "On by the spur of valour goaded" with emphasis and power. It was remarkable to notice the very English character of the selection. Shield and Purcell, with the patriotic songs of Braham, seemed to be much in vogue. It is said of Shield, that, on certain days, he always dined with old Mr. John Broadwood. Many interesting memories are connected with Broadwood's house. The instrumental portion of the concert was divided into two piano solos by Miss Ellen Bliss, one of which was encored, and two violin solos by Mr. Blackmore, one of Messrs. Broadwood's tuners. This gentleman, for an amateur, exhibits much practical skill. The object of the concert was to add to the funds of the Workmen's Library, a self-supporting and valuable institution, in Messrs. Broadwood's Manufactory. As more than a thousand persons were present, a good result must have been secured. The concert was conducted by Mr. A. I. Hipkins, and reflects credit upon all concerned in it.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—The twenty-sixth annual meeting of members of the society took place this week in the minor hall, Exeter Hall. The chair was filled by J. N. Harrison, the president. Mr. Thomas Brewer, honorary secretary, read the report. It appears that the last year, as it respects the society's subscription list, is considerably in advance of any former period. A considerable portion of the report was occupied with details in reference to the Handel Commemoration at the Crystal Palace, in June last, which have, however, been before the public. The gross number of persons who attended the festival was 80,720, the entire receipts being £34,921. The total expenditure was £15,236, leaving a balance of £19,685 divisible between the Crystal Palace Company and the Sacred Harmonic Society. By the terms of the agreement between the two bodies, the Sacred Harmonic Society became entitled to one-third of the surplus profits; but having regard to the complete success of this unparalleled undertaking, they exceeded the sum for which they originally contracted to complete the musical arrangements by £2,095, thus leaving the net profits receivable by them £4,480 5s. 9d. There is also an amount of £1,103 19s. 3d. credited to the society's accounts, arising from the division of a guarantee fund carried over from the preliminary festival of 1857. It appears from the report that the total expenditure of the society for the past year has amounted to the large sum of £13,147. The business, which was proceeded with after the reading of the report, consisted of the usual election of members, and other routine business, including votes of thanks to Mr. Costa, the conductor, and the officers of the society. A motion was made, and unanimously adopted, to appropriate from the society's funds a sum of £1,000 stock to the benevolent fund connected with the Sacred Harmonic Society. A resolution was also adopted, allocating a sum of 380 guineas to be applied to the presentation of some testimonial to the members of the committee individually, having regard to their labours in relation to the Handel Festival and the general satisfaction experienced in connection therewith.

PROVINCIAL.

NORWICH.—The annual performance of The Messiah, by the Festival Choral Society, took place in St. Andrew's Hall, on the 23rd instant, when it was as usual attended by a crowded audience. With the exception of the tenor part (which was sung by Mr. Morgan, of London), all the solos were taken by members of the society. The band and chorus, consisting of above three hundred performers, were very effective. Mr. Harcourt presided at the organ, and Mr. J. F. Hill conducted the performance.

BELFAST.—The Anacreontic Society's second concert came off at the Music Hall, with all the anticipated success. The room was crowded. Mr. Balfe and his daughter had caused disappointment here, as elsewhere; but no dissatisfaction could have been experienced with the artists who kept their engagement:—Mdlle. Corbari, Madame Badia, Madame Fiorentini, Herr Reichardt, Sig. Tagliafico, and Mr. J. L. Hatton; Sig. Sivori (violin), Sig. Bottesini (contra basso), Herr Engel (harmonium), and Mr. Brinley Richards. The whole concert was distinguished by spirit and animation; no flagging whatever, nor the slightest sign of weariness appeared when the latest hour of the night was being encroached upon. The society began the concert with a part of Mozart's symphony, Jupiter, Herr Kerbusch conducting, with his usual judgment, and Mr. H. Loveday leading. Mdlle. Badia commenced with a song by Signor Badia, of a lively character. Herr Reichardt and Signor Tagliafico then gave Goldberg's duo, "The Mariners," the hearty voice of Tagliafico, and the soft and expressive notes of Reichardt blending with the best possible effect, and eliciting deserved applause. Signor Sivori delighted his auditory in a solo of the Paganini school. In a duo with Signor Bottesini he equally distinguished himself, whilst the latter fully maintained his character as an unrivalled master of the contra basso. Mdlle. Corbari displayed a fine soprano voice, and sang a bravura air with the greatest animation and fluency. Madame Fiorentini's style of singing was not so full of life and expression as Mdlle. Corbari's, but distinguished by ease and steadiness. The second part opened with the overture to the Siege of Corinth. Signor Bottesini gratified the auditory by his Andante with Variations, the rondo from Sonnambula being rendered with exquisite grace and effect. Such delicate tones from the double bass have rarely been heard. We should be very forgetful did we neglect to mention Herr Reichardt's "I know an eye so softly bright," rendered with infinite sweetness, taste, and expression. The feeling which he threw into this charming song "might have soothed the brow of Saul," and nothing could be more deserving of the enthusiastic and protracted applause which followed. Herr Reichardt gave a lively song ("Are they meant but to deceive me"—translated from the Polish by John Oxenford), instead of the one re-demanded, which gave equal satisfaction. Herr Engel introduced the harmonium, and showed his audience what might be done with that popular instrument. The society gave two specimens of their own vocalism—a part-song, "When evening's twilight," and a chorus, "Now, warlike deeds"—both in a creditable manner. The pianoforte playing of Mr. Brinley Richards was on a par with the excellence of the rest of the concert; and, on the whole, the evening was so well spent, and the performance so creditable to both professional and amateur artists engaged, that we can find no fault with the manner in which the Anacreontic Society have commenced the year 1860.

WAKEFIELD.——On Friday week Handel's Messiah was performed at the Corn Exchange, by a full band and chorus, numbering upwards of two hundred performers. The proceeds are to be devoted to the Church Restoration Fund. The spacious hall was crowded to suffocation, the front seats being filled by a very select company, most of whom were in full dress. The band and chorus were the finest ever heard in Wakefield, if, indeed, one superior was ever gathered in the West Riding. It included a large number of the best performers from all parts of the Riding, many of whom gave their services gratuitously. Amongst the violinists we noticed Messrs. Shaw and White, of York;

Tennant, of Dewsbury; and Phillips, of Wakefield. Mr. J. Emmerson, of Wakefield, presided at the organ, and Mr. Donager, of Wakefield, was principal flautist; trumpet, Mr. Lofthouse; and conductor, Mr. Phillips, of Sheffield. The principal vocalists were Mrs. Sunderland, Miss Fitton, Mrs. Lofthouse, and Miss Newbound; and Messrs. Inkersall, H. Wilson, and Lambert, of the Chapel Royal, Windsor. The whole of the arrangements reflect great credit upon the management, and we doubt not the effect will be apparent in a substantial addition to the Restoration Fund.—Wakefield Express.

BIRMINGHAM.—The third and last of the present series of concerts given by the members of the "Birmingham Musical Union," took place at Dee's Assembly Room, on the evening of Monday last. Mozart's Quartet (No. 7), as the opening piece, was well given by Messrs. Hayward, Alfred, Clementi, and Lidel, and made a deep impression, especially in the second movement, an exquisite andante. Miss Lascelles sang an aria from the Huguenots, and a scena from the Orpheus of Gluck. Mr. H. Hayward gave a violin solo of his own composition, consisting of two movements, an andante, and a polonaise, with pianoforte and harmonium accompaniments, in which he made many clever points. The great performance of the evening was the Beethoven quartet (op. 16), which introduced Mr. Barnett to a Birmingham audience. Clearness and facility of touch were the characteristics of his playing, and these qualities admirably adapted him for the work before him, in which he was ably assisted by Messrs. Hayward, Clementi, and Lidel. The andante cantabile movement, marked by its graceful reminiscence of Mozart's "Batti, batti," as a motivo, was especially good. Mr. Barnett selected for his solo performance the numbers six and three of the third book of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte; and, if we except the reading of the last portion of No. 6, the performance was perfect. Messrs. Duchemin and Lidel gave a sonata for pianoforte and violoncello with a spirit and at a speed that would have been hazardous to any but first-rate artists. They were deservedly applauded for the brilliant result of their joint efforts. The performances of the evening were brought to a conclusion by Hummell's trio (Op. 93), in which Mr. C. E. Flavell, at the pianoforte, maintained his well-earned reputation as a most finished performer, and, being well supported by the strings of Messrs. Hayward and Lidel, the result was exceedingly gratifying, forming, as it did, so successful a finale to the second season of the "Union," to the members of which the musical public of Birmingham are highly indebted.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—Lessee Mr. E. T. SMITH.—JACK ET LA TIGE DE FEVE.—Sous le règne du Grand Alfred vivait une pauvre femme qui avait à peine de quoi supporter sa misérable existence et celle de son jeune garçon. Elle avait en vaine essayé d'améliorer son sort, car dans ce qu'elle entreprenait tout tournait contre elle. Cet enfant, qu'elle amait tant, était loin de la consoler par son zèle et sa conduite; semblable à beaucoup d'enfans de son âge, il préférait le jou à tout. Un jour sa bonne mère lui dit, les larmes aux yeux, "Jack, il ne nous reste plus rien que notre vache, et il faut nous en défaire ou périr de faim." Jack partit donc pour le marché, et pour rendre, son voyage plus agréable se mit à chanter toutes sortes de chansons, jusqu'à ce qu'il eut rencontré un boucher qui l'aborda d'un air fort amical. Cet homme avait son plan, et il songeait à le mettre à exécution tandis que tous deux poursuivaient leur route en devisant de chose et d'autres. Ce méchant homme fit si bien qu'il persuada au pauvre Jack de lui vendre sa vache pour quelques fèves de la plus brilliante couleur. Jack qui n'en savait pas plus long, se laissa attraper, et croyant avoir fait une excellente affaire, il retourna chez sa mère. Lorsque sa mère vit quel triste marché il avait conclu, elle prit toutes les fèves et lui dit: "Est-ce là, méchant enfant, le tour que je devais attendre de toi? Tous mes soins, toute mon affection ne pouvaient-ils t'inspirer un peu de bon sens? Qui voudrait s'imaginer qu'un enfant tel que toi, si malin lorsqu'il s'agit de faire quelque drôle de tour, serait assez sot que d'abandonner notre vache, notre dernière ressource, pour une poignée de fèves?" Ce disant, elle alla jeter les fèves dans un plant de choux, et envoya Jack coucher sans souper. Le lendemain matin, Jack vit avec surprise que les fèves avaient en une seule nuit pris racine et crû d'une manière vraiment extraordinaire. Il courut chercher sa mère, et l'amena près d'une tige de fève qui avait certainement les dimensions d'un arbre dont la tige se perdait dans les nuages. La bonne femme resta toute ébahie, et se perdit en conjectures sur la croissance subite d'une telle tige de fève. Quant à Jack, s'étant assuré de la solidité de la tige, il résolut de grimper jusqu'en haut, dans l'espérance d'avoir plus de chance dans cette enterprise que dans la première. Sa mère ne le vit pas monter sans éprouver quelques craintes; mais Jack la rassura. "Chère maman," lui dit-il, "j'ai le pressentiment que cette tentative tournera à notre avantage, ainsi ne vous tourmentez pas, j'ai du courage et de l'activité, et je crois que la moment est venu de vous prouver que je suis un bon fils." Après avoir monté quelque temps, il atteignit la cime de l'arbre, il en était temps, car ses jambes étaient fatiguées, et ses mains n'avaient plus la force de le soutenir. Il aperçut alors une contrée triste et déserte. Il y aborda, s'assit et se mit à réfléchir. Bientôt après parut une fée couverte de vêtements magnifiques et entourée d'une lumière resplendissante. Elle lui adressa la parole avec bonté et lui dit, "Mon enfant, il faut partir à l'instant pour aller punir l'ogre qui est votre ennemi le plus invétéré. C'est lui qui a tué votre père, et s'il vous a épargné ainsi que votre mère, c'est sous la condition qu'elle ne révélerait jamais ce qu'elle sait. Les richesses de votre père sont cachées dans le château de l'ogre. Ainsi donc, suivez mon conseil, partez et allez à ce château." Il se mit de suite en route et atteignit avant la nuit le vaste château des géants. Il frappa à la porte, et vit bientôt avec la plus grande surprise une femme de proportions monstrueuses, dont les gros yeux fixes eussent suffi pour donner la chair de poule. Cependant, malgré sa laideur, elle n'avait pas un air refrogné, et elle sourit en regardant Jack. Le pauvre garçon essaya de balbutier quelques mots, qu'elle interrompit en lui demandant, d'une voix assez semblable au bruit d'un gong, ce qu'il voulait à cette heure avancée. Jack reprit un peu de courage en se rappelant ce que lui avait dit la fée. Il la salua avec beaucoup de respect, et après s'être excusé d'avoir frappé si fort à la porte, il la pria instamment de lui donner un morceau de pain et un abri pour la nuit. "Vous ne savez guerè, mon cher petit, ce que vous demandez. Je suis la femme du grand ogre à qui ce château appartient, et quiconque y entre doit y laisser la vie. Mais je vois avec peine que vous êtes très fatigué, et je n'aurai pas la cruauté de vous chasser. Venez avec moi, j'essaierai de vous cacher dans mon grand chaudron. Mais ne l'oubliez pas, il faut que vous soyez parti avant la pointe du jour," Jack entendit bientôt l'ogre qui rentrait, et qui d'un ton bourru, demandait qu'on lui apporta son souper. Il appela ensuite sa poule et lui commanda de pondre quelques œufs d'or; ensuite il s'endormit, et se mit à ronfler. Le bruit qu'il faisait ressemblait au tonnerre. Alors Jack s'aventura à passer un peu la tête hors du chaudron et vit ces œufs si brilliants, qui n'étaient pas lein de sa portée. Tout à coup il prit son courage à deux mains, s'élança hors du chaudron, empocha les œufs d'or, et ayant attiré vers lui la poule, il s'en empara et s'enfuit. Il retrouva bientôt son énorme tige de fève et descendit sans perdre un seul moment. Sa mère, qui le croyait perdu, fut enchantée de la revoir; mais elle ne put contenir sa joie en voyant son cher Jack sortir de sa poche sa provision d'œufs d'or; il lui raconta comment il s'en était emparé, et avec quel empressement il les lui avait apportés. "Le géant," continua-t-il, "s'eveilla et se mit à courir après moi pour avoir sa poule favorite; mais mes jambes valaient mieux que les siennes, aussi suis-je descendu de la tige sans lever les yeux, de peur du monstre armé de sa massue." Jack s'empressa de chercher une maison commode et bien approvisionée pour sa mère; puis l'amour des aventures lui fit penser à la fameuse tige de fève, et il se décida à tenter une autre excursion. Il se déguisa, et le jour suivant il grimpa lestement à la cime de la tige et pénétra adroitement jusque dans le château de l'ogre. Cette fois-ci il s'empara de la belle harpe du géant, le harpe s'écria, "Maître, maître!" Mais Jack gagna son arbre au plus vite, et avec l'aide des bonnes fées, il s'esquiva avec l'instrument, sans avoir été atteint par l'ogre, qui le poursuivait armé d'une grosse pierre. Jack était trop vif et trop agile pour se laisser prendre. Le géant le voyant échapper à sa poursuite voulut aussi profiter de la tige de fève et se mit à descendre avec précaution. Mais Jack, qui était arrivé très vite en bas, alla chercher une hache, et en quelques coups il coupa la tige par sa base, de sorte que l'ogre tomba à terre roide mort. Alors parurent les bonnes fées, qui dirent à Jack, "Aujourd'hui vous avez vengé votre père, vous êtes riches, et vous, ainsi que votre mère, vous aurez une existence heureuse, digne récompense de la persévérance et du courage que vous avez montré."

GLEES, MADRIGALS, & OLD ENGLISH DITTIES. Egyptian Hall, Dudley Gallery.—Last week but one of the performance of Glees, Madrigals, and Old English Ballads, of the London Glee and Madrigal Union, under the direction of Mr. Land. Every evening at half-past Eight, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings at half-past Two. Literary Illustrator—T. Oliphant, Esq. Reserved seats, 3s.; Unreserved, 2s. A few Fauteuils, 5s. each which may be obtained at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 30, Old Bond Street, W.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,
USED IN THE ROYAL LAUNDRY,
AND PRONOUNCED BY HER MAJESTY'S LAUNDRESS, to be
THE FINEST STARCH SHE EVER USED.
Sold by all Chandlers, Grocers,, &c.[&c.

BOOSEYS PART-SONG MISCELLANY: a Collection of Original Compositions by celebrated composers. Price Fourpence each number:—

		Poetry by	Music by
No. 1.	"Welcome, Heavenly Peace" ..	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
2.	"The Bud is on the Bough" ..	Frances Bennoch ..	Frank Mori.
3.	"And were they not the Happy Days"	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
4.	"Beauty is Dead"	Charles Swain ..	Frank Mori.
5.	"Who shall be Fairest"	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
6.	"O spare my tender Flowers" ..	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
7.	"Ripe Strawberries"	W. S. Passmore ..	J. L. Hatton.
8.	"Smile, O Heaven! upon the Day"	E. Falconer . ..	M. W. Balfe.
9.	"Sancta Maria"	H. F. Chorley ..	Meyerbeer.
10.	"A Legend of the Rhine"	.. .. ..	Henry Smart.
11.	"The Hostess's Daughter"	Uhland	Henry Smart.
12.	"The Rover"	E. M. S.	Henry Smart.
13.	"The Three Wishes"	J. Ellison	Dr. Pech.

To be continued.

The above are supplied to the Profession and Societies at the rate of 13 as 12 at 3d. each, or 50 copies at 2d. each. Any number post-free for 4d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

Lately published,

THREE NEW SONGS

BY

EMILE BERGER.

Price 2s. each.

SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.

From the Daily News.

"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.

A COMPLETE EDITION OF

GLUCK'S OPERA,

IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,

FOR

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE BEST QUADRILLE OF THE SEASON,

LAURENTS'

CHRISTMAS WAITS QUADRILLE,

ON POPULAR AIRS,

Beautifully illustrated in Colours by Brandard. Price 3s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 6s.

BOOSEY'S

500 SONGS, DANCES AND OPERATIC AIRS,

FOR THE VIOLIN.

ARRANGED BY GEORGE CASE.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S

CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 2s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

NOTICE.

"NELLY GRAY"

BY

BALFE.

The only song of this name as sung by the "Christy's Minstrels," is composed by Balfe, and the public and trade are therefore requested to order Balfe's "Nelly Gray," to avoid the substitution of another song of the same name.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S

CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS'

ALBUMS.

CONTAINING TWENTY FOUR SONGS,

With chorus, pianoforte accompaniment, and words under the music,

In two books, price 2s. 6d. each, or complete in an elegant volume, cloth and gold, 7s. 6d.

BOOK 1st.

"KISS ME QUICK."
"WILLIE, WE HAVE MISSED YOU."
"HOOP DE DOODEN DO."
"HAZEL DELL."
"WE ARE COMING, SISTER MARY."
"RING DE BANJO."
"HARD TIMES."
"GOOD NEWS FROM HOME."
"WAIT FOR THE WAGGON."
"COME WHERE MY LOVE LIES."
"BEAUTIFUL STAR."
"TOLL THE BELL."

BOOK 2nd.

"GENTLE JENNY GRAY."
"THE MOCKING BIRD."
"THE GREENWOOD DELL."
"ELLEN BAYNE."
"DO THEY MISS ME AT HOME."
"SEEING NELLY HOME."
"GENTLY DOWN THE STREAM."
"MAGGIE BY MY SIDE."
"LET ME KISS HIM FOR HIS MOTHER."
"EULALIE."
"I'M OFF TO CHARLESTOWN."
"MINNIE MOORE."

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

Published this Day. Price 2s. 6d.

AN EASY AND POPULAR EDITION OF

"O TENDER SHADOW,"

SONG,

FROM MEYERBEER'S DINORAH.

Adapted for the use of amateurs unable to accomplish all the passages in the original edition, by M. Jules de Glimes. With English and Italian words, price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S SOLOS.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER'S TROVATORE, as performed by Miss Goddard at the Bradford Festival, 5s.

BENEDICT'S TWO NEW FANTAISIES:
ERIN, on Irish Airs .. .. 4 0 | CALEDONIA, on Scotch Airs .. 4 0
Composed expressely for Miss Goddard, and performed by her throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland.

NE PLUS ULRA. by WOELFFL.—A new edition of this celebrated Sonata as performed by Miss Goddard, with a very interesting Introduction by J. W. Davison, Esq., containing an account of the Composer's Life and Compositions, Price 5s.

THALBERG'S THREE FANTASIAS on "Home Sweet Home," "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Lillie Dale," in one book (large size), price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

To be ready in a few days, a Second and Cheaper Edition of the celebrated

OPERATIC ALBUM,

In crimson cloth, price 12s.

The original edition, with illustrations, and superbly bound, may still be had.

This unrivalled collection of operatic music contains 100 Gems from the whole of the best Modern Operas, including, Martha, La Traviata, Il Trovatore, Louisa Miller, Rigoletto, Ernani, Les Vêpres, Sonnambula, Norma, Puritani, Don Pasquale, Lucrezia Borgia, Lucia di Lammermoor, Linda, Elisire, Fille du Régiment, Robert le Diable, and Les Huguenots, all arranged for the Pianoforte Solo, by Nordmann.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.

Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.

Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

LAURENT'S UNRIVALLED WALTZES.

 The average sale of the following Waltzes is from 4,000 to 20,000 each set.

		s.	d.
Sicilian Vespers Waltz	(Illustrated in colours)	4	0
Donna Julia Waltz		4	0
Beloved Star Waltz (on "Thou art so near" by Reichardt)		4	0
Dinorah Waltz		4	0
Satanella Waltz		4	0
Lord Lovell's Waltz	(Illustrated)	3	0
Christy's Minstrels' Waltz		3	0
Summer Bloom Waltz		3	0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELOVED STAR VALSE (companion to the Maud Valse). Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. From the Liverpool Mail:—"Reichardt's beautiful Lied ('Beloved Eye'), deservedly one of the most charming and popular songs of the day, has been transformed by Mr. Laurent into a most suave and well-marked waltz, which we may naturally hope to find in scores of ball programmes this and succeeding winters." Boosey and Son's, Holles-street.

THE SERPENTINE QUADRILLE, by Burchardt, on the most popular melodies of the day, with a comic illustration of skating on the Serpentine, in colours by Brandard. Price 3s. From the Liverpool Mail:—'The Serpentine Quadrille' (which is, by the way, illustrated with much humour and spirit), contains some two dozen of the most popular airs of the day, and so admirably have they been blended that the result is a mélange which will at once set feet in motion and call up most pleasant reminiscences, for though the ear is tickled every few minutes with a new —or rather old—tune, the whole of the quadrille is eminently dansante."—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MEYERBEER'S "SHEPHERD'S SONG (Des Schäfers Lied), sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, at the Monday Popular Concerts (with clarionet obbligato) is published, price 4s. (extra violin or violoncello, in lieu of clarionet, 1s. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

NEW SACRED SONG, "Awake, little Pilgrim." Composed by Maurice Cobham; the poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond. Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late.

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MEYERBEER'S Setting of the "Lord's Prayer," for four voices (soprano, alto, tenor, and bass), is published, with English and Latin text, in score, 3s., separate vocal parts, 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S NEW SONG, "Wert thou mine," Composed by Frank Mori, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "ETHEL." Romance for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W. "Mr. Thackery's Ethel Newcombe has inspired the composer with graceful and elegant ideas, in the form of what may be called a romance without words, exceedingly vocal and richly accompanied."—Daily News.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "SULIOTE WAR SONG." Sung by Mr. Santley. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "HARP OF WALES," Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BACHIANA, Preludes and Fugues, by John Sebastian Bach (not included in the 48 preludes and fugues), as played at all the classical concerts, in six numbers, each 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

THE HARMONIOUS BLACKSMITH. Composed by Handel for the Pianoforte from his suite de pièces in E major. The only correct edition, as played at all the classical concerts, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONG FOR CHRISTMAS.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." By LOVELL PHILLIPS. Beautifully illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"As graceful and vocal a song as we have met with for a long time."—Musical World.—London: Duncan Davison, 244, Regent-street, W.

Just published, in post 8vo., cloth,

A COLLECTION OF WORDS OF 2,270 ANTHEMS, with 452 Biographical Accounts of Authors, &c. By B. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain, and Honorary Organist of St. Peter's Church, Manchester. Price 6s. 6d. The Author will be happy to make arrangements for the supply of a number of copies to any cathedral, or other church, either in cloth or sheets.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit	15s.	per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit	18s.	Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age	20s.	Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each:—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dediée à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dediée à Edouard Roeckel)	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "BLIND MAN AND SUMMER." Sung by Miss Palmer. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR," sung by the Composer, with the most distinguished success, is published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME," sung with the greatest éclat by the composer is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W,

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY." The New Song composed by ADOLPH SCHLOESSER, now singing with the greatest success by Madame Lemmens Sherrington, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARROW AND THE SONG," New Four-Part-Song for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses), sung with great success by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, and enthusiastically encored, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"THE FAIRY'S EVEN-SONG," New Four-Part-Song, for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses) sung with great success by the Polyhymnian Choir, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BLUETTES CLASSIQUES, Selected from the Works of the great Pianoforte composers.

		s.	d.
No. 1.	DUSSEK.—"Il pastore Alpigiano," Air Varié	3	0
2.	STEIBELT.—"Papageno" (Zauberflöte)	2	6
3.	.. "Monostatos"	3	0
4.	DUSSEK.—"La chasse" .. (In the Press) ..	3	0

"They are quite simple, easy to execute and to understand, and yet the most accomplished performer and the most refined amateur will find them delightful to play."—Daily News.—London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BALFE'S NEW SONGS.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee;
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle air,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

London: Duncan Davison, & Co., 244, Regent-street, W

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

FOR THE

DRAWING ROOM.

GOLLMICK.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Vive la Danse, Valse ...	3	0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3	0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3	0	Azelia	3	0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3	0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3	0

ASCHER.

Thou art so near ...	3 0	Un Ballo in Maschera	3 0
Dinorah	4 0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes	3 0

SCHLŒSSER.

Les Boutons de Roses	3 0	Deodora, Caprice ...	3 0
Souvenir du Rigi ...	3 0	Fleurs Animées ...	3 0

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Nelly Gray	3 0	Santa Maria	2 6
Shadow Air, Dinorah...	3 0	Maud	3 0
The Power of Love ...	3 0	Bolero "Les Vespers"	3 0

MADAME OURY.

Christy's Minstrels Galop	3 0	Valse Sympathique ...	4 0
Martha	4 0	Dinorah	5 0
Air de l'Ombre ...	4 0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes .	5 0

BENEDICT.

Caledonia	4 0	Erin	4 0

TALEXY.

Eva Polka Mazurka ...	2 6	Dinorah Polka Mazurka	2 6

BERGER.

Selection, Dinorah ..	4 0	Selection, Satanella ...	4 0
Selection, Martha ...	4 0	Garibaldi's March ...	2 6

KUHE.

Satanella Grande Valse	4 0	Dinorah Fantaisie ...	3 0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex. Saturday, January 28, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 5. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

U. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESS AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS, Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER, Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS, Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

5

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.

BOOSEY & SONS' beg to announce that they will publish in the course of next week, an entirely

NEW AND COMPLETE EDITION OF THE

CELEBRATED MAZURKAS

OF

FREDERICK CHOPIN,

EDITED (and with a Preface) BY

J. W. DAVISON.

They will be published in one vol. (music size), stiff sides, with an excellent portrait of Chopin, price 8s.; or handsomely bound in cloth, price 10s. 6d.

Also in the Press,

A NEW EDITION OF MENDELSSOHN'S

SONGS WITHOUT WORDS,

EDITED BY

J. W. DAVISON.

On large paper, uniform with Chopin's Mazurka.

Holles-street, 4th February.

JUST PUBLISHED.—"There's nothing like a freshening breeze," new song by Alberto Randegger, composed for and sung with the greatest success by Mr. Thomas, when on his last tour, and always encored. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION, ST. JAMES'S HALL.—Conductor, M. BENEDICT.—On Wednesday, Feb. 15th, at eight, Mendelssohn's Psalm "Hear my Prayer, O God," for soprano, solo and chorus. Solo—Madlle. Euphrosyne Parepa. Also new Part-songs by Benedict, Otto Goldschmidt, Henry Smart and Francesco Berger, by the choir of 200 voices. Tickets, 1s., 3s., and 5s., at St. James's Hall ticket office, 28, Piccadilly.

MYDDLETON HALL, ISLINGTON—NORTH LONDON MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS. First of the series, Monday Monday evening next, the 6th Feb., 1860. Artists: Mad. Louisa Vinning, Mdlle. Vaneri, Miss Fanny Reeves, Miss Messent, Mr. Allan Irving, J. G. Patey, and Elliot Galer, Viotti Collins, Medora Collins, J. D. Davies (harpist), R. Glenn Wesley. Conductor, Mr Frank Mori. Admission one shilling and two shillings.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hudson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day. Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 20, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MDME. ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.
Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Princi-
H. Weist Hill. } pals.
Vietti Collins.
M. Beseth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.
Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
E. Payton
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. March.
G. Betjemann.
B. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.
T. Wells.
J. Zerbini, Jun.
Ambrose Haynes.
S. Hart.
F. W. Amor.

VIOLI.
Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb
H. J. Trust.
J. Thompson.
H. Tothurst.

VIOLONCELLI.
Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. F. Reed.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.
R. Reed.

CONTRA BASSI.
Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. C. F. Beresford.
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.
Messrs.
R. S. Pratten.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.
Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.
Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.
Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.
Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.
Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.
Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.
Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.
Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.
Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.
Mr. Walter Hinchey,

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:

M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

For the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals will be held on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, and during the season, concerts will be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with the chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

The [illegible] department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two violas.

All communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London Orchestral Association, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

MUSICAL WORLD NEWSPAPER

THE CONSERVATIVE LAND SOCIETY.—

OFFICES—33, Norfolk-street, Strand, London, W.C.

TRUSTEES.

The Viscount RANELAGH. | J. C. COBBOLD, Esq., M.P.

SHARE DEPARTMENT.—The present rate of Interest, payable half-yearly, on Shares is five per cent., per annum, with power of withdrawal of subscription at ten days' notice, and participation in any bonus declared above the ordinary interest. No partnership liability. The taking of land is quite optional.

DEPOSIT DEPARTMENT.—Sums, large or small, may be deposited at the Offices daily. Interest allowed is now four per cent., per annum, payable half-yearly. Withdrawals of deposits paid every Wednesday, under £100; from £100 to £500, at 21 days; and £500 and upwards on one month's notice. Investors under the Deposit Department do not become members of the Society. Remittances may be made in cheques, half-notes, post office orders, &c.

LAND DEPARTMENT.—Freehold plots on valuable Estates are now on sale, the taker of each plot being allowed to borrow seven-eighths of the purchase-money, payable in easy monthly instalments. Plans of the Estates, price 6d. each, or 7d. by post, will be sent to any part of the United Kingdom. Advances for Building on liberal terms.

BORROWING DEPARTMENT.—Repayment of Building Advances, and of loans, on scales of three, five, seven, and ten years, by monthly, quarterly, or yearly instalments. On less periods than three years, special arrangements can be made.

Prospectuses will be sent free of charge to any part of the world.

CHARLES LEWIS GRUNEISEN, Secretary.

TO THE COUNTRY MUSIC TRADE.—A Young Man, who has been employed in two leading London Music Houses, is desirous of obtaining a Situation in the Country, as an Assistant to a Musicseller. Unexceptionable references. Address, A. H., Musical World Office.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

MONSIEUR ET MADAM RIEDER beg to announce that they have arrived in London, where they intend passing the season. Letters respecting lessons or engagements, may be addressed to the care of Messrs. Chappell & Co., 50, Bond-street; or Messrs. Schott & Co., of 159, Regent-street.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winser, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

TO SPECULATORS.—A Lady and Gentleman in the Musical Profession, having originated an entirely Novel Entertainment, would be glad to meet with an engagement to travel through England and Wales. For particulars, address, M.M.M., Handel House, Weston-super-Mare, Somerset.

THE MISSES BROUGHAM beg to announce that they have removed to 38, Argyle-street, Euston-road, W. C.; where all communications respecting engagements and lessons are requested to be addressed.

"OH, DENNIS, DEAR,"

NEW SONG,

BY G. B. ALLEN,

Price 2s.

Oh, Dennis, dear, the wintry blast
Is sighing through the willow,
And still you said you'd come again
Ere Autumn leaves were yellow.
Oh must I wear the willow branch?
The sad forsaken willow;
I'd rather far the whisper'ng grass
Waved o'er my lonely pillow.

How tender were the words you spoke,
Dear Dennis, when we parted!
The hopes you breathed when first to you
I clung nigh broken-hearted.
You kiss'd away my tears, and said
You'd come ne'er more to sever—
Ere yellow were the Autumn leaves,
I'd be thine own for ever.

My heart is sore with trembling fear,
Oh, Dennis, can'st thou leave me,
All hope is fading in my soul—
I die, if you deceive me.
But list! what, stirs the wil'ow boughs?
Who steps across the river?
Oh, Dennis, 'tis thine own dear self,
Oh, Dennis, thine for ever.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

REVIEWS.

THE sonatas and other instrumental works of Beethoven have long been procurable, in various editions more or less complete, by the English amateur and professor of music; but his songs—which, whatever some critics may assert, comprise just as many beauties in their way—have been very sparsely circulated, and comparatively little known. They have never been collected and published, with or without English text, under one head, so as to be used or referred to without inconvenience. The recent appearance, therefore, of a volume which, to judge from its title-page, was evidently prepared with so desirable an object in contemplation, must have elicited unanimous satisfaction. Such a volume must set matters right, and place Beethoven's vocal music—among lovers of art in this country, where his name is unanimously revered—on the same familiar footing as his instrumental compositions. We believe that this conviction tended to bring the new work into considerable vogue; and it has hitherto passed muster without a question as to the integrity of purpose, and high respect for Beethoven, that should have swayed its projectors in the course of its progress through the press.

"The Songs of Beethoven," with the original text—edited and adapted to English words by William Hills—is the publication to which we allude. We have but one charge to prefer against it; but that one is of a tolerably serious complexion. The Songs of Beethoven is a palpable misnomer—doubtless unintended, but not the less calculated to deceive. There are not above half the songs. We allude, of course, to the isolated songs—derived neither from opera nor cantata, from oratorio nor from any sacred or secular compositions on an extended scale, but merely songs per se, composed and published without reference to any context. Had Mr. Hills entitled his work—A Selection from Beethoven's Songs, or The Songs of Beethoven—Vol. I.—leaving it to be understood that another volume might follow in due course, there would have been no objection to make; but as the matter stands, we must strongly protest against such a title as he has invented being affixed to a compilation manifestly incomplete. It is as well, however, to substantiate our accusation against Mr. Hills by a few facts and data.

The interesting Catalogue ("Critical, Analogical, and Anecdotal") of Beethoven's compositions, drawn up by Herr W. von Lenz (in his enthusiastic treatise, entitled Beethoven et ses Trois Styles), and divided into four sections—the first under the category of numbered works (Opera), the second under that of numbers only, the third and fourth under that of letters—enumerates all the chamber songs of the great musician. Let us take them as we find them there:—

"Sechs geistliche Lieder, von Gellert," Op. 32.

Of these songs (dedicated to the Countess Browne, the wife of one of Beethoven's stanch adherents, to whom the set of trios for violin, viola and violoncello, and the pianoforte sonata in B flat, Op. 22, are inscribed) the volume of Mr. Hills (although bearing the comprehensive title of The Songs of Beethoven) does not contain a single example. One of them—the Busslied (in A minor)—is remarkable as having been arranged by Prince Nicholas Galitzin (to whom the so-called "Posthumous" quartets in E flat, B flat, and A minor, are inscribed) as a funereal quintet, dedicated to the "manes" of the illustrious composer.

The next reference in Herr Lenz's catalogue is to the famous "Adelaida," Op. 46, which, we need scarcely add, has for substantial reasons not been overlooked by Mr. Hills,—although he has erroneously marked it "Op. 52."

The grand scena, for soprano voice, and orchestra—"Ah, perfido" (Op. 48)—although arranged by Beethoven himself with pianoforte accompaniment,* is omitted from The Songs of Beethoven.

The veritable Op. 52—which comprises, in Simrock's catalogue,† eight songs—

"8 Lieder, mit Begleitung des piano, von Claudius, Sophie Mereau, Goethe, Bürger, and Lessing—" and to which the catalogue of Peters‡ adds four others—is more fortunate. In his collection of 31 songs, Mr. Hills has included eight of these—viz.:—

No. 2—"Feuerfarb" (Sophie Mereau.)
„ 3—"Das Liedchen von der Ruhe" (Bürger.)
„ 4—"Maigesang" (Goethe.)
„ 5—"Molly's Abschied" (Bürger.)
„ 6—"Ohne Liebe" (Lessing.)
„ 7—"Marmotte" (Savoyard Song.)—
„ 7—"La Partenza" (Metastasio.)
„ 8—"Ich liebe dich."

thus abandoning no less than four out of the series, which, with the six Geistliche Lieder and "Ah, perfido," already brings his sins of omission to the number of eleven.

From the renowned Op. 75, dedicated to the Princess Kinski;§"—

"Sechs Lieder, mit Begleitung des piano, von Goethe"—

—Mr. Hills has appropriated the four which have attained the greatest measure of popularity—viz:—

No. 1.—"Kennst du das Land" (Mignon's song in Wilhelm Meister.)
„ 2.—"Neue Liebe, neue Leben."‖
„ 3.—"Es war einmal ein König" (The Song of the Flea," in Faust.)
„ 4.—"Gretel's Warning" (Faust.)— throwing aside two, however—"An den fernen Geliebten" (which must not be confounded with the more celebrated Liederkreis); and "Der Zufriedne," of almost equal merit. Thirteen songs omitted from "THE songs, &c.!" But we have not yet nearly achieved our task.

From Op. 82, consisting of four songs and a duet, to Italian words;—

"Vier Arietten und ein Duett, mit piano" (the German text adapted by Schreiber)—

the English editor has selected two—viz.:—

No. 1.—"Dimmi ben mio che m'ami,"
„ 2.—"T' intendo si mio cor"—

dispensing with two which we cannot but regard as at least their equals—"Che fa il mio bene" (a genial aria buffa), and another "Che fa il mio bene" (arietta assai seriosa), setting forth the anxiety of an impatient lover—to say nothing of the charming duet, "Odi l'aura che dolce sospiro" (sixteen omissions from "THE," &c.!)

From Op. 83 (dedicated to the Princess Kinski)—

"Drei Lieder, von Goethe, mit Begleitung des Piano, von Goethe."

Mr. Hills has taken all, but only placing the first (composed for "Bettina")—"Wonne der Wehmuth, trocknet nicht Thränen"—under the accredited opus—attaching to the

* The orchestral arrangement, in the catalogues of Whistling Artaria, and Breitkopf, is numbered Op. 65; but Herr Lenz thinks himself justified in preferring and adopting the opus which, in the catalogue of Peters, is affixed to the pianoforte adaptation.

† Bonn.

‡ Leipsic.

§ To whose husband the Mass in C (Op. 86) is inscribed.

‖ Composed for Beethoven's favorite Madame Brentano ("Bettina von Arnim") to whom he addressed it, with a letter containing the following glowing sentence:—"Seit ich Abschied von Dir genommen, liebes, liebites Herz."

third—"Mit einem gemahlten Bande"—the name of Reissig (instead of Gœthe) as poet—confounding it, probably, with some other song; and giving to the second—the well known Sehnsucht—"Was zieht mir das Herz so?"—no opus at all.

Omission, No. 17, is "An die Hoffnung"—song to poetry, by Tiedge (dedicated to Princess Kinski), Op. 94. "An die ferne Geliebte" (Leiderkreis, or cycle of songs), to texts of Jeitteles, dedicated to Prince Lobkowitz *, one of the most constant and liberal of Beethoven's patrons (Op. 98); and "Der mann von Wort," words by Kleinschmidt (Op. 99), are appropriated by Mr. Hills, who, it may be added, has done wisely not to ignore them, especially the incomparably beautiful Liederkreis, justly styled, by Robert Schumann, the most intensely passionate of all love songs. The eighteenth omission of Mr. Hills is Op. 100:—

"Merkenstein nächst Baden, Gedicht von Ruprecht, für eine oder zwei Singstimmen, mit piano."

"Der Kuss"—(words by Weisse)—

"Ich war bei Chloen ganz allein"†—ariette für ein Sopran. stimme mit piano— which, although marked Op. 128, is evidently an early work; "Der Wachtelschlag" ("Song of the Quail"), to a poem by Tiedge (placed by Lenz in his second section, as No. 24, but in the catalogue of Whistling, as Op. 24. together with the noble sonata in F major for pianoforte and violin); and a second "An die Hoffnung," poetry also by Tiedge, marked No. 32 by Lenz (Op. 52, by Peters); are all comprised by Mr. Hills in his collection; as also No. 38—"Die Sehnsucht"—consisting of four short melodies (Goethe) with pianoforte accompaniment. The Blümchen der Einsamkeit (Flowrets of Solitude"), six songs to Reissig's words (third section—letter A—Lenz's Catalogue):—

No. 1.—"Die stille Nacht" (Sehnsucht)
„ 2.—"Ich zieh' ins Feld" (Kriegers Abschied)
„ 3.—"Der Frühling entblüetet" (Der Jungling in der Fremde)
„ 4.—"Einst wohnten süsse Ruh" (Anden fernen Geliebten—No. 3)
„ 5.—"Zuvr schuf das Glück" (Der Zufriedene)
„ 6.—"Welch' ein wunderbares Leben" (Der Liebende)— swell out the omissions to no less than four-and-twenty, which, added to several other fugitive pieces, to be found lettered in the third and fourth sections of Lenz's catalogue, form an important gap in the catalogue of Beethoven's songs, and justify us in protesting against the title-page with which Mr. Hills has dignified his thus very incomplete, however otherwise satisfactory, edition. Among the lesser known songs, Mr. Hills has included "An die Geliebte" (text of Stoll); "Das Geheimniss" (text of Wessenberg); "Als mir noch die Thräne der Sehnsucht nicht floss" (anonymous); "Ich denke dein, wenn durch den Hain" ("Andenken"), words by Matthison, the poet, of "Adelaida" (Op. 72, the same opus as Fidelio‡—which Lenz places in his third section); "Der Lebt ein Leben wonniglich" (Lebensglück—"Sympathy"), poetry by Kosegarten, or—as Lenz makes it out—by Tiedge; and "Wenn die sonne nieder sinket," an Abendlied ("Evening song), which though marked Op. 103, is not named by Lenz, who arriving at that opus says briefly: "Il n'y a pas d'opera, 103." On the other hand, while inserting a piece of the existence of which even the enthusiastic author of Les Trois Styles seems, unaware, Mr Hills strangely omits one of the most widely known of all the songs of Beethoven—the contralto air, to the words of Haydn's Italian biographer, the Abbé Carpani,—the very popular "In questa tomba oscura."

With regard to the general correctness of the musical text, and the manner in which the German words are done into English verse (remarkable alike for freedom and elegance), we have only unreserved praise to award; and if Mr. Hills will publish the second edition, which we feel sure awaits his work, as "The Songs of Beethoven, Vol. I.," and insert a promissory note for the speedy appearance of Vol. II., we shall be happy to cancel the foregoing somewhat critical analysis, and write another in a different tone. Meanwhile, in so important a matter as the works of Beethoven, the musical public must not be deceived.

* To whom are also dedicated the Six Quartets, Op. 18, and other works of great interest.

† Introduced (although written for a soprano voice) with such success by Mr. Sims Reeves at the Monday Popular Concerts.

‡ Eleonore, on die eheliche Liebe.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

February 1st.

GOOD music, like wine, acquires a still finer tone from age, and the musical port that has just been brought from its cell, after a seclusion of more than fifteen years—for it is as long as that since the Matrimonio Segreto of Cimarosa has been performed in Paris—is no exception to the rule. When this opera was last played, Lablache filled the part of Geronimo; it is Signor Zucchini who has now the difficult task assigned him of assuming the character after him. The parts of the two sisters and the aunt, Carolina, Lisetta, Fidalma, are performed by the Signoras Alboni, Penco, and Dottini. The other principal parts are filled by Signori Gardoni and Badiali. The trio of the first act, with the fine air Gardoni sings, "Pria che spunti," obtained an encore, and indeed the entire performance seemed to give unmitigated satisfaction. It is now sixty-nine years since Cimarosa composed the Matrimonio Segreto. At the Grand Opera, the rehearsals of Prince Poniatowski's opera, Pierre de Médicis, which were interrupted momentarily by the loss of M. Girard, are going on with renewed vigour. It is on the production of this composition that M. Dietsch will enter on his new functions. The representation at the Opéra-Comique, by particular desire, of the Pardon de Ploërmel, on the 22nd, was attended with the greatest success. An overflowing house, large receipts, and immense success to the artists. It is only natural that, with these results, the managers should avail themselves of these extra performances; so the Pardon de Ploërmel was again given on the 29th without detriment to the week-day performances. They announce in their bills a new comic opera, to be given next Saturday. It is in three acts, the libretto by MM. A. Dumas and De Leuven, the music by M. Ambroise Thomas. The title is Le Roman d'Elvira. The indisposition of M. Faure has obliged the management to defer their project of bringing out Don Juan; indeed, M. Troy is still singing his part in the Pardon de Ploërmel. The following paragraph that I extract from Le Nord seems to put an end to the rumours that have been circulated lately relative to a change in the management of the Opéra-Comique:—

"The affair relative to the sale of the Opéra-Comique has not been concluded. They say that the shareholders have disbursed fresh sums, to insure the future direction of the theatre remaining in the hands of the present manager."

The little operetta in one act (the music by M. Henri Caspar, the libretto by M. H. Cremieux), brought out on the 21st at the Théâtre-Lyrique, is a gay and sparkling little composition; the dialogue is not wanting in wit either. There is nothing very original in the tale, which runs somewhat thus:—Mdlle. Gabrielle has been sent for home by her aunt the Marquise d'Ambert, of whom she stands in great awe—to be married. To whom, she knows not, and is told not to trouble her head about it. As she is journeying home attended by her maid, she meets on the road a very charming cavalier attended by his man. It is but natural that the gentleman should be polite to a young lady, and, of course, they end by falling in love with each other. Arrived at home, Madlle. Gabrielle finds her terrible aunt has gone out, and to frighten her admirer away, who persists in calling and renewing his addresses, she dresses a figure up to represent her aunt, and pretends she is asleep in her chair, so that each time the gentleman begins his declaration, she exclaims thus, "Ma tante dort." Thus debarred from finishing his speech, he reluctantly goes away, but his servant has meanwhile found out the trick and tells his master, who returns to the house in a great rage. Ere this the aunt in propriâ personâ has returned, and in reality fallen asleep in the very chair previously occupied by the lay figure. When the lover is told so now he, of course, still believes it a trick. The dreaded aunt is rudely awakened up, and a terrible scene ensues. The rage of the master turns against the servant, and perceiving him as he thinks peeping through a small aperture, he passes his sword through the partition, after the manner of Hamlet and Polonius, and Scapin is supposed to die; but it turns out to be only the doll, which the cunning valet had dressed up in his own clothes, fearing the rage of his master, whom he had led unwittingly into error. All ultimately ends happily, the surreptitious admirer proving to be the very man to whom the aunt had destined her niece. Madlle. Ugalde plays the part of the young lady's maid, Martine; and Meillet that of Scapin, the servant. Next week the first performance will take place at the Bouffes-Parisiens of the Carnival des Revues. Now that the gay season—the real season of Paris—is set in, all in the theatrical world is going on as actively as is the lyrical. The Théâtre-Français (and the Odéon as well) has observed the laudable custom of celebrating the anniversary of the birth of Molière, which occurs on the 15th of January. This year it has been celebrated at the first theatre by a little à-propos in one act, and in verse, written by M. Henri Boemier. It serves less as an independent piece than as a prologue to the Malade Imaginaire, which was given with the little intermèdes; these proved the most amusing part of the evening. Got, who is so excellent an actor, came out as a singer also on this occasion; and in the scene of Polichinelle et des Archers, was especially good. The à-propos at the Odéon was written by a young beginner, M. Alexis Martin. The management of the Gymnase has just engaged M. Desrieux, a comedian from the Porte St. Martin. At the Vaudeville, M. Octave Feuillet has just been reading to the artists a drama in five acts, entitled, Camille. It is destined to succeed the Pénélope Normande of M. A. Karr. Gil Verès announced his benefit at the Palais Royal on Saturday last. At the Ambigu-Comique, Mad. E. St. Marc Rousseau is engaged; she is to fill a part in the Compère Guillery, written by M. Victor Lefaur.

An event of great interest, and which is anxiously looked forward to, is to take place here on the 11th of March. The first festival of the Universal Philharmonic Society, under the direction of Monsieur Jullien, of London, will be held in the Cirque de l'Impératrice. Grand preparations are being made for this inaugurative festival; six hundred musicians are preparing themselves to do honour to the magic bâton that has directed for so many years still larger numbers in the metropolis, where he has ever been so great and deserved a favourite. These concerts will now have for the Parisians all the charm of novelty, and cannot fail in proving successful.

Various concerts have been going on in Paris. J. Becker, ere giving the concert he intends to in the new salons of Erard, has been playing at a private soirée. He performed Paganini's variations on "Di tanti palpiti" and a grand fantasia on the theme of "Nel cor più non mi sento," by the same author. He was encored in the Ronde des Lutins of Bazzini. Mdlle. E. Desmaisons accompanied him on the piano.

M. Kimpel, the violonist, a pupil of Spohr, and virtuoso de chambre to the King of Hanover, has just come to Paris; he intends staying here some months, and will play in public. Amongst other performers at concerts, who are rising rapidly in the public favour, I must mention the daughter of Madame Cinti-Damoreau, Madame Marie Damoreau Wekerlin, who sang last Saturday at a concert given by the Count de Morny with a sweetness and purity of intonation that delighted every one. Roger has returned to Paris; he has been to Dijon and Besançon. In the former town, the evening before the concert in which he was about to perform, while in a box at the theatre, witnessing a performance of The Huguenots, he was recognised by the spectators, and made the object of a regular ovation. Only by bowing from the front of the box could he allay this mark of tumultuous sympathy and admiration.

At the meeting of the Académie des Sciences on the 23rd of January, M. A. Cavaillé-Coll, manufacturer of organs, read a memorial upon the "Determination of the dimensions of the pipes of organs with respect to their intonation." This important question, which has occupied a great number of learned men from the time of Bernouilli to our days, has just been solved by that expert manufacturer, in an equally scientific and practical manner. The facility of calculation that this new theory effects, has enabled the author of it to put into the hands of his least experienced workmen, tables and rules, by means of which they can, by a simple arithmetical operation, or only with the compass, decide immediately, with the greatest exactitude, the real length of the tubes, and also the position of the nodes of vibration (nauds de vibration), for the formation of new harmonical effects with which M. Cavaillé-Coll has enriched modern art.

The Cour de Paris was astonished, on Monday week last, by the petition of M. Sax, the instrument-maker, for a reversal of judgment. In consequence of the numerous law-suits which he has been obliged to institute against the many imitators of his instruments, he was obliged to declare himself insolvent. M. Sax, however, having assured his creditors of entire payment, and no opposition ensuing, the Court declared him reinstated (réhabilité), and the previous decree dissolved.

Two very interesting autobiographies are soon to be published. The first, that of L. Spohr, will come out in three volumes, the publishers being G. H. Wigand, at Gottingen. The second is that of the celebrated tenor, Wild, whose death was lately announced.

At the Theatre of the San Carlos, at Naples, a new opera, by Petrella, entitled La Morosina, has been brought out, but without much success. And at Milan also a novelty, in the shape of an opera, in four acts, founded on Victor Hugo's drama of Marie Tudor, and written by a Russian named Kachperoff, has just been performed at the theatre of the Carcano.

I forgot to mention that Mr. Victor Maisé, composer of the scores of Galathée, Noces de Jeannette and La Reine Topaze, has been named director of the vocal music at the Grand-Opéra, in place of Mr. Dietsch, who assumes the lead of the orchestra.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—Whatever may be the result, let us state at once that the Music of the Future has just made a great noise in the Present. No one knows what posterity has in store for it, but one thing is certain, namely, that, in the year of grace 1860, on the 25th of January, at eight o'clock in the evening, the Music of the Future excited, in the good city of Paris, which in the morning was still most calm and slumbering in sweet artistic repose, one of those storms which arouse the most indifferent impassive men of quiet disposition, and send enthusiasts raving.

Those who did not see the Italian theatre on the evening in question have seen nothing. There is nothing I know of, except the Tower of Babel, and the meetings of the National Convention, which can convey the faintest idea of the feverish agitation among the audience, even before the first note of the first piece, and we were only at the prelude.

Richard Wagner had not yet arrived. The outbursts of the musical '93 were to begin on his appearance in the house. The various parties were merely face to face, observing and counting each other. Every one of that crowd, Frenchmen and Germans, persons of healthy or diseased minds, classicists and romanticists, were preparing his arguments, and, while some were resolved to approve without listening, others bore in their countenances the signs of having passed a sentiment of condemnation before heard.

Let us leave on one side this exclusive crowd, for art requires to be discussed, and devote our attention to those who, frankly and loyally, had come with the purpose of listening to religiously and judging conscientiously a man, who, after all, is a profound musician, just as Victor Hugo is a great poet—due regard being paid to the distance between them.

All the artists of Paris were there. The ban and arrière-ban of composers, virtuosos, and professors, were assembled without having been summoned. The Press was seen in its full numbers, as if for a rev w. The Academy was represented by Auber. Berlioz, in the front of the boxes, had come to support by his presence his competitor fr m the other side the Rhine; that is fraternity, with a vengeance, or I do not know what is. Celebrities of all sorts, elegant individuals by the side of others more modestly clad, and, above all, a crowded general audience, proved to what a pitch curiosity had been excited by this first performance of the works of a symphonist, whom a certain portion—a very small one, it is true—of Germany presents to the world as the regenerator of music.

Good heavens! who would ever have suspected that, after Beethoven and Weber, music required to be regenerated!

* * *

Immediately he entered the house, this new Christopher Columbus was saluted with frantic acclamations. Was he thus received on the faith of treaties, or did his friends form what people have agreed on calling the turbulent minority? To render homage to truth, we must state that the roof appeared to fall in three times with the applause.

It was now that the orchestra, conducted by Richard Wagner in person, began the overture of the Vaisseau Fantôme (The Flying Dutchman). The effect of this first specimen was next to nothing. It was a protestation against the preliminary applause, a protestation justified, by the way, by the deafening disorder of the composition.

At the silence maintained by the audience, I heard a young German, close to me, exclaim, "It is just like your artists! If I were Richard Wagner, I would turn them all out!" (sic.)

I thought he was labouring under hydrophobia, and recollected with horror, that I was not armed.

The piece which followed was the famous march from Tannhäuser, very popular in Germany. In this instance, a flash of melody and very distinct rhythmical sentiment reconciled the real public with the composer, and unanimous acclamations saluted the brilliant peroration of the march. But is this really the Music of the Future? For my own part, I distinguished in this piece all the signs of our poor music of the present day, and I was delighted to welcome in it the modest qualities of a little composer called Meyerbeer. Bravo, M. Wagner! If that is your Music of the Future, I am perfectly willing to skip with you over two or three centuries, and I embrace the cause of progress. If, on the contrary, however, your music resembles the overture of the Vaisseau Fantôme, the introduction of Tristan et Isolde, and your Saints Graal—Oh! in that case, I leave you, and, going backwards, ask our grandfathers Mozart and Haydn, for a little of their learned, good-natured simplicity and unostentatious science. With them, at least, one breathes, understands, is interested, and sings.

With you, on the contrary, when you take this pretended road of the Future, we are lost in fog, and can scarcely follow you. The guiding thread of the Ariadne, called melody, escapes from your grasp; the harmonic meanderings surround you so thickly and so closely, that we lose sight of you, and, in fact, not only of you, but of your idea, your subject, and your orchestra as well. Stop, I entreat you, M. Wagner! You are a man of great talent, but you are opening a dangerous road, on which many foolish young persons may perish, and on which artists will be destroyed, sooner or later—if the public does not set things to rights.

The public is the great master of us all—from the little up to the great. It is the public which decreed that Raphael was a great painter; Molière, a great thinker; Shakspere, a great poet; and Rossini, a great musician. I am now speaking of the universal public; not of the public of a village, still less of a coterie, which sees and judges in a certain manner, because it lives in a certain country, turns round a certain centre, and drinks a certain drink. I am speaking of that cosmopolitan public, which takes its seat at every table, and chinks glasses with every nationality. That public, thank heaven! does justice on errors, and always brings back art, within a given time, to its true limits. That public, M. Wagner, may, perhaps sanction your Tannhäuser march and overture, but I trust, also, that it will lop off your method of musical metaphysics. Let foggy philosophy reign at the University of Heidelberg, but allow us to retain our own music, in which the heart speaks, the soul dictates, and the mind merely translates, like a slave, without thinking, and, above all, without quibbling.

* * *

It was under the immediate influence of these impressions that, after alternately rising and falling—a perfect Bourse in a state of delirium—the whole audience rushed, like one man, between the two parts of the concert, into the saloon.

Here events assumed really colossal proportions. The émeute was at its height; I thought a provisional government was about to be named. It was a scene of tumult and confusion without parallel. "Ah!" exclaimed a fanatic, "it is Meyerbeer sublimated!"—"Excuse me," replied a Girondist, "it is Weber travestied!"—"It is the sonorous heavens!"—"Rather too sonorous!" cried a hundred others.—"It is the musical carnival!"—"It is the ne plus ultra of instrumentation!"—It is chaos!"

All this time groups were formed and dissolved with feverish agitation. The Gluckists and Piccinists must have shuddered in their graves on seeing their great-great-grandchildren follow in their own impassioned steps. Really, I did not think the artists of Paris could be so greatly moved! Holy music! thou art not dead, then, and thy empire is a very real one, since thou cannot revolutionise us thus.

* * *

M. Wagner seems to be ambitious of the title of the Sonorous Prophet. He attains, in this respect, effects truly grandiose, but somewhat too persistent, which does not prevent him, occasionally, from making an undue use of the first string and exceedingly acute notes. At certain moments, his music is acid, and affects the nerves. For him, the orchestra is a mere plaything; he handles it with all the authority of science and experience, with great fire, and above all, with the fanaticism of an apostle. He very rarely discovers, however, any novelties of sound. Meyerbeer and Berlioz are the seekers in this department, and succeed much more frequently in astonishing the ear. A peculiarity, also, that fatigues the audience in the works of M. Wagner is an immoderate use of the chromatic and of ascending modulations; there is an almost continual want of tonality; nearly complete absence of melody. When the latter appears, M. Wagner repels it, as though it were something contemptible, and the hearer who fancied he was about to breathe, has merely just caught a glimpse of the oasis, to set out again more panting than ever, and, incessantly tossed about by a host of symphonic formulas which never end.

We must, however, say, and insist upon the fact, that M. Wagner is a great musician, only his tendencies are deplorable. Fifty years' perseverance in this course, and music would be dead, for melody would be killed, and melody is the soul of music.

To fulfil our duty to M. Richard Wagner, we must state that, independently of the march and overture of Tannhäuser, the piece of the nuptials of Lohengrin produced a great impression. Here again there was a little chorus partaking more of the Past than of the Future, and which I consider more French than German—if you doubt me, ask M. Auber. It is inclosed in a phrase of the violoncellos, taken up by the brass instruments, and intended to describe the unbounded delights of a grand festival.

It was after this last success that the public left the Salle Ventadour. But all was not over, and the scene of the saloon was repeated in the Passage Choiseul. The tradesmen of that peaceful locality were on the point of closing their shops. For half-an-hour, the same artistic and turbulent crowd affrighted, with its discussion, the echoes of that bazaar of industry. The consequence is that, for M. Wagner's next concert, there is some talk of doubling the guard, and stationing a swarm of Sergents de Ville around the Théâtre-Italien.—(Ménestrel.)

AMIENS.—23rd January.—Le Prophète has, at length, just been given with really extraordinary magnificence. The book and score produced a deep and general impression. The principal parts, judiciously distributed, were played and sung with great talent by M. Duprat, first tenor of the Marseilles and Lyons theatres; Madame Ismaël, as Bertha; and Mdlle. Erambert, as Fides. MM. Castelmary, Rondeau, and Lebreton, rendered very satisfactorily the parts of the three Anabaptists. The orchestra and choruses, conducted by M. Séméladis, were also deserving of praise. The beauty of the dresses and scenery excited unanimous marks of approbation.

METZ.—Le Pardon de Ploërmel pursues its triumphal march, and the beauties it contains excite the enthusiasm of the public every evening.

BRUSSELS.—Last Thursday, Le Pardon de Ploërmel was given for the twelfth time. It continues to draw splendid houses. An accident, fortunately not of a grave character, was nearly interrupting the run of this new masterpiece of Meyerbeer. Mdlle. Boulach was injured on falling from the bridge, at the conclusion of the second act, and fears were entertained, for a moment, that she would not be able to finish the piece. After a notification from the stage-manager, Mdlle. Boulach, however, sang her part to the end. The new ballet, Le Bijou du Roi, by M. Henri Desplaces, has been successful.

GENEVA.—The first representation of Le Pardon de Ploërmel has just been given to a densely crowded house. The Genevese public warmly applauded the new opera, which has achieved a most brilliant success. The various artists acquitted themselves admirably, especially Mdlle. Emon, in the part of Dinorah.

BERLIN.—Mdlle. Artot and M. Carrion have sung at the concert before the Court, when Meyerbeer's Schiller March was performed. This magnificent composition excited the greatest enthusiasm. At the Royal Opera house a three-act opera, Christine de Suède, music by M. de Reder (the King's intendant), and ballet by M. Taglioni, has just been represented for the first time. A brilliant audience was assembled, and the work met with honourable success. At the end of the first act, Mad. Wagner (Christine) was honoured with a call.

ROSTOCK (Mecklenburg).—The Pardon de Ploërmel has just been produced with brilliant success. The execution was irreproachable, and the crowded audiences at the performances of this master-piece testified by applause and recalls, their satisfaction to the artists.

VIENNA.—The first Philharmonic Concert, under the direction of Herr Eckert, took place in the Imperial Opera House. Among the pieces played were Cherubini's overture to Anacreon, Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, and Berlioz's Fée Mab, scherzo from the symphony of Roméo et Juliette. This last piece was executed with a rare degree of perfection, and received with enthusiasm. The revival of Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris attracted a large audience, and proved a complete success. Madame Dustmann rendered the principal part with immense talent. At the same theatre, Lortzing's opera, Der Wilddiel has been favourably received.

FRANKFORT.—Le Pardon de Ploërmel will be brought out very shortly. The rehearsals are terminated, and the management are only waiting for the completion of the scenery. Herr A. Dreyschock, the pianist, gave, on the 23rd January, a concert, attended by a numerous audience.

ST. PETERSBURGH.—It is now certain that Le Pardon de Ploërmel will not be produced before the 23rd January (4th February). It is the non-completion of the scenery, which is confidently asserted to be admirable, that has caused the delay. Mad. Charton, Calzolari, and Debassini, will support the principal parts excellently. The work will be given for the benefit of Mad. Charton, and the whole house is already let; it is impossible to obtain a place. Meanwhile, La Traviata, with Mdlle. Balfe as the heroine, is to be given for the benefit of Calzolari, and Le Prophète for that of Tamberlik.—The day before yesterday, Der Freischütz, with new costumes, scenery, and appointments, was performed for the benefit of Mongini. The house was full, and the success achieved by Mdlle. Lagrua very brilliant.—The same evening, at the French theatre, an extraordinary performance afforded the public an opportunity of hearing Tamberlik sing a French romance and a Russian one, and Mad. Nantier-Didiée some Neapolitan songs. The two eminent artists were compelled to repeat their respective pieces, amidst the acclamations of the whole house, but it seemed as if the building itself would fall from the applause, when Tamberlik sang and repeated the famous romance of the Princess Kotschoubey Skzjsté, with an expression and style peculiar to himself. At midnight, the performances concluded by the appearance of all the French artists, admirably grouped by Zichy, the celebrated painter, in an immense tableau vivant, occupying the whole stage, and most picturesque in its effect. The Emperor and Empress, as well as several members of the Imperial family, a crowd of high dignitaries, and the greater part of the aristocracy, witnessed this brilliant entertainment, got up for the benefit of one of the artists by his comrades.

LAND AT OXFORD.—The Conservative Land Society has just acquired its fortieth estate and made its first purchase in Oxfordshire. The property is called Fair Acres, and forms the south east point of the New Cowley district, which it is proposed to bring within the jurisdiction of the Commissioners under the Oxford Improvement Act. The land has a frontage on the Henley or London road, and the views from all sides are very picturesque, rendering the estate admirably adapted for building purposes. It is just under a mile from the city, and close to the suburb of St. Clements. It is the highest land in the whole district, rising from the valley of the Thames.

SHREWSBURY.—Mr. Walter Hay has had a purse of a hundred sovereigns presented to him by the patrons of music in Shropshire, as a recognition of professional services, &c., and in consideration of severe losses thereby incurred, in various spirited undertakings for the public amusement.

THE ANGLO-FRENCH ALLIANCE.

How many centuries have passed away,
Since God, in nature, working for man's good,
Rent cliff from cliff asunder, and decreed
That this should part of territory vast
Remain: but that disjointed piece of earth,
An island, self-contained, should ever stand,
Alone, for freedom's sake, inviolate!
How many a generation on those rocks
Have looked o'er sea and sky, and only seen
The other opposite: and deemed it fit
For foe, for rival, for aught else but friend!
The world was weary, weeping for their woes,
Their cries of pain and death in many a strife;
But now, in later years, a brighter light
Is shed upon the scene, and each can see
The folly of their courses, and the crime.
Long may the union of the races be Reciprocal and firm; and enemies
May be by joint endeavours kept afar
From France and England: so may we
In the industrial arts of peace aspirers be
Which shall do most for human progress' sake.
In deeds no less than words we celebrate
The Anglo-French alliance: we give away
Our noblest daughter—she whose talents rare
Have charmèd all her hearers: not less great (Though far less widely known) her charity
To all who need her succour. She can raise
The heart bowed down with sorrow; she can feel
For grief and pain angelic pity soft,
And pour into the wound the oil and wine
Of kindness' gentle words—best remedy.
Let all Old England's children join in praise
Of her they know so well; they hear her oft,
In Handel's mighty strains, reminding them
Of Him who died "despised and rejected:"
Imploring them to come to Him for help,
Who, "like a lowly shepherd feeds His flock,"
And "gently leads the ewes that are with young."
Not less the woes of mortal Samson: she
Can draw the tear or pity for his grief;
He, strongest man on earth in blindness dark;
And she, like Israel's prophet in old time,
Implores his God to look upon his state,
And see "His servant weeping in distress."
If the great story of deliverance,
Which once in Egypt wrought, delight thee more,
Go hear the recitation of that plague
(The foulest of them all), when frogs appeared
In royal palaces; and wicked men
To blains and blotches sore were given over:
And learn from that, ye tyrants of the earth,
That there is One who judges all your ways,
And will avenge the wrongs of His poor folk,
And hold ye up, a warning to your race.
Let every one who has a heart to feel
Admire the tender pathos of her tones,
So gentle and so kind, that all who hear
Do reverence to her worth, and blessings pray
On her whose soul, reflected in her voice,
Proclaims her best and brightest of her kind.
And France must yield a son; and none so well
May join our daughter as the one who long
Has lived amongst us, and has borne his part
With manliness and truth for many years,
As English citizen. Long may he live
To show how well he values her we give
Into his keeping; and the great reward
Of her life's long devotion shall be his.
May many artists from this union spring,
The future generations to delight;
And may our sons and daughters reverence
Virtue and worth, as well as we do now.
They may their praises sing in smoother verse
Than we can; but they never will exceed
Our warm congratulations to the pair,
The Anglo-Dolby-Sainton-French alliance! J. T. N.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words) ...	0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 4TH, 1860.

THE Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts, whose agreeable conversaziones and soirées we have from time to time recorded in our columns, is beginning to realise the important and useful position to which it aspired at the outset of its career, as a guardian of the interests, and promoter of the progress, of Art. The distinguishing feature in the scheme of this Society is its comprehensive character, and the largeness of its views. Disdaining to confine its mission to any particular art or craft; looking to the common source of all Arts—the principles of the beautiful, which should rule in all, whatever their form of development—the originators of this Society have determined to unite the whole Art-family under a common roof, and with a common stock, and a purpose of mutual advantage before them. The idea is a good one, and has been carried out hitherto with an amount of success which is a guarantee of the ultimate result. Art-institutions have lent their rooms for the soirées of the Society, professional musicians have tendered their gratuitous services; and the consequence of this combined operation has been a series of entertainments which, for novelty and interest, have rarely been surpassed. Last week we recorded the proceedings at the Suffolk-street Gallery on Thursday the 26th January, when the Vocal Association, under the conduct of Mr. Benedict and Dr. Pech, sang English madrigals and part-songs in the presence of a noble collection of English pictures; and this, we believe, is but the prelude to a series of six similar entertainments which are to gladden the coming season.

But it is not only as a pastime that the Society "encourages" the Arts. The interests of Art as a profession are the objects of its solicitude; and regular meetings are to be held at the Society's rooms, 9, Conduit-street, for reading papers, and discussing questions affecting the Arts—for the distribution of prizes of honour in Painting, Sculpture, Architecture, Music, Poetry, and Engraving, &c. The copyright question in works of Art comes on for special discussion at an adjourned meeting appointed for the purpose on Thursday next: and to show that the Art to which this journal is more particularly devoted is not overlooked, we may mention that the third Thursdays in every month are to be set apart for the trial of new music, of all classes, not hitherto performed, and that a committee has been appointed, consisting of composers and professors of eminence, to make arrangements for the purpose.

With such labours before it, and already so zealously commenced, this Society is entitled to the consideration of all artists and lovers of Art, and, we doubt not, will receive a full measure of their support.

THANKS to the exertions of M. Listener, we find ourselves in possession of a treasure, which, a fortnight since, was supposed to be beyond the reach of human industry—a biography of M. Grassot.

This celebrated comedian, whose baptismal names were Jacques Antoine Louis—not Auguste—was born at Paris in the month of January, 1800. After dabbling a little in commerce and paddling a little in private theatricals, he became member of a provincial company that played at Rheims and in the adjoining district, his department being that of second low comedian (second comique) with an occasional elevation into the business of Vernet and Legrand.

It is not till the year 1833, that we can with certainty look for him at a Parisian theatre. In that year we find him playing very small parts, with still smaller success, at the Gymnase, while his wife, who calls herself Mad. Auguste, and came with him from Rheims, is making a very creditable figure at the same house, in parts previously assigned to Mad. Volnys. In 1834, the fame of the lady, not of the gentleman, has reached Rouen, and thither she goes, engaged as "jeune première," followed by her husband, who is without any engagement whatever. Nevertheless his light shines, under a bushel though it be, and in 1836 he is a leading comedian at the Rouen Theatre, blessed with principal parts.

Some two years elapse before the provincial mythus of Grassot comes to an end, and he stands before the world as a Parisian fact. In July, 1838, he makes his debut at the Palais-Royal, and is welcomed with critiques written for the express purpose of showing how much he is inferior to Odry. However, people gradually become accustomed to the peculiarity of his humour, and if anyone wants to know his whereabouts during the twenty years following his début, the play-books of the pieces produced at the Palais-Royal will give the amplest information.

In 1858, he sets off for the South, hoping to recruit his health, and strengthen his voice, which is becoming weak, and after a few month's absence, he returns, not with a new voice, but with the recipe for a new punch, since celebrated as the "Punch Grassot." In July, 1858, he re-appears, and creates funny parts, but they draw tears from the spectators, who perceive that his recovery is impossible. In June, 1859, he retires, with a pension from the theatre, which he eke out by authorising the sale of his punch. On the 18th ult. he dies, and a few days afterwards he is buried in the church of St. Roch, the funeral oration being spoken by M. Dormeuil père.

[If any malicious person wishes to diminish the value of our information, by telling us that a life of Grassot by M. Mirecourt was published some years since, we beg to inform him that he may spare his pains, as we know that fact already.]

LAST week, in speaking of various comedy subjects which contempory French dramatists have turned to good, bad, and indifferent account, we omitted to mention the Parisian fathers, whose misdoings have suggested to M. Alexandre Dumas fils, Le Père Prodigue, and to two other writers a work of a similar nature—exposing, that is to say, the prodigality of governors—entitled M. Jules. It appears from the two productions, which were given almost simultaneously, that the young men of Paris are a good deal bored by their fathers, and in a very original manner. In the comedies of Plautus and of Molière—not to mention a few others—we find a number of respectable old men worried by their sons, who get into debt, run away with pretty but portionless girls, and behave generally with the absurdity befitting their age. The modern dramatists of France have changed all this. The son, it appears, is now a sober, sedate personage, while wildness and recklessness are the attributes of the father. The Père Prodigue wastes his substance, and M. Jules would often have had to feed upon husks but for the timely aid of his son, who relieves him from time to time with five-franc pieces. We speak of M. Jules and Le Père Prodigue as works identical in purpose, and they, in fact, bore the same suggestive titles until the authors of the former altered the name of their piece out of deference to M. Dumas fils. At present the only important difference between the two is found in the treatment. M. Dumas fils seems to have gone to work with a serious intention, as if believing in the prodigal father as a type; while the authors of M. Jules have apparently only thought of the ludicrous effects that might be produced by contrasting a boyish, pleasure-seeking father, with a serious, venerable son. There is something disgusting in both these comedies, but the least offensive of the two is, to us, that in which the writers make no pretence of working out their subject philosophically. A burlesque in which men play the part of women is bad enough, but it is, at all events, better than a serious piece in which an attempt should be made to show that in actual life men do behave like women, and women like men.

As we never studied the fathers very much—having, to tell the truth, principally confined our attention to the daughters—we cannot say positively that the Parisians are wrong in viewing their progenitors with a mistrustful eye. But it appears to us that the relations between father and son are, somehow or other, out of joint in Paris. We were not born to set them right, but we should like to know how it happens that, in the opinion of these popular dramatists, the fathers have at present the vices of youth, and the sons the prudence (which in excess is also a vice) of old age. Is it that the sons have degenerated, and are now utterly feeble, or are the fathers alone bad, and are the young men of the present day really so virtuous that they have cause to be ashamed of them?

CROSBY HALL.—On Monday evening a juvenile pianist Master George Fox, gave his second annual concert, with great success, judging from the large audience who attended, and the enthusiastic applause bestowed upon all the artists. The programme consisted of a string of ballads, cavatinas, pianoforte solos, songs, duets, &c., in the usual "benefit concert" form. Several songs, however, were well sung; among them we may single out Mr. Frank Mori's "Who shall be fairest," given with spirit by Mr. Fabian, who possesses a nice tenor voice, though of limited compass, and Rossini's "Largo al factotum," sung capitally by Mr. Leonard, and vociferously encored. Mr. Leonard possesses a fine bass voice, of great power and extensive compass. He made his first appearance in public on the present occasion, and his success was decided. He will become, no doubt, a great acquisition to our concert rooms. Mr. Leonard, besides joining Miss Vincent and Mr. Fabian in a trio by John Barnett, and Miss Louisa Van Noorden, in a duet by Verdi, sang Brinley Richards' "Suliote War Song" with immense spirit, and produced a commensurate effect in it. Master Fox, who has considerably improved since he was last heard in public, played a fantasia by M. Leybach, Weber's "Invitation pour la Valse," and a notturno by Dœhler, showing in all of them careful training. With judicious instruction and perseverance, Master Fox will no doubt attain considerable efficiency as a pianist. Mr. Frank Mori accompanied.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

MISS CATHERINE GERARD.

SIR,—My attention has been drawn to your notice of Mr. George Forbes' concert at the Eyre Arms' Concert Room, on Monday the 23rd instant, in which your correspondent says: "Miss Gerard attempted in vain Pacini's 'Il soave è bel contento.'"

The only construction which this sentence can bear is this,—that I failed to complete the performance of the cavatina, a construction which involves a direct untruth. I beg to inform you that I executed the cavatina completely, and, had necessity for it existed, could have repeated it still more elaborately.

Further, I beg to inform you, that I subsequently sang "Tell, me my heart," which your correspondent does not mention, and which, I am told, obtained more applause than any other solo sung during the evening.

In justice to myself, I must in conclusion request that you will give me the insertion of this in your next impression, in contradiction to the misleading and ungenerous critique of your correspondent. I am, sir, yours truly,

January 31st, 1860. CATHERINE GERARD.

SIR,—I inclose you a paragraph from this month's Musical Times, commenting upon my performance of "Il soave è bel contento," at the St. John's Wood Assembly Rooms, on the 23rd ultimo. Do me the favour to compare it with your critique. I am, sir, yours truly, February 2nd, 1860. CATHERINE GERARD.

SIR,—Accidentally catching sight of the Musical World of last Saturday at a professional friend's here last evening, I was struck with the unfriendly tone adopted by your reporter towards "a struggle for future fame" at a concert at St. John's Wood on Monday the 23rd instant, where I happened, with a professional friend, to be present. I allude to a lady débutante of last season,—I believe a pupil of Signor Garcia's (but of this I am not quite certain). Your critic writes: "Miss Gerard in vain attempted Pacini's "Il soave è bel contento;" this must be a mistake, and decidedly not a kind one. I was about the centre of the room, and should say (and my ear is not an unpractised one) that cavatina was executed with considerable ability; and the difficulties compassed with an ease unusual in a lady so young in the profession. She afterwards sang Bishop's "Tell me, my heart" in an equally creditable style, which was nearly redemanded, and contributed her fair quota to the success of the concluding trio, "Voga, voga," in which Miss Lascelles and Signor Belletti sang with their accustomed excellence. Of these two performances your reporter fails to speak! which appears to me not dealing over kindly with that lady. Yours faithfully,

Liverpool, February 1st, 1860. VERITAS.

THE CRITIQUE.

"Miss Gerard sang the cavatina, 'Il soave è bel contento,' most brilliantly. The melody was ornamented by a variety of cadenzas, which were neatly executed. The music was altogether pleasing and well performed."

[We have much pleasure in laying Miss Gerard's communications before our readers; but the confidence we are accustomed to entertain in the impartiality and capability of our suburban reporters—one and all—rests unshaken.—ED. M. W.]

THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION, &c., have attracted highly fashionable audiences during the week. They have announced for next week (their last), a selection every evening from the compositions of Sir Henry Bishop, and, for their morning performance, a miscellaneous programme made up from the most admired pieces given at former concerts will be sung. Mr. Edward Land will, as usual, have the direction of the performances.

MR. AND MRS. HOWARD PAUL are filling the St. James's Hall with fashionable audiences. Their entertainment is now one of the most attractive in the metropolis.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

A NEW operetta, in one act, entitled Romance! was produced on Thursday evening, and served for the formal rentré of Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. H. Harrison, who (excepting on two occasions when the Crown Diamonds was given), during the run of Mr. Alfred Mellon's opera, Victorine, have been recruiting their strength, after the severe labours of the season. Romance! is the composition of Mr. Henry Leslie, and the libretto is from the pen of Mr. Palgrave Simpson. Nothing can be simpler than the story. It is, in fact, a mere incident, in which a romantic widow is weaned from her idol worship for a highwayman. The incident is not new, but Mr. P. Simpson has wrought newly with his old materials. There is mirth as well as interest in the plot, and the situations lie well for music. This little story has been illustrated in a highly spirited manner by Mr. Henry Leslie, who, in the music to Romance, has accomplished his maiden operatic essay with perfect success. He has gone to work evidently con amore, for in every instance the score betrays the ardent musician no less than the earnest thinker and worker. As a first effort for the stage, praise too high can hardly be awarded to the music. We are not now going to enter at length upon its merits. Enough at present to say, that the airs are generally grateful and effective, the concerted music fluent and smooth, and the instrumentation clear and sometimes ambitious. At first the audience were not particularly demonstrative; but they warmed as the piece went on, and became quite enthusiastic at the fall of the curtain. Everybody was called for, and then Mr. Leslie had to appear. The applause was universal. There was not a dissentient voice to mar the complete success of the new operetta.

The pieces which seemed to please most were, ballad, "Poor silly heart," sung by Miss Pyne and encored; duet, "Oh! 'tis dreadful!" by Miss Thirlwall and Mr. George Honey (this pleased the connoisseurs); serenade, "Look forth, beloved maid," by Mr. Harrison, encored; part-song, "Welcome, Spring," encored; and concerted piece, "We've met and spoke," the last movement of which, owing to its own merits and Mr. Harrison's energetic singing, was received with acclamations, and repeated. The operetta terminates with a rondo bravura, which derived its chief effect from Miss Louisa Pyne's fluent and admirable singing, and which brought down the curtain with great applause.

The cast of the operetta includes four artists only—a small part played by Miss Woodward is scarcely worth mention—and Mr. Leslie has shown much tact in fitting the singers. Mr. Harrison acts the fictitious highwayman with infinite spirit, and sings in his best manner. Miss Pyne has little to do but to look romantic, which she does to perfection, and her singing throughout exhibited scarcely a flaw. Mr. Honey's antics and terrors make the audience laugh heartily, and Miss Thirlwall sustains with becoming ease the character of the wife of a silly mayor.

Mr. Vincent Wallace's opera, Lurline, is announced, and will be put into immediate rehearsal. What now have the sticklers for national opera to say against Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. Harrison?

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

AT the tenth concert, on Monday evening, the instrumental portion of the programme was taken from Beethoven. Herr Molique made his first appearance at the Monday Popular Concerts, a fact entitled to special record, since the absence of the name of so renowned a violinist had long been a matter of surprise, the great German virtuoso being particularly famed for his quartet playing. Herr Molique, however, would, we are informed, have played at the St. James's Hall at an earlier part of the season, had not certain engagements prevented his attendance. That he has appeared is matter of congratulation to all lovers of chamber music.

The programme of Monday last indicated no falling off, and may stand comparison with the best of its nine predecessors. It was as follows:—

PART I.

Quartet in F, Op. 18	...	...	...	Beethoven.
Duet, "Vaghi colli"	...	...	...	Winter.
Song, "May-dew" ...	...	...	...	W. S. Bennett.
Song, "The Bell-ringer"	...	...	...	W. V. Wallace.
Sonata Pastorale in D major, Op. 28	...		...	Beethoven.

PART II.

Sonata in G major, Op. 96, pianoforte and violin				Beethoven.
Song, "The first Violet"	...	...	...	Mendelssohn.
Song, "O, tell me, shall my love be mine"			...	H. Smart.
Trio, in C minor, Op. 1	...	...	...	Beethoven.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

Among the most admired of the instrumental performances—taking applause as a sign of admiration—was the sonata in G major, in which pianist and violinist each put forth his utmost strength. Finer playing, indeed, is rarely heard, and Mr. Hallé and Herr Molique left the platform amidst the plaudits of the entire audience. Scarcely less interesting was the Trio in C minor—the "Opus 1" of the Musical Titan—and which, of course, was executed to perfection by three such eminent hands (Piatti being the additional one). That such a work should be played last was to be regretted; but, as Dogberry says, "An two men ride of a horse, one must ride behind;" and something must be given for the finale. All the amateurs, as a matter of course, waited to hear the last note.

Mr. Charles Hallé played the Pastoral Sonata in his most finished and intellectual manner, and was recalled with enthusiasm at the end. Herr Ries and Mr. Doyle supported the second violin and viola with their accustomed ability and zeal, and the first quartet was one of the greatest treats of the evening.

Miss Susannah Cole, now one of our best soprano singers, gave Professor Bennett's beautiful song with so much expression and in such sweet accents, as to elicit a warm encore. The lady, however, only bowed her acknowledgments. Miss Cole, in her other song, "My mother bids me bind my hair," was no less happy. Miss Palmer took Mr. Wallace's new and most charming song a little too slow. In other respects there was nothing to criticise. Miss Palmer's feeling is always genuine, and her taste seldom to be called to account. In Mr. Henry Smart's ballad her singing was all the composer could have desired.

MR. J. DISTIN, SEN., gave, what he announced as his "Grand Retiring Benefit Concert," at Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening. We are sorry to say there was by no means an overflowing attendance, and this in despite of the attraction of many popular, and one or two eminent, names figuring in the programme. When such artists as Madame Catherine Hayes, Madame Rudersdorff, Misses Susanna Cole, Stabbach, Ransford, Laura Baxter, Lascelles, and others, together with the London Glee and Madrigal Union, and the Orpheus Glee Union, in the vocal department; with Mr. Viotti Collins, Miss Medora Collins, and Master Drew Dean, among the instrumentalists, fail to attract in such a locality as Exeter Hall, the fault must be in something else besides the performers. The truth seems to be, that people now-a-days, when they make up their minds to go to a concert, consider what they are to hear, not, as they used to do, whom they are to hear. Music is preferred to the interpreters, unless in the case of some extraordinary attraction, such as Mr. Sims Reeves, Herr Joachim and others, whose names are beacon-lights that allure afar. Mr. Distin's programme was of that desultory kind that could interest nobody, and persons who would be delighted to hear the same singers in a worthier selection, prefered remaining away. How in any other way is it possible to account for the wretched attendance that greeted the last summons of an old favourite to perform an act of kindness in his behalf? There is a limit to every thing, and the miscellaneous concert, once so popular with the music-going public, has seen its last day.

NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.—APPOINTMENT OF ORGANIST TO THE TOWN HALL.—On Tuesday and Wednesday last the candidates for this appointment underwent an examination, when Mr. Wm. Rea, of London, was declared the successful competitor. The professional umpires were Mr. Henry Smart and Mr. W. T. Best, and it is gratifying to record that their recommendation was promptly confirmed by the Town Council, on Wednesday last. There were nine candidates.

OPENING OF THE NEW HARMONIUM, MALEW.—On Wednesday evening last, the new harmonium for the parish school of Malew at Ballasalla, was opened in that building in the presence of a large number of spectators. As the cost of the instrument was not altogether defrayed by subscriptions, it was decided upon opening it by a tea festival, in order to raise the deficiency. An excellent tea was provided for the occasion by eleven ladies of the parish, and justice having been done thereto by about 200 guests, the choir, accompanied on the harmonium by W. H. Gill, Esq., sang several choruses, rounds, &c., in a manner that elicited the warmest applause of the company. A beautiful set of dissolving views were then exhibited, whilst appropriate airs were played on the harmonium; and the national anthem having been sung, and several rounds of hearty cheers given for the Vicar, the tray-givers, the ladies who raised £8 by their bazaar, &c. &c., the company parted, all apparently delighted with the entertainment. No pains were spared by the worthy master and mistress in decorating the room. The harmonium itself, one of Evans's, is, in the opinion of all who have tried it, very superior; the tardiness with which instruments of this kind generally answer to the touch, and the harsh preponderance of the bass over the treble, have both been overcome by Mr. Evans: whilst the clear, flute-like tones of the treble, the deep diapason of the bourdon bass, the great volume of sound, and the exquisite motion of the wind-indicator, are beyond description.—From the Manx Sun, Isle of Man.

HARROW SCHOOL.—A concert given by Mr. J. B. Turner, took place in the Speech Room, on Tuesday morning, and was attended by the Rev. H. M. Butler, M.A., the head-master, the master, and young gentlemen of the school, also by the principal families of the surrounding neighbourhood. A very interesting programme was provided, in which Mozart's famous duet for two pianofortes, admirably played by Mr. Walter Macfarren and the bénéficiaire, formed a prominent feature. Mr. Turner also played in a highly characteristic manner Herr Pauer's Cascade. M. Sainton contributed two solos, executed in his usual masterly style, and the vocal music was supported by Miss Dolby, Miss Banks, Miss Fanny Rowland, and Mr. Wallworth, who enriched the programme by a number of solos and concerted pieces in their best manner. Miss Dolby was in capital voice, and created a great sensation in her three songs, "The Spirit Song," and "The Hundred Pipers," being encored, the latter with enthusiasm. Miss Banks in "Ye Bayliffe's daughtere," Miss Fanny Rowland, by her chaste and expressive rendering of "The beating of my own heart," and Mr. Wallworth in "I'm a roamer" (all encored), likewise carried the entire suffrages of the audience; and, to sum up, the concert was most enthusiastically received throughout, and appeared to give the utmost satisfaction to all present.

LEICESTER—(From a Correspondent).—The eighth of Nicholson's "concerts for the people" was given on Monday evening, and to a crowded audience. The chief vocalists were Miss Fanny Reeves and Mr. Elliot Galer (both favourites here), who were received with great favour. Especial mention may be made of Miss Fanny Reeves's ballads, "Barney O'Hea," and "If I could have my way," and of Mr. Galer's "Death of Nelson." The duet, "O Maritana," must also not be forgotten. All of these were encored. A popular ovation also awaited Mr. Nicholson on his appearance to perform a flute fantasia on national airs. This was also persistently redemanded, but Mr. Nicholson contented himself with bowing his acknowledgments. An efficient little orchestra performed two overtures in excellent style, a Polka de Concert with cornet obbligato (played capitally by Mr. J. A. Smith), and for the first time in Leicester a selection from Dinorah (arranged by Mr. Nicholson), with the principal morceaux of this beautiful opera adapted as solos for the chief instruments. The romanza, "Fanciulle che il core," "The Shadow Song," and the famous "Sancta Maria," will, since Monday evening, ever be favourites with the Leicester musical public. Altogether this may be pronounced one of the best concerts of a very excellent series. The next concert takes place on the 13th of February, when, for the first time in Leicester, Handel's "Dettingen te Deum" will be given by The Leicester New Philharmonic Society. A selection from the Messiah will complete the programme, thus making a "Handel night." To render this performance as perfect as possible, Mr. T. Harper has been engaged as principal trumpet. En passant, it may be mentioned that Mr. Willert Beale's great touring party (Sivori, Bottesini, &c.), visit Leicester on the 7th of February, under Mr. Nicholson's auspices, and that Elijah is to be performed on the 26th of March, with Mr. and Mad. Weiss, Miss Palmer, and Mr. Sims Reeves as principal vocalists, so that there is plenty of good music yet in store for the Leicester people before the close of the season.

GREENWICH—(From a Correspondent).—A concert was given on Thursday evening, at the Lecture Hall, by Mr. Henry R. Morley, which attracted a numerous and unusually brilliant attendance. This was not to be wondered at, when the names of such artists as Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Miss Arabella Goddard, and M. Sainton, were set forth among others in the programme. Indeed, a more powerful array of talent is seldom met with in London on any one occasion, except at the most recherché concerts of the season. To the above we must add Miss Eleanor Armstrong and Mr. G. A. Cooper. The chief vocal points of attraction were Mr. Sims Reeves in "Adelaida," accompanied on the pianoforte by Miss Arabella Goddard, enthusiastically applauded; Madame Clara Novello in Benedict's rondo "Prendi per me sei libero," encored; Mr. Reeves in the "Last Rose of Summer," encored; Miss Dolby in M. Sainton's Romance, with violin obbligato; and Mad. Clara Novello and Mr. Sims Reeves in the duet from Rigoletto, "E il sol del amina." The last was introduced, as Mr. Morley expresses in the prospectus, to gratify those who several years since had the pleasure of hearing a specimen of two-part singing unequalled. Miss Eleanor Armstrong, pupil of Mr. Frank Mori, has a pleasing soprano voice, and does no discredit to her master; she sang the shadow song from Dinorah, and Mr. Mori's pretty ballad, "Where art thou wandering?" two trios by different composers—"Memory," by Mr. Henry Leslie, and "Hearts feel that love thee" (Athalie), by Mendelssohn—the former song by Miss Eleanor Armstrong, Miss Dolby, and Mr. Sims Reeves, and the latter by Mad. Clara Novello, Miss Eleanor Armstrong, and Miss Dolby, were also among the noticeable performances of the evening. Miss Arabella Goddard played Thalberg's fantasia on Masaniello, and Mr. Benedict's on "Where the bee sucks." The first was tumultuously applauded; and Mr. Benedict's piece being encored with rapture, Miss Goddard, by particular desire, substituted Thalberg's "Home, sweet home." More perfect pianoforte playing was never heard at Greenwich, or indeed elsewhere. M. Sainton performed the slow movement and finale from Mendelssohn's violin concerto with the utmost brilliancy and artistic finish, besides his own solo Introduction et valse de concert. Mr. Morley, as everybody knows, or should know, is organist of the parish-church of St. Alphege, and an enterprising music-publisher to boot. The concert on Thursday was his second this season, and, as per announcement, his last. Should not its success rather stimulate him to give another ere the London season dazzles in its rising the mental vision of the Greenwich population.

DUBLIN.—It is a long time since the public had an opportunity of hearing better concerts than those that terminate this evening at the Rotunda. In the first place, the corps comprises no less than eleven performers—namely, Mesdames Corbari, Badia, and Fiorentini, Herr Reichardt, Signor Tagliafico—vocalists; Mr. Brinley Richards, Signor Sivori, Sig. Bottesini, Herr Engel, and Mr. Hatton—instrumentalists. In this unusually large company there is not one inferior artist, whilst several of them rank exceedingly high in their profession. Reichardt and Tagliafico are well known. The former is a sweet tenor; the latter is associated with some of the best sustained Italian operas that have ever been produced in Dublin. Mr. Brinley Richards is a favourite with all pianoforte players. As a composer his skill is undoubted, and Signor Sivori is a justly renowned performer on the violin. His style is particularly pure, and not disfigured by studied eccentricities Bottesini is a contra basso altogether unrivalled; in Herr Engel the Dublin public have become acquainted with a perfect master of the harmonium; and everyone is aware of Mr. Hatton's qualifications as a conductor. The lady artists, Mesdames Badia, Corbari, and Fiorentini, are all excellent—much better, indeed, than are generally heard in concert-rooms, otherwise they would not have been engaged for the Philharmonic concert. The Lord Lieutenant has signified his intention of being present at the final concert, this evening.—Evening Packet.

W. A. MOZART.

BY OTTO JAHN.—(FOURTH PART.)

(From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.)

I.

We do not think we could begin a new annual volume of the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung better than by announcing the appearance of the fourth part of an artistic biography, the equal of which we should seek in vain among the literature of all civilised nations. With the fourth part of his work, Otto Jahn has given the finishing touch to the monument he has erected to the greatest master of any age—a monument which not only, like a sculptured memorial, recalls to our mind and renders present to us him in whose honour it was raised, but which breathes intellect and life in every page, and opens the gates by which we arrive at the depths of genius. The work, too, is a monument of that earnest industry peculiar to the scholars of Germany. But, however meritorious industry and labour, together with thorough and conscientious investigation, may be, their invaluable results give the author only a partial right to the acknowledgments and gratitude of his contemporaries. That which, in the eyes of the musician and the lover of art, imparts to this book its greatest value, is not so much its historical as its critically æsthetical contents. The analyses of Mozart's works afford us a clear insight into the master's process of working, for the author penetrates, as far as it is permitted to human eye to penetrate, into the mysterious mode in which genius creates, and then exhibits to us, with conscious clearness, and not with fantastic sentimentality, the perfect beauty of the completed work of art, measuring and proving its truthfulness by the agreement which exists between its purport and its form. A rich treasure of musically æsthetical knowledge is contained in this book, especially in the last part, whose worth, when compared with the shallowness of our present art-philosophy, cannot be too highly estimated. May this treasure be drawn upon in every possible manner—that is to say, in the best acceptation of the words—in order that it may become the common property of all establishments for musical education, and in all circles where musical art is loved and practised, as well as in all those where men discuss and gossip about it. It is impossible to find a more powerful antidote against that stupor of healthy feeling for what is musically beautiful, which has overpowered a portion of the youth of the present age, than Mozart's music, the explanation of its essential qualities, and of the reasons of its especial beauties, as conditions of musical beauty generally.

Before we notice the rich contents of the fourth part, now before us, we cannot refrain from at once giving, in proof of what we have said, out of the first section (Book four, 12), which treats of Mozart's pianoforte music, a few of the principal passages referring to the sonata (the fundamental form, at the same time, of the symphony, the quartet, etc.).

"After the contrapuntal treatment of a theme in the strictly close style was abandoned, there arose in the development of the sonata, as the starting point, the characteristic extension of certain motives, in opposition to the free style with figures and passages, and particularly, side by side with the principal theme, a second theme, independently enounced, and, by sharply defined limits, standing prominently forth, which, in conformity with a rule soon established, commences in the dominant of the principal major key (C major, G major), or on the parallel of the principal minor key (C minor, E flat major), these are the two principal supports of the movement: their farther working-out, their connection, by means of intermediate members, and the conclusion of the part, were not fixed by rules, except in so far as that the conclusion of the part followed in the dominant. In the place of a more or less elaborated transition into the principal key, came the important second part, the working-out. One or more of the motives used in the first part, or even completely new ones, are subjected to a treatment, at one time more peculiarly harmonic and at another thematic, which—by causing, with vivifying force, blossoms and fruit to spring forth from the germs contained in the former part—heightens the interest, and, at the same time, organically effects the return to the first part; here, also, is artistic strength concentrated, geniality and mastery being especially manifested in the modulation and return to the first theme. The repetition of the first part takes place with various modifications, partly necessitated by the fact that the second theme now appears in the principal key, in which the movement closes; besides this, there may be introduced changes in the grouping of the separate elements, abridgment or extension of certain details, but especially a lengthening and heightening of the conclusion, which cause the first part repeated to appear as the third, not only as regards its arrangement, but its importance.

"Mozart found these elements and their organisation ready to his hands, but he extended and stamped them in a manner corresponding to his own nature. With him, the second theme, which is here the principal subject of consideration, not only appears as an independent one, as it is always very definitely announced, but, in its whole character, as a counter-theme to the principal one, which, as such, stands out prominently in a remarkable manner from the mass of the whole part. It is in the formation of the themes, however, that Mozart's peculiarity is especially exhibited; its most prominent character is vocality (das Gesangmässige), in which Nägeli (Vorlesungen über Musik, p. 156), in consequence of a one-sided view of the freedom of instrumental music, beheld an abuse of style, and the ruin of pianoforte playing. We may say much more truly that Mozart essentially promoted what Ph. E. Bach considered to be the task of the pianoforte player and composer (I., p. 10), and what Haydn adopted from him, namely, the task of writing vocally. There is a fact, too, which is not without significance: Mozart's musical education commenced with vocal music, and his inclinations tended towards it in a higher degree than was the case with the composers above mentioned. Just as the pianoforte composer gave up the polyphonic style, and just as it was no longer a question of inventing a theme, to be worked out in certain forms according to rule, but of free melody, capable, by its beauty and symmetry, of becoming the satisfactory expression of artistic feeling, song necessarily became the starting point for the formation of melody. We would not say that certain forms created for song should, without more ado, be transferred to the pianoforte; these could only constitute an analogy, and the laws on which they were based must necessarily be applied in conformity with the exigencies of the nature of the instrument. Hence, we never find in Mozart's pianoforte or instrumental compositions generally the forms of the Italian cantilena; a cursory glance at his Italian operas will prove the difference in the treatment of the melody. Where, in the instrumental works, there is any affinity with vocal compositions, it points to German opera, especially Die Zauberflöte, and this is very intelligible, for, in his instrumental music, Mozart gave his feeling the nearest and natural form of expression, without, as in Italian opera, being restricted to any particular form; as, in German opera, he treated song with the same freedom, the inevitable result was that the forms, already developed, of German instrumental music, presented him, in many points, support and analogies. The general conditions of a beautiful melody, as grounded on the mutual relations of interests, rhythms, and harmony, were perfectly appreciated in the pianoforte compositions. Each separate melody is completely developed as well as symmetrically organised, and possesses in itself character and significance, an excellence of formal construction, rendered still more striking by that peculiar charm of harmony and delicacy inseparable from Mozart's being. In the execution of such melodies the most beautiful excellence of Mozart's pianoforte-playing, that something which, according to Haydn's assertion, went to the heart, was perhaps especially prominent; it is sometimes astonishing how, for instance, in the concertos, the principal effect is concentrated on the execution of a long, simple, and sustained melody, which he must have understood in a masterly manner.

"To this advance in the song-like and significant treatment of the separate melody is joined an extraordinary richness of melodies generally. In the place of those connecting members which usually form runs and passages deduced from the principal motives, or introduced independently, Mozart, however, as a rule, substitutes completely developed melodies, and thus wreathes a garland of beautiful melodies, where people had been accustomed to hear merely musical turns.

(To be continued.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

ORGANIST and CHOIR MASTER is wanted immediately for the Parish Church of Banbury Oxfordshire. The organ has three rows of keys, and thirty stops. The late Organist leaves a good practice. Applications to be addressed to the Rev. W. Wilson, Vicarage, Banbury.

NEW SONGS BY J. L. HATTON.

	s.	d.
The Bird of Song	2	0
It was fifty years ago	2	6
The Maid I love hath many a grace	2	0
Don't come teasing me, Sir	2	0

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

NEW PIANOFORTE DUETS.

	s.	d.
Schloesser's Dinorah, Grand Duet	5	0
Brinley Richards' Shadow Air (duet)	3	0
Brinley Richards' Power of Love	3	0
The Overture to Dinorah	6	6
Laurent's Christmas Waits Quadrille	4	0
Laurent's Sicilian Vespers Waltz	4	0
Laurent's Dinorah Waltz	4	0
Laurent's Dinorah Quadrille	4	0

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC. PERRY.

			s.	d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to	Miss Baron		3	0
The Wardour Mazurka	.. .. Lord Arundell		4	0
The Vancouver Quadrille	,, T. B. Chilty, Esq.		3	0
The Valentia Polka	,, George Griffiths, Esq.		3	0
The Augusta Mazurka	,, Miss C. A. Thistlewayte		2	6
The Avondale Schottische	,, Miss Barron		2	0
The Helena Polkas	,, The Misses Northey..		3	0
The Pauline Valses	,, The Misses Warner		3	0
The Castellon Polka	,, Miss Fanny Hutchinson		2	0
The Cotham Polka	,, Miss Mary Lorymer		2	0
The Promenade Polkas	,, Miss Kirwan		2	0
The Salopian Quadrilles	,, Miss Brown.		3	0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

MARCH OF THE VOLUNTEER RIFLES. By W VINCENT WALLACE. Inscribed to Lieut.-Col. C. H. Lindsay, commanding the St. George's Rifles (11th Middlesex). 3s. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington-street, W., Music Publishers to her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.

THE RIFLEMEN'S MARCH. By STEPHEN GLOVER. Inscribed to the patriotic volunteers of Great Britain. Illustrated, 2s. 6d. The March of the day. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE ROYAL MILITIA MARCH. By STEPHEN GLOVER. Inscribed to the patriotic volunteers of Great Britain. Finely illustrated, 2s. An immense favourite; the illustration unique and very effective. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE ROYAL PRUSSIAN MARCH. By STEPHEN GLOVER. Illustrated with portrait of Prince Frederick William, in gold and colours, 2s. 6d. Well worthy the composer of the popular "Retreat March." London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE RETREAT MARCH. By STEPHEN GLOVER. Illustrated, 2s. An universal favourite. The most attractive of all pianoforte marches. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO.

THE GUARDS' MARCH. By W. VINCENT WALLACE. Inscribed to the Three Regiments of Guards. 3s.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., New Burlington-street, Regent-street, W., Music Publishers to her most Gracious Majesty the Queen.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, AND OLD ENGLISH BALLADS.—The Last Week.—Egyptian Hall (Dudley Gallery).—The London Glee and Madrigal Union, under arrangement with Mr. Mitchell, will repeat their highly successful entertainment every evening this week, at quarter-past eight, and on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday mornings at half-past Two, being their final performances. Conductor—Mr. Land. Literary Illustrator—T. Oliphant, Esq. The first part of the Programme for the Evening will be composed exclusively of the most celebrated compositions of the late Sir Henry Bishop, and the Second Part, as also the entire Morning Programme will be selected from the most favourite Old English Glees, Madrigals and Ballads, which have been produced during the series. Tickets and places may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, W.

Second Edition, Folio, pp. 40, stitched. Price, complete, 7s 6d.

R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately, Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

POPULAR JUVENILE MUSIC.

PIANOFORTE RECREATIONS FOR JUVENILE PERFORMERS.

Price One Shilling each number.

FIRST SERIES—"SATANELLA."

1. The Power of Love.
2. The Slaves' Chorus.
3. Our hearts are not our own.
4. Oh would she but name.

SECOND SERIES—"DINORAH."

1. The Shadow Air.
2. Santa Maria.
3. Fanciulle (canzonet).
4. Hunting Song.

THIRD SERIES—"MARTHA."

1. M' appari tutt' amor.
2. Drinking Song.
3. Servants' Chorus.
4. Finale to First Act.

FOURTH SERIES—CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.

1. Beautiful Star, and Ring de Banjo.
2. Good News from Home.
3. We are coming Sister Mary, and Wait for the Waggon.
4. Nelly Gray.
5. Hard Times.
6. I'm off to Charlestown.

FIFTH SERIES—DANCE MUSIC.

1. Maud Valse.
2. Königsberg Polka.
3. Satanella Quadrille.
4. Pantomime Galop.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.

JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

tto of Harmonium Blower, apply t BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London sole ag nts

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms

BOOSEYS PART-SONG MISCELLANY: a Collection of Original Compositions by celebrated composers. Price Fourpence each number:—

		Poetry by	Music by
No. 1.	"Welcome, Heavenly Peace" ..	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
2.	"The Bud is on the Bough" ..	Frances Bennoch ..	Frank Mori.
3.	"And were they not the Happy Days"	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
4.	"Beauty is Dead"	Charles Swain ..	Frank Mori.
5.	"Who shall be Fairest"	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
6.	"O spare my tender Flowers" ..	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
7.	"Ripe Strawberries"	W. S. Passmore ..	J. L. Hatton.
8.	"Smile, O Heaven! upon the Day"	R. Falconer ..	M. W. Balfe.
9.	"Sancta Maria"	H. F. Chorley ..	Meyerbeer.
10.	"A Legend of the Rhine"	.. ..	Henry Smart.
11.	"The Hostess's Daughter"	Uhland ..	Henry Smart.
12.	"The Rover"	E. M. S. ..	Henry Smart.
13.	"The Three Wishes"	J. Ellison ..	Dr. Fech.

To be continued.

The above are supplied to the Profession and Societies at the rate of 13 as 12 at 3d. each, or 50 copies at 2d. each. Any number post-free for 4d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

Lately published,

THREE NEW SONGS

BY

EMILE BERGER.

Price 2s. each.

SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.

From the Daily News.

"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.

A COMPLETE EDITION OF

GLUCK'S OPERA,

IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,

FOR

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE BEST QUADRILLE OF THE SEASON,

LAURENTS'

CHRISTMAS WAITS QUADRILLE,

ON POPULAR AIRS,

Beautifully illustrated in Colours by Brandard. Price 3s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 6s.

BOOSEY'S

500 SONGS, DANCES AND OPERATIC AIRS,

FOR THE VIOLIN.

ARRANGED BY GEORGE CASE.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S

CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 3s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

NOTICE.

"NELLY GRAY"

BY

BALFE.

The only song of this name as sung by the "Christy's Minstrels," is composed by Balfe, and the public and trade are therefore requested to order Balfe's "Nelly Gray," to avoid the substitution of another song of the same name.

BOOSEY & SONS. Holles-street.

BOOSEY'S

CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS'

ALBUMS.

CONTAINING TWENTY FOUR SONGS,

With choruses, pianoforte accompaniment, and all words under the music,

In two books, price 2s. 6d. each, or complete in an elegant volume, cloth and gold, 7s. 6d.

BOOK 1st.

"KISS ME QUICK."
"WILLIE, WE HAVE MISSED YOU."
"HOOP DE DOODEN DO."
"HAZEL DELL."
"WE ARE COMING, SISTER MARY."
"RING DE BANJO."
"HARD TIMES."
"GOOD NEWS FROM HOME."
"WAIT FOR THE WAGGON."
"COME WHERE MY LOVE LIES."
"BEAUTIFUL STAR."
"TOLL THE BELL."

BOOK 2nd.

"GENTLE JENNY GRAY."
"THE MOCKING BIRD."
"THE GREENWOOD DELL."
"ELLEN BAYNE."
"DO THEY MISS ME AT HOME."
"SEEING NELLY HOME."
"GENTLY DOWN THE STREAM."
"MAGGIE BY MY SIDE."
"LET ME KISS HIM FOR HIS MOTHER."
"EULALIE."
"I'M OFF TO CHARLESTOWN."
"MINNIE MOORE."

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

Published this Day. Price 2s. 6d.

AN EASY AND POPULAR EDITION OF

"O TENDER SHADOW,"

SONG,

FROM MEYERBEER'S DINORAH.

Adapted for the use of amateurs unable to accomplish all the passages in the original edition, by M. Jules de Glimes. With English and Italian words, price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S SOLOS.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER'S TROVATORE, as performed by Miss Goddard at the Bradford Festival, 5s.

BENEDICT'S TWO NEW FANTAISIES:
ERIN, on Irish Airs .. .. 4 0 | CALEDONIA, on Scotch Airs .. 4 0
Composed expressly for Miss Goddard, and performed by her throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland.

NE PLUS ULRA by WOLFFL.—A new edition of this celebrated Sonata as performed by Miss Goddard, with a very interesting introduction by J. W. Davison, Esq., containing an account of the Composer's Life and Compositions, Price 5s.

THALBERG'S THREE FANTASIAS on "Home Sweet Home," "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Lillie Dale," in one book (large size), price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

To be ready in a few days, a Second and Cheaper Edition of the celebrated

OPERATIC ALBUM,

In crimson cloth, price 12s.

The original edition, with illustrations, and superbly bound, may still be had.

This unrivalled collection of operatic music contains 100 Gems from the whole of the best Modern Operas, including, Martha, La Traviata, Il Trovatore, Louisa Miller, Rigoletto, Ernani, Les Vêpres, Sonnambula, Norma, Puritani, Don Pasquale, Lucrezia Borgia, Lucia di Lammermoor, Linda, Elisire, Fille du Régiment, Robert le Diable, and Les Huguenots, all arranged for the Pianoforte Solo, by Nordmann.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.

Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.

Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

LAURENT'S UNRIVALLED WALTZES.

 The average sale of the following Waltzes is from 4,000 to 20,000 each set.

		s.	d.
Sicilian Vespers Waltz	(Illustrated in colours)	4	0
Donna Julia Waltz	"	4	0
Beloved Star Waltz (on "Thou art so near" by Reichardt)	"	4	0
Dinorah Waltz	"	4	0
Satanella Waltz	"	4	0
Lord Lovell's Waltz	(Illustrated)	3	0
Christy's Minstrels' Waltz	"	3	0
Summer Bloom Waltz	"	3	0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELOVED STAR VALSE (companion to the Maud Valse). Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. From the Liverpool Mail:—"Reichardt's beautiful Lied ('Beloved Eye'), deservedly one of the most charming and popular songs of the day, has been transformed by Mr. Laurent into a most suave and well-marked waltz, which we may naturally hope to find in scores of ball programmes this and succeeding winters." Boosey and Son's, Holles-street.

THE SERPENTINE QUADRILLE, by Burchardt, on the most popular melodies of the day, with a comic illustration of skating on the Serpentine, in colours by Brandard. Price 3s. From the Liverpool Mail:—'The Serpentine Quadrille' (which is, by the way, illustrated with much humour and spirit), contains some two dozen of the most popular airs of the day, and so admirably have they been blended that the result is a mélange which will at once set feet in motion and call up most pleasant reminiscences, for though the ear is tickled every few minutes with a new —or rather old—tune, the whole of the quadrille is eminently dansante."—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

MEYERBEER'S "SHEPHERD'S SONG (Des Schäfers lied), sung by Mr. Sims Reeves at the Monday Popular Concerts (with clarionet obbligato) is published, price 4s. (extra violin or violoncello, in lieu of clarionet, 1s. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 18, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

NEW SACRED SONG, "Awake, little Pilgrim." Composed by Maurice Cobham; the poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond. Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late.

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MEYERBEER'S Setting of the "Lord's Prayer," for four voices (soprano, alto, tenor, and bass), is published, with English and Latin text, in score, 3s., separate vocal parts, 6d. each, by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

SIMS REEVES'S NEW SONG, "Wert thou mine," Composed by Frank Mori, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "ETHEL." Romance for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W. "Mr. Thackery's Ethel Newcombe has inspired the composer with graceful and elegant ideas, in the form of what may be called a romance without words, exceedingly vocal and richly accompanied."—Daily News.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "SULIOTE WAR SONG." Sung by Mr. Santley. Price 3s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "HARP OF WALES," Sung by Mr. Sims Reeves. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BACHIANA, Preludes and Fugues, by John Sebastian Bach (not included in the 48 preludes and fugues), as played at all the classical concerts, in six numbers, each 2s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

THE HARMONIOUS BLACKSMITH. Composed by Handel for the Pianoforte from his suite de pièces in E major. The only correct edition, as played at all the classical concerts, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONG FOR CHRISTMAS.—"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE." By LOVELL PHILLIPS. Beautifully illustrated. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"As graceful and vocal a song as we have met with for a long time."—Musical World.—London: Duncan Davison, 244, Regent-street, W.

Just published, in post 8vo., cloth,

A COLLECTION OF WORDS OF 2,270 ANTHEMS, with 452 Biographical Accounts of Authors, &c. By B. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain, and Honorary Organist of St. Peter's Church, Manchester. Price 6s 6d. The Author will be happy to make arrangements for the supply of a number of copies to any cathedral, or other church, either in cloth or sheets.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit	15s.	per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBRAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit	18s.	Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age	20s.	Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each:—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET.'
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dediée à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dediée à Edouard Roeckel)	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

BRINLEY RICHARDS'S "BLIND MAN AND SUMMER." Sung by Miss Palmer. Price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR," sung by the Composer, with the most distinguished success, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

REICHARDT'S "ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME," sung with the greatest éclat by the composer is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"I WOULD I WERE A BUTTERFLY." The New Song composed by ADOLPH SCHLOESSER, now singing with the greatest success by Madame Lemmens Sherrington, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, London, W.

"THE ARROW AND THE SONG," New Four-Part-Song for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses), sung with great success by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, and enthusiastically encored, is published, price 2s (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

"THE FAIRY'S EVEN-SONG," New Four-Part-Song, for Male Voices (two tenors and two basses) sung with great success by the Polyhymnian Choir, is published, price 2s. (separate vocal parts, 6d. each), by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BLUETTES CLASSIQUES, Selected from the Works of the great Pianoforte composers.

		s.	d.
No. 1.	DUSSEK.—"Il pastore Alpigiano," Air Varié	3	0
2.	STEIBELT.—"Papageno" (Zauberflöte)	2	6
3.	.. "Monostatos"	3	0
4.	DUSSEK.—"La chasse" .. " .. (In the Press) ..	3	0

"They are quite simple, easy to execute and to understand, and yet the most accomplished performer and the most refined amateur will find them delightful to play."—Daily News.—London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

BALFE'S NEW SONGS.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee:
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle air,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

London: Duncan Davison, & Co., 241, Regent-street, W

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

FOR THE

DRAWING ROOM.

GOLLMICK.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Vive la Danse, Valse ...	3	0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3	0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3	0	Azelia	3	0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3	0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3	0

ASCHER.

Thou art so near ...	3	0	Un Ballo in Maschera	3	0
Dinorah	4	0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes	3	0

SCHLŒSSER.

Les Boutons de Roses	3	0	Deodora, Caprice ...	3	0
Souvenir du Rigi ...	3	0	Fleurs Animées ...	3	0

BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Nelly Gray	3	0	Santa Maria	2	6
Shadow Air, Dinorah...	3	0	Maud	3	0
The Power of Love ...	3	0	Bolero, "Les Vespers"	3	0

MADAME OURY.

Christy's Minstrels Galop	3	0	Valse Sympathique ...	4	0
Martha	4	0	Dinorah	5	0
Air de l'Ombre ...	4	0	Les Vêpres Siciliennes .	5	0

BENEDICT.

Caledonia	4	0	Erin	4	0

TALEXY.

Eva Polka Mazurka ...	2	6	Dinorah Polka Mazurka	2	6

BERGER.

Selection, Dinorah ...	4	0	Selection, Satanella ...	4	0
Selection, Martha ...	4	0	Garibaldi's March ...	2	6

KUHE.

Satanella Grande Valse	4	0	Dinorah Fantaisie ...	3	0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex. Saturday, February 4, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 6. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATORIES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROQUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

6

MONSIEUR SAINTON will return to London on the 10th March. 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, 10th February, 1860.

MADAME SAINTON-DOLBY will return to town on the 10th March. 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W., 10th February, 1860.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERT, Monday evening, Feb. 20th; and Public Rehearsal, To-morrow (Saturday) afternoon, Feb. 18th. Conductor, Dr. WYLDE. To commence at 3 o'clock. Programme:—Part I. Overture, Abenceragen—Cherubini; aria, Signor Belletti—Mozart; concerto in E. minor, violin and orchestra: violin, Mr. H. Blagrove—Spohr; chorus, Ruins of Athens—Beethoven; air with chorus, "Calm is the glassy ocean," Idomeneo, Mdlle. Parepa—Mozart; symphony in B. flat, adagio, allegro, andante, minuetto, finale—Beethoven. Part II. Concerto in G. minor, pianoforte and orchestra, Mdlle. Marie Wieck—Mendelssohn; aria, Signor Belletti—Rossini; fantasia, violoncello, Signor Piatti—Piatti; madrigal, "In going to my lonely bed"—Edwardes, A.D. 1560; aria, Mdlle. Parepa—Rossini; overture—Weber. The subscription for five grand concerts and five public rehearsals is £2 2s. for a reserved sofa stall. Tickets at popular prices, viz.:—For the concert on Monday evening, Feb. 20, area and gallery, 1s.; balcony, 2s., 3s., 5s., and 7s.; area stalls, 5s.; sofa stalls, 10s. 6d. Tickets for the public rehearsal on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 18:—Area and gallery, 1s.; balcony 3s.; area stalls, 5s. Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201, Regent-street; Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside: and at the hall.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—Wednesday, Feb. 15th, at 8, Mdlle. Parepa, Mdlle. Marie [illegible], and Choir of 200 voices. Mdlle. Parepa will sing "The Shadow Song," from "Dinorah," the "Laughing Song," from "Manon Lescaut," and the Solos in Mendelssohn's Psalm "Hear my Prayer." New Part-songs by the Choir. Conductor—M. BENEDICT. Tickets, 1s., 3s.; sofa, and balcony stalls, 5s. each.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—A GRAND CONCERT will be given on Saturday next, the 18th February, at which Madlle. Piccolomini will make her first appearance on her return to England. The Vocalists will include Signor Belart, Signor Aldighieri, Signor Gilardoni, and Madlle. Piccolomini. The Crystal Palace Orchestra considerably increased for this occasion, will be conducted by Signor Arditi and M. Manns.

Admission by Season Tickets (now on sale at 10s. 6d. each, available to the 30th April, 1860); or on payment of Half-a-Crown; children under 12 One Shilling. Reserved seats, Half-a-Crown extra. Tickets at the Crystal Palace, and 2, Exeter Hall. Open at Ten. Concert at Three.

MYDDLETON HALL, ISLINGTON—NORTH LONDON MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS. Second of the series, Monday Monday evening next, the 13th Feb., 1860. Artists: Mad. Louisa Vinning, Mdlle. Vaneri, Miss Fanny Reeves, Miss Messent, Mr. Allan Irving, J. G. Patey, and Elliot Galer, Viotti Collins, Medora Collins, J. D. Davies (harpist), R. Glenn Wesley. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Admission one shilling and two shillings.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

OH, DENNIS, DEAR. New Song. By G. B. ALLEN. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MDME. ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR. CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR. HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.

Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Princi-
R. Weist Hill. } pals.
Viotti Collins.
M. Beseth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.

Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
E. Payton
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. March.
G. Betjemann.
R. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W. A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.
T. Wells.
J. Zerbini, Jun.
Ambrose Haynes.
S. Bort.
F. J. Amor.

VIOLI.

Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb
H. J. Trust.
J. Thompson.
H. Tothurst.

VIOLONCELLI.

Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. F. Reed.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.
R. Reed.

CONTRA BASSI.

Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. C. F. Beresford
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.

Messrs.
R. S. Pratten.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.

Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.

Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.

Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.

Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.

Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.

Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.

Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.

Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.

Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.

Mr. Walter Hinchey,

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:

M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

For the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals will be held on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, and during the season, concerts will be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with the chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

In the professional department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two violas.

All communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London Orchestral Association, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

GLEES, MADRIGALS, AND BALLADS.—Egyptian Hall, (Dudley Gallery.)—Final arrangements in compliance with very numerous applications, these much admired performances of Glees, Madrigals, and Old English Ditties, will be continued for one week longer, and will be given every morning at half-past two; and on Tuesday and Friday evening at quarter past eight, when the present series must positively terminate. The programmes will include favourite compositions of Sir Henry Bishop. Glees, Madrigals and Part-songs of an early period, Catch, Haydn's Humourous Serenade, renowned Old English Ballads by Miss Eyles, and the celebrated Scottish Dialogue Ballad "Huntingtower." Conductor, Mr. Land. Literary Illustrator, T. Oliphant, Esq. Reserved seats, 3s.; unreserved seats, 2s.; a few fauteuils, 5s. each, which may be secured at Mr. Mitchell's Royal Library, 33, Old Bond-street, W.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—GOUNOD'S GRAND MASS and BEETHOVEN'S CHORAL SYMPHONY, Wednesday, Feb. 15, at 8, under the direction of Mr. JOHN HULLAH. Principal vocalists—Miss Banks, Miss Palmer, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Thomas. Tickets, 1s., 2s. 6d., stalls, 5s.

THE MISSES BROUGHAM beg to announce that they have removed to 88, Argyle-street, Euston-road, W. C.; where all communications respecting engagements and lessons are requested to be addressed.

MASTER HORTON CLARIDGE ALLISON, Pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes, begs to announce that he will, in the course of the season, give Three Pianoforte Performances, at which he will be assisted by eminent Vocal and Instrumental talent.
143, Marylebone-road, N.W., Feb. 9th.

MR. LEONARD (Bass) accepts engagements for Concerts, either in London or the Provinces (see notices of Mr. Leonard's performances in The Musical World and The Press newspapers of the 4th of February). Address, No. 3, Pomeroy-terrace, Old Kent-road, S.E.

A PIANIST WANTED, as an Accompanyist to a married Professional Gentleman (Vocalist). Terms offered are Furnished Apartments, Breakfast, and Attendance, to any Lady or Gentleman who would devote two or three hours to daily practice. Address, by letter only, to C. L., No. 3 Pomeroy-terrace, Old Kent-road, S.E.

THE Advertiser is in want of a situation as Tuner and General Assistant in the Music Trade. First-class certificate as to ability, &c. Address, O, Musical World Office.

TO THE COUNTRY MUSIC TRADE.—Wanted, by a respectable steady young man, a Situation as Tuner; has been nearly 11 years in a first class provincial business, can tune, regulate, and repair the Pianoforte, Harmonium, and English Concertina; no objection to assist at the counter, or attend to the business in the absence of the principal; undeniable character. Address, T. C. H., Mr. Jefferies, London Road, Faringdon, Berks.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address, M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Address, post paid, Mr. G. Richardson, music warehouse, Horsham, Sussex.

TO THE COUNTRY MUSIC TRADE.—A Young Man, who has been employed in two leading London Music Houses, is desirous of obtaining a Situation in the Country, as an Assistant to a Musicseller. Unexceptionable references. Address, A. H., Musical World Office.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.
F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.
Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED.—"There's nothing like a freshening breeze," new song by Alberto Randegger, composed for and sung with the greatest success by Mr. Thomas, when on his last tour, and always encored. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

REVIEWS.

"'Moore's National Airs,' with symphonies, and accompaniments for the pianoforte, edited by Charles William Glover—People's Edition, No. 9," (Longman and Co.)—contains ten of the least familiar of the tunes to which the Irish bard wedded poetry. Several of them are attractive; among others "Hear me but once," set for two voices, a pretty quaint French air, "My harp is one unchanging theme," a Swedish air of some character, "Early sounds the castanet" (Spanish of course), and "Then Fare thee well" to an English tune that will doubtless be recognised by Mr. William Chappell. One or two of the melodies we cannot but believe to be spurious—such (to name one example) as the so-called Hindostanee Air,—"Hark, I hear a spirit sing," arranged for three voices.

"'The Orpheon,' a collection of songs and choruses in two, three, and four parts, carefully selected for the use of schools, families, and choral societies"—(Ewer and Co.)—may be recommended as a useful and well-varied compilation, exactly fitted for the object to which it professes to be dedicated, and for the most part made up of materials likely to improve and invigorate, rather than (as too often is the case) enfeeble and debase the taste of those who assemble together for the performance of vocal part music, as an agreeable and, at the same time, sensible means of recreation.

"A Morning and Evening Cathedral Service"—by R. R. Ross, (J. A. Novello)—is creditable to the composer (President of the Manchester Madrigal Society—who has inscribed his work to the High Master of the Free Grammar School, and Rector of St. Peter's Church, the Rev. Nicholas Germon, M.A.). To meet with any very novel feature in new settings to music of our Cathedral service, we hardly expect in these times. The question is, on one hand, what now can be done with it, if the old-established forms must be preserved; and on the other, ought these old-established forms, under any circumstances to be tampered with, much more superseded? Perhaps, some day, genius may decide. At present we may compliment Mr. Ross for having accomplished his task quite as well as the majority of his predecessors.

"'A short and easy Morning Service'—'Te Deum' and 'Jubilate'—with accompaniment for organ or pianoforte"—by Charles Frederick Hauptmann (Ewer and Co.)—may be politely dismissed with a reference to the foregoing observations. The organist of St. Mary's, Tenby, writes smoothly and correctly, but can lay no more legitimate claim to originality than his respectable Manchester contemporary.

"'Stella Matutina'—melodie Religieuse pour piano"—by Wilhem Schulthes, Op. 27 (Ewer and Co.)—like all Herr Schulthes commits to the hands of the engraver, is clever and carefully worked out; but we cannot help thinking that the cadenza in octaves (page 5—"precipitato") is somewhat precipitate, if not absolutely profane; while the general treatment to which the theme is submitted in pages 6 and 7, if not positively irreligious, leaves the "religious melody" tant soit peu dévolletée.

"'Ave Maria' for 'mezzo-soprano' or 'baritone,' with pianoforte or organ accompaniment"—by Wilhelm Schulthes (Ewer and Co.)—is devotional in tone, appropriately (that is gravely) melodious, and harmonised with the composer's accustomed taste; but why not G flat, instead of F sharp in the last chord of the following?—

What conceivable system can defend an F sharp and a C flat occurring in one and the same harmony?

"Dear Old England," a patriotic song—words by Mrs. Valentine Roberts, music by Mrs. Gilbert A'Beckett (Leader and Cocks)—is a genial song on all accounts, the poetry being vigorous and the music unaffected. All "patriotic" songs should emulate these qualities, instead (as is so frequently the case) of dealing alternately in twaddle, bombast, and maudlin sentimentality.

"The Rifleman's March"—by J. E. Richardson (Aylward, Salisbury)—is dedicated "by permission" (by whose permission we are not told) to the officers, non-commissioned officers, and privates of the 1st Wiltshire Rifle Volunteers. It is a march of considerable spirit.

"I told thee, Sweetheart"—poetry by John Ellison, music by M. Endersohn (Schott and Co.)—is a ballad in which expression is attained and dulness avoided in an equally remarkable degree, both by poet and musician.

"L'Eglantine," waltz for the pianoforte—by Martin H. Hodges (Henry Keller, Clifton*)—is dedicated by the composer to "his pupils," who can hardly fail to be charmed by its wholly unpretending and at the same time attractive qualities.

"The Bird of Song"—written by W. S. Passmore; composed by J. L. Hatton (Boosey and Sons)—will remind many of the late Sir Henry Bishop, of whose earlier manner it is an admirable copy. Although, in his poetry, Mr. W. S. Passmore apostrophises the lark, Mr. Hatton's song bears no resemblance whatever to Bishop's once famous "Lo, here the gentle lark," nor is there a flute obbligato part to suggest that this was in the more recent composer's mind when, in the attitude of creation, he threatened the paper with ink. Nevertheless there is a Bishop-feeling about the whole, which, as it is eminently welcome, will not be detrimental to the popularity probably awaiting the "Bird of Song"—a piece of which Mr. Hatton has no reason to be ashamed, and to which his admirers will point with a certain degree of exultation. Far better, however, in all respects, because far more original—and as a natural consequence, far more genuine—is "It was fifty years ago"—composed and dedicated to John Boosey (same publisher)—one of the genial and racy musical settings of Professor Longfellow's genial and racy poetry with which we are acquainted. Who does not know the poem which begins with the following simple and exquisite stanzas?:—

"It was fifty years ago,
In the pleasant month of May,
In the beautiful Pays de Vaud,
(Pronounce Voos)
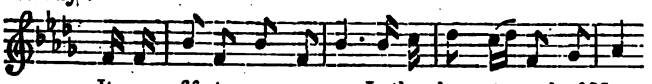
A child in its cradle lay.

"And nature, the old nurse,
Took the child upon her knee,
Saying, 'Here is a story-book
Thy father has written for thee.'

* Beethoven-house, Triangle.

"'Come wander with me,' she said,
'Into regions yet untrod,
And read what is still unread,
In the manuscripts of God.'"

Why Longfellow should have made "book" rhyme with "nurse," in the second stanza, when in the other five parallel situations he rhymes to the sound and letter, is a puzzle that requires a long (eared) fellow to explain. Mr. Hatton has surpassed himself in the music to this song. The very beginning shows that it is to be a vigorous melody:—



And the rest is to match. The episode, in the major key of B flat, covering the whole of page 3, is as fresh and buoyant as it is charmingly unobtrusive. Longfellow has frequently inspired our musicians, but seldom more happily than in this instance.

"'Margarita,' ballad"—written by G. P. Morris, composed expressly for Mr. Sims Reeves by M. W. Balfe (Boosey and Sons)—is one of those catching trifles which Mr. Balfe, in his happiest moments, is so lucky in producing. A melody as simple as a hammer, setting out thus:— and continued to the end with the same attractive naïveté accompanied with studied simplicity, and allied to words of the true ballad calibre—the whole, too, esssentially singable—can hardly fail to be effective, and to charm all ears, no matter of what dimensions, and reach all hearts, from the softest to the least easily penetrable. Such is "Margarita," the most recent inspiration of the composer of The Bohemian Girl and Satanella—such the song with which Mr. Sims Reeves is now enchanting his fellow-countrymen and countrywomen in all parts of "merrie England."

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

THE Annual Meeting of the Fellows and Associates of this rapidly rising Society was held, at the Marylebone Institution, on Wednesday the 1st. On this occasion, Mr. Joseph Duggan, Mr. Edward James, and Mr. John Simon, were elected on the Council to fill the vacancies occasioned by the retirement of Herr Molique, Mr. Lodge Ellerton, and Sir John Harrington; and Mr. Sainton, Mr. Verrinder, Mr. Barker, and Mr. Stockdale were elected fellows. The report of the Council, which was read to the meeting, gave a gratifying account of the remarkable prosperity of the Society, showing the number of its members to amount to 1,450, and the funds in the hands of the treasurer greatly to exceed £1,300. The same document spoke of the eminent success with the members and in public esteem, of the series of four concerts given last season, and it justly ascribed this success in a great measure to the admirable orchestra and the excellent conducting of Mr. Alfred Mellon; it spoke of the distinguishing feature of these concerts, as compared with the serial performances of every other musical establishment in the metropolis, showing this to have been the inclusion in each of the programmes of one or more works of resident English or foreign composers, and leaving the impression that this feature of the arrangements was another chief ground of the good opinion the series had universally elicited. The report promised another series of four concerts, on the scale of those of last year, for the ensuing season; and in addition to these, a fifth concert, at which music not written for the orchestra is to be performed, and singers and instrumentalists whose talent could not be brought forward on the other occasions, are to be engaged. The report spoke of the weekly choral practice of the members, conducted by Mr. Henry Smart, as a flourishing and highly valuable branch of the Society's operations; some 200 ladies and gentlemen have formed themselves into a class for mutual pleasure and improvement, whose ranks are open to the entire body of fellows and associates, and their progress in part-singing proves the good influence of their skilful training upon their general musical capacity. It is important to notice that their excellent conductor exercises his talents in this department gratuitously. The choral practice has, it seems, been made opportune for the trial of some hitherto unheard compositions of the members of the Society; and this branch of the proceedings of the institution is to be extended by the establishment of trials of new instrumental chamber-music. The conversaziones held in May and January last, at St. James's Hall, were referred to with just satisfaction, as having been occasions for promoting the social intercourse of the members, and thus bringing into agreeable and beneficial personal relationship those who follow music as a calling with those who seek it as a recreation, and, it may well be presumed, stimulating a still better feeling between them, and a yet greater mutual sympathy than even now exists.

The report continued, that, in fulfilment of a resolution passed at the Fellows' Meeting, in November, the Council addressed, on the part of the Society, a letter of condolence to the widow of the illustrious Spohr, on the death of the great musician, who was one of the honorary members of the Musical Society, and they reported that lady's courteous acknowledgment of their communication.

Thus far the report may be regarded as referring individually to the members of the Society, insomuch as their personal interests are involved in its proceedings. Another matter, however, was communicated in this statistical document, which, as it might have been of eminent importance to the musical art, and, possibly, an incident of lasting consequence in the Art's history, shows the wide view taken by the Council of the range of the Society's operations, and the zeal they have exercised to extend these beyond the limits of its immediate advantage. The report stated that the Council of the Musical Society had endeavoured to procure for the world the removal of the prohibition against the performance and publication of some of the works of Mendelssohn, which the brother of the master, taking unwarrantable advantage of his sole possession of these invaluable legacies to mankind, thinks fit to impose. The efforts of the Council were fruitless. M. Paul Mendelssohn dallied with them for many months; and, after thus long wavering between he would and he would not, finally decided to continue to withhold these great art-treasures, assigning for thus arbitrarily depriving us of what we justly inherit from a man of genius—the enjoyment of his creations—some domestic reasons which the Council deem improper for production to the meeting of their constituents. It was urgently pressed, even by some members of the Council who appeared to think less unfavourably than their coadjutors of the measures of M. Paul Mendelssohn, and to desire to allow him at least the justice of making known his assumed motives for these, that the entire correspondence between the Council and this gentleman should be read, and thus the views, however unsatisfactory, be made known, which induce the possessors to withhold the compositions from the public. A majority of the meeting decided that the arguments employed by the Council to prevail upon M. Paul Mendelssohn to remove his arbitrary restriction, the cause of this gentleman's vacillation, and the grounds, whatever they might be, for his final determination, should not be revealed,—thus showing an indifference to the highly important subject utterly inexplicable in a body of musicians, and leaving a stigma on the family of Mendelssohn, which, it is not unreasonable to suppose, their own words might in some degree have tended to remove. The unconcern of the meeting may be interpreted as tacitly expressing, first, a vote of censure upon the Council for having interfered in a matter in which, as the executive of the Musical Society, they were unauthorised to act; second, an acknowledgment that the family of Mendelssohn were believed to have reasons for the suppression of the works of their immortal relative, which would not bear to be made generally known; third, that the musicians of London, as represented by the thousand and a half of them who constitute the members of the Musical Society, are carelessly apathetic to the best interests of the art it should be their duty to uphold, being indifferent to the works of a great master, and regardless of his reputation. From this last point of view, the meeting may be considered as having publicly signified that the only objects of the Musical Society are, to give concerts on more or less the same scale as the two Philharmonics, respectively, of Mr. Anderson and Dr. Wylde; to have trials of unheard compositions on a greatly smaller scale than the British Musicians'; to support a singing-class, more numerous but less efficient than Mr. Henry Leslie's or the Polyhymnia, less elementary than Mr. Hullah's, and greatly inferior in extent to the Handel Festival choir; and, finally, to give leviathan tea-parties in St. James's Hall, at which the rankness of the butter and the meagreness of the beverage appeared to have been the chief subjects of comment; but to strive for the welfare of music by endeavouring to increase the store of rich treasures which are open to its lovers, was implied to be beyond the limits of the Society's operations.

It was advanced by an eminent barrister, who was at the meeting, that the heirs of an immortal genius have as distinct a legal right in the spiritual effects of their deceased relative, as in his substantial personal estate: in a word, that the fact of possessing the fruit of a dead man's imagination, gives a living legatee as much authority over the same as over the shilling himself has honestly earned, which he holds in his own pocket—the right to spend it, or to put it out to interest, to give it, or to throw it away, to husband or to squander it, to melt it down, or, if possible, to annihilate it. Such the meeting was advised is the law, and thus interpreting the law, M. Paul Mendelssohn represents a spiritual Shylock, who insists upon worse than his pound of flesh cut from the bosom of his bondsman, insists upon self-appropriating, for reasons which his correspondents fail to divulge, the product of his brother's inspiration, and thus robbing him of a portion of his deathless reputation. Since such is the law, and since no doctor from Belmont steps forward to turn back its power upon him who would arbitrarily enforce it, the world must bow to its provisions, and can hope at most that the correspondence of the Council of the Musical Society have laid Mr. Mendelssohn's uninvestigable motives under more suspicion than they really deserve.

Let us now turn to consider how fatal would have been the workings of this law, which deals with men's thoughts as with their goods and chattels, their wearing apparel, their bank-stock and their railway shares—how fatal would have been its workings had it always been enforced as severely by musician's executors, as it is alleged that the administrators of Mendelssohn have the authority to enforce it. The two quartets of Beethoven, in F and in A minor, two of the most remarkable, in some respects the most beautiful, and in many respects the most interesting of all its composer's wonderful creations, were first printed subsequently to the death of the author, and thus might have been arbitrarily suppressed at the lawful discretion of his executors. The twelve symphonies of Mozart, which were first printed some ten years since, inconsiderable though they be, as compared with some other works of the master, yet eminently interesting on account of their intrinsic merit, and on account of the illustration they afford of the composer's various and prolific powers—these might have been withheld from the world by the heirs of his executors. All the choruses in Messiah, and the entire oratorio of Israel in Egypt, were unprinted when Handel died, and were thus at the mercy of those persons who had the care of his property and of his fame. We need adduce no further instances to prove how far beyond estimation would music have been impoverished, how incalculably would the world have lost had M. Paul Mendelssohn's course, with regard to his brother works, been anticipated by the persons into whose hands devolved the care of the treasures we have named.

Let us next consider how deep has been the injury rising from the assertion of this property right in another man's creations. The widow of Mozart, for her own gain and profit, permitted the contemptible swindler, Süssmayer, to claim a share in the composition of the whole of her husband's greatest work, and to declare himself the sole author of some of the most beautiful portions of that transcendent masterpiece; having sold the right to print the Requiem, she, at a later period, repudiating this first transaction, made a second market of the work, and sold, for a second honorarium, the right to print, (from Mozart's incomplete sketch, which had been filled up, according to the finished manuscript, by the execrable impostor who impudently pretended to have co-composed the whole with Mozart) an edition of the Mass for the Dead, in which the portions respectively attributed to the true and the pseudo-composer are indicated. The consequence of this course of lawful exercise of right in property, was, not only, that great doubt arose in the minds even of studied musicians, as to Mozart's authorship of the work,—this was of small comparative importance, since, as the world possessed a composition which no man, save one, that ever lived, could have produced, it mattered little whether or not that one was accredited with it,—but that a man, whose only claim to notice was his insolent effrontery in putting on the lion's skin which did not fit him, was allowed the too respectable position of having it doubted that he could have contributed to the chef-d'œuvre.

Let us lastly consider how severe may be the loss to us and to posterity, from M. Mendelssohn's taking lawful advantage of his sole possession of his brother's manuscripts. The Reformation Symphony was, at one time, if not always, regarded by its composer, and is now regarded by many persons to whom he played it on the pianoforte, as one of the best of his orchestral works. Besides the Finale of Lorelei, which is published, and the "Ave Maria" in the same opera, which is not published, whose beauties have been attested by the delighted enthusiasm of audience after audience,—besides these two fragments, the entire opera is completely sketched, and many portions of it are wholly finished. The oratorio of Christ, of which the fragments that are printed serve as a sample of the beauties of the whole, is in the same state as the opera of Lorelei sketched throughout, so as to give a very distinct if not perfect notion of the composer's entire design. Very many other works, completely finished, of various extent, amounting to at least so much as the total sum of Mendelssohn's published compositions, remain unprinted; these were carefully preserved by him, bound in volumes, and classified in order. In time to come, a Mendelssohn society may be instituted for doing justice to the great man's genius; such a society may prevail with a future generation of the composer's lateral descendants, to suffer these works to be brought to light; there will exist, at the possible period, a definite tradition of the manner of performing all the master's music at present printed, handed down from persons who heard it executed under his direction, if not played by himself; but there will be no clue to the manner of rendering the works not printed during the lifetime of persons who knew Mendelssohn, and they will, therefore, never have justice done to them.

The thanks of the meeting were voted to many persons who have afforded signal service to the Musical Society, but to none more cordially nor more deservedly than to Mr. Charles Salaman, the honorary secretary, and to Mr. Henry Smart, honorary director of the choral practices.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE first concert of the season was given on Saturday last, and the new music-hall was opened for the first time. Now the new music-hall is not new at all. It is the old concert-room, of the same length, breadth, and shape, and altered as to the roof only. And here alone, indeed, was the alteration necessitated. The old roof, or more properly covering, was merely a piece of cloth or canvas suspended above the galleries, which did not prevent the escape of the sound, and absorbed what reached it. The new roof is constructed of thin boards lined with canvas, and is arched lengthways from the platform. No sound can now escape from the concert-room, and, the roof acting as a sounding board, every note is heard. The orchestra, we fancy, has been made smaller; but whether this is for the better, or otherwise, time will show. The performances on Saturday enabled us to ascertain beyond a doubt the great acoustic improvement effected by the alteration. In its present state, however, it will gain but few admirers, as far as the appearance is concerned. The plain boarding alone was visible on Saturday, but the painters would soon be at work, and ornamentation, no doubt, would not be spared.

The programme was excellent. The orchestral pieces were, Beethoven's No. 7 Symphony, Overture by F. Ries, Overture to Faust (second part), by H. H. Pierson, and Leopold de Meyer's "Marche Tromphale d' Isly," arranged for band by M. Hector Berlioz. The band also accompanied Mdlle. Marie Wieck in Mendelssohn's G minor concerto. The symphony was well played throughout under M. Manns' direction, and every possible care and attention was paid to Mr. Pierson's overture, which, however, failed to convey the slightest glimpse of meaning to any who heard it. The aim of the composer has evidently been ambitious, since the instrumentation is elaborate and complicated in the extreme, and, in all probability, the conception of the writer was profoundly metaphysical. But music that may not be understood is about of as much use as "music that may not be heard;" and, at all events, we shall not pretend to criticise what we could not make out. One thing is certain, such music will not do for the audiences of the Crystal Palace. The overture to Faust was performed by the Crystal Palace band last season, without creating any sensation but that of utter incomprehensibility. It does not improve on acquaintance. Mdlle. Marie Wieck played the somewhat hacknied, though splendid concerto of Mendelssohn, with much facility and neatness of execution. The last movement was not taken at the true Mendelssohnian pace, and its brilliancy was dimmed in consequence. The fair pianist also performed Kullak's "Perles d'écume."

The vocal music was distributed between Miss Eleanora Armstrong and Signor Belletti. The lady, a pupil of Mr. Frank Mori, is one of the most promising beginners we have heard for a long time. Her voice is a high clear soprano, with a good deal of natural flexibility. Nevertheless, Miss Armstrong should eschew altogether, at present, such songs as the "Shadow Song" from Dinorah. The ballad by Mr. Mori which she sang was more satisfactorily accomplished. Signor Belletti gave Handel's "O ruddier than the cherry," and the buffo air, "Il mio piano è preparato," from the Gazza Ladra, both in most admirable style, the latter achieving the only encore of the concert. The attendance was not large, not more than between three and four thousand persons being present.

A concert takes place this day, at which Miss Lascelles will sing; and this day week Mdlle. Piccolomini makes her first appearance in London for the season, with a draught from Mr. Lumley's late operatic company.

CONCERTS.

MISS DOLBY'S SOIRÉES MUSICALES.—A varied and attractive programme was presented by Miss Dolby at the second soirée on Wednesday last, and drew together an audience quite crowded and equally brilliant as at the first concert, whose success we have previously chronicled. The opening piece was Mr. G. A. Osborne's highly effective trio for violin, violoncello, and piano, the composer himself taking the latter instrument, Messrs. Sainton and Paque being the other executants. In such hands we need hardly say that more than ample justice was rendered; and if the applause was not quite as enthusiastic as it might have been, it must be attributed rather to the arena of display being a private drawing-room instead of a public concert-hall. The fair bénéficiaire contributed four songs, each in a style totally distinct from the other, but all calculated to show how thorough a mistress of her art Miss Dolby is. Nothing could present a greater contrast, for instance, than Beethoven's "In questa tomba," given with a solemn grandeur well befitting the subject, and a French version of the "Irish Emigrant"—words by Lady Dufferin, music by Lüders—sung with the greatest pathos and feeling. No less so the songs in the second part, "Oh, if thou wert my own love," Salaman's, and the now somewhat worn, "Katey's Letter." Miss Dolby seems at home, however, in music of all kinds, and her fine artistic feeling was never more fully displayed than upon this occasion. M. Sainton's two solos, the fantasia on Lucrezia Borgia and Valse de Concert were nothing short of marvellous instances of perfect command of the instrument and thorough mastery of every mechanical difficulty, combined with a feeling and delicacy which it would be impossible to excel.

In the introduction and rondo of Spohr, M. Sainton was worthily seconded by Mr. Osborne, and no less ably assisted by Messrs. Bezeth, Schreurs, and Paque in the andante and scherzo (posthumous) of Mendelssohn. The violoncello solo, "Cujus animam," was played by Mr. Paque with his accustomed ability. The whole concert afforded evident gratification to the fashionable and elegant audience, which not only filled the rooms to overflowing, but thronged the doorways and passages of Miss Dolby's residence.

MADAME DE VAUCHERAN'S CONCERT.—This affair came off on Tuesday evening at Thirlestane House, Chelsea—an Educational Institute for young ladies, presided over by Madame de Vaucheran—and attracted a goodly assemblage of rank and fashion, mostly of the fair sex. The artists were Miss Clari Fraser, Miss Donia, and Mr. Southwell, vocalists; and Madame de Vaucheran, Herr Goffrie, and M. Paque, instrumentalists. The lady is a clever pianist, and is not unknown in the metropolitan concert rooms. She played, with the two gentlemen named, Beethoven's Trio in G major (Op. 1, No. 2), for piano, violin, and violoncello; with Herr Goffrie, Osborne and De Beriot's Duet, for pianoforte and violin, on airs from Guillaume Tell; and two pieces by Chopin. Madame de Vaucheran's dexterity of finger and neatness of style were much admired. Herr Goffrie executed a violin solo of his own composition with decided effect. Miss Clari Fraser sang the old Scotch air "Within a mile of Edinboro' town," and Mr. Wallace's ballad, "Why do I weep for thee?" Miss Fraser is our best living interpreter of Scotch songs, not merely because her accent and pronunciation are faultless, though the lady is English born and bred, but because her sentiment is so unsophisticated and earnest, and the tone of her voice so pleasing and natural. The old Scotch air was delightful in its expression and delivery; but Mr. Wallace's charming ballad was even more liked, the audience being quite spell-bound by the young lady's singing. Miss Clari Fraser also joined Mr. G. Loder in Fioravanti's duet, "The Singing Lesson," in which she manifested no small degree of comic powers. Miss Donia gave Ricci's "Ah! mi sento il cor," and Mr. Macfarren's ballad, "When shall we meet again," the former with much facility, and the latter with genuine feeling. Also Mr. Southwell sang "Adelaida," and Mr. Brinley Richards' ballad, "Oh whisper that thou feelest," from the Pyne and Harrison edition of Auber's Crown Diamonds. The concert was thoroughly enjoyable, and dismissed all the visitors with smiling aspects.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, February 8th.

THE recovery of Faure from his late indisposition, and his resumption of his part in the Pardon de Ploërmel, has given a fresh impetus to the success of this favourite opera, with the aid of Madame Cabel, whose name has been figuring this week in the Civil Tribunal of the Seine. The conclusion of the affair was, that M. Roqueplan was directed to pay immediately, as hitherto, into the hands of Dinorah, the sum of 370 fr. for each of her appearances in the character of the pretty goatherd. At Ploërmel itself a goatherd can live a whole year on a smaller sum than one of these performances costs. There the tribunals never resound with the noise of such litigations as these. Nobody meddles with the financial affairs of the Dinorahs of the spot.

Two new operatic works have been brought out—or, rather, one is announced, and the other brought out—to vary the bill of fare offered lately to the playgoing portion of the Parisian world. The one brought out is the Roman d'Elvire of Ambroise Thomas, at the Opéra-Comique. The other is the Philémon et Beaucis of M. Charles Gounod, at the Théâtre-Lyrique. The parts are thus distributed:—Beaucis, Madame Miolan-Carvalho; Une Bacchante, Mdlle. Marie Sax; Jupiter, M. Battaille; Vulcain, M. Balanqué; Philémon, M. Fromant. The Bouffes-Parisiens announces also its Revue de Carnaval, preceded by an operetta entitled Bonne Etoile, by Léo Delibes.

The Société des Concerts du Conservatoire have decided that the election of a new leader of the orchestra shall be adjourned till the general assembly (which takes place every year after the concerts are over), and the committee have begged M. Filmant to preside over the meetings of 1860. On Sunday the 5th the second concert took place.

The theatrical papers here have published an account of the fees received by authors in 1859 for works represented in Paris. According to this document, the Opéra-Comique has given 131,110fr.; the Théâtre-Lyrique, 59,976fr.; L'Opéra, 47,290fr.; the Bouffes-Parisiens, 41,958fr; and the Théâtre-Italien, 392fr. It appears from this paper, then, that the Opéra-Comique pays to authors two-thirds more than the Opéra. It is to be hoped that, as a recent measure has raised the fees of authors at the Comédie-Française, the librettists and composers of the first lyrical theatre here will soon enjoy the same benefits.

A correspondent of the Gazette Musicale de l'Allemagne du Sud, writes from Vienna that Roger has been asked to give several performances at the theatre of the Porte de Carinthie; they will take place next September. The musical director, M. Otto Dessoff, has just been named sous-maître of the court-chapel at Cassel. I think I already told you, a week or two ago, that Gluglini is performing at the Scala at Milan. He began in the Favorita.

The Turks seem to be giving themselves a shake, and rousing themselves to the knowledge that music is a very high and sublime enjoyment, for it appears that his imperial highness the Sultan wishes to get a more intimate knowledge of the music of Verdi, and the Sicilian Vespers of that composer is to be performed in Constantinople under the title of Giovanna di Guzman.

W. A. MOZART.

BY OTTO JAHN.—(FOURTH PART.)

(From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.)

(Continued from page 81.)

"Two essential advantages were gained. By this sharp juxtaposition of the developed melodies, the musical phrase, the merely effectuating turn, the simple playing with figures, for the purpose of getting on, was excluded, or, at any rate, greatly circumscribed. Such expedients are comparatively very rare with Mozart. He mostly uses figures and passages as ornaments twining around and adorning a definite and solid kernel, but not constituting independent members of the whole. When, too, mere formula of transition appear indispensable, he employs them mostly without much ado, just as in architecture the pillar is applied as an artistic motive in such a fashion that its constructional importance is clearly apparent. To this head we must refer the emphatic and broad treatment of the finales, and half finales, which are now so striking that they appear to many people as specific a peculiarity of Mozart's style; they are, however, no such thing; they were, at that period, general, and proceeded from the necessity of being maintained fixedly and definitely in the key, a necessity on which, at that time, especial stress was laid. That composers have become freer in this respect, and learnt to introduce varied, charming, and exciting transitional turns instead of a plump common-place, is an undoubted advance; but that, notwithstanding, Mozart is not deficient in delicate and interesting turns, anyone may convince himself by observing his returns to the theme in the second part, and, for instance, merely the richness to which the simple fundamental force of the point d'orgue, is developed, in the most beautiful and most charming modes of appliance.

"The second advantage was the comprehensive clearness of the plan of a musical movement, a clearness which is as intelligible as in an architectural ground-plan, and which, both in great and little things, is one of the unalienable excellences of Mozart's art. By means of this, the principal points of a thoroughly developed organisation were fixed. These, necessary in themselves and sufficient for the object in view, could in their turn become the points of support for a rich and copious amplification, and before such a detailed and thorough development was possible, it was necessary that the simple scheme should be clearly and securely fixed.

"Mozart has in no wise exhausted the substance of the form of representation thus founded by him; others have merely imitated what he did. Beethoven entered on the intellectual inheritance, and has shown what depth and fulness there lay concealed in it; but whatever astonishing results he may have obtained, all the germs are far from being developed. Our own age, whose invention and skill are preponderatingly apparent in interesting and delicate forms of transition, and in a consistent spinning-out of small motives, which can lay claim only to a subordinate place in a great whole, is, above all things, to be reminded of the fact, that well-developed, firmly articulated melodies, should constitute the fundamental elements of a composition.

"In the choice and arrangement of them, so that the one shall set forth the other in the most varied manner, is Mozart's delicate feeling invariably evident. He has the skill more particularly, in some part of the work where we least expect it, to surprise us by a new melody of peculiar beauty, as for instance, immediately after the first theme, which generally causes a certain satisfaction, a completely different motive is introduced. But, above all, he produces an inimitable effect by bringing forward, when everything is tending rapidly to the end, a melody decked out with all the charms of freshness and sweetness, and which not only again excites our interest, but gives a new turn to the whole. To adduce a striking example of this, and one known to every one, I would remind the reader of the first movement of the symphony in C major. Who has not, with ever-reviving astonishment, been entranced by the melody introduced at the last, and which, like a gleaming meteor, darts forth a flood of light and gaiety? Similar effects, if not always so brilliant, are by no means rare; they have never been equalled, and, indeed, scarcely attempted by anyone else. On the other hand, it cannot be denied that the partiality evinced by Mozart for placing in a strong light the conclusion and some other points, not generally so prominent, injured the second theme properly so called; and which is usually the weakest portion. The cause of this is partly, perhaps, attributable to the fact that, in opposition to the principal theme, it was intended to have a more tender and lighter character; but, compared with the other motives, it is frequently not important enough, and even sometimes produces the impression that it is neglected.

"The further extension of the fundamental scheme thus obtained could not be effected by the interpolation of mere outwardly connecting phrases between the principal members, but by the development of their purport by means of thematic treatment. We have seen above how, by the study of Bach and Handel, Mozart was guided to this course, and this tendency is very decided in later pianoforte compositions. It does not appear, however, as the return to the metrical style (gebundene Schreibart) in certain strict forms, as of the canon and the fugue, but as the free development of those general laws, on which the essential attributes of polyphonic representation and contrapuntal form depend generally. Instrumental and most especially pianoforte music, after it had been freed from the shackles of strict form, was in danger of following one-sidedly the direction of homophonic representation, and thus of becoming shallow. It is one of the services rendered by Mozart that, in the modifications, which the altered character of the conceptions and representation generally, and the nature of the instruments required, he did justice to the polyphonic and thematic mode of treatment in free and beautiful forms. This is apparent, as is natural, more especially in the modulating portions, on which the principal weights necessarily fell, and which, by this treatment, could first obtain due importance. Although Mozart did not bestow on them that extension and powerful elaboration to which they were developed by Beethoven, they yet appear in his works—even when, scantily elaborated, they are still presented as a transition—as the culminating point of the whole movement, on which its motive powers are concentrated in more lively activity. The mode of treatment is free, like the choice of motives brought into play; but it is nearly always essentially a thematic course of treatment, and frequently one very skilfully planned out and intricate, on which the effect depends. Still, at the same time, the harmonic element is by no means thrown into the back-ground—as is well-known, it is here that the boldest and most original modulations are usually found; on a closer observation, however, we shall find that the really vivifying element is the thematising element, and that the fashioning impulses proceed from this quarter. Thus, there is developed movements full of life, and, if we have not always an overpowering catastrophe, a knot is tied, and we are anxious to see it untied, which it always is, with agreeable certainty and ease.

"The slow movement is, as a rule, founded on the song (das Lied); it is consequently, according to its first plan, frequently bipartite, but the plan has only exceptionably been developed with the breadth and richness which have become usual in the first movement; the single or manifold repetition of the fundamental theme, which, in conformity with the custom at that time, did not often occur without ornament and decoration, easily led to a treatment in the fashion of variations. In every case, the first requisite was the invention of a melodious movement, important both in substance and form, which should not be appreciated simply as a motive through the treatment, or from connection with others, but which, of itself, afforded a full and satisfactory expression for sentiment. It has already been noticed (I., p. 557) how the tendency, followed by the feeling of the time, favoured the development of exactly such movements, which undoubtedly must be classed among the most beautiful creations even of Mozart. These simple and impressive melodies, beautifully articulated and steadily carried out, which die away, as in a long full breath, redolent of warm deep feeling, without sentimental weakness, appear to be a happy inheritance of that period, which produced likewise the purest strains of our lyric poetry. In the repose by which they are mostly pervaded, the pleasure and satisfaction of artistic creation are superseded in an uncommon manner; in the unlaboured and easy way also in which, by a partial working out of the fundamental thoughts, by variations of the latter, by freely introduced and often contrasting under parts, these monuments are built up, without departing from the fundamental tone of feeling first laid down, we perceive how naturally and freely this mode of expression forced its way through the musical sentiment and soared to such a height. Without entering here into the details of the working-out, we may still direct attention to the delicacy and grace with which Mozart, in this case also, understood how to prepare and bring about the conclusion, so as to lead the hearer up to it with a continuous feeling of perfect satisfaction."

(To be continued.)

MARRIAGE.

On Saturday, 4th February, at the French Ambassador's chapel, and afterwards at St. George's, Hanover-square, by the Rev. J. E. Cox, M.A., F.S.A., Vicar of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate, Prosper Sainton, Esq., of No. 6, Davies-street, Berkeley-square, to Charlotte Helen Dolby, of No. 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square.

DEATH.

On Monday, the 30th ult., F. W. Collard, Esq., senior of the eminent firm of Collard and Collard, aged 88.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words)	0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 11TH, 1860.

No chief of an administration is more provident than Mr. Robert Bowley, General Manager of the Crystal Palace, Sydenham—none more vigilant and progressive. He is indeed the very Argus and Briareus of that princely establishment. His hundred eyes are always open, impressible to every change in the artistic atmosphere. His hundred hands are ever stretched out ready to grasp, to defend, or to invite. But occasion is not at all times subservient to poor mortal behests; nor is the race always to the swift, nor the battle to the strong. The success of the late Handel Festival Commemoration was triumphant. No one will dispute the fact. But to find a like opportunity for a similar demonstration, it were necessary to await the term of a century. To attend on so long a period would hardly suit the purpose of our manager; neither would it sort with the impatience of the public. Should the magnificent Handel orchestra rest unused all that time? Should the alterations and improvements carried out on so vast a scale, and at so large an outlay, be turned to no account? Should the expectations raised, and the enthusiasm excited, be permitted to subside? Let no one think it. Something might be originated to allure eager multitudes to the Palace, even though no centenary of Handel's death were available, no half centenary of Mendelssohn's life to act as apology for a jubilee. The almanack might be searched in vain for some renowned composer to lend anniversary of birth or death for a celebration. The dates of the first or last days of Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, and other grand musicians might not fall in seasonably. Must, therefore, music awake no echoes in the crystal halls? Must the voice of the host be silent, and Mr. Costa no longer lead on his forces to unparalleled achievements. Forbid it enterprise, energy, and speculation.

It is intended that a grand musical exhibition shall come off at the Crystal Palace in June next. This affair will not be àpropos of any special occasion or event; neither will it be national or local. No great name will be consulted, nor any particular taste conciliated. Three thousand French choristers, all males, have been invited to come and take part in a festival at Midsummer. That is all we distinctly know at present. Three thousand singers of France, composed of draughts from the most famous choirs in the country, without ladies, are engaged to assist in a great musical solemnity in England. Without being made further acquainted with the details of the proceedings, we may be allowed to speculate on the policy of the undertaking, and the likelihood of its achieving success.

And first, the question naturally arises—are French chorus singers so much better than our own that it is worth while to bring them from all parts of France to sing here? Their superiority as artists established—unless in a very extraordinary degree indeed—would hardly compensate for the loss of the female voices, without the aid of which, we have been accustomed to think, grand and striking effects in a choral performance can seldom be attained. Of course we are to conclude that there are male trebles and altos in the different Gallic choirs; and these in certain kinds of ecclesiastical music, more especially that written for the Romish church, make good substitutes for sopranos and contraltos proper. The female voice, notwithstanding, except in rare cases, has been invariably employed by the greatest masters. As a matter of curiosity, the singing of three thousand men and boys, however, can hardly fail to prove attractive; and that the attraction will prove remunerative, and commensurate with expectation, we have little doubt.

The next thought that occurs is, what the three thousand are to sing. Without the female voices they must be excluded almost in toto from the great oratorios, unless they take upon themselves to make the men do duty for the women, an innovation by no means desirable. Omitting masses and sundry works composed for the catholic services, we can call to mind no music in which so stupendous a body of male singers could be signally employed, excepting, perhaps, the grand finale to the second act of Guillaume Tell—the meeting of the Cantons—which, interpreted by three thousand accomplished male vocalists, might justly be expected to create an extraordinary sensation. This, we confess, would be a treat of the highest order; but even Rossini's colossal choruses would lose something of their effect, if not of their grandeur, by being transplanted to the concert-room. The eye in vain would look for the rush forward of the conspirators and the sudden brandishing of the spears as the infuriated Swiss shouted aloud, "Aux Armes!" Let our neighbours, nevertheless, speak (or rather sing) for themselves.

A third consideration—less artistic, but no less necessary—will be the cost of bringing over from France to London three thousand persons, and keeping them while they remain here. It may be argued that, with economy, the expense would not be considerably greater than that involved in collecting the vast forces of the recent Handel Commemoration from all parts of Great Britain and Ireland. We must remember, however, that a certain number only had to come from distances. But the whole of the French singers are to be conveyed from France, and some from remote parts of the kingdom, Of course, economy being indispensable, special trains might be chartered, and steam-boats hired, and the three thousand be fed and have their hammocks slung, if necessary, at the Crystal Palace. The various Courts—Ceramic, Byzantine, Roman, Alhambra, and Egyptian—would make admirable sleeping booths, and but little clothing would be required, as the patent steam-warming apparatus might be brought into use. Mr. F. Strange, too, would provide the creature comforts at a reduced tariff, so that in reality everything would be expended within the Crystal walls.

After all, we have little doubt of the success of this undertaking. For our own part, we believe that three thousand French choristers may be as good as three thousand English, and Mr. Bowley is too good a judge, and too conscientious a manager, to think merely of playing upon the curiosity and credulity of the public. We shall refrain from saying any more at present, and wait until the programme is issued. It may then appear that there is still more in the speculation than we imagined. We shall be glad to find it so. Every great musical undertaking has our warmest hopes, and shall have our warmest support.

"LONG live the "Cour Impériale de Paris! and Long live M. Perrot de Chézelles, who presided thereover on the 28th of January! !"—exclaimed Panurge, in a high state of "exaltation."

"It rejoiceth me," said Pantagruel, "that thou hast grace sufficient to call down blessings on anyone or anything. But wherein doth the special merit of this Court and this President consist, that thou indulgest in joy so immoderate?"

"Why the Court, being the Upper Court, hath confirmed the profound proposition promulgated by the Lower Court, to the effect that that which supporteth is higher than that which is supported," said Panurge.

"Thy discourse," said Pantagruel, "is exceedingly harsh and crabbed,—with thy upper and thy lower,—and thy active and thy passive. Yet it mindeth me of something whereon we conversed profoundly some months ago——"

"To be sure it doth," quoth Panurge. "Even now I am referring to the disputed authorship of the piece called Cri-cri, which, as a piece of writing, was stupid as its name, but which was rendered delectable by the introduction of a very clever trick.

"I know,—I know"—exclaimed Pantagruel. "My memory is suddenly lighted up with the most dazzling splendour. The Tribunal of the Seine decided that the machinist, who had kept up the rubbish by means of his good ropes and pulleys, should share the rights of authorship. And a most wise decision too! That was the broad case; but thou wilt glad my heart if thou titillatest my mnemonic faculties with a recapitulation of the particular facts."

"Look ye now," said Panurge, punctuating his sentences by the pressure of his right finger on the divers digits of his left hand—"look ye now. MM. Hugelmann, Borsat, and Fanfernot"—

"The names much cheer and refresh mine ear," remarked Pantagruel, smacking his lips.

"That is nothing to the purpose," said Panurge peevishly. "Well, these three gentlemen"—

"Hugelmann, Borsat, and Fanfernot," murmured Pantagruel, as if the rolling words gave him exquisite pleasure.

"Those three," continued Panurge, "took the piece called Cri-cri to M. Billion, of the Cirque-Impériale who accepted it."

"Did he though," said Epistemon. "Then wits might declare that he was a man of a billion."

"Fools might declare so," observed Panurge, with infinite contempt. "Fanfernot was the chief inventor of the tricks."

"Therefore will we call him the trickster," said Pantagruel, with a smile.

"The literary part of the work was done by the others."

"Hugelmann and Borsat without Fanfernot," cried Pantagruel, with infinite satisfaction.

"Then there was a certain Mdlle. Thys, who swore that she had something to do with the authorship of Cri-cri," continued Panurge.

"And her share of the work was ————?" asked Pantagruel.

"May I be smothered in onions if I know," growled Panurge; "but she was allowed her share of the pay. Last comes one M. Raignard, who declares that he, not Fanfernot, invented the chief trick in the piece."

"Truly an admirable assembly," exclaimed Pantagruel. "Here are Hugelmann and Borsat, who write and don't trick; here is Fanfernot, who doth not write but tricketh generally; here is Raignard, who tricketh not generally but specially; lastly, here is Mdlle. Thys, who doth something so obscure that history forbeareth to describe it. We will invite them all over to London, and entertain them with whelks."

"These were all put on the same footing by the Tribunal of the Seine," continued Panurge, "which admitted the claim of Raignard, and decided that although in the case of a purely literary work, the decorations were merely accessary, it is otherwise in the case of a féerie, where the eye is addressed rather than the intellect. In this latter case, the inventors of the tricks should equitably be ranked among the authors of the piece."

"What wisdom aboundeth on the banks of the Seine!" sighed Pantagruel, after a few moments of profound meditation.

"Against this decision," continued Panurge, "Borsat and Fanfernot appealed"—

"But not Hugelmann or the lovely incomprehensible Thys?" observed Pantagruel, inquiringly.

"No," ejaculated Panurge—"and the wiser they. For lo! the Imperial Court hath confirmed the decision of the Court below, and therefore Raignard is allowed not only a fifth part of the profits gained by the elaborators of Cri-cri, but his name may figure on the bills as one of the authors."

"I will send for one of those bills," said Pantagruel seriously, "and I will post it up in my palace, that I may see what great glory is attained by ingenuity, when it hath wisdom for its ally."

Habent sua fata—not only books, but also operas. Of this we have a striking example in the bad and good fortune which has attended Rooslan and Loodmila, said to be the masterpiece of the late Michael Glinka, who was certainly the most remarkable composer of modern Russia. Glinka had chosen for his subject the legend after which his opera is named, and which had already suggested to Pouschkin his earliest and one of his most beautiful poems; but he had considerable trouble in finding a librettist, and when at last the book was begun, it appeared almost impossible to get it completed. From various causes, first one author, then another, had to abandon the work, until, before it was finished, as many as ten different writers had been employed upon it, and finally, we are told by a Russian critic, it could only be compared to a figure having an eye by one artist, a hand by a second, an ear by a third, and so on.

Glinka had to write the music under very trying circumstances, but it was the best music he had ever composed. The opera was put into rehearsal, announced for performance at the Tsirk Theatre, and the public expected something wonderful, but—as afterwards appeared—something quite different from what Glinka had produced.

Just before the night fixed for the first representation, Petrova, the popular prima donna, and the only vocalist capable of doing justice to the principal part, was taken ill. The opera, however, was brought out, was coldly received, and before Petrova was sufficiently recovered to sing, Rooslan and Loodmila had been pronounced a failure. The Russian critics of the present day attribute this failure to the bad taste of the public, who had previously received with enthusiasm the Life for the Czar, by the same composer, an opera of a much lighter character, and which owed its success chiefly to the national character of the principal melodies. Glinka's friends behaved worse, even, than the public, for they tormented him until he at last consented to alter his score, and he was so mortified at this want of appreciation, that he ceased from that time to take any interest in operatic music, and never afterwards wrote for the stage.

Rooslan and Loodmila, after being remodelled, was played for a time at the Tsirk theatre, until owing to the all-absorbing success of the Italian Company, it was thought advisable to transfer the Russian opera from St. Petersburgh to Moscow. Glinka's masterpiece produced but little impression in Moscow, where the operas of Donizetti and Bellini were alone in fashion; it was soon laid aside, and when the Moscow opera-house was burned down in 1854, all the magnificent costumes and scenery belonging to Roosland and Loodmila were consumed.

After Glinka's death, in 1857, the St. Petersburgh Philharmonic Society gave a concert consisting entirely of his compositions; but some of the best pieces from Rooslan and Loodmila could only be imperfectly rendered, in consequence of the part for the military band—written with especial care, it would appear—having been lost or destroyed. The same year, one of the most esteemed singers of Russia gave the second act of Rooslan and Loodmila for his benefit. This was considered a praiseworthy but daring experiment, and it was not repeated.

In 1858, however, another artist, convinced of the great merit of the work, and determined, if possible, to force the public to understand it, announced the entire opera for his benefit; and although it had now been neglected for upwards of fourteen years, the Tsirk Theatre went to the expense of producing it in the most elaborate style. Petroff, the singer who caused the revival of Glinka's ill-fated opera, had but a slight part to perform—which made his action the more meritorious—and he is said to have filled it to perfection. All the other vocalists distinguished themselves by their zeal and efficiency; but the conductor had taken upon himself to mutilate the work in a shameful manner: the overture was hurried through at a ridiculous pace. Several instrumental movements were curtailed, and one of the first scenes, in which the prophetess of the legend foretells the advent of Pouschkin, the Great Russian poet, was cut out. Critics protested, published a list of the pieces omitted or disfigured, compared the tempi of the Tsirk Theatre with those marked by Glinka in the original manuscript, and M. Stassaff, in the Russian Messenger (from which we obtained all our information on the subject), summed up the misdoings of the musical director by saying that he "could not have treated the opera worse if it had been the most frivolous production of the Italian school."

At last, fire, which has performed such contrary offices in Russia—now destroying whole villages, at another time burning out legions of Frenchmen from the very heart of the Empire—came to the assistance of Glinka. It had served him a bad turn in Moscow—though it must be remembered that the Moscow edition of the work was not Rooslan and Loodmila in its original form, but Rooslan and Loodmila as altered to meet the views of some of Glinka's friends; at St Petersburgh it made up for any former injuries it might have inflicted on the composer, by devouring the mutilated score, and the whole of the fragmentary orchestral parts—whose fate was unavoidably shared by the theatre itself, together with all the scenery and decorations. The musical director escaped.

It is of course a great pity that the Tsirk Theatre should be burned to the ground, but the musical public of Russia may congratulate itself on the Tsirk's perversion of Rooslan and Loodmila not having been saved. It is surely better not to hear music at all for a time, than to hear it misrendered, with a chance of the misrendering turning into a tradition. During nearly twenty years, that have elapsed since its first production, Glinka's principal work must have been studied by numbers of persons, it has passed through a great deal of criticism, and two conflagrations, it has been rescued by fire from the hands of a merciless arranger (who appears to be the Alary of St. Petersburgh), and let us hope that it is only reserved now to be performed—and appreciated—in its integrity.

GLASGOW MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

WE have already at some length directed attention to the principal features of the recent great musical gathering in the North. We have shown the benefits likely to accrue from an undertaking of such magnitude, the impulse it is calculated to give to art, and the effect it will create on the popular mind. That a real feeling and taste for music existed in the minds of Scotchmen, no one pretended to doubt; but that, out of the capital, the people had not opportunities of hearing the best music, and that consequently it was not understood and appreciated, were supposed to be facts not to be disputed. The Glasgow Festival can only be accepted as an inauguration of a better state of things; and no reason can be shown why Glasgow should not compete with Birmingham, Norwich, Bradford, and Leeds, in establishing a triennial festival. The members of the Choral Union, we have no doubt, will not remain idle after the success they achieved, but endeavour to place the "city of the saut herring" on a par with less populous and renowned cities of the South.

The Festival was an unequivocal success. It opened on Tuesday evening with Elijah. The principal solo singers were Madame Clara Novello, Miss Dolby, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Lockey and

Mr. Weiss. The opening chorus "Help, Lord," although a little tremulous at first, satisfied every listener as to the quality of the choir. Power, precision, energy, correctness of intonation, were alike manifested. Indeed, the chorus merited the highest praise throughout the oratorio, and many did not hesitate to express an opinion, that finer choral singing could not be heard in London. Much of the perfection at which the members have arrived is undoubtedly due to W. H. Albert Lambert, the conductor, who has been for months indefatigable in exercising the whole corps. The solo singers were all in admirable force, but the sensation they created may be readily surmised.

On Wednesday night a miscellaneous concert was given. There were no important pieces for the orchestra besides the overtures to the Zauberflote, The Naïades, and Oberon. The latter was encored. The vocal pieces comprised most of the favourites of the day, which, of course, were in some measure new to most of the Glasgow folk. Mr. Lambert was incapacitated from attending, and Mr. Horsley filled the place of conductor.

Mr. Horsley's, new oratorio, Gideon produced on Thursday evening was the novelty of the festival, and excited much curiosity and interest. The composer himself conducted; the band and chorus had bestowed infinite pains on the rehearsals, and the soloists were instigated by a real brotherly and sisterly affection, to give the work every chance of succeeding. The principal singers were Madame Clara Novello, Miss Witham, Mr. Lockey, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Lockey, and Mr. Winn. The oratorio was eminently successful. A brief analysis (without criticism) of the musical arrangement of the work (the book has already been described) may not be out of place, en attendant—a detailed account from the pen of a competent judge, which we have in hand:—

"The Oratorio opens with an overture, based on the war cry, 'The sword of the Lord and of Gideon,' and this cry is more fully developed towards the conclusion of the piece. The Israelites, driven into the mountains of Gilboa, assemble in the valley of Ophra, and there lament their misfortunes in a lengthy chorus (G minor) 'Woe! woe! to Israel,' and, notwithstanding that one of their prophets (Mr. Lockey) reminds them of the wonders God had before wrought for his chosen, they continue their lamentations in an allegro agitato chorus (D minor), in the same strain as the former. Ebed (Mr. Weiss), craftily prevails upon them to turn to Baal for comfort, and they accordingly are about to offer a sacrifice, having first rendered praise in a song-like chorus 'He is a god of laughter' (D major), when Zillah (Madame Novello) in an air (E flat), half persuades them to forego their intention; but Ebed tauntingly asks them "Fools! shall a woman bend ye to her fancy?' and they at once break into a chorus 'Baal! mighty Baal' (F major), in honour of their god. Not only will they not hear the prophetess, Zillah, but they take an heifer of her flock to sacrifice to Baal. The remonstrance of the prophetess causes them frantically to cry out for Zillah's death, but the appearance of Gideon (Mr. Sims Reeves) upon the scene restrains their wrath, and in a part chorus, 'Retire we, Heaven speaks by Gideon's voice' (G major), they retire, and Gideon returns to his father's house, where, in a musing recitative, followed by an air, 'O mighty God of Israel' (E major), he prays for divine direction and support, and is encouraged by a chorus of angels (A major), female voices only, 'Go, in this thy might!' and in answer to his question, 'Oh, my Lord, wherewith shall I save Israel?' he is directed how to proceed against the Midianite; but before doing so, he, with his servants, destroys the shrines of Baal (chorus, D minor, 'Down with the shrines of darkness'), and rears an altar to the living God. Zillah, wandering disconsolate, meets with Gideon, and together they unite in praise to the Almighty. The duet is written in F major. The theme of praise to God, and prayer for deliverance, is continued in a double part choral (B flat), and with its conclusion the first portion of the work is brought to an end. The second part opens with the discovery by the Baal worshippers of the overthrow of their altars, and, along with Ebed, they loudly cry for Gideon's death, but Zillah and Joash intercede for him, the latter declaring 'In deep, still trance my son is sleeping,' whereupon Zillah, in a song (B flat), 'Thou givest Thy beloved sleep,' describes the blessed influence of rest. A series of recitatives and airs follows, in which the near approach of the Midianitish host is told, and the people, in their strait, cry to God. A solo (A flat), 'O, Israel, dear Israel,' and an unaccompanied quartet (C minor), 'Unwonted awe pervades each heart!' Gideon now declares 'The spirit of the Lord is upon me,' and, in an air (E minor), asks for divine help. The people, encouraged, declare their trust in the Lord—chorus (C major), 'All nations compassed us round about'—and prepare to follow Gideon against the camp of the Midianites. The third part opens with a war march (A minor), in the camp of the enemy, and is followed by a laudatory chorus (A major), 'We have stormed in our might.' It is written for tenors and basses only. Gideon, doubtful of his own powers, and apprehensive of the result, for now but three hundred men remained with him, consults his Creator in a recitative (F major), preceded by a symphony, 'Lord, who am I?' and as his fears vanish he breaks out into an air, 'Lord, in youth's eager years,' and is then commanded to 'Arise! get thee down into the host—take Pharaoh, thy servant with thee!' The remainder of the oratorio is taken up with the battle, which is described by angel witnesses, as the people rush impetuously forward with the cry, 'The sword of the Lord and of Gideon,' and is concluded by the chorus, 'Welcome, meek and royal heart!' and with another, wherein the glory is ascribed to the Most High, 'All glory be to God on high,' both in A major."

At the termination of the first part, and at the end of the performance, which we have intimated was eminently successful, Mr. Horsley was called for and received with the utmost enthusiasm. Mr. Horsley conducted the whole of the oratorio, and displayed infinite tact in his arduous labours.

On Friday night, The Messiah was given. Of this performance it is only necessary to say, that it attracted, as it does invariably at all the festivals, the greatest crowd of the week, and was executed to the entire satisfaction of all present. It is calculated that a good balance will remain for the charities after all expenses are paid.

M. AND MADAME GASSIER are expected shortly to arrive in London for the season.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—It is rumoured that a Grand Rifle, or Volunteer, Ball, will be given at the New Floral Hall, attached to the Royal Italian Opera, on the 8th of March, under the most distinguished patronage.

EXETER HALL.—Last night the choruses of Elijah were rehearsed by the London Amateur Contingent of the Great Handel Choir, numbering 1,600 voices, under the direction of Mr. Costa.

MYDDELTON HALL.—The first of a series of weekly concerts took place in the above hall on Monday evening last. The principal artists were Mad. Vinning, Mrs. G. A. Cooper, and Miss Fanny Reeves, Messrs. Elliot Galer, G. A. Cooper, and Viotti Collins. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. The music was of a miscellaneous character, and several pieces were encored, amongst which were Madame Vinning's "Within a mile of Edinbro," Miss Reeves' "If I could have my way," and "Come into the garden, Maud," by Mr. Galer; also a new song by J. Mallandaine, "I'd rather be a soldier," rendered with considerable effect by Mr. Galer, and enthusiastically redemanded. Mr. Frank Mori, conducted, with his usual ability.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Those who were fortunate enough to be present at Exeter Hall on Friday, February 3rd, are not likely soon to forget the remarkably fine performance of that evening, when Mendelssohn's Hymn of Praise and Handel's Dettingen "Te Deum" were given before an audience which literally crammed that most incommodious building to repletion, many being turned away, unable to find even standing room. The Lobgesang (Hymn of Praise) was the first and, unhappily, the last of three great works which the illustrious composer had projected under the title of Sinfoina Cantata, and was originally produced at Leipsic, at a festival to commemorate the four hundredth anniversary of the discovery of printing, when the statue of Guttenburg was inaugurated. Its first performance in England was at the Birmingham Festival, in 1840, since which time it has been frequently heard at the Exeter Hall and the provincial festivals, but had not till within a few years achieved a success commensurate with its merits, which may be in a great measure attributed to imperfect execution consequent upon its immense difficulties, which tax singers and players to a much higher degree than any other work by the same composer. Recent performances, however, and especially the performance of Friday night, have satisfied all but the most hypercritical, who, "more nice than wise," would discover slight flaws and minute short-comings even in perfection itself. The general, indeed we may say unanimous, opinion of connoisseurs was, that so effective a rendering of the work had never previously been heard in this or, indeed, any other country, and with such high praise to award, it is a matter of difficulty where to begin. Place aux dames—let us commence with Madame Clara Novello, whom we deeply regret to hear intends taking leave of the public this season. A void will be thus created difficult to fill up; indeed, for the moment, impossible, for where are we to find a voice of such quality combined with the musicianlike knowledge she possesses in so eminent a degree? Mad. Novello was received both by the audience and orchestra with long-continued applause, and sustained her reputation throughout. The air, "Praise thou the Lord," the short solo, "The night is departing," the duet with Miss Martin, who most efficiently supplied the place of toe clever Miss Fanny Rowland (prevented from appearing by indisposition), at a very short notice, and the duet with Mr. Sims Reeves, "My song shall always be Thy mercy," were, one and all, eminently satisfactory. Never has Mr. Reeves sung more magnificently than upon this occasion. The plaintive first air, the picturesque solo, "The sorrows of death," in which occurs the wonderful passage, "Watchman, will the night soon pass?" literally thrilled the audience, and the succeeding grand chorus, "The night is departing," produced a sensation not readily forgotten. The choruses were, one and all, given with a precision and attention to light and shade far beyond any previous occasion; and the excellence of the band showed to the greatest advantage, not only in the accompaniments, but in the introductory orchestral symphony, the three movements of which were given to perfection. Of the Dettingen "Te Deum" so entirely different in character, we may also speak in terms of unreserved praise. Each a work of thanksgiving—one produced at a commemoration of the most peaceful—the other in celebration of the most warlike art—each is alike admirable. The majesty and grandeur of Handel formed a wonderful contrast (neither suffering) to the more elaborate and highly coloured beauties of Mendelssohn, and appeared to be as thoroughly enjoyed by the audience, who, in both instances, as usual, defied the orthodox regulations, and although they did not encore, by no means refrained from applause. The solos were exclusively allotted to the bass voice, in accordance with the original intention of Handel, and when we say that Signor Belletti was the soloist, our readers may be satisfied that an irreproachable performance was the result. To Mr. T. Harper, of course, fell the trumpet obbligato to "Thou art the King of Glory," and we believe ourselves fully justified in saying, that no other player living, native or foreign, could have played it like him. The great success of this performance has fully justified the Society in announcing its repetition for Friday, the 17th instant.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION have announced their First Subscription Concert, for this season, to take place on Wednesday Evening next, February 15th, at St. James's Hall. The performance will consist of Mendelssohn's Psalm," "Hear my Prayer, O God!" and several new part-songs, by Messrs. Benedict, Berger, and H. Smart, with choir of 200 voices. Mdlle. Parepa and Mdlle. Marie Wieck are engaged. M. Benedict is, as before, the conductor.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.

UNLIKE most of his predecessors in the art of conjuring, Herr Wiljalba Frikell has established himself in this country as a permanent promoter of amusement, and, when other entertainments recommence, an exhibition of his feats is anticipated as one of the natural events of the season. His elevation above a host of competitors is due not only to his extraordinary skill, but also to the circumstance that he was the first to revive that genuine legerdemain which had almost become forgotten amid the superabundance of mechanical ingenuity. Instead of training his fingers to the performance of invisible movements, the modern necromancer had begun to invest his capital in a glittering apparatus, which not only dazzled the eyes, but perplexed the investigation of the spectators, so that manual dexterity was rendered almost superfluous. It was in opposition to this mechanical school of conjuring, that Herr Wiljalba Frikell, a Finn by birth, and probably sprung from a race of "Schamanns," made his appearance some two years since, and people accustomed to behold a collection of shining objects that looked like the stock-in-trade of some colossal silversmith, were surprised to find an unassuming little gentleman stationed behind an ordinary table, and prepared to amuse them with the aid of such simple expedients as hats, handkerchiefs, and goblets. We do not mean to say that Herr Frikell's tricks derive no aid whatever from mechanical contrivance, but merely that mechanism is not obtruded, and is but an accessory to sleight of hand.

The series of performances which he commenced on Wednesday, and which are to terminate with the present week, are characterised by the melancholy word "farewell;" and Herr Frikell, to take leave of his many patrons, chooses a wider field of operation than any in which he has hitherto appeared. Leaving the Polygraphic Hall, he occupies the large room in St. James's Hall, where he has hitherto been visited by a numerous body of spectators.

BELFAST—(From our Correspondent).—The Classical Harmonists' Society performed Judas Maccabæus on the 31st of January, and gave an opera recital on the following night. Der Freischütz was the opera selected for the honour of being the first ever produced in this manner at Belfast, and we are glad to say the performance was most successful, and has created quite a sensation. The principal singers were, Madame Weiss, Mr. E. J. Wells, Mr. Benson, and Mr. Weiss—the parts of Cuno and Kilian being taken by members of the Society. The local band was largely augmented by gentlemen from London, Manchester, Dublin, &c., and was, perhaps, the finest ever assembled in Belfast. They played the overture and the incantation music with immense spirit. The chorus numbered about seventy voices. The audience frequently testified their delight by great applause, and Mr. Weiss was compelled to repeat the celebrated Trinklied. The Bridesmaids' chorus and the Huntsmen's chorus were also encored, the four solos in the former being taken by members of the chorus. In the second part of the programme, the duet on French horns, by Herren F. and H. Stoeckel was very remarkable. Herr Elsner's solo on the violoncello was clever, and well received. Madame Weiss was encored in G. B. Allen's new ballad, "Dennis," when she substituted another new one by the same composer, called "Katty." Miss Wells was encored in "The soldier tired," and Mr. Weiss in his own setting of Longfellow's "Slave's dream." Mr. Benson only escaped an encore in "The meeting of the waters," through the lateness of the hour—nearly half-past eleven, at which time scarcely any one had left the hall. The National Anthem brought the concert to a close. Mr. Allen was conductor, and Mr. H. Loveday leader.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

GLENFIELD PATENT STARCH,

USED IN THE ROYAL LAUNDRY,

AND PRONOUNCED BY HER MAJESTY'S LAUNDRESS, to be THE FINEST STARCH SHE EVER USED.

Sold by all Chandlers, Grocers, &c. &c.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

ADOLPH GOLLMICK.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Vive la Danse, Valse ...	3	0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3	0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3	0	Azelia	3	0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3	0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3	0

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC PERRY.

			s.	d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to		Miss Baron	3	0
The Wardour Mazurka	,,	Lord Arundell	4	0
The Vancouver Quadrille	,,	T. B. Chilty, Esq.	3	0
The Valentia Polka	,,	George Griffiths, Esq.	3	0
The Augusta Mazurka	,,	Miss C. A. Thistlewayte	2	6
The Avondale Schottische	,,	Miss Barron	2	0
The Helena Polkas	,,	The Misses Northey	3	0
The Pauline Valses	,,	The Misses Warner	3	0
The Castellon Polka	,,	Miss Fanny Hutchinson	2	0
The Cotham Polka	,,	Miss Mary Lorymer	2	0
The Promenade Polkas	,,	Miss Kirwan	2	0
The Salopian Quadrilles	,,	Miss Brown.	3	0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each :—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET.'
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.,
Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

"These ballads are beautiful compositions, thoroughly English in their style and character. The words, always selected with literary taste, are set to music with the utmost attention, not only to sentiment and expression, but to all the niceties of accent and of prosody."

"The two trios, which are for female voices, and calculated for the accomplished lady-singers who are now found in every social circle, are among the most attractive drawing-room music that we have heard for a long time."—Spectator.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dedié à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dedié à Edouard Rocckel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRÉ IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

Published this Day. Price 2s. 6d.

AN EASY AND POPULAR EDITION OF

"O TENDER SHADOW,"

SONG,

FROM MEYERBEER'S DINORAH.

Adapted for the use of amateurs unable to accomplish all the passages in the original edition, by M. Jules de Glimes. With English and Italian words, price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Lately published,

THREE NEW SONGS

BY

EMILE BERGER.

Price 2s. each.

SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.

From the Daily News.

"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.

A COMPLETE EDITION OF

GLUCK'S OPERA,

IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,

FOR

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S

CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 3s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lobge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

Just published, in post 8vo., cloth,

A COLLECTION OF WORDS OF 2,270 ANTHEMS, with 452 Biographical Accounts of Authors, &c. By B. St. J. B. Joule, Esq., Fellow of the Genealogical and Historical Society of Great Britain, and Honorary Organist of St. Peter's Church, Manchester. Price 6s. 6d. The Author will be happy to make arrangements for the supply of a number of copies to any cathedral, or other church, either in cloth or sheets.

HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.

JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL, and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply to BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London, sole agents

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms

POPULAR JUVENILE MUSIC.

PIANOFORTE RECREATIONS FOR JUVENILE PERFORMERS.

Price One Shilling each number.

FIRST SERIES—"SATANELLA."

1. The Power of Love.
2. The Slaves' Chorus.
3. Our hearts are not our own.
4. Oh would she but name.

SECOND SERIES—"DINORAH."

1. The Shadow Air.
2. Santa Maria.
3. Fanciulle (canzonet).
4. Hunting Song.

THIRD SERIES—"MARTHA."

1. M' apparì tutt' amor.
2. Drinking Song.
3. Servants' Chorus.
4. Finale to First Act.

FOURTH SERIES—CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.

1. Beautiful Star, and Ring de Banjo.
2. Good News from Home.
3. We are coming Sister Mary, and Walt for the Waggon,
4. Nelly Gray.
5. Hard Times.
6. I'm off to Charlestown.

FIFTH SERIES—DANCE MUSIC.

1. Maud Valse,
2. Königsberg Polka.
3. Satanella Quadrille.
4. Pantomime Galop.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS.

BOOSEY & SONS' beg to announce that they will publish in the course of next week, an entirely

NEW AND COMPLETE EDITION OF THE

CELEBRATED MAZURKAS

OF

FREDERICK CHOPIN,

EDITED (and with a Preface) BY

J. W. DAVISON.

They will be published in one vol. (music size), stiff sides, with an excellent portrait of Chopin, price 8s.; or handsomely bound in cloth, price 10s 6d.

Also in the Press,

A NEW EDITION OF MENDELSSOHN'S

SONGS WITHOUT WORDS,

EDITED BY

J. W. DAVISON.

On large paper, uniform with Chopin's Mazurka.

Holles-street, 4th February.

MUSICAL INSTRUCTION.—Clarke's Alphabet of Music, 6d.; Clarke's Catechism of the Rudiments of Music, 60th edition, 1s.; Clarke's Exercises on Harmony and Thorough Bass, 24 numbers, each 1s., complete 15s.; Hamilton's Dictionary of 8500 Musical Terms, 60th edition, 1s.; Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Pianoforte, enlarged by Czerny, 245th edition 4s.; Hamilton's Modern Instructions for singing, 16th edition, 5s.—London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, Regent-street, W., Publishers to the Queen.

MUSIC.—To all PROFESSORS and TEACHERS, and the RETAIL TRADE in general.—In consequence of important alterations in terms, Professors, Governesses, and the Trade, are invited to apply for ROBERT COCKS and CO.'S NEW CIRCULAR of TERMS. A Card must accompany such application.

"VOICE OF THE WESTERN WIND."—A New Song by J. R. THOMAS; (Poetry by EDMUND C. STEDMAN): 2s. Lists of Mr. Thomas's latest ballads and songs gratis and postage free.
London: Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, W., and all musicsellers.

BOOSEYS PART-SONG MISCELLANY: a Collection of Original Compositions by celebrated composers. Price Fourpence each number:—

		Poetry by	Music by
No. 1.	"Welcome, Heavenly Peace" ..	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
2.	"The Bud is on the Bough" ..	Frances Bennoch ..	Frank Mori.
3.	"And were they not the Happy Days"	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
4.	"Beauty is Dead"	Charles Swain ..	Frank Mori.
5.	"Who shall be Fairest"	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
6.	"O spare my tender Flowers" ..	Charles Mackay ..	Frank Mori.
7.	"Ripe Strawberries"	W. S. Passmore ..	J. L. Hatton.
8.	"Smile, O Heaven! upon the Day"	E. Falconer ..	M. W. Balfe.
9.	"Sancta Maria"	H. F. Chorley ..	Meyerbeer.
10.	"A Legend of the Rhine"	.. .. ..	Henry Smart.
11.	"The Hostess's Daughter"	Uhland	Henry Smart.
12.	"The Rover"	E. M. S.	Henry Smart.
13.	"The Three Wishes"	J. Ellison	Dr. Pech.

To be continued.

The above are supplied to the Profession and Societies at the rate of 13 as 12 at 3d. each, or 50 copies at 2d. each. Any number post-free for 4d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

MISS ARABELLA GODDARD'S SOLOS.

LEOPOLD DE MEYER'S TROVATORE, as performed by Miss Goddard at the Bradford Festival, 5s.

BENEDICT'S TWO NEW FANTAISIES:
ERIN, on Irish Airs .. .. 4 0 | CALEDONIA, on Scotch Airs .. 4 0
Composed expressly for Miss Goddard, and performed by her throughout England, Ireland, and Scotland.

NE PLUS ULRA. by WOLFFL.—A new edition of this celebrated Sonata as performed by Miss Goddard, with a very interesting Introduction by J. W. Davison, Esq., containing an account of the Composer's Life and Compositions, Price 5s.

THALBERG'S THREE FANTASIAS on "Home Sweet Home." "The Last Rose of Summer," and "Lillie Dale," in one book (large size), price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

To be ready in a few days, a Second and Cheaper Edition of the celebrated

OPERATIC ALBUM,

In crimson cloth, price 12s.

The original edition, with illustrations, and superbly bound, may still be had.

This unrivalled collection of operatic music contains 100 Gems from the whole of the best Modern Operas, including, Martha, La Traviata, Il Trovatore, Louisa Miller, Rigoletto, Ernani, Les Vêpres, Sonnambula, Norma, Puritani, Don Pasquale, Lucrezia Borgia, Lucia di Lammermoor, Linda, Elisire, Fille du Régiment, Robert le Diable, and Les Huguenots, all arranged for the Pianoforte Solo, by Nordmann.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.

Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.

Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

LAURENT'S UNRIVALLED WALTZES.

 The average sale of the following Waltzes is from 4,000 to 20,000 each set.

	s.	d.
Sicilian Vespers Waltz .. .. (Illustrated in colours) ..	4	0
Donna Julia Waltz .. .. ,, ..	4	0
Beloved Star Waltz (on "Thou art so near" by Reichardt) ,, ..	4	0
Dinorah Waltz .. .. ,, ..	4	0
Satanella Waltz .. .. ,, ..	4	0
Lord Lovell's Waltz .. .. (Illustrated) ..	3	0
Christy's Minstrels' Waltz .. .. ,, ..	3	0
Summer Bloom Waltz .. .. ,, ..	3	0

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LAURENT'S BELOVED STAR VALSE (companion to the Maud Valse). Illustrated in colours. Price 4s. From the Liverpool Mail:—"Reichardt's beautiful Lied ('Beloved Eye'), deservedly one of the most charming and popular songs of the day, has been transformed by Mr. Laurent into a most suave and well-marked waltz, which we may naturally hope to find in scores of ball programmes this and succeeding winters." Boosey and Son's, Holles-street.

THE SERPENTINE QUADRILLE, by Burchardt, on the most popular melodies of the day, with a comic illustration of skating on the Serpentine, in colours by Brandard. Price 3s. From the Liverpool Mail:—'The Serpentine Quadrille' (which is, by the way, illustrated with much humour and spirit), contains some two dozen of the most popular airs of the day, and so admirably have they been blended that the result is a mélange which will at once set feet in motion and call up most pleasant reminiscences, for though the ear is tickled every few minutes with a new—or rather old—tune, the whole of the quadrille is eminently dansante."—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW SONGS

PUBLISHED BY

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee:,
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG,"

Sung by Mr. SANTLEY.

Composed by BENLEY RICHARDS.

Price 3s.

Rouse ye Pallikari,
Men of Suliote, rouse ye,
See on yonder mountain's brow,
Glows the beacon light!
Warlike songs are singing,—
While the trumpets ringing
Call the valiant Pallikari,
To the coming Fight.

What though foes surround us,
Though their chains have bound us,
We will live as freemen live,
Or die as warriors die.
Come with weapons gleaming—
Come with banners streaming,
Raise your glorious battle cry,
Suliote shall be free.

"SYMPATHY,"

POETRY BY ELLIS BELL,

COMPOSED BY E. AGUILAR,

Price 2s.

There should be no despair for you,
While nightly stars are burning;
While evening pours its silent dew,
And sunshine gilds the morning.

There should be no despair, though tears
May flow down like a river:
Are not the best-beloved of years
Around your heart for ever.

They weep, you weep, it must be so;
Winds sigh, as you are sighing,
And winter sheds its grief in snow,
Where autumn's leaves are lying.

Yet, these revive, and from their fate,
Your fate cannot be parted;
Then, journey on, if not elate,
Still, never broken hearted.

"AWAKE LITTLE PILGRIM."

Poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. DRUMMOND.

Composed by MAURICE COSHAM.

Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

"THE DEW-DROP AND THE ROSE."

Poetry by ISABELLA HAMPTON.

Composed by G. A. OSBORNE. Price 2s. 6d.

A dew-drop reclined on a beautiful rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love,
When near that sweet flower, to seek soft repose,
A sunbeam fell down from above!

The dew-drop instinctively felt there had come
A rival—his loved one to prove,
A shelter he sought next the heart of the rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love.

Still nearer came that sunbeam gay,
As he called the rose his bride,
Those words the dew-drop heard him say,
Then drooped his head and died.

"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE."

Poetry by M. A. STODART.

Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE. Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle sir,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

"ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME."

Poetry from the Polish.

Composed by A. REICHARDT. Price 2s. 6d.

Are they meant but to deceive me,
Those fond words that tell of love;
Ah! for ever it would grieve me
If their falsehood I should prove.
Though my heart would trust them gladly,
Though belief, alone, is bliss,
Yet I still must ponder sadly,
Ah! what bitter pain is this.

All my inmost soul concealing,
Shall I sternly answer "No!"
Or each secret wish revealing
Shall my words unfettered flow.
Ever lingering, never speaking,
Here my thoughts shall I express
For my heart if you are seeking,
Strive to find it by a guess.

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
(DÉPOT GÉNÉRAL DE LA MAISON BRANDUS DE PARIS),
244, REGENT STREET, CORNER OF LITTLE ARGYLL STREET.

THE FAVOURITE SONGS OF THE SEASON.

"MARGARETTA,"

By BALFE,

SUNG BY SIMS REEVES.

When I was in my teens,
I loved dear Margaretta,
I know not what it means,
I cannot now forget her.
That vision of the past,
My head is ever craning,
Yet when I saw her last
I could not speak for gazing.
Queen of rural maids,
My dark-eyed Margaretta,
The heart the mind upbraids
That struggles to forget her.

My love I know will seem
A wayward boyish folly;
But, ah! it was a dream,
Most sweet, most melancholy.
Were mine the world's domain,
To me 'twere fortune better,
To be a boy again,
And dream of Margaretta.
Oh! mem'ry of the past,
Why linger to regret her?
My first love was my last,
And that is Margaretta.

"IT WAS FIFTY YEARS AGO."

By HATTON.

It was fifty years ago
In the pleasant month of May,
In the beautiful Pays de Vaud,
A child in its cradle lay.
And Nature, the old nurse,
Took the child upon her knee,
Saying, "Here is a story-book
Thy Father has written for thee."
"Come, wander with me," she said,
"Into regions yet untrod;
And read what is still unread
In the manuscripts of God."

And he wander'd away and away
With Nature, the dear old nurse,
Who sang to him night and day
The rhymes of the universe.
And whenever the way seem'd long,
Or his heart began to fail,
She would sing a more wonderful song,
Or tell a more marv'lous tale.

So she keeps him still a child,
And will not let him go,
Though at times his heart beats wild
For the beautiful Pays de Vaud;
Though at times he hears in his dreams
The Ranzes vaches of old;
And the rush of mountain streams
From glaciers clear and cold.
And the Mother at home says, "Hark!
For his voice I listen and yearn
It is growing late and dark,
And my boy does not return."

"WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO?"

By BERGER,

SUNG BY MISS LOUISA VINNING.

In truth, I think he loves me,
For I have often seen
The blush mount to his temple,
When we alone have been;
His voice, too, often trembles,
As sweet the words do flow;
But if he really loves me,
Why don't he tell me so?
Why don't, &c,

Methinks he is too bashful,
Or, p'raps he's half afraid
I might scorn to hear the words,
He hath so long delayed!
They tell me "that he loves me,"
My friends all seem to know;
But if it is the truth they speak,
Why don't he tell me so?
Why don't, &c.

"SWEETHEART,"

By BALFE,

SUNG BY WILBYE COOPER.

There is a little bird that sings—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"
I know not what his name may be;
I only know he pleases me,
As loud he sings—and thus sings he—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! Sweetheart!"

I've heard him sing, on soft Spring days—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"
And when the sky was dark above,
And wintry winds had stripp'd the grove,
He still poured forth those words of love—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"

And like that bird, my heart, too, sings—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"
When heav'n is dark, or bright and blue,
When trees are bare, or leaves are new,
It thus sings on, and sings of you—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"

What need of other words than these—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"
If I should sing a whole year long,
My love would not be shown more strong,
Than by this short and simple song—
"Sweetheart! sweetheart! sweetheart!"

"DON'T COME TEASING ME, SIR."

By HATTON.

You're wasting time, most precious time,
In dangling daily here, Sir,
Go seek elsewhere your lady fair,
And learn to be sincere, Sir.
The damsel pert with whom you flirt,
Will suit you best, I see, Sir,
So keep away I humbly pray,
And don't come teasing me, Sir.
So keep away, &c.

I've grown quite tir'd of being admir'd,
By fickle swains like you, Sir;
For all you say to me to-day,
Is neither new, nor true, Sir.
Your oft-told tale is old and stale,
Your actions don't agree, Sir,
In short, you find I've changed my mind,
So don't come teasing me, Sir.
So keep away, &c.

The heart in thrall is captive all,
And can't divide allegiance;
It yields to one who shares with none,
It's full and prompt obedience,
True love deals fair, nor seeks to share
A heart that is not free, Sir,
Wins all or none, as I have done,
So don't come teasing me, Sir.
So keep away, &c.

"THE MAID I LOVE HATH MANY A GRACE,"

By HATTON,

SUNG BY MR. LOCKEY.

The maid I love hath many a grace;
How fair her form, how sweet her face!

And can'st thou tell me, Mariner,
Fast sailing o'er the sea,
If ship, or sail, or evening star,
Were half so fair to thee!
The maid I love, &c.

And can'st thou tell me, Cavalier,
Whose arms are gleaming bright,
If steed or arms be half so dear
As her fond eyes of light?
The maid I love, &c.

Or can'st thou tell me, Shepherd Boy,
Watching thy flock with care,
If herds, or sunlit valleys green,
Or skies be half so fair?
If herds, &c.

BOOSEY & SONS, Musical Library, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, February 11, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 7. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

WILLIS'S ROOMS, KING STREET, ST. JAMES'S.—HERR MAURICE NABICH has the honour to announce that he will give an EVENING CONCERT, at the above Rooms, on Tuesday, 21st February, 1860, commencing at 8 o'clock, when he will be assisted by The Islington German Gesang-Verein, and the following eminent artists:—Vocalists, Madame Rudersdorff and Madame Weiss, Herr Weiss and Herr de Becker.—Instrumentalists, pianoforte, Herr E. Pauer; Clarionet, Herr Papé; Flute, Herr Svendsen; and Trombone, Herr Nabich. Conductors, Signor A. Randegger and Herr Wilhelm Ganz. Reserved seats' 7s. 6d., Unreserved seats, 5s. Tickets to be had of Messrs. Chappell and Co., New Bond-street; Messrs. Cramer and Beale, Regent-street: and all the principal Musicsellers. Programme, Parte Prima, Das Deutsche Vaterland, Reichardt; performed by the Gesang-Verein. Septuor, from Lucia, expressly arranged for Herr Nabich, for trombone and piano, by Julius Stern; Herr E. Pauer and Herr Nabich. Der Wanderer, Schubert; Mr. Weiss. Aria, Non jo ne veux pas chanter, Nicolo Isousrd; Madame Rudersdorff. Spinnlied, Littolf; Herr E. Pauer. Recit. e Aria, Deh vieni tardar, Mozart; Madame Weiss. Grand Duetto for piano and Clarionet, C. M. von Weber; Herr Pauer and Herr Papé Aria, D'Egitto, (Nabuco) Verdi; Herr de Becker. Concertino, for trombone, composed and expressly arranged for trombone and piano, F. David; Herr Pauer and Herr Nabich. Parte Seconda. Im Wald, Haeser; performed by the Gesang-Verein. Solo, for flute, Boehm; Herr Svensden. Irish Melody, Denis, G. B. Allen; Madame Rudersdorff, Salut à la Havanne, E. Pauer; Herr E. Pauer. Duetto, La ci darem, Mozart; Madame and Mr. Weiss. Song, Scenes of my youth, J. Benedict; performed on the trombone by Herr Nabich. Canzone Espagnola, No vayais al bosque, ninsa, Gaztambide; Madame Rudersdorff. German Song, Keller; Herr de Becker. Solo, for trombone; Herr Nabich. Galop, Möhring; performed by the Gesang-Verein.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—THE FIRST CONCERT, on Wednesday evening, Feb. 29th, at ST. JAMES'S HALL. Programme—IN MEMORIAM—Spohr's Symphony, "The Power of Sound;" Sterndale Bennett's Overture, "The Wood Nymphs;" Schumann's Overture, "Genevieve;" Rossini's Overture, "The Siege of Corinth." Ernst, Concertina. Violin—Mr. H. G. Blagrove. Vocalists—Mdlle. Parepa and Signor Belletti. Conductor—Mr. ALFRED MELLON. To commence at half-past eight. Doors open at eight o'clock.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.
St. James's Hall, 28, Piccadilly. 36, Baker-street, W.

MISS LAURA BAXTER has the honour to announce to her pupils and friends that she will give a Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert, the particulars of which will be published in future advertisements. Communications to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, 155, Albany-street, Regent's-park, N.W.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERT, Monday evening, Feb. 20th; and Public Rehearsal, To-morrow (Saturday) afternoon, Feb. 18th. Conductor, Dr. WYLDE. To commence at 8 o'clock. Programme:—Part I. Overture, Abenceragen—Cherubini; aria, Signor Belletti—Mozart; concerto in E. minor, violin and orchestra: violin, Mr. H. Blagrove—Spohr; chorus, Ruins of Athens—Beethoven; air with chorus, "Calm is the glassy ocean," Idomeneo, Mdlle. Parepa—Mozart; symphony in B. flat, adagio, allegro, andante, minuetto, finale—Beethoven. Part II. Concerto in G. minor, pianoforte and orchestra, Mdlle. Marie Wieck—Mendelssohn; aria, Signor Belletti—Rossini; fantasia, violoncello, Signor Piatti—Piatti; madrigal, "In going to my lonely bed"—Edwardes, A.D. 1560; aria, Mdlle. Parepa—Rossini; overture—Weber. The subscription for five grand concerts and five public rehearsals is £2 2s. for a reserved sofa stall. Tickets at popular prices, viz.:—For the concert on Monday evening, Feb. 20, area and gallery, 1s.; balcony, 2s., 3s., 5s., and 7s.; area stalls, 5s.; sofa stalls, 10s. 6d. Tickets for the public rehearsal on Saturday afternoon, Feb. 18:—Area and gallery, 1s.; balcony 3s.; area stalls, 5s. Messrs. Cramer and Co., 201, Regent-street; Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; and at the hall.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—The next CONCERT will take place on Thursday, February 23, to commence at half-past 8. Stalls, 4s.: gallery, 2s.: area, 1s.—Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 310, Regent-street; the Hall; and at Keith, Prowse, and Co.'s, 48, Cheapside.

MR. THOMAS (Basso) finding that mistakes are continually occurring, from the fact of there being others in the musical profession of the same name, requests that all communications to him be addressed "Lewis Thomas, 19, Hampshire-terrace, Camden-road Villas, N.W.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 20, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater. W.

MR. LEONARD (Bass) accepts engagements for Concerts, either in London or the Provinces (see notices of Mr. Leonard's performances in The Musical World and The Press nowspapers of the 4th of February). Address, No. 3, Pomeroy-terrace, Old Kent-road, S.E.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS will return to London for the season on Monday, February 27th. All letters to be addressed to him at his residence, 4, Torrington-street, Russell-square, W.C.
Graham's Hotel, Edinburgh, February 16th.

ROYAL VOLUNTEER BALL.—Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.
His Royal Highness The Prince Consort.
His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.
His Royal Highness The Duke of Cambridge,
Commander in Chief.
Her Royal Highness The Duchess of Cambridge.
Her Royal Highness The Princess Mary of Cambridge.

The Royal Volunteer Ball will take place on the evening of Wednesday March 7th, the day on which Her Majesty will hold a Court specially to receive the Officers of the various Volunteer Corps from the different parts of the kingdom.

The Ball will take place in the New Floral Hall, Covent Garden.

The list of the Ladies Patronesses through whom the tickets will be issued will be completed and announced, together with the details of all the arrangements, in the course of a few days.

THE LEEDS MADRIGAL SOCIETY.—On Saturday February 25, will be performed (for the first time in Yorkshire) at the Town Hall, Leeds. P. von Lindpaintner's Oratorio, THE WIDOW OF NAIN. Principal vocalists: Madame Weiss, Miss Hodgson, Mr. Inkersall, and Mr. Weiss, with the Society's powerful Chorus and an efficient Orchestra. Conductor Mr. W. Spark.

TO THE MUSIC TRADE.—"LURLINE."—Wallace's New Grand Opera "LURLINE," now in rehearsal at Covent Garden Theatre, will be ready for delivery, complete, or in single pieces, the morning after the first performance. Also various arrangements of "LURLINE," as solos and duets for the pianoforte. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

WANTED, in the Country, a Pianoforte Tuner. One that can tune the Concertina and Harmonium preferred. Write, and state age, reference, and salary required, &c., to B., Musical World Office.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consol Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to

THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

CHORAL SOCIETIES, PRINTERS, and others, are hereby informed that the English words of Mendelssohn's "Elijah," "Athalie," and "Lauda Sion," also of Costa's "Eli," and of a version recited with the music of Beethoven's "Egmont," are all Copyrights; and that they cannot legally be printed for sale, or otherwise, without the written permission of their Author, William Bartholomew, 31, Brunswick-place, City-road, London, N.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winser, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

JUST PUBLISHED.—"There's nothing like a freshening breeze," new song by Alberto Randegger, composed for and sung with the greatest success by Mr. Thomas, when on his last tour, and always encored. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

OH, DENNIS, DEAR. New Song. By G. B. ALLEN. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE

LONDON ORCHESTRAL ASSOCIATION.

HONORARY MEMBERS:

MDME. ARABELLA GODDARD.
MR. CHARLES HALLE.
M. SAINTON.
HERR JOSEPH JOACHIM.
HERR WIENIAWSKI.
MR. HENRY BLAGROVE.
SIGNOR PIATTI.
SIGNOR BOTTESINI.
HERR REICHARDT.
MR. CHARLES BRAHAM.
MR. W. VINCENT WALLACE.
MR. ALFRED MELLON.
MR. CHAS. EDWARD HORSLEY.
MR. HENRY SMART.
MR. HENRY LAZARUS.
MR. DESMOND RYAN.
MR. LINDSAY SLOPER.
MR. WILLIAM SUDLOW.

VIOLINI PRIMO.
Messrs.
Henry Blagrove } Principals.
H. Weist Hill. }
Viotti Collins.
M. Bezeth.
J. B. Zerbini.
Clementi.
Charles Love.
L. Silberberg.

VIOLINI SECONDO.
Messrs.
W. Watson—Principal.
E. Payton
John Kelly.
A. Streather.
J. March.
G. Betjemann.
B. Simmons.
B. Isaacson.
W. A. Loades.
F. Frewin.
C. Cooke.
T. Wells.
J. Zerbini, Jun.
Ambrose Haynes.
S. Bort.
F. J. Amor.

VIOLI.
Messrs.
Chas. Doyle—Principal.
M. Glanville.
W. H. Webb
H. J. Trust.
J. Thompson.
H. Tothurst.

VIOLONCELLI.
Messrs.
Geo. Collins—Principal.
Horatio Chipp.
W. F. Reed.
W. Aylward.
Henry Goodban.
J. R. Gough.
R. Reed.

CONTRA BASSI.
Messrs.
J. Howell—Principal.
F. S. Pratten.
G. Mount.
Charles White.
J. C. F. Beresford.
C. J. Harper.

FLAUTI.
Messrs.
R. S. Pratten.
R. S. Rockstro.

OBOI.
Messrs.
— Barrett.
W. Crozier.

CLARINETTI.
Messrs.
J. A. Owen.
Joseph Riddle.

FAGOTTI.
Messrs.
John F. Hutchins.
Henry Smith.

CORNI.
Messrs.
C. Harper.
H. Jarrett.
J. Rae.
H. Catchpole.

CLARINI.
Messrs.
T. Harper.
R. Ward.

TROMBONES.
Messrs.
F. Cioffi
T. Antoine.
W. Winterbottom.

SOLO EUPHONIUM.
Mr. A. J. Phasey.

HARP.
Mr. H. J. Trust.

TYMPANI.
Mr. T. P. Chipp.

GROSSE CAISSE.
Mr. Walter Hinchey.

Analytical Programmes by
DESMOND RYAN, ESQ.
Accompanyist—HERR EMILE BERGER.
Organist—E. T. CHIPP, Mus. Bac., Cantab.
Librarian—MR. GODFREY RODWELL.
Treasurer—Mr. JOSEPH BRAHAM.

CONDUCTORS:

M. JULES BENEDICT & DR. JAMES PECH.

In presenting this prospectus, the projectors of this Association deem it worthy of remark that a great want is felt by a countless number of amateurs possessing musical knowledge and capability of a society which would afford them ample opportunity of acquiring, at a moderate cost, a complete knowledge of the beauty and grandeur of the choicest and recognized orchestral compositions of this and previous periods.

The object of this Association is to bring together the amateur instrumentalists of London and its suburbs, for the practice and performance of oratorios, masses, cantatas, symphonies, operatic selections, and overtures, including compositions but little known to the general public, with other chef-d'œuvres of the great masters, suitable for band and chorus conjointly or separately.

For the benefit of the amateur department, weekly rehearsals will be held on every Saturday Evening, at Eight o'clock, at the Architectural Gallery, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, and during the season, concerts will be given at one of the large theatres or concert-rooms, with the important assistance of the honorary professional members, and in conjunction with the chorus, as soon as the necessary proficiency is attained.

In the professional department there are still vacancies for honorary members for the following instruments:—Four first violins, one second violin, and two violas.

All communications to be addressed to the Honorary Secretary of the London Orchestral Association, 9, Conduit-street, Regent-street, W.

H. J. BRAHAM, Hon. Sec.

REVIEW.

"'Six Organ Pieces in various styles,' intended as introductory to the characteristic difficulties of the Instrument"—by Henry Smart (Wessel and Co.)—If the remaining four pieces of the above series are as good as those we have before us (Nos. 1 and 2), organ-players, professional and amateur, will have to thank Mr. Henry Smart for a most valuable contribution to the not by any means too abundantly varied repertory of the noble and universally venerated instrument of their predilection. That Mr. Smart is an accomplished organist, no less than a musician of distinguished ability and rare acquirements, all our readers must be aware; and few will refrain from joining us in the earnest wish that he would accord to the organ the same amount of diligent attention by means of which he is now extending, in a series of first-class compositions, the "materiel" at disposal of the numerous choral societies existing in this country. Mr. Smart's recent part-songs have excited general and warm admiration, and the English school is in a sensible degree a gainer by every one of them. In no inferior measure would our school of organ-playing and organ-composing be benefited were Mr. Smart assiduously to advance in the path indicated by the charming pieces before us—which, however, to judge from the fact of their being inscribed to his friend, the late Mr. Thomas Adams, must have been written some time since. Both numbers are highly interesting, and, though each is genuine organ-music, having nothing in common but their artistic beauty and refinement, both will be indispensable. We need not further recommend them, nor do anything more than call attention to the fact of their existence, being well assured that whoever has either in his possession—whether No 1 or No. 2—will not rest satisfied until he has obtained the other. The want of such organ-music, refined and musicianlike, moderately difficult, and without a touch of pedantry—something, in short, between Bach, or Handel, and a certain school which, in these days, seems to aim at metamorphosing the organ into an orchestra—has long been sensibly felt. No living composer is more capable of meeting the demand by a rich and varied supply than Mr. Henry Smart.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

HANDEL'S MESSIAH.

SIR,—A work that has been so long in existence as Handel's Messiah, that has been performed in every quarter of the civilised globe, that has excited the admiration of all the great musicians who have succeeded Handel, and been the delight of countless thousands, would almost seem to be beyond the pale of criticism; and were it not true that time consolidates error as well as truth, any one venturing to pass a censure upon such a production might fairly be accused of rashness. But at the risk of being charged with temerity, and perhaps with something worse, I venture, through your columns, to point out what I cannot help considering a defect, and not a slight one either, in this great oratorio. I allude to the chorus, "All we like sheep have gone astray," which presents, to my mind, a complete violation of the æsthetical laws that govern the union between words and music—the chief of which I take to be "That the music should express the emotions of the mind that are indicated by the words;" vocal music being, to make use of an admirable expression of Mr. Herbert Spencer, in its essence, "idealised emotion." Try Handel's chorus by this law. The words are few. "All we like sheep have gone astray; we have turned every one to his own way; and the Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all." Apart from intellectual ideas, what emotions, I would ask, do these words express? The two first sentences, and it is upon these that nearly the whole of the chorus has been written, most assuredly express penitence, for we cannot suppose them to be uttered under the influence of any other feeling. Does the music correspond? Very far from it, as it appears to me; so far, indeed, that I never listen to it without thinking what an excellent Bacchanalian chorus it would make. How Handel could commit such a blunder, I cannot imagine, because he is usually so very accurate in his adaptation of music to words, of which there could not be a more striking example than the concluding portion of this very chorus. What profound depth of feeling is embodied in these few bars, and what a contrast to the preceding portion! It is difficult to understand, too, how it is that professed critics have been so silent on this point, for I am not aware of a single one who has ever mentioned it; and that none of the thousands of intelligent people who have heard the oratorio performed, especially the clergy of all denominations, have ever ventured to call in question the æsthetic propriety of this chorus. If I am wrong in the view I take of it, I shall be exceedingly glad to be set right; if I am right, the chorus should be at once expunged from the work. It is already too long, and were this removed, there would be a better chance of the divine song, "I know that my Redeemer liveth," (which is not unfrequently sung when the audience are filing out by scores,) being heard. I recommend the matter to the consideration of Mr. Charles Hallé, who is about to produce the Messiah, with large means and appliances, in Manchester, and to all who have in future the task of bringing it before the public.

ALEXIS.

[Let us earnestly entreat Mr. Hallé not to "expunge" the chorus, which is one of the most characteristic emanations from Handel's pen.—ED.]

LORD WARD v. LUMLEY.

(London Sittings after Hilary Term, before the LORD CHIEF BARON and Special Juries, Guildhall.)

MR. BOVILL, Q.C., and Mr. Mellish appeared for the plaintiff; Mr. Edwin James, Q.C., Mr. Hawkins, Q.C., and Mr. Maude, for the defendant.

This was an action of debt for rent. The main plea was one of accord and satisfaction by giving up possession of the Opera House, and cancelling the lease. The defendant was the lessee of the Opera House. The speculation was not successful, and the plaintiff had in various ways assisted the defendant to keep the house open. In 1856 the debt had so increased that it became necessary to make some arrangements. The lease was then assigned to the plaintiff. This lease had about thirty-six years to run, and was subject to a ground-rent of £1,900. The plaintiff then leased the Opera House to the defendant at a rent of £6,275 per annum. This rent was paid till Michaelmas, 1847. After this no rent was paid. On the 10th of August, 1858, possession was given up, and the lease cancelled. The action was brought to recover £4,560 for this rent. Defendant set up that it was agreed that if the lease was given up this rent need not be paid.

John Henry Benbow, the plaintiff's solicitor, having been examined by Mr. Mellish, said, in cross-examination by Mr. James,—Lord Ward has been connected some years with the Opera. He had advanced sums of money to release the house from liabilities. The lease was assigned to Lord Ward. There was due to his lordship £38,600 at the time of assignment. The ground-rent was £1,900; the house was let at £6,275. The lease had 36 years to run. The case of "Crofts and Lumley" was then pending. It raised the question as to whether the lease was forfeited to the ground landlord. It was decided in April, 1858, in the House of Lords. I always told defendant he must pay rent and give up possession. I did not tell him if he would give up possession quietly I would not ask him for rent. Possession was given up on the 10th of August. I told Lumley he must give a warrant of attorney; he objected, on the ground that giving a judgment must be very prejudicial to him. I proposed that he should give an undertaking to give a judgment. He refused. It was not on the ground that it had been agreed that if he gave up possession Lord Ward would not ask for rent. Lord Ward desired me to insist upon the payment of the rent. Lord Ward has possession of the theatre.

Re-examined.—Lord Ward was paid nearly £100,000 on the part of the theatre. His lordship had bought the properties for £10,500 before the assignment. The suit for ejectment was pending at the time of the assignment, so that if it had been decided against Lumley the assignment to Lord Ward would have been valueless.

Lord Ward examined by Mr. Bovill.—My first transaction with Lumley was the purchase of Opera boxes when he became lessee. The theatre was closed some three or four years before 1856. I interested myself to get the theatre open. Lumley could not open it on account of liabilities. I assisted him to pay off these liabilities. I have advanced in all from £90,000 to £100,000. For that I have the assignment of the lease. I remember the meeting of the 25th June, 1857. Lumley was anxious about the appeal, and wished the terms of his lease altered. It was promised that if Croft's case was settled in Lumley's favour, I would reduce the rent from 5 per cent. to 4 per cent.

By the Chief Baron.—I never in any shape or way agreed to give up back rent if Lumley would give up possession.

Mr. James having addressed the jury for the defendant—

Mr. Lumley was examined by Mr. Hawkins.—I have been connected with the Opera since 1842. My connection with Lord Ward commenced in 1844. The action of "Croft v. Lumley" commenced in 1853. Lord Ward had purchased judgments against the theatre. In March, 1856, I made an assignment of the lease to Lord Ward. I valued it at £150,000. Previously Lord Ward had offered me £10,000 if I would assign it absolutely to him. In 1857, I asked his lordship to forego two years' rent. He consented to forego one year's rent. In July, 1857, his lordship stated that if the decision in the House of Lords was favourable he would reduce the rent from 5 to 4 per cent. and that one year's rent should be foregone, and spread over the remainder of the term. The decision in the House of Lords was given in April, 1858, in my favour. In May, 1858, I had an interview with Benbow. I said, "If Lord Ward will carry out the plan mentioned for forming a company, I could get the money." He said, "If you will give up possession quietly, I will give up the rent." On the 7th of June, 1858, I executed a transfer of the properties to his lordship. A writ was issued on the 19th of June. A few days afterwards I had an interview at Dudley House. I gave a pledge to give up possession immediately after termination of the season. Afterwards I told Benbow that he had promised to forego the rent if I would quietly give up possession. He assented. In October I saw his lordship at Paris. No demand was made. I said, "Your lordship always promised me a year's rent." He said, "You have got it."

Cross-examined by Mr. Bovill.—I do not know that the lease has been valued at £50,000. The properties of theatre were put up to auction in 1853. Lord Ward bought them for £10,000. I used them, and as they wore out I replaced them. During the proceedings in the House of Lords the ground rent was in arrear. I received all the receipts of the theatre in 1858, and I neither paid ground rent nor Lord Ward's rent.

Charles Lee, examined by Mr. Bovill.—I valued the theatre at £50,000.

Cross-examined.—We have asked £7,000 a-year of Mr. Smith. I have refused an offer of £7,000, but no security was offered, and I refused.

The Chief Baron having summed up,

The jury almost immediately found a verdict for the plaintiff—Damages, £4,560.

A LETTER OF MENDELSSOHN,

[Written at the age of 15 years to Frederik Voigts, author of the book to the opera, The Wedding of Camacho, translated and communicated by his fellow-student and friend, Dr. Ferdinand Rahles.]

HONOURED SIR,—Excuse me that my thanks for the excellent first act comes so late, as I would not express my gratitude before having acquainted myself thoroughly with its beauties; and having now done so, I find my thanks too feeble for such a masterpiece.

I shall endeavour to imitate your poetry; but feel afraid that I may not be able to express through my music those elevated impressions which it must produce on every one at the first reading, but hope with my ardent desire to try to do the utmost in my power. The first act is so beautiful and charming, that I anxiously wish to be in possession of the second as soon as possible, and beg of you to realise this favour at your earliest convenience.

You will kindly allow me to state the following remarks:—

With regard to the verses and the diction of those parts, which are to be set to music, I have very seldom, I may say never, met before with such excellent ones, which in the first perusal have had the power of producing musical ideas in me. They are so smooth, so fitted to the adaptation of music, not too long, and contain all the qualities of a superior opera text.

As the numbers of pieces to be composed are too many, I make use of the liberty you kindly granted me in omitting the following ones, viz.—the arietta of Vivaldo, "My sword, my lyre;" the aria of Lucinda, "How inconvenient is a fortune;" and the immediate following air of Carrasco, "What a running;" because there would be seven music-pieces without an interspersed dialogue, by which the audience would be tired. The choruses of the cousins, in contrast to those which enter with Carrasco, please me exceedingly, and the short advice you give me, shows how I must set them to music.

I also must ask the favour not to divide the opera into three acts, but compress the whole in two, as agreed upon. Lately I saw Hamlet, in which a priest comes upon the stage and speaks, so I think we have got over the difficulties we thought we might encounter in bringing the clerical garb upon the scene. Let priest remain priest; but he must not be allowed to sing upon the stage: and the opera an opera in two acts. Amen!

What a fine fellow is Vivaldo, and an excellent part for a tenor singer, and as you will do away with Basilio's going through the air, I do not see any difficulty more in having a good singer for this part also. St. Peter may say, "Let every man have what belongs to him," and so says the basso Sancho upon his gray mare.

The only favour I have again to ask you is, to let me have the second act, for which I am longing and very anxious; therefore be so good as to send it as soon as possible. I shall not feel happy before then. With my best thanks.

I remain, your obedient servant,

FELIX MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY.

P.S.—I wish so much to be in possession of the second act that I cannot commence to compose before I have reviewed the whole of it.

FELIX MENDELSSOHN-BARTHOLDY.

Berlin, March 13, 1824.

PROVINCIAL.

MADAME OURY'S Matinée Musicale d'Invitation took place on Thursday, the 9th, at the house of Mrs. Leo Schuster, 2, Adelaide Crescent, Brighton, when the spacious and elegantly furnished suite of reception rooms were thrown open for the occasion. Madame Oury's Matinée, which was considered one of the best parties of the season, was fashionably attended by upwards of a hundred and twenty lovers of music, who appeared most fully to appreciate her exquisite performances of her "Fantaisie brillante," from Martha, "La Berceuse," and "Air de l'Ombre," from Dinorah, and her "Galop di Bravura," on the Christy Minstrels' Melodies. Indeed, it was generally remarked, that this talented artist had never been heard to more advantage, or been known to perform with greater fire and genius. Her "Galop di Bravura" on the Christy Minstrels' Melodies promises to become a great favourite with the musical world. Sig. Mecatti was in excellent voice, and gave general satisfaction by his singing of a barcarolle, and a romance of his own composition. Madlle. Garthe, a young lady of pleasing appearance and promising talents, likewise added to the afternoon's enjoyment, by her spirited singing of a German song by Klicken. At six o'clock the company took leave, much gratified by the kindness of Mad. Oury in providing them so great a musical treat, and with the hospitality of Mrs. Leo Schuster.—Brighton Herald.

SIR F. A. G. OUSELEY IN YORKSHIRE.—Last week Sir F. A. Gore Ouseley, Mus. Doc., visited Yorkshire, and in Leeds, Halifax, and other towns, gave a lecture on "Choral Music," before large audiences. The lecturer said that his object was to explain the principles of choral music more fully, and thereby render church services not only more pleasing to the ear, but more conducive to devotion in those who joined in them. There was one fundamental axiom to be borne in mind, that music of any kind was only so far good as it realised the particular object intended in each case. He would illustrate this: Dr. Crotch had said there were three distinct styles of music—the sublime, the beautiful, and the ornamental. Ought cathedral music to be sublime, beautiful, or ornamental? The objects sought in such music were two-fold: first, the praise and glory of God; and, second, to elevate the mind of the worshipper to high devotional feeling. These being the objects, it was evident that the sublime style was the only one fit for divine worship. The beautiful was not excluded, nor was the ornamental always out of place,—only it must be made subordinate. Sir Frederic next remarked that the choral services of the church were of six different varieties, or rather five; for with one of them, the ordinary reading voice, he had not then to do. These were, first, the plain monotone; second, the inflected versicles and responses; third, the regular psalm chant; fourth, the regular setting of the Canticles, called "services:" and, fifth, anthems, in which all the appliances of the art were available. Sir Frederic proceeded to speak in detail upon each of these points or divisions of the cathedral service, and endeavoured to show the value of this variety of style. He would that it was better appreciated throughout the land! It was sad to see the results which flowed from the want of such appreciation. There were two sources whence the evil arose; first, the love which prevailed far a light, frivolous, superficial and fanciful musical service; and, second, the mistaken affection so prevalent for the crude music of ancient times. By the adoption of either of these mistaken courses, the purpose intended was not gained; and the whole service was often rendered odious. In parish churches, when a choir could not be supported, the best substitute for the anthem was a metrical hymn, in which the whole congregation could join. The great secret of a good psalm tune, was that all should be able to join it. To this end it should have no very high or low notes in it; it should be free from flourishes; there should be no abstruse harmonies; old tunes should be preferred to new ones; the simple to the complex; common time to triple; English to foreign; melody should be considered before harmony; and the spirit of the words before that. Of course, in a musical community like this, some thing much better could be accomplished; but even here some metrical psalm tune should be adopted, in which each should join. Whenever a cathedral service could be performed it was well; but it was better to do a little well than a great deal ill. Sir Frederic, in conclusion, paid a high compliment to the choir, and sat down amid much applause.—The Ven. Archdeacon Musgrave moved a vote of thanks to the lecturer, which was seconded by John Waterhouse, Esq., who strenuously urged the necessity of a subscription being at once set on foot in order to effect the required additions to the parish church organ, and which he had long known the need of. They could make it one of the finest organs in the north of England. The vote of thanks was carried by acclamation, and Sir Frederic having acknowledged it, the meeting was brought to a close by singing the Doxology.

LEEDS.—Difference of opinion seems to exist respecting the practicability of playing on the great organ in the Town Hall, Leeds, not, however, owing to any fault in tho manufacture. A meeting of the Town Hall committee was held last week to report thereon, and the following notice appeared in the Leeds Express of the 11th instant:—

"Mr. Newton said that as several statements had been made respecting the organ in the Town Hall, he thought it was high time that the public were informed whether the instrument was a valuable one or not. Some parties were of opinion that the organ was the finest in the world, whilst others had stated that it was perfectly useless. A letter had appeared in the Intelligencer last week, which stated that to press down a single key of the great organ when coupled with the solo organ, required a weight equal to 23 ounces. He (Mr. Newton) held in his hand a letter from Mr. Spark, who stated that it required a pressure of six ounces only. Mr. Newton concluded by asking if Mr. Hopkins, of London, had been to examine the organ; and if so, what was his report on the subject."

"Alderman Botterill observed that the Town Hall organ had been examined and reported on by Mr. Hopkins, and on the whole his report was considered very favourable. With respect to the solo organ, he believed there was a little difficulty, not on account of the extra pressure, but owing to the extension of the arms which was required. With respect to the composition pedals, Mr. Hopkins said they would not act very readily, which he attributed to the smallness of one of the engines, and not to the builder of the organ, and the committee were putting down a larger engine, which would draw out the stops instantaneously. This they proposed to have done before the report was presented to the council. With regard to the power and tone of the organ, the borough treasurer had handed him a letter in which Mr. Hopkins said that, in his judgment, the organ possessed ample power for the Town Hall. As to the tone, the reeds appeared to him to be a feature of their organ. The pedal organ did not appear to him to be consolidated.

"Mr. Carter and Mr. Middleton objected to the Chairman making these statements, whilst the subject was still under consideration, and for which no member of the Town Hall Committee could be considered responsible.

"Alderman Botterill said he would not refer further to the report, but he would state that Mr. Best had expressed his opinion that they were completely ruining the organ by allowing any person to play upon it. It was impossible, said Mr. Best, for any man to play upon it without a week's practice. A person came to play it, but could not, and then he found fault with the organ. He considered it to be a splendid instrument, but urged the committee to appoint an organist without delay.

"The subject then dropped."—Leeds Express, Feb. 11.

DUNDEE—(From a Correspondent).—Mr. Methven's second grand concert of the season was given in the Corn Exchange Hall on Wednesday. The artists belonged to the Beale party. Madame Fiorentini, in "Softly sighs," received quite an ovation. Madame Corbari was also well received. Madame Badia made nothing out of "Ah, non giunge." Herr Reichardt delighted the audience with "Thou art so far;" he also sang the duet, "The Mariners," with Signor Tagliafico. The latter gentleman gave Rossini's "Tarantella." The morceaux d'ensemble, especially the finale, "Dal tuo stellate," excited in an unusual manner our northern audience. Of Sivori and Bottesini I can say no more than that they both displayed the wonderful powers for which they are celebrated. Mr. Brinley Richards performed his own arrangement of "Weber's Last Waltz." Herr Engel executed a solo on the harmonium. Mr. Hatton conducted. I refrain from particularising, the performances of the Beale party being almost everywhere the same.—A dress concert was given on Friday evening in the Corn Exchange, Hull, by the Dundee Philharmonic Society, assisted by several lady and gentleman amateur vocalists. The programme included the "First and Second Movement," and the "Minuet and Rondo" from Haydn's Seventh Symphony; the Overture to Don Giovanni; Trio for pianoforte, flute, and violoncello, Op. 63; Weber's and Thalberg's Norma, for two pianofortes. The orchestra, conducted by Mr. Spindler, was very creditable, considering they were mostly amateurs. The Norma duet, however, was the most successful piece of the evening, being performed in a very superior—almost faultless—manner. The vocal portion of the programme comprised "Home to our Mountains," "O, firm as oak," Wallace's new ballad, "The Bell-ringers," a Romance, by Guglielmo; "Sul campo della gloria," Balfe's "Good night, beloved;" "Honour the brave!" and "Hearts of Oak," all of which were sung in a manner we have not heard surpassed by amateurs. The performance, for the benefit of the Rifle Corps, was, pecuniarily, quite a success, the free proceeds exceeding £100.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—It is a difficult thing, now-a-days, to interrogate the Future without thinking of the music of M. Richard Wagner. It was at the Italian theatre that the second grand symphonic battle of this pretended musical Messiah came off. The following is the bulletin of this second action, which was not less warm than the first:—

1.—Le Vaisseau Fantôme, which was aground the first evening, went to pieces at the second tide. All hands and cargo lost.

2.—The fine march from Tännhauser, on the contrary, assumed all the proportions of a good victory.

3. The Pilgrimage to Rome plunges us again into the difficult paths mentioned in the book, paths which we have followed until the persons concerned fall, like Tännhauser, senseless.

4.—Le Chant des Pélerins, with which the overture (Venusberg) commences, revives our sense of hearing; more than once the tenors break forth, but more than once, also, we find ourselves on the difficult paths already mentioned.

5.—The story of Tristan and Isolde is decidedly most unprecedentedly lamentable. To make up for this Le Saint Graal gains upon acquaintance.

6.—Without stopping at the Reveil Matin, which was unable to free from the soporific fluid more than one beautiful woman, who had been sent to sleep by the story of Tristan et Isolde, let us make room for La Marche des Finançailles the effect of which was grandiose.

7.—Let us come at last to the pretty chorus of L'Amour; it will make us forget the somewhat too noisy dances of the somewhat too bacchanalian nuptials of the innocent and modest Elsa de Brabant.

8.—We were nearly forgetting the cosmopolitan melody, partaking, at one and the same time, of the French, German, and Italian schools—by the past, the present, and the Future—a melody which was tastefully sung by M. Jules Lefort, but which no one thought of encoring.

To close this summary bulletin, we will add that there was almost a sufficient number of persons present, especially when we recollect the highly excited state of public feeling. In the saloon there was the same turbulence and the same emotion as on the first evening; the dissertations and discussions were endless. M. Richard Wagner's third symphonic attack is fixed for next Wednesday.—Le Ménestrel.

VIENNA.—We give, through a correspondent, the translation of an acknowledgment presented by the Viennese Schiller Verein to Mr. Morris Moore.

SIR,—You have had the great complaisance to let Vienna enjoy your famous picture of Raphael, representing Apollo and Marsyas. While thus favouring this capital which has hastened to see this incomparable masterpiece, you added, moreover, the great kindness of making over the proceeds to the Schiller Verein, the fund of which is destined to carry succour to distressed poets, who bear the lyre of Apollo and the wounds of Marsyas. The committee of the Schiller Verein feels itself deeply touched by your kindness, and is eager to express to you its most sincere acknowledgments. Accept, Sir, the assurance of our respect, and our gratitude, with which we have the honour to subscribe ourselves,

EDWARD MUNK,*
DR. MOSENTHAL,
CARL LA ROCHE,
CH. RICK,
DR. LEOP. KOMPERT.

Vienna, Feb. 2, 1860.

A Monsieur Morris Moore.

COBLENTZ.—At the fourth subscription concert of the Musical Institute, under the direction of Herr Lenz, the public had an opportunity of hearing, for the second time, Herr Maximilian Wolff, visitant from Frankfort-on-the-Maine. This gentleman had already delighted us, at the second concert of the series, by his execution of Mendelssohn's Concerto, and Leonard's Fantaisie Militaire, as well as at a concert of his own, by Spohr's Gesangscene (dramatic concerto). On the present occasion he played Beethoven's magnificent concerto, not previously heard here, and Leonard's Souvenir de Haydn. He has not only gained the warmest applause from the great body of the public, but been honoured by the most flattering appreciation among amateurs and professional men. He has a fair career before him. In addition to this, we heard, at the same concert, Gade's B flat major symphony, No. 4, two choral songs, for four voices and without accompaniment (Op. 100), by Mendelssohn, Cherubini's overture to Medea, and, in conclusion, the introduction to the third act, and the bridal chorus from R. Wagner's Lohengrin.

OLDENBURG.—The programme of the third subscription concert, on the 6th inst., under the direction of Herr Franzen, contained Mendelssohn's A major symphony, which was here almost unknown, and pleased vastly, the overture (Op. 124) by Beethoven and Weber's overture to Der Freischutz. A brilliant feature of the evening's entertainment was Herr F. Lamb's violin-playing. The pieces selected were Mendelssohn's concerto, an adagio and fugue by J. S. Bach, and a Rondo Scherzoso of his own. At a concert subsequently given by himself, he played a quartet by Haydn, F. Schubert's Rondo for piano and violin, a Notturno and Polonaise, of his own composition, and Bazzini's Danse des Lutins. Herr Schutz executed, on the piano, Liszt's arrangement of the march from Wagner's Tannhauser.

BRESLAU.—At the last concert given by Herr Damrosch, as all the pieces in the programme, with the exception of "Gretchen," the second movement from Liszt's Faust Symphony, were well known to the public, the interest was, naturally, concentrated on the said "Gretchen," which belongs to that class of programme music fostered by the concert-giver with boundless love and devotion. We, for our own part (and we by no means stand alone) connot make up our minds to like this kind of music, although we really do our best to abandon ourselves, quite impartially and without prejudice, to the modern school of tone-painting, which is to mark a new epoch in art. The piece selected on this occasion was received by the intelligent, calm portion of the audience in solemn silence, though the manifestations from other quarters called forth some hisses. At this, Herr Liszt's party, always very pugnacious, were exceedingly wroth. We must again submit to the same stereotyped phrases, by which we are informed that so wonderful a picture is certainly not to be comprehended by profane souls, but wholly and solely by such highly-poetical natures as can plunge, with love and self-sacrifice, into the bottomless abyss of a composition of this description. We are furthermore told that the work is perfect in every respect, whether looked at in a formal, instrumental, or rhythmiose (!) point of view. All respect for such knock-down, oracular responses; we will patiently leave the decision to the Future.

* Baron Münck Bellinghausen, celebrated under the name of "Halm," as one of the first German Dramatic poets of the day, and brother of the late President of the Germanic Diet at Frankfort.

COLOGNE.—Herr Hans von Bülow, pianist to the King of Prussia, is announced to play for the first time in this city, at the second concert of the Cölner Männergesang-Verein.

PESTH.—The most remarkable of recent manifestations at Pesth took place at a concert of M. Remenyi, a refugee who has lately returned from England, where he acquired the position of solo violinist to Her Majesty. After the first piece the public violently demanded the "Rakoczy," and such was the impression produced by the terrific performance of this national air, that the audience rose, uncovered their heads, and joined the player in thundering chorus. Nor was the emotion of M. Remenyi less than that of his hearers. Whilst standing on the stage, and in the midst of the performance, he threw away his violin, and burst into tears. Some minutes elapsed before he could resume the interrupted performance, and then, like a storm breaking out after a short lull, with renewed violence, he seized his instrument again and dashed out the exciting strain with a wild and savage beauty. The public all the while were shouting, crying, and hurrahing like spirits broke loose. Had there been arms in the hands of the people—but there are none in Hungary—that movement would have been the beginning of the revolution.

MUSIC IN BRAZIL—(From our Correspondent).—The Opera in Rio Janeiro closed after a season of ten months, on the 5th of December. The principal vocalists, Madame Medori, Señors Mirate, Dido, and Arnaud, have left to fulfill engagements at Monte Video, Pernambuco, and Buenos Ayres, where the Emperor, Empress, and Court are sojourning. The season terminated somewhat heavily, owing probably to the monotony of the performances, and a certain cold indifference towards the public by the management. Rio is then exceedingly dull. The Theatres St. Pedro, L'Acalza, occasionally offer a representation, but the nobility being in the interior of the Brazils, the pleasures "du monde" devolve upon themselves.

M. Anglais* (first contra-bassist at the Opera), gave a benefit concert a little time past at the Theatre St. Pedro, at which Madame de la Grange made her last appearance in Rio. This lady has finished her engagement at the Lyrique, and happy indeed must any reasonable person be, in knowing there is peace at last in Rio, for since the arrival of Madame Medori scarce a day has passed without a controversy as to the rival merits of the two artists. But Madame de la Grange has gone. I never saw an artist more loaded with applause and presents; and I never saw so many instances of absurd taste as have been exhibited towards Madame de la Grange from the Brazilians. This lady executes wonderfully, and that is all. The world here has run away with the opinion that playing a Paganini-solo with the lungs constitutes true vocalisation. On the 23rd of December, Mr. John Cheshire (first harpist at the Opera), gave a concert at the Saloon S. Phil'enterpe, assisted by Mesdames Carlotta Melliet, Luiza Amat, and Moreno. The instrumentalists were—pianoforte, Herr Pfeifer; Luiz Anglais, double bass; and Reichardt, flute. The novelty attracted an audience the most elegant in Rio, and Mr. Cheshire's success was great. He played Parish Alvars' fantasia on Lucrezia Borgia; a new one composed by himself for the occasion on Norma and the Somnambula, together with a duo for harp and contra-basso with M. Anglais. The combination of these instruments was admired, and the contra-basso of M. Anglais makes one often think of Dragonetti and Bottessini. Madamoiselle Melliet has a good voice, and sings tolerably well. She is termed here the Brazilian prima donna. Herr Pfeifer played two fantasias, one on Il Trovatore, and one on the Carnaval de Venise. His performances were very clumsy. In the absence of Signor Grazini (of the Opera), who forgot the concert altogether, although he was to have conducted it, Madame La Contessa Speranza Maffei, a distinguished amateur in Rio, honoured Mr. Cheshire by accompanying several songs. This concert has given deserved notoriety to Mr. Cheshire. The Theatre re-opens about the 15th of March, when many novelties are anticipated.

MUSIC IN VIENNA.—The partisans of Wagner, determined to be recognised even in the streets of the town, refrained from shaving, hair cutting, small-tooth comb, nail brush, or soap-and-water; those of Liszt employed all these to a finical extent; and a humorous anecdote is told of a raging Wagnerite, after hearing Liszt without prejudice, having suddenly changed his opinion concerning that great master, resolutely entering a barber's shop on his return home—having come out a partisan of Liszt, so far as smooth chin and clean hair and skin could make him—and having been seized by his own friends and pupils, as he entered his own house, and rolled in the mud until he had amassed dirt enough to make him one of themselves once more.—Court Journal.

* Formerly with M. Jullien at Her Majesty's Theatre.

WAGNER'S TÄNNHAUSER IN VIENNA.

As is generally known, it was Hoffmann, the manager of the Thalia-Theater, who first produced Tännhauser in Vienna. The work did not come out at the Imperial Opera-house until the 19th November last year. Up to the 9th January, it was performed nine times to full houses. In No. 2 of the Wiener Recensionen, there is an article on Wagner's music generally. This article agrees with what has often been said of Wagner in the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, and, moreover, alludes to his affinity to Weber, Marschner, and, lastly Meyerbeer, Berlioz, and Verdi. The conclusion is very interesting:—

"If we look around us, and put the question: 'Out of what classes are the admirers of Wagner's operas recruited here in Vienna?' we find a small band of Futurists, properly so called, that is to say, adherents of Wagner's theory of reform; a few educated musicians, who fancy they perceive, in Wagner's straining after dramatic truth, a reaction against the influence of Italian music; and, furthermore, a considerable number of mis-educated, and a still more considerable number of un-educated playgoers. But what generally entices these two classes into the theatre? Why, more especially, what Donizetti, Meyerbeer, etc., have produced in their weakest moments; why, more especially, Verdi's musical monstrosities. The public of Lohengrin and Tännhauser look forward with delight to the Trovatore, and yearn for Rigoletto. Is not this a remarkable sign of the times? Does it not awake many a misgiving? Verdi passes in Italy for a 'learned' musician who has undertaken the civilising mission of naturalising the French opera with a touch of German profundity! Verdi is therefore quite seriously looked upon as a reformer in Italy, just as Richard Wagner is in Germany—we will not insult Wagner by a longer comparison. We can well distinguish artistic from rough natural qualities. But it cannot be altogether denied, that there is a certain distant relationship with the author of Nabucco, when we reflect that, in both cases, the plain secret of success may consist in the over-excitement of the public taste, in the over use of material means, and, lastly, in the absence of equal competitors, for Meyerbeer writes no more Huguenots. Composers of talent less known are scared away, rather than encouraged, by operatic managers now-a-days."

W. A. MOZART.

BY OTTO JAHN.—(FOURTH PART.)

(From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.)

(Continued from page 92.)

II

THE Fourth Part embraces the second half of the history of the last ten years of Mozart's life (1781—1791), the period during which his genius produced his greatest creations, which have rendered him immortal. It contains the sections from 12 to 25 of the Fourth Book, the first eleven comprising the contents of the third volume of the work. While the latter treat mostly of Mozart's material circumstances, the historical element is thrown more into the background in Book Four, since, except the account of two professional journeys—to Berlin and to Frankfort-on-the-Maine—only the moving narrative of Mozart's death and its immediate consequences belong to the biographical portion, properly so called; while the analysis of his works, on the contrary, together with the most careful accounts of their production, carrying out, &c., take up most of Volume Four, which is the thickest of all, containing 748 pages of text, 40 pages of appendix, a complete catalogue of names and facts, 16 pages of supplementary notes, and a portrait of Mozart, after a picture painted in Verona in 1770, when he was fourteen years of age.

The mere comprehensiveness of this list gives us a foretaste of the rich contents of the last volume; a cursory sketch will teach the reader what he has to expect, and what he will find carried out in a manner which, from beginning to end, attracts, fascinates, and instructs.

The first three sections (from 12 to 14 inclusive) show us Mozart as pianoforte player and composer of instrumental music. Section 12 discusses his works for the piano, the variations, rondos, fantasias, sonatas for the pianoforte alone, and with violin accompaniment, the trios, the quartets, and the quintet (in E flat), as well as the concertos. In the catalogue of the latter, pp. 51 and 52, we find the concerto for two pianos (printed in Offenbach, by J. André, as Op. 83, Edition faite d'après la Partition en Manuscrit"), but not with the orchestra (quartet, two oboes, two horns, two bassoons), which is not mentioned either in any part of the text.

In relation to the concertos, the author brings prominently forward services rendered by Mozart towards the combination of the orchestra and the solo instrument into one whole, as eventually, and in the received form, creating something new, and shows how the orchestra has full symphonic justice done it, not merely in the tutti movements, but as continually introtroduced into the piano part, also participating directly in it. "An art of blending all the various kinds of sounds in the orchestra, which at once proves an uncommonly fine sense, supported by the most accurate knowledge of instrumental effects, for what is harmonious." "The happy notion," the author observes further on, "in the close combination of the various instrumental resources into one whole is so completely successful, that in this particular Beethoven, who made an especial study of Mozart's pianoforte concertos, as every one who knows them at all thoroughly will easily perceive, has not, in any essential point, gone further; the higher importance of his grand pianoforte concertos has another foundation. It is true that, with Mozart, there was something more than the mere delicately-fostered sense for the appropriate mixtures of the various kinds of sounds; the invention, treatment, and distribution of the motives were conditional on the nature of the means for their manifestation; it was necessary in the first sketch that the different resources should be well considered, if they were to have justice done them in the mode in which they were carried out; even in the bud, the various motives must have been endowed with the faculty of free development under various conditions. The result is a race between different agents, the orchestra and the pianoforte—and the principal charm of these concertos rest upon the lively interworking of the opposite elements, by means of which process the separate motives, as if under an ever changing light, are grouped into a rich and brilliant picture."

It is very correctly remarked that Mozart's concertos require, "besides a clear and song-like execution, especially of the melodies, which are often greatly spun out," "the calm, steady" hand, which "causes the" roulades (Passagen) "to flow like oil." Nearly all his roulades depend upon the scale and the broken chords. His aim was not a number of notes (he purposely rejected runs of octaves, sixths and thirds), nor any kind of mass-like effect, but clearness and perspicuity. At any rate, the clear unfolding of the peculiarities of the piano, in contradistinction to the orchestra, was the right way to the development of technical skill on the piano."

"But the principal importance of the concertos lies in their musical purport. In their conceptions and treatment, they exhibit great dash and perfect freedom; it is clear that it was not only the greater and more important means which called forth a corresponding degree of mental activity, but that Mozart felt the more pleasure in giving free scope to his powers, because he used to perform these compositions himself. The fact of their being concertos, destined to produce an instantaneous impression on the public, explains, also, why he allowed himself more liberty here than anywhere else in the employment of strongly exciting means of expression, and it is a very characteristic trait, that he endeavours to produce this effect, not by virtuoso-like effects, on the piano, but by the increased charm of musical expression."

Section 13 treats at length of the violin-quartets and quintets. The author has already spoken, in Vol. III., of Mozart's relations towards Joseph Haydn, from which, as a sign of the highest respect, sprang the dedication of the first six quartets to that master. These belong to those compositions which Mozart wrote, without any immediate external cause, not to order, but for his own satisfaction. Jahn first enters on the essential elements of the quartet—as he does afterwards of the quartet generally—and on the peculiarities of these compositions of Mozart for chamber-music. Without subjecting them singly to a strict analysis, he gives us, in general touches, an excellent and characteristic account of them. It is only the C major quartet and the G minor quintet that he discusses at any length. The difference in style between the last four quartets (especially of three of them, written for Friedrich Wilhelm II., King of Prussia) and of the first six is, also, charmingly described.

Especially welcome is all that is said concerning the quintets. We are delighted that Jahn stands up for these magnificent compositions, explains their character—which is different from he last quartets, and approximates again to the style of the first six—and describes their beauties. It is an indisputable fact that Mozart's quintets are too much neglected in the public quartet associations which nearly every town of note possesses. It is true that the signal was given by a great composer of the modern school, who always used to leave the room when one of Mozart's quintets began. This is partly true even of the quartets, for how many lovers of music are there at present who have heard—not once, perhaps, but frequently—all the ten written by Mozart? We hope, too, that the eulogy which Jahn pronounces, and which is but the echo of our own sentiments, on the grand trio on E flat major, for violin, viol, and violoncello, will direct the attention of associations for chamber-music to this gem of its kind. He justly calls it, "One of the most wonderful of Mozart's works, a genuine cabinet specimen of chamber-music." (Page 94.)

Well worthy our consideration is the analysis of the G minor quintet, containing the expression "of a passionately excited frame of mind, of grief conscious only of itself, and of a struggle of the heart with it, changing, in the finale, to the opposite mood (a gushing dithyrambus), which, however, belongs to the same nature, that is rendered with perfect fidelity and truth." Hereupon we read, at page 103.

"Involuntarily, with such psychological development, we seek the man in the artist, and who can deny that the most evident marks of Mozart's own nature are impressed on the work of Art? If, however, we tried to find a definite inducement in his immediate circumstances, for its production, we should most certainly be led astray. Mozart's circumstances were at that time (1787), generally speaking, good. He had not long returned, richly rewarded with success and money, from Prague and in the Jacquin family enjoyed the society of those who satisfied both his mind and his heart. It is true that, shortly afterwards (26th May), he lost his father, but who ever carefully weighs the letter he wrote his father on the 4th of April, at the thought of the possibility of death (III., p. 279)—at this time he was engaged on the first quintet in C major—must own that the tone of the G minor quartet could not be suggested by the thoughts of a dying father. The springs of artistic creation flow too far below the surface to be immediately called forth by every emotion in common life. It is true that the artist can give no more than what is in him, and what he has himself gone through; but even of the musician does Goethe's assertion hold good, that in a work of art there is nothing which the artist has not experienced, only not as he has experienced it.

"A second question now forces itself upon us: Does a piece of music which, like this one, unrolls before us a true soul-painting, follows the course of psychological development with the strictest consistency, and exhibits sharply and characteristically the tottering emotion of passionate sensations in the most delicate toches—does, we repeat, a piece of music like this obey also the formulas and laws of musical construction and technics? Without doubt, any one who chooses to disregard entirely the psychological development can show, by a purely technical analysis, how this quintet, which constrainedly obeys the conditions of musically beautiful form, by the most uncommon combination of invention and discernment, reaches a high degree of formal perfection, and whoever follows these indications will become aware that both the truth and strength of the psychological development, and the purity and beauty of the artistic form, coincide, and are one and the same in their essential manifestations."

Lastly, in this section, the author treats in a similar manner the compositions for reed-bands (Harmonie-Musik) and the seven symphonies which Mozart wrote in Vienna. Concerning the improvement of the orchestra by Mozart, concerning his contrapuntal art, as a free phenomenon of artistic beauty, and concerning the union of this art with the free employment of the various kinds of sound, the author says much that is very excellent and characteristic of Mozart's genius. In the fact that the three grand symphonies in E flat major, G minor, and C major (with the fugue), were written within six weeks (from the end of June to the 10th of August, 1788), and, though equally rich and equally profound in purport, are yet most different in their character, Jahn justly perceives a fresh proof: "that, amidst the most manifold impressions of life, the artist's soul is always labouring and producing, while, in secret, the threads of which the work of art is woven are continually and mysteriously converging."

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

VOX ET PRETEREA NIHIL.—"But the fact is, that the tone of the voice in speaking, and the tone of the voice in singing, bear not the least resemblance to each other; they are formed upon principles directly opposite; the different inflections of the voice in speaking are not musical intervals—in singing they are, or should be nothing but musical intervals. If we feel the outside of the throat while speaking, and then change from speaking to singing, it will be perceived that the arrangement within which produced speaking, must be changed before we can form a musical sound. Recitatives is that species of music which bears the nearest resemblance to speaking, and speaking it is in musical sounds; but this, as far as tune is concerned, is more removed from common speaking than from singing, because the intervals are tones, semitones, &c."

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2s. 6d.
Every additional line (ten words)	0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 18TH, 1860.

THE death of Madame Schrœder-Devrient has been recently recorded in the German newspapers. This eminent dramatic vocalist, some thirty years ago, delighted and astonished all London by her performance of Leonora in Beethoven's Fidelio. Such was the impression she created in the part, that old Opera-goers even now recall with enthusiastic admiration the grand effects in her acting and the special points in her singing, and do not hesitate to pronounce her one of the brightest stars that ever adorned the lyric stage. Something of the feeling, however, must be attributed to first impressions, a great originator, it may be said, of unexamined opinion, not to say prejudice; and something to the fact that Beethoven's opera was heard for the first time in London, and heard in the original language. Malibran, who succeeded Schrœder-Devrient in Leonora, appeared in an English version of Fidelio, and the alteration of the language, it need hardly be mentioned, made a vast difference in the effect of the music, which, composed by the most conscientious and scrupulous of masters, was written with a view to illustrate every word of the drama, one of the most powerful and affecting ever submitted to the musician. Fidelio and Madame Schrœder-Devrient had certainly an extraordinary reception. The success of the artist at that period, however, cannot be measured by a comparison with our own times. When Madame Schrœder-Devrient appeared at Drury Lane for the first time, Pasta was declining from her zenith at the Italian Opera; Sontag had just risen above the musical horizon; and Malibran, from a different point of the hemisphere, was beginning to emit a few brilliant scintillations of that light which was destined in so short time to obnubilate, if not extinguish, all contemporaneous luminaries. That, indeed, may be denominated the great operatic epoch of the age. Season after season brought new singers of celebrity to London, and from Catalani to Grisi may be traced one unbroken line of indisputable queens of song. Madame Schrœder-Devrient then had some names and reputations to contend against. The sympathies of the public were either enlisted with Malibran and Sontag at the Italian Opera, or with our own Miss Stephens* and Miss Paton, on the English lyric stage; while at the oratorios and in the concert-room were heard such popular and renowned songstresses as Ronzi de Begnis, Camporese, Lalande, Pisaroni, Blasis, and other foreign cantatrici. Nevertheless, the great Teutonic artist, who in all probability, on the Italian stage would not have taken rank among the first singers, achieved an unparalleled success at Drury Lane, and attracted all London for an entire season. Mad. Schrœder-Devrient was a singer apart from all comparisons. She possessed very superior capabilities, both vocal and histrionic. Her voice was a high soprano, powerful and sonorous, matchless in the expression of passion and strong emotions, but somewhat deficient in tenderness and suavity. Thus, in the character of Fidelio, not even Malibran, perhaps, gave equal force to the denouncement of Pizarro in the prison scene; while to the Governor's interrogation, "Who art thou?" the answer "I am his wife!" (almost lost, by the way, in the English translation) was transcendent in its energy and earnestness. In the last finale, too, Mad. Schrœder-Devrient's voice, a real soprano, "towered" above principals, band, and chorus; and the singer never failed to send away her hearers with her last brilliant tones ringing in their ears. As an actress—a serious actress, let it be understood—her powers were of a high order. Indeed, nothing short of the rarest endowments and finest impulses could have enabled an artist to conceive and grasp a character like that of Leonora, at once so domestic and tragic, so natural and so lofty, so simple yet so sublime. Mad. Devrient's figure did not consort well with the male attire. She had too much embonpoint, and her walk was over-studied and conventional. Every action and movement, however, was instinct with reality, and became the requirement of the moment and the situation. She was truly absorbed in the scene, and in her abstraction seemed to forget the stage, the footlights, and the audience. What John Kemble said of Edmund Kean might, with equal truth, have been said of Mad. Schrœder-Devrient—"She was terribly in earnest."

All opinion of the German singer is restricted to the character of Leonora. The name of Schrœder-Devrient is associated with Fidelio only in this country. She may have appeared in other parts; they are not remembered, or have left but a slight impression. It is seldom a singer identifies herself with one particular character and no other. We cannot point to a second instance within our recollection. Perhaps the very success of Fidelio prevented the manager from trying the artist in another opera. If the theatre was crowded nightly, any change would have been impolitic. Mad. Devrient's fame in England is limited to her impersonation of Leonora. This, however, has been sufficiently great to entitle her to a place among the most remarkable artists of her time. Malibran succeeded her, but the performance even of that most wonderful and gifted of singers did not efface the impression left by the original. With the recollection of Beethoven's Fidelio, the name most intimately associated is that of Schrœder-Devrient.

* Miss Stephens appeared at Drury Lane, in a version of Rossini's Guillaume Tell, entitled, Hofer, the Tell of the Tyrol, with Sinclair and H. Phillips, in May, 1830.

SHALL we pause a little from the practice of burlesquing? Shall we, now that Christmas is past, duly honoured with extravaganzas, try, for a short time, whether we cannot possibly contemplate the sublime, and the beautiful, and the fanciful, otherwise than in connection with the "fast" habits of modern London?

Far from decreasing, the burlesquing ranks are strengthened by the accession of new recruits. A Mr. Burnand, of whom we never heard till last week, has fleshed his steel pen with the "Æneid," out of which he has extracted the episode of Dido. With much moulding and hammering, much cutting off and sticking on, he has fashioned this same episode into a burlesque for the St. James's Theatre, where Mr. Charles Young excites much laughter by the gravity with which he depicts the cares of the Carthaginian queen. Much trouble has been taken to work the old dramatic story into dramatic shape. Anna, the sister and confidant of Dido, is made the cause of the Trojan's desertion; and though it is natural enough that any gentleman should become enamoured of the lovely Miss Wyndham, yet is this misdirected passion on the part of Æneas wholly foreign to the scope and purpose of the tale. Classical scholars felt a creeping sensation come over their skin, when they saw Dido join the hands of the fickle Æneas and the treacherous Anna, thus wantonly cheating the Fates, who had decreed the foundation of imperial Rome. Had we seen Moses marry Pharaoh's daughter, and quietly ascend the throne of Egypt—had we gazed on a Drury Lane pantomime without a scene by Beverley—had we beheld Lydia Thompson dancing a sailor's hornpipe without a round of applause—had we seen a farce by Mayhew and Edwards that did not excite so much as a smile—had we joined a Christmas festivity in the Crystal Palace, in which the pudding was made of real grocery—we should not have been more amazed than we were at the sight of that unholy alliance. We are informed that Mr. Burnand is himself a classical scholar, but it does not thence follow that he shrank in sympathy with others. The shriek of our own knife across our own plate less sets our teeth on edge than that same feat performed by another.

Mr. Burnand has been somewhat severely handled for the vulgarity of his dialogue, and certainly he evinces that love of slang, which we find in very young gentlemen who wish to look older than they are in worldly experience. Assuredly there is something in the very spirit of burlesque that appeals to the sneering, blasé, non-enthusiastic disposing of the age—an age that prides itself above all upon the faculty of being "wide awake." A dissertation on the wanderings of Æneas might be erudite, but it would be slow, whereas he who makes Æneas familiar with cigars must at any rate be knowing.

But the world has gradually become so very knowing itself, that it is somewhat weary of the knowing faculty of others, and would have no objection to a little simplicity by way of contrast. Mr. Burnand experiences rough treatment, not so much because he is so very much more slangy than others, but because he comes late into the market, and finds a public already sated with the species of humour to which he devotes his talents. Tho accomplished Talfourd, the fertile Byron, the genial Brough, are quite sufficient to supply us with burlesques in our holiday seasons, and at other periods of the year we do not greatly want the article. So completely have we been dosed with burlesques during the last dozen years, that we can anticipate the coming jokes as we foresee the practical pleasantries of the clown in a Christmas pantomime.

Something very new as far as the present generation is concerned might be effected by a thorough separation of the fanciful from the satirical elements of burlesque. The myths of classic Greece, the tales of Arabia, the legends of mediæval Europe, the fairy narratives of French Countesses, were not devised like "Gulliver's Travels," for the purpose of satirising modern vices and follies, but appealed with all gravity to a natural or artificial mirth. The chief of extravaganza, M. Planché, is one who, of all his contemporaries, has burlesqued the least, and shown the tenderest affection for the subject he takes in hand. Why not go a step further, or rather let us say a step back in the same direction, and try if we cannot use our old stories, without the constant employment of a now stale system of anachronism. Those scenic effects and Terpsichorian episodes, which are so invaluable to the parodies of the present day, would be still more in keeping with an earnest spectacle; and to the introduction of popular airs there could be no objection, even on the part of those who abhor popular slang. The bald prose of the old fairy melodramas would probably not suit a public more lyrically trained than that of fifty years ago, and therefore let the personages, by all means, speak verse,—but verse need not be loaded with modern allusions, nor is anachronism the only source of wit. A fairy spectacle, got up in real earnest, would, at any rate, be far from those common-places of which the present public is fast becoming weary.

MR. CARLYLE, in one of his essays, rejoices in the thought that there must needs exist one "horny-eyed" man more stupid (and "horny-eyed") than all others, and with high glee pictures to himself this supremely imbecile person looking forth upon the world and forming to himself "some theory of this universe"—an occupation, by the way, in which not a few reputed sages have displayed their folly in the most eminent manner. To discover this biggest fool in all creation would be a difficult and decidedly unprofitable task, but we are not quite sure that there would not be some advantage in establishing, by common consent of the sagacious, certain classifications in the various forms of art, so that it might be said absolutely—this is very nearly, that is quite the lowest branch of painting, sculpture, architecture, literature, or music. Everyone, however, will admit that, among pictures, only a very humble rank can be allotted to tavern signs; that the Scotchman outside a tobacconist's shop must be classed with the inferior productions of statuary; that nothing can be much lower than the architecture of the pig-stye; and that in literature, it is impossible to sink beneath the level of the criticisms in the Entr'acte. We proceed to inquire whether in music there is anything that can be assimilated to the tavern sign, the sculptured Scotchman, the pig-stye, and the articles in the Entr'acte. Is it the cornet solo of an omnibus conductor? No; for that, written down, or the impossibility of writing it down being demonstrated, could be proved not to be music at all. Is it the tinkling of a musical box? No; for that belongs to the domain, not of art, but of machinery, and wanting expression,—which in the arts means life—is to music precisely what photography is to painting. What then in the name of the plump little angels who held the music while St. Cecilia played the violoncello, can it be?*

Literature, and every form of art, whether or not they have "progressed" in the present century, have at all events undergone an extraordinary development. Readers, and amateurs of all kinds, have increased and multiplied, and those who have ears and hear not, those who have hearing and understand not, have to be provided for as well as their more educated brethren. Hence, whilst the best books and finest music obtain more students and admirers now than at any former period, there is also an unprecedented large demand for literary and musical rubbish, which may be and is shot with success into a variety of cheap publications and concert rooms; and it appears to us that bad music has been steadily deteriorating for the last fifteen years. It may be objected to us, that we should not take cognizance of that which is uniformly bad,—in other words, that the execrable in art does not lie within our jurisdiction. But if, as a high authority has said, critics are the police of literature, surely they may regard themselves as to some extent the constables of art, and, that being admitted, we know of more than one composer, or "arranger," whom we have every right to take in charge and expose in the pillory, and more than one kind of music which deserves nothing short of interdiction and outlawry.

Once upon a time, before the establishment of casinos, before the middle classes were in the habit of going to the Opera—and, therefore, before the reign of the operatic fantasia—though a great deal of disagreeable music may have been published, there were no utterly objectionable musical forms. The least estimable kind of composition must have been dance music, which does not appeal to the heart so much as the heels, and which still maintains its modest position at the bottom of the musical ladder. Strauss, Lanner and Jullien, however, in their way men of genius, and who in sixteen bars have expressed, infinitely more on the subject of waltzing than Byron was able to do in a long poem, gave a temporary interest to the particular kind of dance-music in which they excelled, and even founded a school of waltz-writers—now apparently extinct. The Puritans, in proscribing music, chiefly objected to it that it led to dancing, which, according to Prynne, was "for the most part attended with many amorous smiles, wanton compliments, scurrilous songs and sonnets, and ridiculous love-pranks," and which "served no necessary use, no profitable, laudable, or pious end at all, but issued only from the inbred pravity, vanity, wantonness, incontinency, pride, profaneness, or madness of mens' depraved natures." If Strauss had published his waltzes in England, in the time of the Puritans, he would have convulsed society, and would probably have been beheaded. Fortunately for him he lived in the nineteenth century, and in Vienna, which is not a puritanical city at all.

In the meanwhile the operatic fantasia had been much cultivated by composers of ability, but chiefly by composers who, not satisfied with having no ideas of their own, could not take those of their betters without wantonly disfiguring them.

---

* Vide the St. Cecilia by Domenechino in the Louvre. In the face of one of the angels the pleasant features of Mr. Buckstone are foreshadowed.

Then the writers of dance music, tired of inventing or combining tunes "monotonous as the songs of slaves," determined to imitate the distorters of operatic melody, and even to go beyond them. They appropriated the most beautiful, and, therefore, in the great majority of instances, the most unsuitable airs they could find, and subjected them to the Procrustean operation, with this difference, however, that the humane Procustes only chopped off the tops and toes of his victims or stretched them out a little where they were not quite long enough, whereas the dance composers often cut a tune, if necessary, in two, and take the middle. However, we are not going to write an article against them; we would as soon think of hissing an Ethiopian Serenader. But we wanted to discover the lowest thing that had ever been done in music, and we believe we have pointed it out.

THE ROYAL LONDON YACHT CLUB.—On Monday evening the annual ball of the Royal London Yacht Club was celebrated at Willis's Rooms, St. James's. About 500 ladies and gentlemen attended, and the scene was of a most animated character. After supper the chair was taken by the popular commodore of the club—Andrew Arcedeckne, Esq., who gave the toasts with becoming facetiousness, and who, in proposing the "Health of the Ladies," was especially successful. Mr. Sheridan Markwell proposed the commodore's health. He informed the company Mr. Arcedeckne had only just returned from Madeira, expressly to be present at the ball; that he had been, and still was, a staunch supporter of the club; also that amongst the members he had introduced, special and honourable mention might be made of Captains M'Clintock, Hobson, Allan Young (present), Commander Pym, Arctic celebrities, and also Mr. Cornelius Grinnell. Mr. Markwell wound up by informing the company that Captain M'Clintock had given the name of Arcedeckne to an island he had discovered in the locality of the magnetic pole. Dancing was kept up till the morning had far advanced. The general arrangements, under the ball committee, left nothing to be desired. Mr. T. Broadwood is the vice-commodore, and M. Eagle the treasurer.

THE WEST MIDDLESEX RIFLE CORPS AND THEIR AMATEUR BAND—(From a Member of the Corps).—The members of this corps have displayed an energy and common sense highly creditable, and worthy of imitation by all other rifle corps. It appears that the members were extremely desirous of having a first-rate band, and considered that as they included in their ranks the leading clergymen, medical men, lawyers, and tradesmen of Marylebone and other districts, they had a right to have one, but their captain, Lord Radstock, whose admirable management of all matters connected with the corps, combined with an evident desire to aid the movement, has frequently been evinced, judged that the money already collected could not be spent on such an object. What then was to be done? Some of the corps had small professional bands, others only buglers, while a few had regimental fifes and drums. Mr. J. Day, however, proprietor of the refectory at "Lord's," had, for the last three years, assembled an amateur brass band of unusual pretensions. Mr. Day is an able musician, and as an amateur cornet player stands in high esteem; added to this his coadjutor, Mr. Mitchell, has skilfully arranged a vast selection of popular music, suitable for the purpose, and to which, with his two sons, gives efficient support to Mr. Day. Upwards of twenty other gentlemen and tradesmen efficiently back the above-mentioned, and from constant practice under Mr. Day's direction, considerable progress has been made. The members of this band offered their services to the Rifle Corps; and, after performing two or three times before the council, as well as before a committee specially appointed for the purpose, it was unanimously decided that the offer should be accepted, and a subscription set on foot. The subscription was so readily responded to that matters were concluded on the night after the proposal. The only condition made by Mr. Day,—representing the amateurs—was, that he should have a professional drummer and opheiclide player. Several gentlemen have since been induced by the corps to join the band, among whom is Mr. Hermann Lang, long known in amateur circles as the friendly rival of Mr. Henry Tatham for the Amateur Championship of the Cornet, and who will share the solo parts with Mr. Day.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.

THE performance of M. Gounod's "Grand Mass in G," composed for the celebration of St. Cecilia's day, and Beethoven's "Choral Symphony," attracted a large assemblage of amateurs on Wednesday evening to St. Martin's Hall. Curiosity, no less than admiration, exercised its influence on this occasion. M. Gounod's Mass had been loudly vaunted by the Parisian press, and the English public were willing to endorse the continental judgment, if they could do so conscientiously. The "Mass in G," however, was not entirely unknown here. Two pieces had been introduced into one of Mr. Hullah's concerts some years since, in an incomplete form, certainly; but those who heard them, arguing naturally that Mr. Hullah would select the most effective parts for performance, had already ventured to pronounce an opinion on the whole. The Mass was received with but little applause on Wednesday evening. The audience could not have been more attentive, the band and singers more zealous and painstaking. In no part of the work, however, was the slightest degree of enthusiasm manifested. A few applauded, occasionally, but the impression at the end—if the word, indeed, may be used—amounted to the utmost indifference. M. Gounod's Mass does not possess qualities to render it popular. The "Agnus Dei," is the most satisfactory piece in conception and treatment; the "Sanctus" begins well and ends indifferently; the "Gloria in Excelsis" is feeble in idea and in the working out; and the "Kyrie Eleison" and "Credo" present few attractions in a musical light. M. Gounod is fond of devices; but he attains nothing new in his search after novelty. He is apparently as addicted to climaxes as Signor Verdi himself, and the crescendo in the "Sanctus" bears a strong resemblance to the boisterous displays in certain finales of Ernani, Il Trovatore, and Nabucco, &c.

The principal solo singers were Miss Banks, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Thomas, and the choir was composed of Mr. Hullah's First Upper Singing School.

The "Choral Symphony" did not go quite so well as on former occasions, but elicited more enthusiasm than ever.

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.

THE first concert of the fifth season was given on Wednesday evening at St. James's Hall, which must have taken some of the subscribers by surprise. No prospectus had been issued; scarcely an announcement of the opening night had been made previously; and, to crown all, the performance was fixed for the same evening as Mr. Hullah's concert, when M. Gounod's "Mass" and Beethoven's "Choral Symphony" were given. This proves either that there was remissness on the part of the management, or that the Vocal Association takes up a new ground altogether, and, having a sufficient amount of subscribers, and relying on its prestige, is not anxious to conciliate the public. For the reason that no prospectus has been published, we cannot speculate as to the intentions of the Association, or what they are about to do this season. A notice of the first concert must serve all who are interested in its progress to draw conclusions therefrom as to the likelihood of its future prosperity. We may state at the outset, that the choir is considerably improved and much strengthened, a fact worth the best worded prospectus ever written.

The principal piece was Mendelssohn's hymn, "Hear my prayer," a work, though brief, sufficiently difficult to test the capabilities of any choral band. It was throughout well and steadily sung and loudly applauded. Mdlle. Euphrosyne Parepa sang the solos with remarkable effect. The other performances by the choir were part-song (Mr. Henry Smart), "From the heights celestial streaming;" part-song (Mr. Francesco Berger), "Night, lovely night;" cradle-song (Mr. Henry Smart), "Lullaby;" part-song (Mendelssohn), "In the forest;" hunting-song (Mr. Benedict), "Rise, sleep no more;" part-song (Mr. H. H. Pierson), "Ye mariners of England;" serenade (arranged by Sir Henry Bishop), "O! by rivers;" and the National Anthem. Mr. Henry Smart's two part-songs were given for the first time, and loudly applauded. Both are admirable specimens of the composer's talent in this kind of choral writing, the "Lullaby" especially being of quaint grace and beauty. Mr. Berger's part-song, also a novelty, was encored and repeated; as was likewise Mr. Benedict's hunting-song, a highly spirited and characteristic composition.

Mdlle. Parepa more than confirmed the impression she created in Mendelssohn's Hymn, by her singing of the "Shadow Song" from Dinorah, and the "Laughing Song" from Auber's Manon Lescaut. She was loudly encored in both.

Mr. Benedict conducted with his usual skill. The second concert is announced for Wednesday, March 7.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF FINE ARTS.

ON Thursday evening last, the first trial of musical compositions, in connection with this society, took place at the Architectural Gallery, Conduit-street, when the following programme was given by the members of "The Arion," under the direction of Mr. Alfred Gilbert:—

Cantata for eight voices	"Jehovah, Lord God."	Spohr.
22nd Psalm for eight voices	... ...	Mendelssohn.
Motett, Salve Regina	... ...	Hauptmann.

And two new-part songs, arranged from Mendelssohn, (first time.)

The "Arion," is, we understand, a society forming for the performance of music for two choirs, cantatas, &c., without orchestra, and rarely heard in our concert-rooms. Of such music there is a large collection, and the study of it will open out a large field for the "Arion." We heartily wish success to the undertaking.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—We are informed that Mr. E. T. Smith has taken this theatre, and intends opening it with Italian Opera on Easter Monday.

SIG. and MAD. GASSIER, after fulfilling a brilliant engagement in the United States and the Havanna, are expected to return to England in the month of March.

BERLIN.—Liszt has been appointed conductor to the Royal Opera! We should like to known if three are not enough! Meyerbeer, Dorn, and Taubert.

The rival music conservatoriums in Berlin (Kullack's and Sterne's) have issued their new circulars. Both promise a thoroughly artistic education for about twelve pounds per annum. Note this fact, Mr. Gimson, of No. 4, Tenterden-street.

MONDAY EVENING CONCERTS, MYDDELTON HALL.—The second of the series of four concerts took place on Monday evening last. The artists were Miss Messent, Miss Paget, and Miss Fanny Reeves, Mr. Allan Irving, Elliot Galer, and D. F. Davis, harpist, who made his first appearance in London, and with complete success. Mr. Frank Mori conducted. The most successful pieces of the evening were the "Miserere," from Il Trovatore, executed by Miss Reeves and Mr. Galer; the chorus by the Vocal Quartette Union (encored); "'Tis best to be off with the old love," sung with considerable humour by Miss Reeves (encored). Mr. Elliot Galer was particularly successful in each of his songs, especially a new one, "Under the linden tree," by M. Lutz, which narrowly escaped a double encore.

DEATH OF MR. HENRY FARREN.—We read in American papers of the death of Mr. Henry Farren. Mr. Farren was lessee and manager of the Brighton Theatre for three or four seasons, and under his management, theatricals, which had long languished in Brighton, flourished. Unfortunately, although Mr. Farren's early managerial career in Brighton was highly creditable to him, he was led away by the success that attended his exertions, and launched out into extravagancies in private life. At last he was beset by the myrmidons of the law, and escaped from an attic window of the Brighton Theatre. Mr. Farren followed well in his father's steps. All who have seen his Grandfather Whitehead or his Sir Peter Teazle can vouch for this. He was good as a melo-dramatic actor—to wit, in the Corsican Brothers; but he was not a tragedian, and here he failed. He thought he could do everything well, but it was not so.

THE WINDSOR ASSOCIATION (Windsor), for the protection of persons and property against thieves and felons, held their Forty-sixth Annual Meeting at the Castle Hotel, on Wednesday, February 1st, the Mayor in the chair, supported by the ex-Mayor, the Treasurer, Solicitor to the Society, &c. There was a large gathering of the members, who did ample justice to the excellent dinner provided by Mr. Sherrieff. The accounts of the Society were stated as being in a very flourishing condition, and after the routine business of the meeting had been transacted, the usual loyal and patriotic toasts were given, as well as the healths of the mayor and corporation, the vicar and clergy, the treasurer, the vice-chairman and committee, &c. Several very good speeches were made, and the proceedings of the evening were very agreeably interspersed with a selection of glees, madrigals, ballads, and songs, by Messrs. Marriott, Dyson, and Lambert, Mr. Pearson presiding at the pianoforte. The musical part of the entertainment passed off very successfully, giving universal satisfaction, and reflecting great credit on all concerned, and particularly on Mr. Dyson, who officiated as conductor.

MOZART—CHILD AND MAN.

(Continued from page 823, Vol. 37.)

No. 71.

L. Mozart to his Wife.

Rome, June 30th, 1770.

HAVE we performed before the King of Naples? No, we have not. We have not yet got beyond being saluted by the Queen each time she has perceived us. However, the Queen can do nothing for us, and it is easier to tell you than to write you a description of his Neapolitan Majesty. But you can easily imagine how these sort of things are managed at court. The young violinist Lamotte, who is in the service of the Empress, and who has been travelling in Italy by her orders and at her expense, had been a long time in Naples, and extended his stay three weeks longer, kept in a state of suspense, as he had been led to hope the King and Queen would ask to see him. Of course nothing came of this. I have a hundred amusing stories to tell you of this court; and I will show you also a picture of the King. I have yet not been able to see any one here. I did not tell you the reason why in my first letter, but as things are assuming a better aspect now, I will do so. You know that two horses and one postillion make three brutes. At the last stage before Rome, the postillion whipped the horse harnessed to the shaft, and who consequently supports the sedia. The horse fell rolling in the sand and dust, and fell violently on one side, dragging with him the front part of the sedia, which has only two wheels. I held Wolfgang by one hand, so that he did not fall out of the carriage, but the shock dragged me down, and my right leg, which was caught in the iron fastenings of the apron of the carriage, was torn for about the length of my finger to the bone.

72.

The Same to the Same.

Rome, July 4th, 1770.

To-morrow we are going to dine with the Cardinal Pallavicini; the day after with the Baron de Sainte Odile, Ambassador of Tuscany. We are to learn to-morrow a piece of news that will greatly astonish you. The Cardinal Pallavicini has received orders to remit to Wolfgang an order from the Pope with the diploma. Do not say anything about this yet. If the news prove true I will let you know soon. The last time we were at the Cardinal's, he said several times in speaking to Wolfgang, Signor Cavaliere, we thought it was a joke. Wolfgang has grown very much since he has been in Naples.

73.

The Same to the Same.

Rome, July 7th, 1770.

What I wrote to you the other day about the order† is true. It is the same order as that which was bestowed on Gluck; in the papers appertaining to it the words written are, Te creamus auratæ militiæ Equitem. And he must wear the beautiful gold cross that he has had presented him; you can imagine how I laugh each time I hear him called the Signor Cavaliere. We are to have an audience of the Pope to-morrow on account of this.

P.S. de Wolfgang.—Cara Sorella mia, I was agreeably surprised to see that you can compose so well, your air is really very fine; try often to do the same kind of thing; send me soon the six minuets of Haydn. Mademoiselle, I have the honour to be your very humble servant and brother—Chevalier de Mozart.—Addio.

* Francois Lamotte, born at Vienna, in 1751. Acquired while very young a high reputation. He died in Holland in 1781.

† Mozart only wore the Order of the "Cross of the Golden Spur," and which gave him the right to call himself the Chevalier de Mozart, (as Gluck called himself the Chevalier de Gluck) in his younger days, in the imperial towns and in his journey to Paris, by the express orders of his father, in 1770. Mozart was fourteen years old.

(To be continued.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

THE BAY OF DUBLIN QUADRILLES, on Irish Melodies by Wellington Guernsey, as performed by the bands of the Coldstream Guards, Royal Artillery, &c., has become one of the most popular of the day Price 3s. Beware of spurious imitations. London: Brewer and Co.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.

Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.

Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

The entire Stock of Messrs. G. Trimbey and Co., Musical Instrument Dealers, of Queen-street, Cheapside.

MESSRS. PUTTICK and SIMPSON, Auctioneers of Musical and Literary Property, will sell by Auction, at the new and very spacious premises, 47, Leicester-square, W.C, (formerly the Western Literary Institution), on Thursday, March the 1st, and following day, the Extensive and Valuable Stock of Messrs. G. TRIMBEY and CO. (who are relinquishing the miscellaneous business, for manufacturing only), comprising a large and well-selected Stock of every requisite for a Musical Instrument Seller (especially the Country Trade) several gross of Violins, Violoncellos and Double Basses, Bows, Guitars, 57 Musical Boxes, 36 Bell and other Metronomes, near 2 gross of Besson's and other Accordions and Concertinas, a good assortment of Brass Instruments, Cornopeans, and Sax Horns, by Curtois, &c.; Flutes, Fifes, Flageolets, Clarinets, Desks, Canterburies, Stools, Instruction Books, various fittings and miscellaneous stock, useful to the Manufacturer and the Dealer, 4 Harmoniums by Alexandre, &c., several Pianofortes by the best makers, &c. Catalogues on receipt of two stamps.

W. VINCENT WALLACE.—CZERNY, ETUDE de la VELOCITE. Edited, with additional matter, by W. VINCENT WALLACE. Together with Czerny's last additions and Hamilton's notes. 23rd edition, in two books, each 6s.; or complete in one, 10s. 6d. N.B.—Purchasers should be particular in ordering Vincent Wallace's edition.

W. VINCENT WALLACE.—CZERNY'S 101 STUDIES. Edited with additional matter, by W. VINCENT WALLACE. Together with Czerny's last additions and Hamilton's notes. 24th edition, in two books, each 4s.; or complete in one, 8s. N.B.—Purchasers should be particular in ordering Vincent Wallace's edition.

TWO-HUNDRED and FORTY-SIXTH EDITION of HAMILTON'S MODERN INSTRUCTIONS for the PIANOFORTE, enlarged and fingered by Czerny; a Sacred Song and two Anthems, large music folio, price only 4s. "The veriest child may learn from this book."—Berwick Warder. "This work introduces the noble science to young minds by a much less difficult medium than the instruction books of old did."—Vide Dispatch. "This book is so clear that an infant can understand it—a feature very desirable to teachers."—Vide Musical Gazette, No. 1. For the country and the colonies this work has not its equal. London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., 6, New Burlington-street, publishers to the Queen; and all Musicsellers and Booksellers.

POPULAR JUVENILE MUSIC.

PIANOFORTE RECREATIONS FOR JUVENILE PERFORMERS.

Price One Shilling each number.

FIRST SERIES—"SATANELLA."

1. The Power of Love.
2. The Slaves' Chorus.
3. Our hearts are not our own.
4. Oh would she but name.

SECOND SERIES—"DINORAH."

1. The Shadow Air.
2. Santa Maria.
3. Fanciulle (canzonet).
4. Hunting Song.

THIRD SERIES—"MARTHA."

1. M' appari tutt' amor.
2. Drinking Song.
3. Servants' Chorus.
4. Finale to First Act.

FOURTH SERIES—CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.

1. Beautiful Star, and Ring de Banjo.
2. Good News from Home.
3. We are coming Sister Mary, and Wait for the Waggon.
4. Nelly Gray.
5. Hard Times.
6. I'm off to Charlestown.

FIFTH SERIES—DANCE MUSIC.

1. Maud Valse.
2. Königsberg Polka.
3. Satanella Quadrille.
4. Pantomime Galop.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEYS PART-SONG MISCELLANY: a Collection of Original Compositions by celebrated composers. Price Fourpence each number:—

		Poetry by	Music by
No. 1.	"Welcome, Heavenly Peace"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
2.	"The Bud is on the Bough"	Frances Bennoch	Frank Mori.
3.	"And were they not the Happy Days"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
4.	"Beauty is Dead"	Charles Swain	Frank Mori.
5.	"Who shall be Fairest"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
6.	"O spare my tender Flowers"	Charles Mackay	Frank Mori.
7.	"Ripe Strawberries"	W. S. Passmore	J. L. Hatton.
8.	"Smile, O Heaven! upon the Day"	E. Falconer	M. W. Balfe.
9.	"Sancta Maria"	H. F. Chorley	Meyerbeer.
10.	"A Legend of the Rhine"		Henry Smart.
11.	"The Hostess's Daughter"	Uhland	Henry Smart.
12.	"The Rover"	E. M. S.	Henry Smart.
13.	"The Three Wishes"	J. Ellison	Dr. Pech.

To be continued.

The above are supplied to the Profession and Societies at the rate of 18 as 12 at 3d. each, or 50 copies at 2d. each. Any number post-free for 4d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

LAURENT'S UNRIVALLED WALTZES.

 The average sale of the following Waltzes is from 4,000 to 20,000 each set.

		s.	d.
Sicilian Vespers Waltz	(Illustrated in colours)	4	0
Donna Julia Waltz	"	4	0
Beloved Star Waltz (on "Thou art so near" by Reichardt)	"	4	0
Dinorah Waltz	"	4	0
Satanella Waltz	"	4	0
Lord Lovell's Waltz	(Illustrated)	3	0
Christy's Minstrels' Waltz	"	3	0
Summer Bloom Waltz	"	3	0

BOOSEY & SONS' Musical Library, 24 & 28, Holles-stree

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBRAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

ADOLPH GOLLMICK.

	s. d.		s. d.
Vive la Danse, Valse...	3 0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3 0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3 0	Azelia...	3 0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3 0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3 0

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC PERRY.

			s. d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to		Miss Baron	3 0
The Wardour Mazurka	,,	Lord Arundell	4 0
The Vancouver Quadrille	,,	T. B. Chilty, Esq.	3 0
The Valentia Polka	,,	George Griffiths, Esq.	3 0
The Augusta Mazurka	,,	Miss C. A. Thistlewayte	2 6
The Avondale Schottische	,,	Miss Barron	2 0
The Helena Polkas	,,	The Misses Northey..	3 0
The Pauline Valses	,,	The Misses Warner	3 0
The Castellon Polka	,,	Miss Fanny Hutchinson	2 0
The Cotham Polka	,,	Miss Mary Lorymer	2 0
The Promenade Polkas	,,	Miss Kirwan	2 0
The Salopian Quadrilles	,,	Miss Brown.	3 0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each :—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET.'
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.,
Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

"These ballads are beautiful compositions, thoroughly English in their style and character. The words, always selected with literary taste, are set to music with the utmost attention, not only to sentiment and expression, but to all the nicetics of accent and of prosody."

"The two trios, which are for female voices, and calculated for the accomplished lady-singers who are now found in every social circle, are among the most attractive drawing-room music that we have heard for a long time."—Spectator.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s. d
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6 0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3 0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3 0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3 0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dedièe à Ferdinand Praeger)	3 0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dedièe à Edouard Roeckel) ..	3 0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

Published this Day. Price 2s. 6d.

AN EASY AND POPULAR EDITION OF

"O TENDER SHADOW,"

SONG,

FROM MEYERBEER'S DINORAH.

Adapted for the use of amateurs unable to accomplish all the passages in the original edition, by M. Jules de Glimes. With English and Italian words, price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Lately published,

THREE NEW SONGS

BY

EMILE BERGER.

Price 2s. each.

SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.

From the Daily News.

"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.

A COMPLETE EDITION OF

GLUCK'S OPERA,

IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,

FOR

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 3s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

THE JUVENILE PIANOFORTE ALBUM. reduced price 3s. 6d., handsomely bound with two coloured illustrations, containing :—

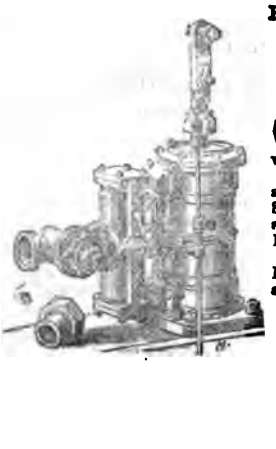
SHADOW AIR	from	DINORAH.
SANTA MARIA	,,	DINORAH.
POWER OF LOVE	,,	SATANELLA.
SLAVE CHORUS	,,	SATANELLA.
AIR	,,	MARTHA.
BEAUTIFUL STAR	,,	(CHRISTY'S)
RING DE BANJO	,,	(CHRISTY'S).
KONIGSBERG POLKA
MAUD VALSE	,,	LAURENT.
VIOLET MAZURKA	,,	DUCHESNE.
SATANELLA QUADRILLES..		(COMPLETE).

All arranged for the youngest performers on the Pianoforte.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

Second Edition, Folio, pp. 40, stitched. Price, complete, 7s. 6d.

R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately, Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.



HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.

JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.

For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL, and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.

Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply to BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London, sole agents

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms

NEW SONGS

PUBLISHED BY

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee;
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG,"

Sung by Mr. SANTLEY.

Composed by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s.

Rouse ye Palikari,
Men of Suliote, rouse ye,
See on yonder mountain's brow,
Glows the beacon light!
Warlike songs are singing,—
While the trumpets ringing
Call the valiant Palikari,
To the coming Fight.

What though foes surround us,
Though their chains have bound us,
We will live as freemen live,
Or die as warriors die.
Come with weapons gleaming—
Come with banners streaming,
Raise your glorious battle cry,
Suliote shall be free.

"SYMPATHY,"

POETRY BY ELLIS BELL,

COMPOSED BY E. AGUILAR,

Price 2s.

There should be no despair for you,
While nightly stars are burning;
While evening pours its silent dew,
And sunshine gilds the morning.

There should be no despair, though tears
May flow down like a river:
Are not the best-beloved of years
Around your heart for ever.

They weep, you weep, it must be so;
Winds sigh, as you are sighing,
And winter sheds its grief in snow,
Where autumn's leaves are lying.

Yet, these revive, and from their fate,
Your fate cannot be parted;
Then, journey on, if not elate,
Still, never broken hearted.

"AWAKE LITTLE PILGRIM."

Poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. DRUMMOND.

Composed by MAURICE COBHAM.

Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

"THE DEW-DROP AND THE ROSE."

Poetry by ISABELLA HAMPTON.

Composed by G. A. OSBORNE. Price 2s. 6d.

A dew-drop reclined on a beautiful rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love,
When near that sweet flower, to seek soft repose,
A sunbeam fell down from above!

The dew-drop instinctively felt there had come
A rival—his loved one to prove,
A shelter he sought next the heart of the rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love.

Still nearer came that sunbeam gay,
As he called the rose his bride,
Those words the dew-drop heard him say,
Then drooped his head and died.

"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE."

Poetry by M. A. STODART.

Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE. Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle air,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

"ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME."

Poetry from the Polish.

Composed by A. REICHARDT. Price 2s. 6d.

Are they meant but to deceive me,
Those fond words that tell of love
Ah! for ever it would grieve me
If their falsehood I should prove.
Though my heart would trust them gladly,
Though belief, alone, is bliss,
Yet I still must ponder sadly,
Ah! what bitter pain is this.

All my inmost soul concealing,
Shall I sternly answer "No?"
Or each secret wish revealing
Shall my words unfettered flow.
Ever lingering, never speaking,
Here my thoughts shall I express
For my heart if you are seeking,
Strive to find it by a guess.

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
(DÉPOT GÉNÉRAL DE LA MAISON BRANDUS DE PARIS),
244, REGENT STREET, CORNER OF LITTLE ARGYLL STREET.

WORKS EDITED BY J. W. DAVISON.

1.

In one volume, price 4s., or bound in cloth, 6s. 6d., large size,

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA SONATA,

AND

WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA SONATA,

With Biographical and Critical Introductions, by

J. W. DAVISON.

(In a few days.)

2.

In stiff sides, price 8s., or bound in cloth, 10s. 6d., large size,

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

(COMPLETE)

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Critical Preface, and Portrait of Chopin.

3.

In stiff sides, price 8s., or bound in cloth, 10s. 6d., large size,

(In a few days),

MENDELSSOHN'S

SONGS WITHOUT WORDS,

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Descriptive and Critical Preface and Portrait of Mendelssohn.

 Another Edition of this Work is published, in large 4to, cloth, gilt, price 7s. 6d. (Nearly ready.)

4.

In two volumes, 10s. 6d. each, or bound in cloth, price 13s. each, large size,

BEETHOVEN'S

PIANOFORTE SONATAS,

(COMPLETE)

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Descriptive and Critical Introductions, and Portrait of Beethoven.

 Another Edition of this Work is also published, in two volumes, large 4to, cloth, gilt, price 10s. 6d. each; uniform with Mendelssohn's Songs Without Words.

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

New and Complete Edition for the Pianoforte,

BY

HENRY SMART,

Price 3s., or handsomely bound, 5s.

(Published this day.)

THE CROWN DIAMONDS,

New and Complete Edition, for Pianoforte, with

Illustrations by BRANDARD,

And Introduction, describing the Plot and Music.

Price 6s., in cloth,

Forming the Twentieth volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Pianoforte Operas.

(March 1st.)

BOOSEY'S 100 GERMAN WALTZES

For the Violin,

BY

LABITSKY, LANNER, & STRAUS,

Including all the best of those favourite Composers.

Price 1s. (Monday next.)

AN EVENING WITH BALFE,

For Pianoforte,

BY

NORDMANN,

Introducing the following Airs:—"Day-break," "Margaretta," "Maud," "Good night, Beloved," "Chorus Satanella," "The Green Trees," "Nelly Gray," &c.

Price, Pianoforte Solo, 4s.—Duet, 5s.

(Published this day.)

KUHES' NEW FANTASIA ON ZAMPA,

For Pianoforte. Price 3s.

(On Tuesday next.)

A SELECTION FROM DINORAH.

For Concertina and Piano,

ARRANGED BY

RICHARD BLAGROVE.

Price 3s. 6d.

(This day.)

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex.
Saturday, February 18, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 8. SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons:
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP of MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Diction, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROQUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—THE FIRST CONCERT, on Wednesday evening next, Feb. 29th, at ST. JAMES'S HALL. Programme—Spohr's Symphony, "The Power of Sound," in memory of the composer; Sterndale Bennett's Overture, "The Wood Nymphs;" Schumann's Overture, "Geneveva;" Rossini's Overture, "The Siege of Corinth;" Ernst's Concertino in D. Violin—Mr. H. G. Blagrove. Vocalists—Madlle Parepa and Signor Belletti. Conductor—Mr. ALFRED MELLON. Doors open at eight. To commence at half-past eight precisely.

N.B.—No tickets will be sold to the public, except a limited number for the upper gallery, at 3s. 6d. each, at Cramer and Co.'s, 201, Regent-street.

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.
St. James's Hall. 36, Baker-street, W.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION. President, The Right Honourable the Earl of Dudley. Conductors, M. Benedict and Mr. C. E. Horsley. On Thursday evening, March 8, at 8 o'clock. Miss Arabella Goddard, Madlle Euphrosyne, Parepa, and Choir of 200 voices. By general desire will be repeated Mendelssohn's Hymn, "Hear my prayer," Madlle. Parepa and Choir of the Vocal Association. Organ, Mr. Brownsmith. New Part-Songs, &c., &c. Area, 1s.; Reserved Seats, 2s.; Sofa Stalls, 3s.; at the Hall.

MISS LAURA BAXTER has the honour to announce to her pupils and friends that she will give a Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert, the particulars of which will be published in future advertisements. Communications to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, 155, Albany-street, Regent's-park, N.W.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

ROYAL VOLUNTEER BALL.—Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.
His Royal Highness The Prince Consort.
His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.
His Royal Highness The Duke of Cambridge, Commander in Chief.
Her Royal Highness The Duchess of Cambridge.
Her Royal Highness The Princess Mary of Cambridge.

The Royal Volunteer Ball will take place on the evening of Wednesday March 7th, the day on which Her Majesty will hold a Court specially to receive the Officers of the various Volunteer Corps from the different parts of the kingdom.

The Ball will take place in the New Floral Hall, Covent Garden.

The list of the Ladies Patronesses through whom the tickets will be issued will be completed and announced, together with the details of all the arrangements, in the course of a few days.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

HERR ENGEL, will return to town for the season on Monday, the 27th instant. All letters to be directed to Herr Engel, at his residence, 10, Bentinck-street, Manchester-square, W.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano), respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed [illegible] street, Berners-street, W.

MR. ELLIOT GALER has REMOVED [illegible] Villa, Junction-road, N.

MR. THOMAS (Basso) finding that mistakes are continually occurring, from the fact of there being others in the musical profession of the same name, requests that all communications to him be addressed "Lewis Thomas, 19, Hampshire-terrace, Camden-road Villas, N.W.

MR. LEONARD (Bass) accepts engagements for Concerts, either in London or the Provinces (see notices of Mr. Leonard's performances in The Musical World and The Press newspapers of the 4th of February). Address, No. 3, Pomeroy-terrace, Old Kent-road, S.E.

MR. SUCHET CHAMPION will sing at Edinboro' 25th, morning and evening; Arbroath, 28th; Brechin, 29th; Perth, March 1st; St. Andrews, 2nd; Dundee, 3rd; York, 6th; Glasgow, 10th, 17th, and 24th. Letters to be addressed 66, Pentonville-road, London, N.

MR. BRINLEY RICHARDS will return to London for the season on Monday, February 27th. All letters to be addressed to him at his residence, 4, Torrington-street, Russell-square, W.C.
Graham's Hotel, Edinburgh, February 16th.

MISS ROBINA BELLINGHAM, Contralto, Pupil of Mr. Frank Mori, requires an engagement to sing in a choir in or near London. Terms moderate. Pupils instructed in singing and pianoforte. Address Miss Robina Bellingham, 18, Wells-street, Calthorpe-street, Gray's Inn-road.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.
F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.
Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

A YOUNG MAN, disengaged on Sundays, is open to an engagement to play the Harmonium or Organ, at Church or Chapel, within two miles of the Great Western terminus. Address, W. P., Post Office, Cobourg-place, Bayswater.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address, M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winser, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.
Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to
THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

CHURCH ORGAN FOR SALE. Built by the late J. C. Bishop; has two full sets of keys. Now being removed from St. Mary's Church, Leicester. For price and particulars, apply to Forster and Andrews, organ-builders, Hull.

MADAME OURY'S GRAND GALOP di Bravura on Christy's Minstrels' Melodies, rapturously encored when performed by the author at the late Piccolomini concert at Brighton. Price 3s. Also, "When other lips," transcribed by Madame Oury. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW MUSIC, &c.—NEW SONGS by J. L. HATTON.—"The Bird of Song," 2s.; "It was fifty years ago," 2s. 6d.; "The Maid I love hath many a grace," 2s.; "Don't come teasing me, Sir," 2s. 6d. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

WALLACE FANTAISIE BRILLANTE on Verdi's Ernani. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LURLINE—W. V. WALLACE'S NEW GRAND OPERA. Vocal, and also arrangements as solos and duets for the pianoforte. Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

W. VINCENT WALLACE AS A PIANIST.—"The recent splendid success of the new opera 'Lurline,' together with the reception always accorded to 'Maritana,' has placed the name of the composer on the highest level of the operatic composers of the day: but it is not only in the line of opera and song that Mr. Wallace excels. As a pianist he is scarcely surpassed, and his original compositions for the pianoforte overflow with genius, and abound with musician-like effects. In arranging and varying popular melodies for the piano, he is without equal. 'Besides the creation of new music,' says a weekly contemporary. 'Mr. Wallace has undertaken the delightful task—delightful to those in whose musical souls are treasured the old melodies, descending like rivulets of fresh water out of the caves of time—of adapting them to the instrument of our day.' It may be as well to inform pianoforte players that Mr Wallace's latest pianoforte works may be obtained, through any music-seller, of Her Majesty's music publishers (6, New Burlington-street, Regent-street, W.), who are constituted sole publishers of his recent pianoforte works for Great Britain and its dependencies."—Extracted from The Globe of February 22nd.

Shortly will be Published,
TWO EVENING SERVICES IN A MAJOR: Cantate, and Deus, Magnificate, and Nunc Dimittis, with Organ Accompaniment. Composed by E. Bunnett, Mus. Bac., Cantab., Assistant Organist of Norwich Cathedral. Price (to Subscribers) 8s. Subscriber's names will be received by the Author, Upper Close, Norwich, and by the Publishers, Messrs. Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London, W.

Edited by CIPRIANI POTTER.
BEETHOVEN'S GRAND SONATA, or CONCERTANTE, for Pianoforte and Violin, dedicated to Rodolph Kreutzer, Op. 47. Price 5s. This Edition is engraved on extra-sized plates, and is particularly recommended, as an improvement on other editions. London: R. Mills and Sons, 140, New Bond-street.

GOLLMICK—DRIPPING WELL, Morceaux Fantastique for the pianoforte. Third Edition, price 3s. One of the most popular original pieces of the day. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

JUST PUBLISHED.—"There's nothing like a freshening breeze," new song by Alberto Randegger, composed for and sung with the greatest success by Mr. Thomas, when on his last tour, and always encored. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.

Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.
Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.
"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.
"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.
"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

HYDRAULIC ORGAN & HARMONIUM BLOWER, &c.
JOY'S PATENTS, 1856 & 1859.

CAN be applied to blow the bellows of Organs and Harmoniums wherever water at a pressure can be obtained.
For price and particulars of Organ Blower apply to CARRETT, MARSHALL and CO., Sun Foundry, Leeds, sole authorised makers and agents, or to DAVID JOY, Patentee, Leeds.
Ditto of Harmonium Blower, apply to BOOSEY and SONS, Holles-street, London, sole agents

Organ Builders supplied on liberal terms

REVIEWS.

"By the Waters of Babylon, Anthem from the 137th Psalm" —by William Chater (J. A. Novello).—There is thought, and there is a certain degree of promise, in the above setting of a passage which, by its profound and pathetic expression, must recommend itself to all serious composers who have a turn for religious music. On the other side we find a discrepancy between aim and achievement, which forces us to qualify our words of encouragement with the proviso, that the worthy organist of Coventry has shown himself unequal to the task of setting such a passage in the lofty style he must have proposed to himself on commencing. The almost total absence of well-defined melody has been (unreasonably, we think) excused in certain forms of church music; and we shall therefore refrain from indicting Mr. Chater on this head. In the matter of harmony, nevertheless, we cannot afford to be so charitable; for, in default of tuneful phraseology, what atonement are we to look for unless in the clearness and purity of harmonious progression? Now, Mr. Chater's harmony is by no means unexceptionable, notwithstanding an evident determination on his part to avoid the beaten track, and attain both depth and originality. Take for example :—

And again for example :—

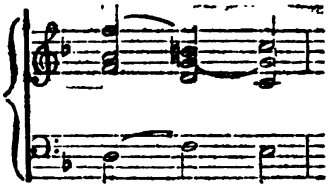
And again for example :—

And again for example :—

And again for example :

(How much brighter, by the way, would the chord of B flat sound had the first bass note in the last bar been F sharp, instead of F natural.) And again for example :—

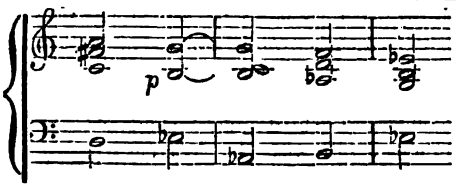
(In which there is a terrible confusion of keys, &c.) And again for example :—



And again for example :—

The last movement, allegro vivace, to the words, "Yea, happy shall he be," is a fugue, and the lamest (the "leanest," Mr. Chorley would say), that ever illustrated how the strict rules of accompaniment may be defied (with punity). Look at the subjoined "answer" on the fourth below :—

The stretto has this peculiarity—viz. : that the fugal style is abandoned—a proceeding more convenient than canonical (or perhaps, rather—we should say—more frugal than fugal). One more example, and we have done :—



But no, we can't resist another (positively the last). Again then, for example :—

We regret to find so much fault, but where art is concerned, there is no alternative but to speak plainly. Mr. Chater, moreover, is too eager a composer to be absolved from criticism.

SPOHR'S LETTERS FROM PARIS.

(From Alexander Malibran's Louis Spohr. Sein Leben und Wirken. Frankfurt-am-Main. J. D. Sauerland's Verlag. 1860).

I.

Paris, 18*th December*, 1820.

—— With beating heart I drove through the barrières of Paris; the thought that I should now have the pleasure of becoming personally acquainted with the artists whose works had inspired me in my very earliest years, excited this lively sensation. I transported myself back in thought to the time of my boyhood, when Cherubini was my idol; for I had, through the French theatre, which then existed at Brunswick, an opportunity of knowing his works sooner even than those of Mozart. I recollected vividly the evenings when Les Deux Journées was given for the first time; how, quite intoxicated with the powerful impression the work had made upon me, I got the score the same evening, sitting up over it the whole night, and how it was principally this opera which gave me the first impulse to composition. I was now about to see its author, and many other men, whose works had exerted the most decisive influence on my education as a composer and a violinist.

We were, therefore, scarcely housed, before I made it my first business to call upon several of these artists. I was received in a friendly manner by all, and a friendly intercourse speedily sprang up between myself and several of them. I had been told of Cherubini that, at first, he was reserved, nay, gloomy, with strangers; I did not find him so. He received me, without my having brought any letters of introduction, in the most friendly way, and invited me to repeat my visit as frequently as I chose.

On the evening of our arrival, Kreutzer took us to the Grand-Opéra, where a ballet, Le Carnaval de Venise, with pleasing, characteristic music by himself, was represented. It is evident that the singers and dancers are accustomed to move about in a larger building; they exaggerate too glaringly for their present locality, which is very limited in comparison with the opera-house they have left. Several grand operas, especially those of Gluck, cannot now be given, since it has not been possible to obtain the necessary space even for the whole orchestra. People are, consequently, looking forward with the greatest eagerness to the completion of the new opera-house, which, however, no matter how actively the works are carried on, cannot be ready before the middle of next summer. Previously to the ballet, the opera, Le Devin du Village, words and music by Rousseau, was given. Ought we to praise or blame the fact that the French, side by side with the admirable things with which their operatic repertory has been enriched in the last twenty years, still give the very oldest productions imaginable; and is it a sign of an advanced and cultivated taste for art, that we see them welcome the oldest operas by Grétry, in all their harmonic poverty and incorrectness, with just the same enthusiasm or even still greater than the master-pieces o Cherubini and Méhul? It does not strike me so. What a time has elapsed since the operas of Hiller, Dittersdorff, and others of that period disappeared from our repertories, although these, in inward musical value, are far, far preferable to most of Grétry's. It is true that, on the other hand, it is very dispiriting that only what is new, however insipid and incorrect, finds currency among ourselves, many admirable older compositions being cast aside and forgotten in consequence. It is, however, to be considered a great point in favour of the Germans' taste for art, that Mozart's operas alone form an exception, and that, for more than thirty years, they have been given uninterruptedly at all German theatres; because it furnishes a proof that the German nation is at last penetrated with the perfection of these unsurpassible masterpieces, and, being convinced of this, will not be led astray, however far the sweet musical poison, that flows so copiously from the other side the Alps, should extend.

The orchestra of the Grand-Opéra contains, in comparison with other orchestras, the most celebrated and distinguished artists, but is said to be inferior in ensemble to that of the Italian Opera. I cannot yet give an opinion, as I have, at present, heard no other. In Herr Kreutzer's ballet, played with great precision by the orchestra, I was delighted with an oboe solo, performed in a masterly manner by Herr Vogt. This gentleman has succeeded in imparting to his instrument a perfect equality of toue and intonation throughout the whole compass, from C of the small octave, to F upon the fifth line of the staff, which is something in which nearly all oboists fail. His style is, moreover, full of grace and good taste.

A few days since, I was less pleased at the Grand-Opéra than on the first occasion. The opera was Les Mystères d'Isis. The complaints of Mozart's admirers are only too just at the transformation of the magnificent Zauberflöte into this piece of patchwork, which, on its production, was christened by the French themselves Les Misères d'ici. We must feel ashamed that it was Germans who committed this sin against the immortal master. Nothing has remained untouched, except the overture; everything else is jumbled together, changed and mutilated. The opera commences with the concluding chorus of Die Zauberflöte; next follows the march from Titus; and then, first one fragment and then another from other operas of Mozart, and even a bit from a symphony by Haydn. Between all these, there is recitative, of Herr Lachnith's own manufacture. But worse than all is the fact that the adapters have put a serious text to many light, nay, comic parts of Die Zauberflöte, so that the music becomes simply a parody on the words and the situations. Thus, for instance, the Papagena here sings the characteristic air of the Moor "Alles fühlt der Liebe Freuden," while the charming trio of the three boys, "Seid uns zum zweiten Mall willkommen," is given by the three ladies. Out of the duet, "Bei Männern welche Liebe fühlen," they have made a trio, etc. But, worst of all they have taken the liberty of making changes in the score, thus, for instance, in the air, "In diesen heiligen Hallen," at the words, "So wandelt er an Freundes Hand," they have altogether omitted the imitative bass :

which is here indispensable, not only on account of the harmony, but also, referring to the "wandering," is so characteristic; instead of this, the basses only give now and then the B natural. How flat and bold this passage, so often admired in Germany, thus sounds, you may easily imagine. Furthermore, the adapters have introduced violoncellos and double-basses into the music of the three ladies, where, in Mozart, the third vocal part is only strengthened and supported by the violins, so that the bass lies on three different octaves to these tender passages, treated only in three parts, which is insupportable to a cultivated ear. There are more offences of the same kind. We must do the French the justice to say that, from the very beginning, they decidedly disapproved of this Vandal-like mutilation of a great masterpiece (a mutilation, which, as they are unacquainted with the original, is not known to them in its full extent); but how comes it that, despite of this, the Mystères has remained for eighteen or twenty years quietly in their repertory, when the public here, as I see every day, reigns so despotically in the theatre, and can do whatever it likes?

The performance could not satisfy a German, as I am. Even the overture did not go as well as it should have done, when executed by so magnificent a body of distinguished artists. It was taken too quickly, and, towards the end, hurried on still more, so that, at last, the fiddlers could only play semiquavers instead of quavers. The singers of the Grand Opéra, whose great merit may lie, perhaps, in declamatory singing, are but little fitted to render satisfactorily the tender strains of Die Zauberflöte. They sing with a sturdiness which destroys anything like tenderness. The mise-en-scène, as regards scenery, costumes, and dancing, is respectable, but not so splendid as I had expected. Yesterday we went to the Grand-Opéra, for the third time, and saw Clari, a grand ballet in three acts, music by Kreutzer. Little as I like ballets, and little as pantomimic productions strike me as worth the outlay of artistic resources here lavished on them, I cannot deny that the Parisian ballets entertain a person very agreeably, until he is tired by the monotony of mimic movements, and still more by that of the dances. But, even when given as perfectly as it is here, pantomime, on account of the poverty of its signs, which always require a printed explanation, strikes me as being, when compared to declamatory dramatic productions, like a shadowy outline compared to a drawing. However it may be decked out by a golden background and ornamental accessories (as the ballet here is by the magnificence of the scenery and costumes), it merely presents us with outlines, and life is wanting. In the same way I feel inclined to account the drama, when compared to opera, as a drawing compared to a painting. It is through song that the poem first obtains colour, and the song only is able, when supported by the power of harmony, to express those indescribable emotions of the soul, of which we have simply presentiments, and at which language must content itself with merely hinting. The music of Clari is very successful, and, especially in the second and third act, overpoweringly effective. It very much facilitates, by correct painting of the passions, the task of understanding the story, and contains a treasure of pleasing melodies, which we regret not to see belonging to an opera. Mdlle. Bigottini played the principal part, and gave proofs of having deeply studied action and gesture. That, in very passionate situations, she worked up the expression of her countenance to grimace, may, perhaps, be justly attributed to the fact that, until now, she has always appeared in a large building, where, on account of the distance, great exaggeration was necessary. Perhaps, this only seems to me so, from my being a German, for the applause was never more tumultuous than when (so far as my feelings were concerned) she overstepped the limits of the Beautiful and the Graceful.

Before the ballet, they gave Le Rossignol, an opera in one act, on which is founded Weigl's German opera, Nachtingall und Rabe. The music of the French piece is insignificant, and only interested me by Herr Tulou's masterly rendering of a solo for the flute. It is impossible to hear a more beautiful tone than that which Herr Toulou obtains from his instrument. Since I heard him, it no longer strikes me as so unsuitable as it did for our poets to compare the harmony of a sweet voice to the tone of the flute.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

PARIS, February 16th.

AT last the long-expected and ardently-desired début of Roger at the Italian Opera has taken place. Roger, the eminent singer, the man of taste, the consummate artist, who talks and sings equally well in German, French, English, and Italian—whose flexible voice lends itself so easily to the music of all times and of all schools, and whose twenty years of success have endeared him to the public here—more than ever justified on the 5th of February the golden opinions he has won. He made his first appearance at the Italiens as Edgardo, in Lucia di Lammermoor, Mdlle. Battu being the Lucia; Graziani, Ashton. Angelini also sang. With such a cast, the opera could hardly fail of being a success. Roger exerted himself to the utmost in the finale of the second act, and in the scene of the malediction he rose to the height of the highest efforts of dramatic art. By turns elegant, impassioned, and pathetic, he gave all the most delicate shades in the duet of the second act and in the scene of the tomb. Mdlle. Marie Battu is certainly charming, but Lucia is, at present, almost too arduous a rôle for her quality of voice. Graziani had but one fault, he throws too much energy into his voice. Roger is to sing next, I believe, in the Traviata, and towards the 15th of March, Tamberlik is expected. The Grand-Opéra is still rehearsing the new opera of Prince Poniatowski's, and adheres for the nouce to its usual bill of fare. The Opéra-Comique, more on the alert, has just brought out the roman d'Elvire. The libretto by MM. A. Dumas and De Leuven, reminds one of La Vieille (music by M. Fétis), and also still more strongly of the Conte de Fées vaudeville by MM. de Leuven and Brunswick, and played in 1845 at the Variétés, and in which the part of the Marquise was performed by Mdlle. Dejazet. The tale, which is a queer melange, runs thus:—The Marquise de Villa Bianca is a young and rich woman, whom a law-suit has brought to Palermo, in which town dwells a young and charming cavalier named Gennaro, who, without ever seeing the Marquise, has refused her hand, and whom, in spite of himself, she intends to marry (a process that in comic operas seems to be the easiest and most likely thing in the world). The Marquise, the better to carry out her designs, disguises herself as an old woman, and in this character is courted by a pompous old podesta, who has an eye to money, and engages a reputed sorceress Silva, to give her love-elixirs. Little by little, Gennaro falls into the meshes of the Marquise; she raises a hornet's nest about him in the shape of insatiable creditors, and he achieves his ruin by losing his last scudi at a grand ball at her house. A last resource remains—it is to marry this gay old dowager, which he accordingly does; but finding his wife never allows him to go beyond the garden-gate, he applies to Silva for a narcotic for his wife, meaning, while she is sleeping, to scale the garden-wall. Silva, who is in league with the Marquise, pretends to make a mistake, and gives her an elixir of youth—when suddenly behold the old lady turned into a young and lovely woman of twenty. Of course the husband falls violently in love with her, but she pretends to have lost her memory, and declares he is not her husband. He shows her the dowager's dress, with which she runs lightly to the terrace and throws into the sea; and then sings her best air in the piece, "Suis-je une hirondelle?" Meanwhile the dress has been fished up by some fishermen, and the Podesta, thinking his old flame has been violently killed by her young husband, has him marched off to prison. Silva offers a potion that is to make the Marquise old again, but Gennaro refuses; he will rather die, and leave his wife young and lovely, than, by saving himself, render her old again. This proof of his affection shows the Marquise that her stratagem is crowned with complete success; she, of course, clears up the mystery, and all ends happily. The music is light and pleasing; the best airs are "Suis-je une hirondelle?" of Mdlle. Monrose; the bolero of M. Montaubry, "Si la brise " folle, and the romance he sings in the third act, "Restez, jeune et belle,"—while, to vary the performance, the Galatheé of Victor Massé is to be revived. The rehearsals of M. Octave Feuillet's new drama, Camille, are going on at the Vaudeville, but with this change in the cast, Monsieur Lafont replaces M. Lafontaine. The reason given is, that M. Lafontaine did not choose to attend at the rehearsals. At the Gymnase-Dramatique, a new work is to succeed the Père Prodigue, which, however great may be the writer's talent, has not had the usual success attendant on his works.

The Carnaval des Revues has been brought out at the Bouffes-Parisiens. The Revue consists of so many tableaux, interspersed with light and sparkling music, recalling the various musical and dramatic events that have taken place in the year, and the way they are parodied on is amusing.

It is decided that the opera, written by Berlioz, entitled Les Troyens, is the one with which the Théâtre-Lyrique will re-open the season in the new spot the company will occupy. The Théâtre-Lyrique will now be in the Place du Chatelet, and will take the title of Theatre Municipal de la Ville de Paris.

All concerts are going on actively. MM. Alard and Franchomme have commenced theirs in the Salon-Royal. In the same salons, a pupil of Liszt, M. Hans de Bulow, gives his concerts, composed of the music of Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, and Richard Wagner. The Concerts du Conservatoire, or rather the second concert, which had been put off on account of the sad loss sustained in the person of the leader of the orchestra, M. Girard, has taken place. The choice of a fresh chef is put off till the next season—in the interim M. Tilmant directs. He has taken the bâton in a very brilliant manner, and without curtailing a note. Amongst other music, two fragments of a quatuor by Haydn, the air of Joseph by Méhul, the chorus from the oratorio of Solomon by Handel, and the sublime overture to Euryanthe, were amongst the most remarkable performances.

The Société des Jeunes Artistes du Conservatoire have given their third concert, and performed a work of Meyerbeer's not known before in Paris, the music from the drama of Struensee, &c. It is getting greatly the fashion here amongst that fashionable part of society who have but little to do with their time, to unite in each other's saloons about once a week, and get up an unimportant concert, and study the music of the best masters. Among the best of these concerts de salons, those given by the young and charming Madame de H. are the most renommée.

At Naples, the theatre of San Carlos continues in a deplorable state; the new manager has a hard task imposed upon him. He said he was going to engage a new tenor-contralto. The Neapolitans, knowing that the Scala, at Milan, had engaged Giuglini at 1,000 francs a night, began to look for something equally good, but their hopes have been cruelly disappointed.

Jullien is working away with all his ancient energy; and soon Paris will have the treat of getting, in one night, every description of music. Feb. 22nd.

This last week has been, so to speak, a week of "revivals," with the exception of one novelty—and certainly a great one—in the shape of the Philémon et Beaucis of M. E. Gounod; but I must leave till next week a more detailed account of the various merits and demerits of this opera, and merely give a general sketch of what is going on in the dramatic world here. The Grand-Opéra, faithful to old traditions, has been giving the Traviata, Mdlle Caroline Bartot being the prima donna. The engagement of Mdlle. Duprez-Vanden-Heuvel is announced at this theatre at the same time as the non-engagement of Mdlle. Dussy. Roger has been performing again in the Lucia at the Italian Opera, and on Thursday or Saturday next he will appear in the Traviata. Don Giovanni was revived yesterday week; it was said Roger was to have performed, but it was Badiali who filled the part of Don Juan—a character that, in his younger days, was one of his great triumphs. At the second performance of Don Giovanni, it is said that Tamberlik will succeed Gardoni in the part of Ottavio; M. Merly that of Badiali; Alboni will still remain, I suppose, Zerlina. Mad. Penco sings the part of Donna Elvira admirably. Galatheé, one of M. Victor Massé works, has been revived at the Opera-Comique—Mad. Calel, being Galatheé, and Mdlle. Wertheimber, Pygmalion. M. Sainte-Foy and Ponchard, fill the other parts.

Passing thus rapidly from the lyrical to the dramatic theatres, I must tell you that, at the Odéon, Mdlle. Fitz-James has been performing Phèdre. With the remembrance of Rachel and Madame Ristori, it is impossible to feel interested in the acting of Mdlle. Fitz-James; indeed, her forte lies evidently more to melo-drama than to tragedy. Meanwhile, that charming work of George Sand, François le Champi is being played here. The Gymnase, in honour of the the Carnaval has been giving the Bal d'Enfants of MM. Dumanoir and Dennery. The Vaudeville is also giving some of the played pieces of M. A. Dumas. Some very wonderful American tumblers are performing at the Gaîté, in a kind of interlude to the Mendicante: certainly, the art of dislocation, if one may use such a phrase, can hardly be carried farther. The rehearsals and preparations of the Compère Guillery are being so actively carried on at the Ambigu-Comique, that it is probably at the end of this week that it will be brought out. I must not forget to notice in this summary a little comic opera, in one act, called Fanchette, the words and music by M. E. Dejazet. Mdlle. Dejazet herself has also written a little one-act vaudeville, P'tit fi, p'tit mignon.

There is not so much going on in concerts as when I last wrote. Richard Wagner is going to give another concert, it is said, at which the Emperor and Empress will be present; and there is also some on dit of a German troupe performing, in the month of May, the Tännhauser. The papers here are noticing, in the warmest terms of welcome, the arrival of M and Mad. Sainton: they are, I believe, going to give some performances ere they return to England. Roger, whose engagement at the Italian Opera finishes at the commencement of March, will sing the Seasons of Handel at the Conservatoire, and then leave to fulfil his various engagements in the principal French towns, and also in Belgium. By an ordre ministériel, M. Sauzay has been named professor of the violin at the Conservatoire, in the place of the late M. Girard. The return of Mad. Marie Pleyel is announced here.

At Naples, Signor Spinelli, the successor of the Duke of Satriano, does not seem, as yet, to be a great acquisition; in fact the state of the theatre seems deplorable.

FRANKFORT-ON-THE-MAINE.—A morning concert was given, last week, by Herr Joseph Eppich, who was long a favourite at the Stadt-theater, but was compelled by ill-health to retire for a while. He was heartily welcomed, on once more being able to resume his professional duties. The concert-room was crammed to suffocation.

FOREIGN.

PARIS.—The following is a close translation of the bill of the first concert which will be given in Paris by Jullien :—

"The management of the Cirque de l'Impératrice have the honour of announcing that they have concluded an engagement with M. Jullien, of London, and the principal solo players of his orchestra, with the object of founding, in Paris, a grand musical society, by means of which there may be organised brilliant festivals, in the style of those which M. Jullien has given with splendid success in England, Germany, and America. Sunday, 11th March, at two o'clock, grand festival of inauguration, given in Paris, by the Universal Philharmonic Society, under the direction of M. Jullien, conductor of the orchestra of the Theatre Royal of her Majesty the Queen of England, of Drury Lane, of Covent Garden, and of the London Lyceum, who will conduct a grand musical body of six hundred executants selected from the members of the greatest choral societies and the best orchestras of France, England, Belgium, and Germany. Programme:—PART I. Sacred music; classical music; selections from the Creation, words by M. de Ségur, music by Haydn; the Prophète Elie, words by Bartholomew, translated by Maurice Bourges, music by Mendelssohn; the Messiah, text from the sacred books, music by Handel. PART II. Heroic music; national music: La Guerre, epic symphony, dedicated to the army; La Paix, quadrille symphony, dedicated to all nations; L'Harmonie de l'Univers, an essay, words by Humbolt, music by Roch-Albert. PART III. Voyage musical, selections from the repertory of national melodies, collected by M. Jullien, and executed by his orchestra during his universal tour; echoes of Italy, England, Germany, Russia, Switzerland, Spain, and America. The names of the solo instrumentalists, and of the singers, will be published in the detailed programme which will appear shortly."

COLOGNE.—Among the pieces included in the programme of the concert for the benefit of the Cologne Orchestra, was the Symphony, No. VI., in G minor, Op. 32, by Niels W. Gade, which was here new. It was very favourably received by the audience, as it deserved to be, on account of its own merits, and as well as of the careful manner in which it had been rehearsed, and the admirable mode in which it was played. Gade's instrumental music resembles paintings, the drawing and outlines of which are, it is true, correct, but do not give evidence of very great fancy or genial creative talent, but which, despite of this, from the colouring and the way in which the lights are managed, possess such a charm that we like to contemplate them, if the mind of the spectator (or hearer) happens to be in that state which is pleased by the sole effect of the colouring. Had not the word fallen lately into discredit, we might, in Gade's case, much rather speak of symphonic music than—in the case of others. On this account, it is much more necessary to hear this music than that of other masters. When it is read, or played on the piano, a great number of its good qualities disappear, and Gade's peculiar style is reduced principally to the rhythm, and a few characteristic motives of a popular kind. That, nevertheless, as this newest symphony of his proves, he does not fall into mannerism, should certainly be considered a great point in his favour, since he is greatly exposed to the temptation of doing so. The most original movement in the work is indisputably the Allegro moderato e energico (in B flat major, 3-4 time), which occupies the place of the Scherzo between the Andante sostenuto in D major, and the Finale allegro vivace e animato (in G minor, 2-4 time—the longest movement in the symphony). It will be seen, from what has been said, that one of the principal causes of the attraction of the work is the instrumentation. The reputation that Berlioz has achieved, among the French, by his peculiar effects of sound, may be claimed from another point of view, for Gade, who obtains by this art purely musical effects, in opposition to the mere programme—Vertönung.

A brilliant feature of the evening's entertainment was the performance of Herr Joachim, from Hanover. He played Mendelssohn's concerto. (It would almost seem there were only two violin concertos, that by Beethoven, and that by Mendelssohn! Why do not such artists return to Spohr, Rode, and Viotti? We make this remark generally, and not with especial reference to Herr Joachim, who never performed Mendelssohn's concerto here before, while he has played one by Viotti, and the Gesangscene by Spohr.) He also gave Tartini's Teufels Sonata, and two pieces by J. S. Bach, all with the artistic certainty and energetic style which distinguish a master. The only thing we could have desired was a little more moderate tempo for the last movement of the concerto, since—especially in the colossal hall which is not very favourable for any solo instruments—the clearness and delicate graduations of the passages suffer from too great rapidity.

The following was the programme of the Seventh Gesellschafts concert :—

First Part. 1. Overture to a tragedy, Op. 18, by Woldemar Bargiel (new). 2. Airs and choruses from Gluck's Orpheus (Mdlle. Jenny Meyer, from Berlin). 3. Symphony, No. IV. B flat major, Beethoven.—Second Part. 4. Pianoforte concerto in C minor, by Beethoven (Herr Alfred Jaell, pianist to the King of Hanover). 5. "Salve Regina," for chorus of four voices a capella, by M. Hauptmann. 6. Variations by Handel. Waltz by Chopin, "Home, sweet home," for pianoforte alone (A. Jaell). 7. Scene from Bellini's Romeo and Juliet (Mdlle. J. Meyer). 8. Overture to Ruy Blas, Mendelssohn.

We cannot approve of the order of the pieces. For more reasons than one, the pianoforte concerto ought to have been placed at the end of the first, and the symphony at the end of the second part, which might have commenced with Mendelssohn's overture. The insertion, too, of the scene from Bellini's Romeo and Juliet (Act I.), compressed by the omission of the recitative of Capulet and Tibaldo, as well as of the chorus, ought not to have been allowed. In the arrangement from Orpheus, the air in C major ("Che farò senza Euridici"), before the scene in Tartarus (with the chorus of Furies), was not at all in its proper place, though the addition of the charming chorus from the scene in Elysium was appropriate and impressing.

Bargiel's overture displayed, like his former works, his great talent, and was received with due appreciation. In its execution, as well as in that of Beethoven's symphony, No. IV., the orchestra distinguished themselves; the good effect of the two rehearsals a-week, during the winter, on their play is very remarkable, while merely performing in the theatre did not exactly conduce to artistic execution, but just the reverse.

Mdlle. Jenny Meyer, from Berlin, satisfied anything like high expectation only in the first strophe of the song in which Orpheus endeavours to mollify the Furies. Her voice is full and pleasing, but her style is deficient in warmth and feeling. It is monotonous from beginning to end, and, when she wishes to impart dramatic expression, as, for instance, in the Romeo scene from Bellini, she employs means which belong to an unartistic school. Among these we must reckon a holding of the notes over the bar, and an incorrect portamento. She ought, also, to be more careful in her pronunciation, especially as far as the quality of the vowels is concerned, The tempo and conception of the air in C major from Orpheus were altogether a mistake; there was not the least sign of the vivace con disperagione, or on the fourfold change of tempo marked by the composer.

Herr Alfred Jaell played with extraordinary success, and fully deserved it. It would be difficult for any pianist to surpass his performance as that of a perfect technical master of his instrument, especially in the scales, trills, and triplets, while his touch conveys the most delicate gradations of light and shade. In addition, however, to possessing these eminent qualities as a player, he proved, by his calm and expressive rendering of Beethoven's C minor concerto, and of Handel's charming variations, that he is an artist and musician who regards manual dexterity not as an end but simply as an indispensable means for satisfying the higher demands of art and interpreting the composer. This tendency of Herr Jaell is the more worthy of favourable notice, since, for the first few years after his return from America, he had still much to do in this respect.

CREFELD, 27th January.—At the third Subscription-Concert, Herr Maximilian Wolff, from Frankfort-on-the-Maine, distinguished himself by his performance of Mendelssohn's violin-concerto, and a fantasia, by Leonard, for violin and orchestra, on a theme by Haydn. The first part of the concert was brought to a close by Hiller's setting, for chorus and orchestra, of Göthe's Gesang der Geister über den Wassern, which was exceedingly successful. The second part of the concert consisted of Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony. On the 3rd inst., Herr Wolff gave a soirée for chamber-music, when he played the first violin part in Mozart's G minor quartet, and in Beethoven's F major quartet, besides Bach's chaconne, some other solo pieces, and a romance of his own composition.

ARNHEIM.—The Committee for the Seventh General Musical Festival of the Society for the Furtherance of Music have decided on the following programme:—

"Thursday Evening, the 9th August.—1. Prize Symphony, by J. J. H. Verhülst, Op. 46 (crowned by the Society in July, 1846). 2. Samson, oratorio, by Handel.

"Friday Evening, the 10th August.—1. Overture and Introductory Chorus, by J. A. van Eyken, to Vondel's tragedy, Lucifer, Op. 40 (to which a prize was awarded by the Society in 1852). 2. Lorelei, for solo, chorus, and orchestra, by Ferdinand Hiller, Op. 70. 3. Elia op Horeb, poem by N. Beets, music by F. Coenen (prize in 1857). 4. Lobgesang, symphony cantata, by F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy, Op. 52.

"Saturday Morning, the 11th August.—Artists' Concert. Besides this, the 84th Psalm (Dutch words by Dr. J. P. Heije, music by J. J. H. Verhülst), and a symphony by Beethoven, not yet decided on, but probably No. 7.

"For the Committee:—W. Taets van Amerongen, President of the Technical Commission. J. M. J. Engelberts, Secretary."

VIVIES.—A new organ, from the factory of the well-known builders, Merklin and Schütze, of Brussels, was inaugurated in the cathedral here on the 10th ult.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

M. C.—Thanks for his communication; but we were unable to send a reporter.

FLORIAN.—Decidedly true.

W's communication is an advertisement.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2*s.* 6*d.*
Every additional line (ten words)	0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 25TH, 1860.

DOES anybody doubt that music has made rapid strides in this country within the last dozen years? Does anybody deny that the progress of music keeps pace with the march of civilisation? If so, in our desire to set him right, we beg leave to direct his attention, not to the Monday Popular Concerts, not to the Old Philharmonic, the New Philharmonic, or the Musical Society of London; not to the numberless "Unions," Chamber Meetings, Quintet and Quartet Associations, Vocal and Orchestral Concerts, &c., &c., that mushroom like have sprung up in an incredibly short space of time; nor yet to the Crystal Palace, which is fast merging into a vast music-hall, at the instigation of the Sacred Harmonic Society—since all plead, trumpet-tongued, their own cause; but simply to Canterbury Hall, in the Westminster-road, to Weston's Music Hall, High Holborn, to Raglan Hall, Theobald's-road, or to any other of those huge and brilliant saloons dedicated to music in several parts of the metropolis, which have taken the place of and superseded the twopenny concert-rooms of bye-gone London. We are not going to apostrophise the above places of amusement, nor to designate them temples of art. Their establishment, nevertheless, is not entirely without its use, and their existence is a significant sign of the times. The audiences who now frequent the new "Music Halls for the People," are, in all probability, similar to those which were wont to attend the old penny or twopenny saloons. A greater attention to dress and cleanliness certainly may be evidenced, with a better style of pipe, a more reserved demeanour, and a politer phraseology. But the greatest transformation has taken place in taste and appreciation. In point of rank and station, the old and new public are identical. The hardy artisan, the upper labourers in workshops and factories, the smug clerk, the saucy apprentice, the spruce shop-boy, the small trader, the loose gent of the suburbs, a prevailing class—of such materials were the auditories of the old small concert-rooms composed; and of such are the patrons of the new great saloons constituted. To what then is to be attributed the change—the improvement? To the influence of music, most indubitably. There was a time—we remember it ourselves—when the humbler classes of the community, having no other escape for their melodious propensities, were wont to assemble nightly in crowds at these low-priced gin-and-song taverns, and to pass whole evenings in boisterous excitement, listening to some nasal tenor, or short-winded soprano, indulging the hearers with such exhilarating airs as "Billy Barlow," "Happy Land," "My Master's Gun," and "The Coalheaver's Feast," to the accompaniment of a five-and-a-half octave upright piano, touched by a gentleman learning his notes. Yet there was no complaint. Some fine-eared critic might occasionally perhaps have expressed a wish that the vocalist had sung a little more in tune, or that the performer had played a few right notes; but good humour, under the impulsive power of "old Tom" and tobacco, displayed illimitable forbearance, and no one grumbled save when the waiter, through inadvertence, proffered short change.

The history of the transition of these primitive abodes of art, from the state of grub to butterfly maturity, is not necessary. Some enterprising speculator and thorough reformer, like Mr. Morton, proprietor of the Canterbury Hall, no doubt, was impressed by the spirit of the times, saw the opening, and took advantage of it. He rented, or built, a spacious saloon, and had it handsomely decorated and brilliantly illuminated; procured tolerable singers; engaged a veritable pianist; and hired a well-conducted Broadwood or Collard. The programmes, moreover, became a serious consideration. That class of ballads, represented by "My Master's Gun," and "My Wife, she likes her Beer," were discarded, and its place supplied by the favourite airs of the day. Operatic tunes were introduced, and concerted morceaux attempted. The proprietor observed closely the inclination of the people's taste. As music took a higher flight, business rose in proportion. The better the bill of fare, the greater the quantity of beer and spirits imbibed. The love of art and the desire of gain alike prevailed with the manager in his selections. He who had previously but the slightest possible acquaintance with Italian composers, now stood up stoutly for Donizetti and Verdi, and became note-wise. The transition state reached its grand climacteric, when a musical director was secured, and selections from popular operas were performed.

If the reader, who knows nothing of the musical transactions in London beyond the Opera and the concerts, imagines for a moment that we are attempting to play on his credulity, let him satisfy himself and pay a visit to Mr.

Morton's establishment in Westminster-road, any evening. He will there hear, considering all things, a by-no-means despicable performance of Professor Bennett's cantata, The May Queen; or, should he prefer Ausonian strains to British, may gratify his predilections by extracts from Lucrezia Borgia, or some equally popular Italian work. Nay, he may gain knowledge as well as pleasure, since Mr. Morton does not restrict his excerpts to known operas, but searches among the unacknowledged and the erudite, and disdains to follow the managers of the great patent theatres. Some time since, a selection was given from the Dame Blanche—one of the greatest master-pieces of the French school, and, when novelty is so much sought for, most unaccountably overlooked at our Italian operas. Boïeldieu's opera was expressly translated for the Canterbury Hall Concerts. Scenes, too, from Macbeth—an opera by Verdi, which, although it has achieved no small reputation on the Continent, has never been produced in this country—is at this moment being executed, as well as some of the music from Meyerbeer's Dinorah. Or, if the sceptic do not like to venture on a transpontine expedition, Weston's Music Hall, in Holborn, will furnish him with a "grand selection" from Lucia di Lammermoor, supported by a strong army of principals, a full band and an efficient chorus.

We need not pursue the subject further. It is quite evident, that music has wrought the most remarkable changes in modern times, among all grades and all classes, and will continue to work more. The change is not merely artistic but social. Audiences that love good music will, through its influence, be induced to love something else good, without perhaps being sensible thereof. Music should not be looked upon as an Art merely, but as an Instructor and a Chastener in the ways of life.

THERE was Pantagruel, stamping about the coffee-room of the "Edinburgh Castle" with such violence, that tables trembled, plates clattered, glasses rung, and, in short, every kind of villanous noise was produced, that can be elicited from a shaken hostelry; and there was Epistemon sitting by the fire with a long pipe in his mouth, smiling and smirking to himself, with wondrous complacency, and exhaling little feathery fumes, with all the deliberation of infinite relish.

Into the midst of this state of things quietly walks Panurge, thinking of nothing, as was frequently the case; but no sooner has he entered, than amazed by the insane conduct of Pantagruel, he stands stock-still near to the door, with his mouth wide open, until John the waiter closes it by violently chucking him under the chin.

"What's all this about?" quoth Panurge, when he had recovered the gift of speech.

"Read that!" thundered Pantagruel, and he flung a newspaper at the head of Panurge with such force, that he knocked him all the way back through the passage into the street, so that he bumped against a passing omnibus, and glancing off at an angle of 35 degrees, was conveyed into the Strand Theatre, when for the fiftieth time he witnessed, with infinite satisfaction, the Christmas Boxes of Augustus Mayhew and Sutherland Edwards.

Returning to the "Edinburgh Castle," when the performance was over, and finding Pantagruel in a calmer state of mind, (that old rascal Epistemon still whiffing and smirking as before) he said, with chattering teeth "Your Lordship hath not condescended to answer my question."

"I was much excited when I saw you last," said Pantagruel, "and I have as yet scarcely recovered."

"Hast thou forgotten the laws of moderation in thy drink?" said Panurge.

"He has been reading this" said Epistemon, handing another newspaper (for the first had been reduced to its constituent monads), and placing his broad thumb, without another word, on the Drury Lane advertisement.

"And I will read it again" said Pantagruel, snatching the paper from Epistemon, and dealing him such a back-hander that he fell from his chair into the fender, and there remained seated, still with the same indomitable smile, for the rest of the evening.

"John," said Panurge, resignedly, "thou wilt bring in a screw of Bristol bird's-eye—likewise half-a-pint of beer" —and with an attentive face, he fixed his big eyes upon Pantagruel.

"What I will read to thee" said Pantagruel, "is the plot of a play called the Forest Keeper, as described in the Drury Lane advertisement. This I declare to be the most interesting and exciting tale that has been produced."

"Always excepting the plot of the Goose with the Golden Eggs," suggested Panurge.

"Nay," said Pantagruel, condescendingly, "I have seen that mighty creation on the stage in all its plenitude is a work of consummate art, but the Forest Keeper I have not seen." (Here a noise arose like the gurgling which is produced when a large body of water is compelled to flow through a very small aperture, and Pantagruel, turning round, saw Epistemon in such a convulsion of suppressed laughter, that it was a miracle he did not expire upon the spot.) "I therefore merely spoke of the tale as a tale—meaning the tale here printed. Now listen: 'In the first act we see Christian, as the fond husband and royal forest-ranger doting on his wife, but finally roused to the intensest jealousy by tracing the footsteps of a man to his chamber-window, and, moreover, seeing his wife part from a stranger.'"

"Now I," said Panurge, "should have been more jealous if I had seen my wife meet with a stranger, for then I should not have known what ill might have happened; whereas, if I had seen her part with a stranger, I should have argued that the mischief, whatever it was, had ended for the time. Likewise, methinks, a stranger, in these cases, is better than a friend."

"'In his frenzy,' continued Pantagruel, reading, 'he seizes a gun and fires at him, but misses his aim, and his wife, falling insensible at his feet, he rushes without further inquiry from his home, and joins the army.'"

"Beshrew me, but this same Christopher," began Panurge—

"Christian!" said Pantagruel.

"Christian, indeed! out upon him for a perverted heathen!" said Panurge. "He sees all this turmoil going on, and instead of trying to find out the tops and bottoms of things, he runs away, when a civil question put to his wife would have settled the whole business. Slight, indeed, is this same Christopher's desire for useful knowledge. He will never be enumerated among the martyrs of science, like Galileo and Tycho—nothing about him will be written by Sir Daniel Brewster. And don't you believe too much in his jealousy, my worthy lord and master. He wanted an opportunity to be off—to cut his lucky, as Mr. Burnand would say—he'd have been one of Sir Cresswell's best customers, if he had been living now. Ha! ha! a right merry knave is this same Christopher!"

"Panurge," said Epistemon, with exceeding gravity, "thou knowest that my love for thee is exceedingly slight; thou art aware that if thou wert about to be executed on Monday next, I would gladly part with my last farthing to witness the ceremony; but, nevertheless, I frankly avow, that on this occasion, I listen to thy discourse with the profoundest admiration and respect."

"Epistemon," said Panurge, with equal solemnity, "thou knowest that my esteem for thee is of the smallest—that I would not give a farthing to see thee hanged, simply because the sight of thee, under any circumstances whatever, is to me intensely repulsive and disagreeable. Nevertheless, I humbly own, that on this occasion, I am proud of thy good word."

"'The man who so innocently caused all this mischief, is a M. François Duchamp,'" continued Pantagruel.

"I shall affect the true-born Briton, and think of him as Frank Field," said Panurge.

"'An exiled aristocrat,'" continued Pantagruel, reading, "'who surreptitiously visits Mad. Reynold.'"

"Miss Reynolds?" asked Panurge, with half-closed eyes.

"Madame Reynold, dolt," bawled Pantagruel.

"Mad. Reinhardhalt," murmured Panurge, nodding, "a sort of German name."

"'To receive the rents she secretly collects for him.'"

"Then Mad. Reinhardhalt is like my landlord," exclaimed Panurge. "He collects my rent so very secretly, that the operation is unknown even to himself, and therefore he sweareth lustily that I am three quarters in arrear."

"'Seventeen years are supposed to elapse,'" continued Pantagruel, reading "'between the two acts. In the second act, we find the wife, supposing the husband dead'—supposing the husband dead."

"Very well, I grant the hypothesis," said Panurge, impatiently.

"'Married to M. Duchamp, and she has a grown-up daughter. The veteran soldiers being here disbanded, and passing through Nismes, are insulted by the now Bourbon mob, and among them is Christian, who is not dead.'"

"The story would be much more curious, if he marched through the town when he was dead," said Panurge. "But I knew that Christopher would take care of himself."

"'Having braved the fury of the mob,'" continued Pantagruel, "'he seeks a refuge in M. Duchamp's house, where he encounters, first his daughter, and then his wife, and finds in Duchamp himself a man whose life he has saved on the field of battle.'"

"Then had Duchamp himself swallowed the man?" inquired Panurge, looking exceedingly stupid.

"No; Duchamp was the man, booby—only the author was an idiom."

"Go on," said Panurge, mournfully.

"'He does not own his child, nor claim his wife, magnanimously preferring to give her up rather than to reduce her to misery by proclaiming her a bigamist'—but, thou scurvy knave! thou art not listening—no, by the parings of Apollyon's hoof, thou preferrest that scrap of paper on which thou fixest thy leaden eyes, to this sublime description."

"Listen, listen, master mine, at this glorious specimen of English composition, and cheer the cockles of thy heart," said Panurge, "and then, if thou wilt, chop me into small pieces, and vend me in the form of kidney-dumplings. Listen to the inscription on this humble-looking scrap of paper." So, leaping on to the table, Panurge read as follows:—

"POETRY AND POETS.

"Fitzball has a poetic mind, it does not follow that he is a-poet; for to write poetry, the composition must be faultless. Choice in words and expressions; perfect in imagery; and original. Many think poetically, and feel poetically, but few write poetically, there being but one step from the sublime to the ridiculous."

Loud was the mirth of Pantagruel, shrill was the laughter of Epistemon; John the waiter rushed out of the room in convulsions, and repeated the composition to the bar-maid, who instantly fell into hysterics. Customers at the bar carried the joke into the street, and the broad Strand echoed with the sound of mirth. Father Thames was heard to chuckle in his muddy bed, and a dignified smile illumined the statue of Charles I. at Charing-cross.

"Who the devil was the wag who wrote that;" asked Pantagruel, whose merriment had given way to curiosity.

"I can't tell, for the life of me," said Panurge. "I had it in the scrap of paper that inclosed the bird's-eye."

MUSIC has often been called "the only universal language," and an ingenious writer once undertook to prove that, before the confusion of Babel, the inhabitants of the earth expressed emotions and interchanged ideas exclusively in song. Spoken language, he maintained, was comparatively a recent invention—or, rather, it was a curse inflicted upon man as a punishment for his non-observance of the harmonious laws of Providence. According to this author's theory, the serpent, who was undoubtedly the original Don Juan, must have tempted Eve to the air of some "La ci darem," composed by himself; and Tubal Cain could no longer be regarded as the first musician, though he would still have to be looked upon as the first and greatest manufacturer of musical instruments—in fact, as a sort of primæval Sax. Like a great many other theories, that of our ingenious friend had the disadvantage of being untenable. Instead of being an opera, the life of man has always been a drama, and generally a very dull one, with few, if any, musical situations; in addition to which it may be shown, that the great architectural scheme, to which the science of ethnology owes its existence, whatever effect it may have had on music, has certainly left its traces in the language of musicians—more especially those of England. Melody and harmony, wherever originated, find a response all over the world. Music from all parts of Europe—which, as far as music is concerned, is the world,—find a readier welcome and appreciation nowhere than in England. But, while adopting the music of foreigners, we surely need not at the same time adopt their musical terms, though this is now done to a most unnecessary and ridiculous extent. With a view to that universality of which we have spoken, it was desirable that all nations should make use of the same language for the few directions to the player or singer which every piece of music requires, and naturally that of the oldest musical country in Europe was chosen. Gradually, however, French terms have been introduced—we mean in music printed in England—which is absurd, inasmuch as French is not the recognised musical language of Europe, and is not understood as a matter of course either in England, Germany, or Italy. Composers ought to elect one of two courses—either they should write their indications in Italian, or they should write them in the language of the country to which they belong—and in these cases the country to which they belong is that in which they publish. What is the use of writing "main droite," or M. D.," on a pianoforte piece addressed to English young ladies who may, or may not, but certainly do not invariably, understand French? Why are so many pieces advertised "à quatre mains," instead of "for two players," which, though an English, is not, like its French equivalent, an absurd expression?—What is the meaning of "pressez le mouvement," and of a dozen other phrases that are engraved on the music issued by London music-publishers as though it were impossible to give the meaning of the words in English?

At our operatic performances we have often wondered why the English, when they wish to hear an air a second time, cry out encore, which is never used in that sense in France; whereas the French, desiring to have a song repeated, exclaim "bis,"—which was never so applied in Rome.

But the polyglot character of our programmes chiefly amuses us. The other day, in looking over the names of certain orchestral performers, we found that some were to play on an instrument or instruments called "violini, primo," others on "violi," others simply on English "trombones," while one gentleman, with quite an Anglican name, was to perform on the "grosse caisse." Without insisting on the employment of the word "tiddle," may we inquire why musicians are no longer allowed to play on the "violin," and why a big drum is to be called a "grosse caisse." If it be considered vulgar to say big drum in England, it ought to be thought equally vulgar to say "grosse caisse" in France, and there would then be nothing left but to exchange of languages, as it is proposed we should exchange produce for manufactures.

In certain departments of industry, in which the superiority of England is undoubted, the French have adopted certain English words, from sheer want of suitable equivalents. Thus, on their railways, they say "stuffing-box," which they pronounce "stufain-boxe," and on their steamers they endeavour to say "stop her," and succeed in saying "stopaire." But we cannot admit that the French are so far before us in music as to render it becoming on our part to write their language on our music sheets, as if overcome by their superior attainments in that art.

Probably the subject we have been discussing is not of very great importance, but small evils must be attacked from time to time, if only to prevent them becoming great ones; and we confess that we were very much struck a few days since by the appearance of a piece of music, of which the title was in German, the description in Italian, and the dedication in French—while the author was an Englishman.

HER MAJESTY' THEATRE.—"Yesterday an agreement was signed which constitutes Mr. E. T. Smith, the Drury Lane manager, future lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre, on a lease of seven, fourteen, or twenty-one years."—(Times, Friday, Feb. 24.)

ORGANIST OF ST. MARY'S, ALDERMANBURY—(Communicated).—The organistship at the beautiful City church of St. Mary, Aldermanbury, will be shortly vacated by the present occupant, and a new election will take place before Easter. The organ is a not uninteresting specimen by Russell, England, and Green; and a trial we made of its merits some time since, impressed us on the whole considerably in its favour. For many previous years it had, we believe, been much neglected, and on the occasion of our trying the organ, various repairs and additions had been effected in it by Messrs. Gray and Davison. The instrument is better located in the church than any other in the City, in this respect contrasting most favourably with modern instances in regard of the position of organs in churches.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

THE long-announced and much-expected opera, Lurline, by Mr. W. Vincent Wallace, was produced on Thursday evening, and with an amount of success hardly anticipated by the warmest admirers of the composer. We can recall, indeed, no more enthusiastic reception awarded to an English lyric work for years, and the excitement of the audience reminded us of the first night of the Mountain Sylph, the Siege of Rochelle, Maritana, &c. A peculiar interest attached to the production of a new work from the pen of Mr. Wallace, since he had written nothing for the stage since 1846, when Matilda of Hungary was produced; and everybody was anxious to ascertain whether his talent had been invigorated by time and study, or cessation from his accustomed labours had rusted his powers. We believe we may, without fear of contradiction, assert that Mr. Wallace has written his best work in Lurline; that he has not only exhibited a finer instinct for pure original melody, but has proved himself a better musician in every sense of the word, and has added largely to his reputation as a dramatic composer. This, as far as we are enabled to judge, is the universal opinion. Some may like the music better than others, but all agree that it is the composer's most admirable work.

Lurline is a grand opera, according to the French acceptation of the term. There is no spoken dialogue. The orchestra is always employed. Of the libretto, by the veteran, Mr. Edward Fitzball, the hero of a hundred dramatic victories, we wish to speak affectionately. The general construction of the plot is not without merit, and some of the scenes and situations are striking; but here all absolute eulogy must end. Mr. Wallace, however, like his compatriot Mr. Balfe, does not seem to attach any great importance to technical excellence in lyrics, and, if the words only involve an idea, is satisfied. Doubtless, in many instances, the composer of Lurline has drawn from his own inspiration, and become his own poet. Of the plot of the new piece it is sufficient to say, that it is founded on one of the popular legends of the Rhine, concerning Lurline, a Naiad, or Water-Nymph, who falls in love with a mortal. It is divided into three acts. In the first act, the mortal is lured away by the Naiad to her home under the waters; in the second she allows him to ascend to earth, trusting that after a time he will return; in the last, the Naiad is permitted to assume mortality and wed her lover. For details, we refer the curious to Mr. Fitzball's book.

There were seven encores—the overture; chorus, "Drain this cup of pleasure;" "Take this cup of sparkling wine;" song, by Ghiva (Miss Pilling), "Troubadour enchanting;" air, by Rhineberg (Mr. Santley), "The nectar cup may yield delight;" song, Rudolph (Mr. Harrison) "My heart's first home;" and unaccompanied quartet, "Though the world with transport bless me." But these were not the only pieces entitled to the honours; nor among them do we always find what we consider the "gems" of the work. For instance, we do not hesitate to pronounce the romance, in A minor, "When the night-winds sweep the wave," sung by Lurline (Miss Louisa Pyne), the most strikingly beautiful and original piece in the opera; while the duet between Ghiva and the Baron, (Mr. G. Honey), "Oh! Rudolph, haughty Rudolph, tell," recalls, almost more vividly than any English composition we can remember, the felicity of invention and freedom of treatment of the best Italian buffo school. The grand scena, too, "Sad is my soul," for Lurline, is, in the serious line, highly impressive and most skilfully developed in the different movements. We have said enough, at present, however, to prove that the opera was an undeniable success, and shall enter further into the merits of the music next week.

Miss Louisa Pyne has seldom had music better suited to her style than that of Lurline. Mr. Wallace, nevertheless, has not fatigued his audience with a surplus of bravura, wherein he equally shows his tact as a musician and his knowledge of the prima donna, who shines no less in cantabile than in florid music. Mr. Harrison sang with his wonted power and effect, and acted the part of Rudolph in a highly spirited and impressive manner. Mr. H. Corri scarcely satisfied us in the music of the Gnome, more especially in a very fine and original brindisi, "As in this cup," which, we fancy, he had not thoroughly mastered. Miss Pilling, on the other hand, pleased us more than ever, and gave her solo, "Troubadour enchanting," with, bating a little too much accentuation, excellent taste and judgment. Miss Fanny Cruise, too, in the small part of Liba, a water-sprite, sang and acted very pleasingly.

The scenery is magnificent. In the tableaux especially, Messrs. T. Grieve and Telbin have shown their invention and mastery. We shall not anticipate the reader's pleasure—we take for granted every one will go to see Lurline—by describing its pictorial beauties.

Last, not least, the band and chorus were most admirable, from the overture to the final rondo—a fact that did not escape the audience, since, after the artists and composers had had their ovation at the end, a loud cry was raised for Mr. Alfred Mellon, which did not cease until that gentleman made his appearance with the singers and Mr. Wallace (who was enthusiastically summoned and cheered after every act), and was received by the whole house with deafening plaudits. Such a performance as that of Thursday could only be the result of untiring energy, pains and perseverance, on the part of the musical director.

To descend to minutiæ, the recalls were—after the first act, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Harrison, and Mr. Wallace; after the second, Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Santley, and Mr. Wallace; the composer, and all the principals, with, as we have said, Mr. Alfred Mellon, at the end.

The house was filled in every part. Lurline was repeated last night, and will be repeated again this evening.

MR. GUSTAVUS L. GEARY, the tenor singer of Christ Church, Dublin, has finished a tour throughout Ireland, where he has been giving his vocal recitals, in conjunction with his eldest daughter, Miss Mina Geary, with the greatest success. The first part consists of a selection of Moore's Melodies; the second, of a varied series of vocal pieces, selected from the works of Balfe, Hatton, and Vincent Wallace. "Come into the garden, Maud" (Balfe), together with settings of Longfellow's poems, by the same composer, were most heartily received by the various audiences throughout the sister isle. Miss M. Geary has a sweet mezzo-soprano voice, and an attractive appearance, and, no doubt, after proper attention to her musical studies, must become a promising vocalist.

THE LONDON GLEE AND MADRIGAL UNION, encouraged by the eminent success their recent concerts at the Dudley Gallery have met with, purpose giving a second series, beginning on Monday next. Mr. T. Oliphant will continue his literary illustrations, which are an entirely new feature in performances of this kind. The introduction of the songs and ballads of the olden time has proved a great source of attraction. Mr. Land still continues to direct their performance.

MYDDLETON HALL.—An evening concert was given on Thursday, by Master W. A Field, at which the Glee and Madrigal Union and several other artists of eminence assisted. Mr. Tedder sang the new song composed expressly for him by Mr. Hatton, "The Maid I love hath many a grace," with much applause, and also "The Death of Nelson." Miss Wells gave, with great delicacy of execution, the "Soldier tired," of Dr. Arne, which obtained an encore. Master Field also made his début in Bishop's duet, "My Pretty Page." with Miss Anne Cox, He was evidently suffering from nervousness, but with time and study may get on very creditably. The Glee and Madrigal Union contributed largely to the evening's amusement from their varied répertoire, and the laughter-loving portion of the audience were much entertained by the humourous serenade, "Maiden fair, oh deign to tell," capitally rendered by Messrs. Baxter, Cummings, and Lawler; Mr. Cummings also sang "Margaretta," by Balfe, with much expression; Mr. Eayres gave a solo on the violin; and Miss Isabella Clemmenson performed Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," on the pianoforte. Mr. Land officiated as accompanyist, and the concert was brought to a satisfactory termination by the madrigal, "Down in a flowery vale."

MR. F. EUGENE VENUA was unanimously elected organist of Saint Nicholas Church, Sevenoaks, on Friday the 10th inst.

THE ORGAN IN ST. MARK'S CHURCH, KENNINGTON (one of the late Mr. Gray's) is to be repaired and enlarged. Most of the neighbouring churches in Surrey have already modernised their old organs, or erected new instruments. Kennington Church is one of the largest and finest of its class; but, in these days, Grecian churches are somewhat neglected, and at a discount; consequently, organs are suffered to remain in them unimproved, whereas such instruments would not be tolerated in a spic-and-span new Gothic building after the most orthodox Puginian school. The amount of the repairs has to be raised by subscriptions in the neighbourhood, not a very musical one.

H. W. A.

PROVINCIAL.

LIVERPOOL—(From our own Correspndent).—The second subscription concert of the Philharmonic Society, was given to a very full house, Mdlle. Piccolomini being always sure to draw. The favourite prima donna looked as bewitching as ever, sang in her usual piquant manner, was frequently applauded, and encored more than once. She sang "Ah! fors' è lui," "I dreamt that I dwelt," "La ci darem." with Sig. Aldighieri, "Libiamo," with Belart, and the duet from Lucia, "Sulla tomba, with M. Belart. Sig. Belart was in excellent voice. Each of his solos was beautifully sung; but "Ecco ridente," was, if anything, the best. Sig. Aldighieri gave "Largo al factotum" with much spirit. A chorus from Robert was, without exception, the most slovenly thing we ever heard in the hall; and but for the admirable way in which the choir rendered one or two of Mendelssohn's four-part songs, and Weber's Gipsy Chorus from Preciosa, we should have come to the conclusion, either that there had been no rehearsal, or that the Society's chorus had undergone some great change for the worse. The band was good. The Symphony of Mendelssohn in A minor was beautifully played; the Scherzo Adagio cantabile, and Allegro guerriero, being the best rendered. An extract from the programme of the Birmingham Festival was printed in the books of words, amusing as showing the mistakes sometimes made, but really useless as regards the audience. The committee apparently overlooked the fact that, whilst an assemblage of all the educated musical professors and amateurs of the kingdom might not dispense with a new analysis of the symphony, it was possible that a Liverpool audience would have been all the better for some idea of its argument; and that it would have been wiser to instruct subscribers, instead of placing them on the same musical footing as the audience at Birmingham. As the symphony is the highest form of instrumental art, so it is really no insult to an unmusical community for a professedly musical society to act as instructors to the public; and, if the committee were to insert from time to time such articles as Mr. Macfarren has written on the works of the great symphonists, they would be doing real good. As it is, the Pastoral of Beethoven—one really more intelligible to the outer world than most symphonies—is the only one respecting which explanatory remarks have appeared in the books. Mr. Herrmann conducted, and used every exertion to render the performance satisfactory. The same party are to appear at a cheap concert at the Philharmonic Hall, on Saturday afternoon next, which will be open to the public. On that occasion, Madame Moritz will perform a solo on the piano. Report speaks highly of this lady's powers; she is a niece of Hummel.

IBID.—"How on earth is it done?" was the question suggested to every one of the crowded audience at the Theatre Royal, on Monday evening, but with no chance of a solution. The utmost quickness and acuteness could not detect the secret; and grave and gay, old and young, were equally puzzled and delighted. Professor Frikell maintains his position as the prince of conjurors, and his "Two Hours of Illusions" are worthy of the distinguished patronage he has so frequently received. It is no ordinary genius that can command the success indicated by the fact that he has performed before "Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen, the Prince Consort, and the Royal Family, at Windsor Castle; the Emperor and Empress of Russia, the Emperor and Empress of Austria, the Sultan Mahomet, the Kings of Prussia, Hanover, Bavaria, Saxony, Denmark, Sweden, and Greece, Mehemet Ali, Viceroy of Egypt, and all the ducal courts of Germany, and upwards of 600 nights in London." The tricks are as elegant in themselves as they are surprising. There is not the vulgar clap-trap so frequently employed to divert attention; and the Professor stands alone on a clear stage, without the machinery, tables, or screens which lead to the idea that all the magic is lurking behind them. The house was not only delighted, but amused; and, as laughter is said to be the best physic, the Professor proves himself as much a physician as before the magician's wand fell into his hands.

YORK.—Miss Alice Watson gave her annual concert, on Tuesday last, at the Festival Concert Room, assisted by Miss Hiles (of Liverpool), Mr. Suchet Champion, and Mr. Henry Wharton. The band of the 16th Lancers was also engaged. The concert was completely successful, and gave great satisfaction to a most fashionable audience.

MAIDSTONE—(From a Correspondent).—The chief town in Kent was made unusually vocal and instrumental on Wednesday, the 8th inst.—two grand concerts, one morning and one evening, having been given in the Corn Exchange. Mr. James Brine, librarian and printer, had engaged Mr. Wilby, who engaged Miss Arabella Goddard and Mr. Walter Pettit (violoncello), instrumentalists, and Miss Eliza Hughes and Miss Leffler, vocalists. The morning concert opened with Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, for pianoforte, violin and violoncello, very finely performed by Miss Arabella Goddard, Mr. Wilby and Mr. W. Pettit. Miss Goddard and Mr. Wilby also played De Beriot and Benedict's Grand Concertante Duet on airs from Sonnambula; the lady also executing Thalberg's "Home, sweet home" fantasia with immense effect. Mr. Wilby performed two solos —E. Perry's "Rule Britannia" and "Recollections of Paganini's Perpetual Motion" with remarkable skill. Miss Eliza Hughes and Miss Leffler sang sundry popular airs, and joined in the duet, "Giorno d'orrore," from Semiramide. The evening concert commenced with Beethoven's trio in G major, a no less admirable performance by the three artists than the Mendelssohn trio in the forenoon. Miss Goddard and Mr. Wilby repeated the duet from Sonnambula, and the fair pianist, by her magnificent playing in Thalberg's "Last rose of summer" fantasia completely captivated the audience, and in obedience to a unanimous encore, substituted the same composer's "Home, sweet home." Mr. Wilby did not think fit to change the two solos he had introduced in the morning, so good was the impression he had made in both. The vocal performances differed essentially from the first concert, the only piece retained being Mr. Hullah's song, "The Storm," sung by Miss Leffler, J. W. Morgan's ballad, "The memory of thee," by the same lady, and the duet from Semiramide.

DUBLIN.—A réunion musicale, at the Ancient Concert Rooms, introduced Mr. Arthur O'Leary as a pianist. His reception was cordial and his success decided. He played a concerto, with orchestra, of Hummell a caprice of his own composition, and Prudent's "Sonnambula." An overture, composed by Mr. O'Leary, was played by the orchestra, and pleased very much. Herr Oberthur was the other soloist. He is a great favourite with the fashionable world in Dublin. He played a trio of his own composition for harp, violin, and violoncello, the second he has written for those instruments, and the same that he played at his own "recital" on the Saturday previous, which, by-the-bye, deserves notice if only for the brilliant and fashionable audience collected together to do honour to the talented "Harpist to H.R.H. the Duchess of Nassau." A new fantasia for harp solo, on Meyerbeer's Dinorah, composed by Herr Oberthur, is likely to become a favourite with harp-players; it is a very brilliant and effective work, and was capitally played by Herr Oberthur, who also obtained warm applause for his performance of another neat solo, "Meditation," which is quite a little gem. The artists who assisted at the "recital," were Miss Julia Cruise, Mr. O'Rorke, and Mr. Richard Smith (who, among other pieces, sang a new vocal trio by Herr Oberthur, without accompaniment, entitled "The Knights of the Cross," with excellent effect), Miss Ellen Williams, Mr. Sproule, Mr. Levy, and Herr Elsner. The Lord Lieutenant and the viceregal party remained till the conclusion of the concert.

EDINBURGH—(From a Correspondent).—At the third of a series of four classical concerts at the New Music Hall, George's-street, got up under the direction of Herr Hausmann, the celebrated violinist, the following programme was given:—

Sinfonia Pastorale—Beethoven; Rondo, B flat, pianoforte—Mendelssohn; Aria, from I Martiri—Donizetti; Moonlight, Sonata—Beethoven; Bolero; Fantasia, "Souvenirs d'Ecosse"—Oury; Overture and March—Mendelssohn.

Miss Arabella Goddard was the pianist, and Mdlle. Enrichetta Camilla the vocalist. The band was numerous and efficient, and executed the Pastoral Symphony extremely well, Mr. Hausmann being both an experienced and a classical conductor. The three pianoforte pieces excited the greatest enthusiasm, connoisseurs being, of course, most delighted with Miss Goddard's splendid execution of the Rondo of Mendelssohn, with orchestral accompaniments, and the delicious Sonata of Beethoven, after which she was recalled. The brilliant fantasia of Mad. Oury created quite a perfect furor, which compelled the young lady to return to the pianoforte, and substituted "The Harmonious Blacksmith," of Handel, which caused, if possible, still greater excitement. Mdlle. Enrichetta Camilla is a pleasing singer, and has evidently been taught in the best Italian school. The choice of pieces, however, was not entirely to the taste of an Edinburgh audience. The hall was filled by an elegant and brilliant assembly.

M. DISTIN.

To the Editor of the Star.

SIR,—From the kind and very considerate notice of my concert that appeared in the Star of Friday, February 3rd, and the favourable opinion you evidently entertain of me personally, I am induced to write, and request the favour of a place in your columns, to state the reasons for giving it. I lost nearly £80 at the Crystal Palace in 1858, through the great expenses incurred, and hoped, by the concert at Exeter Hall, to have been enabled to liquidate that debt; but, although I appealed by a circular, addressed to the worshipful masters of upwards of 400 Masonic lodges, and the London lodges twice, requesting it to be made known to the brethren, I received but one answer. This was from Lodge 199, Weymouth, inclosing a Post-office order for 10s. 6d., for a reserved seat ticket. I am placed in a false position before the public, and it was not out of any ostentation or avaricious feeling that I again appeared before it, being compelled, through bodily infirmity, the loss of my front teeth (from age and long-continued labour), to relinquish my professional exertions, which have been very arduous, for fifty years—twenty-seven of which were under the Crown, eleven years in the old Militia, seven years in the Grenadiers, and nine years in the private band of His Majesty George IV. I have also performed at three coronations, but have no pension; and with the exception of £1 per week from the brass-instrument business belonging to my son Henry, I have nothing else to depend upon. I have always been ready to give my gratuitous services on occasions of charity, by concerts or otherwise, in several towns in England, Scotland, and Ireland, in many of which large sums were realised. I do not make a boast of this, as I felt a pleasure in doing so, and considered it my duty. Exeter Hall was paid for on the night of my concert by a donation (the name of the donor I am not at liberty to publish, but I inclose it with this), and another donation from the King of Hanover (his Majesty having remembered me in the private band of King George IV.), who, with his well-known benevolence, immediately commanded that his name should be added to the list of subscribers (patrons), with a subscription of £10. These two gifts, and some borrowed money, enabled me to meet a great part of the preliminary expenses. The whole sum in the hall amounted to about £40. I shall, therefore, lose nearly as much as I did at the Crystal Palace. I was induced to hope that the concert, being under such high patronage, and with the long list of artists on the occasion, would have been well attended by "my brother Masons" and the "public generally," but I have been grievously disappointed. There were about 300 free tickets in the hall, principally to the reserved and 5*s.* seats. I hope, when these facts are known, the Masonic brethren and the public will assist me in my difficulty.

Trusting I may be excused for having troubled you with this long letter, and with my most grateful thanks for your kind remarks about me,

I remain, sir, your obedient and obliged servant,

2, Chapter-terrace, Newington, S. J. DISTIN, Sen.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

NEW PIANOFORTE MUSIC

BY

ADOLPH GOLLMICK.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Vive la Danse, Valse ...	3	0	Bellona, Fest March ...	3	0
Belinda, Nocturne ...	3	0	Azelia	3	0
Jeu d' Esprit, Caprice	3	0	Pauline, Mazurka de Salon	3	0

BOOSEY & SONS, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC PERRY.

			s.	d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to		Miss Baron	3	0
The Wardour Mazurka	,,	Lord Arundell	4	0
The Vancouver Quadrille	,,	T. B. Chitty, Esq.	3	0
The Valentia Polka	,,	George Griffiths, Esq.	3	0
The Augusta Mazurka	,,	Miss C. A. Thistlewayte	2	6
The Avonda'e Schottische	,,	Miss Barron	2	0
The Helena Polkas	,,	The Misses Northey	3	0
The Pauline Valses	,,	The Misses Warner	3	0
The Castellon Polka	,,	Miss Fanny Hutchinson	2	0
The Cotham Polka	,,	Miss Mary Lorymer	2	0
The Promenade Polkas	,,	Miss Kirwan	2	0
The Salopian Quadrilles	,,	Miss Brown.	3	0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each:—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.,
Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano and contralto: "Come sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuol," romance, 2s.

"These ballads are beautiful compositions, thoroughly English in their style and character. The words, always selected with literary taste, are set to music with the utmost attention, not only to sentiment and expression, but to all the niceties of accent and of prosody."

"The two trios, which are for female voices, and calculated for the accomplished lady-singers who are now found in every social circle, are among the most attractive drawing-room music that we have heard for a long time."—Spectator.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dedièe à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dedièe à Edouard Roeckel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

Published this Day. Price 2s. 6d.

AN EASY AND POPULAR EDITION OF

"O TENDER SHADOW,"

SONG,

FROM MEYERBEER'S DINORAH.

Adapted for the use of amateurs unable to accomplish all the passages in the original edition, by M. Jules de Glimes. With English and Italian words, price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

POPULAR JUVENILE MUSIC.

PIANOFORTE RECREATIONS FOR JUVENILE PERFORMERS.

Price One Shilling each number.

FIRST SERIES—"SATANELLA."

1. The Power of Love.
2. The Slaves' Chorus.
3. Our hearts are not our own.
4. Oh would she but name.

SECOND SERIES—"DINORAH."

1. The Shadow Air.
2. Santa Maria.
3. Fanciulle (canzonet).
4. Hunting Song.

THIRD SERIES—"MARTHA."

1. M' appari tutt' amor.
2. Drinking Song.
3. Servants' Chorus.
4. Finale to First Act.

FOURTH SERIES—CHRISTY'S MINSTRELS.

1. Beautiful Star, and Ring de Banjo.
2. Good News from Home.
3. We are coming Sister Mary, and Wait for the Waggon.
4. Nelly Gray.
5. Hard Times.
6. I'm off to Charlestown.

FIFTH SERIES—DANCE MUSIC.

1. Maud Valse.
2. Königeberg Polka.
3. Satanella Quadrille.
4. Pantomime Galop.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Lately published,

THREE NEW SONGS

BY

EMILE BERGER.

Price 2s. each.

SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.

From the Daily News.

"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.

A COMPLETE EDITION OF

GLUCK'S OPERA,

IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,

FOR

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,

WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S

CELEBRATED SONG,

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."

Sung with immense success by the Composer,

Price 2s.

Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by

JOSEPH ASCHER,

Price 3s.

And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by

LAURENT,

Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine mild, and mellow spirit ..	15s.	per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit	18s.	Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age	20s.	Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

OH, DENNIS, DEAR. New Song. By G. B. ALLEN.
Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW SONGS

PUBLISHED BY

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee:!
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG,"

Sung by Mr. SANTLEY.

Composed by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 2s.

Rouse ye Palikari,
Men of Suliote, rouse ye,
See on yonder mountain's brow,
Glows the beacon light!
Warlike songs are singing,—
While the trumpets ringing
Call the valiant Palikari,
To the coming Fight.

What though foes surround us,
Though their chains have bound us,
We will live as freemen live,
Or die as warriors die.
Come with weapons gleaming—
Come with banners streaming,
Raise your glorious battle cry,
Suliote shall be free.

"SYMPATHY,"

POETRY BY ELLIS BELL,

COMPOSED BY E. AGUILAR,

Price 2s.

There should be no despair for you,
While nightly stars are burning;
While evening pours its silent dew,
And sunshine gilds the morning.

There should be no despair, though tears
May flow down like a river:
Are not the best-beloved of years
Around your heart for ever.

They weep, you weep, it must be so;
Winds sigh, as you are sighing,
And winter sheds its grief in snow,
Where autumn's leaves are lying.

Yet, these revive, and from their fate,
Your fate cannot be parted;
Then, journey on, if not elate,
Still, never broken hearted.

"AWAKE LITTLE PILGRIM."

Poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. DRUMMOND.

Composed by MAURICE COSHAM.

Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

"THE DEW-DROP AND THE ROSE."

Poetry by ISABELLA HAMPTON.

Composed by G. A. OSBORNE. Price 2s. 6d.

A dew-drop reclined on a beautiful rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love,
When near that sweet flower, to seek soft repose,
A sunbeam fell down from above!

The dew-drop instinctively felt there had come
A rival—his loved one to prove,
A shelter he sought next the heart of the rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love.

Still nearer came that sunbeam gay,
As he called the rose his bride,
Those words the dew-drop heard him say,
Then drooped his head and died.

"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE."

Poetry by M. A. STODART.

Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE. Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle sir,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love; remember.

"ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME."

Poetry from the Polish.

Composed by A. REICHARDT. Price 2s. 6d.

Are they meant but to deceive me,
Those fond words that tell of love
Ah! for ever it would grieve me
If their falsehood I should prove.
Though my heart would trust them gladly,
Though belief, alone, is bliss,
Yet I still must ponder sadly,
Ah! what bitter pain is this.

All my inmost soul concealing,
Shall I sternly answer "No?"
Or each secret wish revealing
Shall my words unfettered flow.
Ever lingering, never speaking,
Here my thoughts shall I express
For my heart if you are seeking,
Strive to find it by a guess.

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
(DÉPOT GÉNÉRAL DE LA MAISON BRANDUS DE PARIS),
244, REGENT STREET, CORNER OF LITTLE ARGYLL STREET.

WORKS EDITED BY J. W. DAVISON.

1.

In one volume, price 4s., or bound in cloth, 6s. 6d., large size,

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA SONATA,

AND

WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA SONATA,

With Biographical and Critical Introductions, by

J. W. DAVISON.

(In a few days.)

2.

In stiff sides, price 8s., or bound in cloth, 10s. 6d., large size,

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

(COMPLETE)

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Critical Preface, and Portrait of Chopin.

3.

In stiff sides, price 6s., or bound in cloth, 8s. 6d., large size,

(In a few days),

MENDELSSOHN'S

SONGS WITHOUT WORDS,

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Descriptive and Critical Preface and Portrait of Mendelssohn.

 Another Edition of this Work is published, in large 4to, cloth, gilt, price 7s. 6d.

4.

In two volumes, 10s. 6d. each, or bound in cloth, price 13s. each, large size,

BEETHOVEN'S

PIANOFORTE SONATAS,

(COMPLETE)

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Descriptive and Critical Introductions, and Portrait of Beethoven.

 Another Edition of this Work is also published, in two volumes, large 4to, cloth, gilt, price 10s. 6d. each; uniform with Mendelssohn's Songs Without Words.

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

New and Complete Edition for the Pianoforte,

BY

HENRY SMART,

Price 3s., or handsomely bound, 5s.

(Published this day.)

THE CROWN DIAMONDS,

New and Complete Edition, for Pianoforte, with

Illustrations by BRANDARD,

And Introduction, describing the Plot and Music.

Price 6s., in cloth,

Forming the Twentieth volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Pianoforte Operas.

(March 1st.)

BOOSEY'S 100 GERMAN WALTZES

For the Violin,

BY

LABITSKY, LANNER, & STRAUS,

Including all the best of those favourite Composers.

Price 1s.

AN EVENING WITH BALFE,

For Pianoforte,

BY

NORDMANN,

Introducing the following Airs:—"Day-break," "Margaretta," "Maud," "Good night, Beloved," "Chorus Satanella," "The Green Trees," "Nelly Gray," &c.

Price, Pianoforte Solo, 4s.—Duet, 5s.

(Published this day.)

KUHES' NEW FANTASIA ON ZAMPA,

For Pianoforte. Price 3s.

(Just published.)

A SELECTION FROM DINORAH.

For Concertina and Piano,

ARRANGED BY

RICHARD BLAGROVE.

Price 3s. 6d.

(This day.)

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex. Saturday, February 25, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 9. SATURDAY, MARCH 3, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers..

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS, Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—On Thursday evening next, March 8, to commence at 8 and terminate 10·15. The VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—President, The Right Honourable the Earl of Dudley. Conductors, M. Benedict and Mr. C. E. Horsley. Miss Arabella Goddard, Madlle. Euphrosyne Parepa, and Choir of 200 voices. Organ, Mr. Brownsmith. Miss Arabella Goddard will perform "The harmonious blacksmith," and "Where the bee sucks." Madlle. Parepa will sing the solos in Mendelssohn's Psalm, "Hear my prayer, O God," &c., &c. The Choir will also perform the following Part-Songs, &c., "Night, lovely night," F. Berger; "Rise, sleep no more," Benedict; "John Anderson my Jo," arranged by Hargitt; "Lullaby," H. Smart; "Forest home," Benedict; "The Echo," G. W. Martin; "Hear, holy Power," Auber; "The Nightingale," Mendelssohn; "The last rose of summer," arranged by G. W. Martin. Tickets 1s, 3s, and 5s. each, at St. James's Hall.

PROGRAMME OF MR. AGUILAR'S FIRST PERFORMANCE OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC.—Saturday Evening, March 10th, at his residence, 17, Westbourne-square, W.—Sonata, Op. 2. No. 3, Beethoven; Song, Handel, Miss Lindo; Preludes and fugues, J. S. Bach; Capriccio, Op. 33, No. 3, Mendelssohn; Song, Mozart, Miss Lindo; Sonata quasi Fantasia in E flat, Beethoven; Invitation a la Valse, Weber. To commence at half-past eight. Subscription to the three, 10s. 6d., Single tickets, 5s.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

ROYAL VOLUNTEER BALL.—Under the immediate Patronage of
Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen.
His Royal Highness The Prince Consort.
His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales.
His Royal Highness The Duke of Cambridge, Commander in Chief.
Her Royal Highness The Duchess of Cambridge.
Her Royal Highness The Princess Mary of Cambridge.

The Royal Volunteer Ball will take place on the evening of Wednesday March 7th, the day on which Her Majesty will hold a Court specially to receive the Officers of the various Volunteer Corps from the different parts of the kingdom.

The Ball will take place in the New Floral Hall, Covent Garden.

The list of the Ladies Patronesses through whom the tickets will be issued will be completed and announced, together with the details of all the arrangements, in the course of a few days.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 9, Chiswick-street, Berners-street, W.

MR. THOMAS (Basso) finding that mistakes are continually occurring, from the fact of there being others in the musical profession of the same name, requests that all communications to him be addressed "Lewis Thomas, 19, Hampshire-terrace, Camden-road Villas, N.W.

MISS LAURA BAXTER begs to announce that she will give a Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert, in the month of May, under the immediate Patronage of the Marquis of Lansdowne, the Right Honorable The Earl Mount Edgecumbe; The Lady Brownlow, and the Right Hon. M.P.; the Lady Catherine Vallefort, &c.

Communications to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, 9, Chiswick-street, Regent's Park, N.W.

NEWSPAPER PENNY

MADAME SAINTON DOLBY will return to London for the season on the 10th March. All letters to be addressed to No. 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W.

MONSIEUR SAINTON will return to London for the season on the 10th March. All letters to be addressed to No. 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W.

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON.—Mr. C. M. SHEE respectfully informs Musical Professors that he continues to undertake the arrangement of Concerts, Soirées, Matinées, as well as Programmes and Books of Words, at very moderate charges. Address 105, Wardour-street, Oxford-street.

MR. ABRAHAM THOMAS (Basso, of Lincoln's Inn Choir) takes this opportunity of informing his friends and the public generally, that his Address is 51, Brunswick-street, Borough, S.E. Mr. A. T. having lost several engagements lately, through others of the same name in the musical profession, feels it his duty to advertise his residence.

MR. ELLIOT GALER has REMOVED to St. John's Villa, Junction-road, N.

MDLLE. MARIE WIECK, Pianist.—Letters respecting engagements for concerts and lessons to be addressed, 14, Leinster-square, Hyde-park, W.

MR. T. SOOTSON CLARK is in town for the season.—Letters respecting lessons or engagements for the pianoforte or harmonium to be addressed to him, care of Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

MISS AUGUSTA THOMSON begs to announce her arrival in London for the season. Letters to be addressed to her at 24, Holles-street, W.

TO CHORAL SOCIETIES.—Great success of the performances at the Town Hall, Leeds, Feb. 25, by the Madrigal Society of "the Widow of Nain," Oratorio by Lindpaintner. The vocal score, orchestral and chorus parts are published by Wessel and Co., 18, Hanover-square. Each number to be had separately, voice and piano.

CHOIR-MASTER AND ORGANIST.—A Bass Singer (occasional deputy at St. Paul's Cathedral) is desirous of an engagement on a Sunday (full choral service preferred). Address, Z. A., Brooks' Office, 24, Old Cavendish-street, W.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 20, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address, M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to

THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

WALLACE FANTAISIE BRILLANTE on Verdi's Ernani. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE MUSICAL WORLD.

SIR,—An action for slander having been brought by Mr. JEREMIAH ROGERS, Organist of the Doncaster Parish Church, against Mr. BENJAMIN HAWTHORN, of, Doncaster, Pianoforte Tuner, I shall be obliged by your inserting in your publication the Defendant's Apology, of which a copy is given below.

I am, Sir,
Very obediently yours,
F. W. FISHER,
Plaintiff's Attorney.

Doncaster, Feb. 29, 1860.

[COPY OF APOLOGY.]

"ROGERS v. HAWTHORN."

"An action having been commenced against me by Mr. Jeremiah Rogers, for a slander uttered by me at the Doncaster Railway Station, on the 7th day of June, 1859, I hereby retract the slander complained of and withdraw all imputation on Mr. Roger's character and conduct, and I apologise for having used the words attributed to me

"In consideration of all proceedings in this action being stayed, I agree to pay the costs incurred by Mr. Rogers therein, such costs to be taxed in case of difference. Mr. Rogers is to be at liberty to use this document as he may think proper.

"Dated this twenty-fifth day of February, 1860.

"B. HAWTHORN.

"Witness to the signing thereof,
CHAS. EDW. PALMER."

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each:—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.,
Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come, sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuoi," romance, 2s.

"These ballads are beautiful compositions, thoroughly English in their style and character. The words, always selected with literary taste, are set to music with the utmost attention, not only to sentiment and expression, but to all the niceties of accent and of prosody."

"The two trios, which are for female voices, and calculated for the accomplished lady-singers who are now found in every social circle, are among the most attractive drawing-room music that we have heard for a long time."—Spectator.

"Signor Ferrari's "Eight Ballads" are, without exception, charming. They are purely vocal, and they have this precious quality—that the melody, in every instance, enables the singer to give the clearest and most expressive utterance to every word and syllable of the poetry. Where all are so good we find it difficult to pick out any of them for special notice; we may say, however, that the greatest impression on us has been made by "Sweet days of youth," with its rich accompaniment; by "Sweet hope," with its graceful and expressive simplicity; and by "Long years of care," with its great tenderness.

"The two chamber trios are both on fairy subjects, and are charmingly light and delicate. They are for female voices; and gracefully warbled by three sweet-voiced damsels, are truly fairy music. Of the Italian Songs it is sufficient to say, that "Vieni, Vieni," a serenade, with elegant verses, by the accomplished Signor Maggioni, possesses all the features which we have attempted to describe as characterising Ferrari's music."—Illustrated News.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

MADAME OURY'S GRAND GALOP di Bravura on Christy's Minstrels' Melodies, rapturously encored when performed by the author at the late Piccolomini concert at Brighton. Price 3s. Also, "When other lips," transcribed by Madame Oury. Price 3s. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Shortly will be Published,

TWO EVENING SERVICES IN A MAJOR: Cantate and Deus, Magnificate, and Nunc Dimittis, with Organ Accompaniment. Composed by E. Bunnett, Mus. Bac., Cantab., Assistant Organist of Norwich Cathedral. Price (to Subscribers) 8s. Subscriber's names will be received by the Author, Upper Close, Norwich, and by the Publishers, Messrs. Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London, W.

Edited by CIPRIANI POTTER.

R. R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.

ALBERT DAWES' "AULD LANG SYNE," with Variations for the pianoforte, is just published, price 5s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where the popular "South Down" Polka, for pianoforte, may be obtained, price 1s.

REVIEWS.

"'Lurline'—Opera in three acts, written by Edward Fitzball, composed by William Vincent Wallace" (London, Cramer, Beale and Chappell; Leipsic, Schuberth and Co.)

Here we have the English text and pianoforte score of Mr. Wallace's new opera, which—as the first that has been heard from his pen since the production of Matilda of Hungary (with Mr. Bunn's memorable libretto), at Drury Lane Theatre, in 1846—presents more than ordinary interest. Lurline is said to have been in great part written as far back as twelve years ago; but it requires no such apology, bearing evidence as it does—evidence that springs from a comparison between this opera and Mr. Wallace's previous dramatic works—of having been carefully reconsidered and retouched by the composer from end to end.

The questionable feature of Lurline is its libretto, which belongs to a class of melodramatic writing happily now effete. Mr. Fitzball has treated the romantic and famous legend of the Lurlei-berg after a manner peculiar to himself. In the legend, the heroine, deceived by a false lover, invokes the spirits of the Rhine, and consents to become the bride of the river on condition of being endowed with gifts of beauty and fascination that shall render her irresistible to man, whom hereafter it is her intention to lure into destruction by every means at her command. The compact is made, and Lorcley, or Lurlei (Lurline) becomes the spirit of the whirlpool, with what mission it is unnecessary to remind our readers. Mr. Fitzball finds the lady a spirit, and restores her to earth. She sees Count Rudolph in a bark on the river, falls in love with him, and tempts him to her abode beneath the waves, not to destroy, but, like Melusina, to cherish. Her vexed father (she has a father), the River-King, burning (or rather we should say freezing) to annihilate the rash mortal who has thus intruded on his domain, is frustrated in his desire by the amorous water-spirit, and at length persuaded to let Rudolph depart, loading him with treasures in the bargain, in order that he may be consoled for the loss of his beloved. Aware that the Count's affairs are by no means in good order, and that the emptiness of his purse has led to the rejection of his hand by Ghiva, daughter of a Rhenish Baron, the River-King judges—from a view of mortality, perhaps, common to water-spirits—that no sooner gone than, "out of sight out of mind," Rudolph will forget Lurline, and cast himself and his newly-acquired riches at the feet of the disdainful Ghiva. Lurline, however, with more faith, has promised to give her earthly admirer an interview at the Lurlei-berg, in the course of three days. On Rudolph's return to terra firma (how he managed to live under water we are left to surmise), the knowledge of his being possessed of untold wealth, acts in the way the River-King had suspected—at least upon one mortal, the mercenary Ghiva, though not upon Rudolph himself. He, poor wight, does nothing but sigh after his lost water-nymph, and actually snubs Ghiva, who, in despair, possesses herself of a ring which Lurline has given him as a pledge, and, in a fit of jealous rage, throws it into the Rhine. True to her appointment, Lurline makes her appearance at the end of the stipulated period, and learning from a gnome (?) that Rudolph has parted with the ring (which, as the spirit of the Rhine, one might have thought she would be the first to know), gives way to unutterable anguish. In her subsequent interview with Rudolph, however, when matters are explained to her satisfaction, she once more, and for the last time, makes use of her supernatural power, invoking the storm-spirits dependant on the Rhine to overwhelm a band of reprobates, who, recently guests of the Count, are now plotting his assassination for the sake of his gold, and ultimately persuades her watery sire, the good-natured, though somewhat illogical River-King, to approve her choice and resign her to her terrestrial lover. Fancy the old Rhine spirit with whom Henrich Heine held converse at Cologne, expressing himself in such terms as the subjoined:—

> "Yes; thy fond father
> To Rudolph's hand here cometh to resign,
> By love and fate decreed,
> His child, Lurline, > Best treasure of the Rhine!" [Joins their hands.

And so, amidst a heap of elaborate vocal divisions, Lurline, "best treasure of the Rhine," expresses her sense of happiness, and the curtain drops. If Lurline—which, we understand, was written many years since, may be regarded as Mr. Fitzball's last great work—his Requiem (it certainly cannot be accepted as his Transfiguration)—why, then, there might be an end of the matter, and no critic, however soured by operatic libretti, would have the heart to be severe; but if, on the contrary, further perpetrations of the same description are contemplated, it is as well to warn our composers that the time has passed for the toleration of such performances.

Such a jumble of spirits and mortals, with the special elements of either made apparently common to both—all the dramatis personæ being, more or less, amphibious—could only have sprung from the brain of a Fitzball, and justifies the epigrammatic epilogue of a wag, that the mixture of earth and water in Lurline accounted for the muddiness of its libretto.

But let us pass to a more agreeable subject—the music of Mr. Wallace. Lurline is certainly this gentleman's dramatic masterpiece, and as far superior to Maritana and Matilda of Hungary as the book of Maritana (not that of Matilda) is superior to the book of Lurline. Mr. Wallace has in every respect made progress—such progress as is rarely noted, indeed, between any two successive works of a dramatic composer. We find the old vein of melody as rich as formerly, with an increased knowledge of resources that gives it a tenfold value. The overture, in the broad and open key of D major, far surpasses, in clearness of design, and vigour of treatment, the orchestral preludes of Mr. Wallace's other operas. The instrumentation, too, is extremely effective, the combination of "wind" in the opening adagio, and the introduction, by the whole body of "strings," high and low, the double basses alone excepted, of the beautiful melody which, in the third act, stands as the theme of Lurline's prayer, being equally points to admire. The quick movement—like that in the overture to Weber's Oberon, although the first subject is no more strictly akin to Weber than to the allegro in Wagner's Tännhauser—is rather chivalrous than fairy-like. It is vigorous and brilliant from end to end, and among many new touches of fancy may be noted the passage of rhythmical recitative given to the stringed instruments, ushering in the progression which leads back to the principal theme. The second theme (afterwards an episode in the romance of the "Night winds"—Act I.) is essentially melodious, contrasts strikingly with the leading theme, and works in well with the rest. In short, Mr. Wallace in this overture has evidently written his best, and, earnestly bent upon success, has attained it. Although we have only the pianoforte adaptation before us, it may be as well to observe, once for all, that the manner in which the orchestra is handled throughout the opera of Lurline, imparting colour to and heightening the dramatic sentiment of the various situations into which the chief personages are thrown, while engendering effects the occasional novelty and frequent beauty of which are sure to elicit the attention of musicians, confers infinite honour on the composer, and shows that his studies have been well directed in the long interval during which he has been condemned, in so far as the English public are concerned, to unmerited silence. The introductory symphony (in F major) at the rise of the curtain, where the accompaniment of the violoncellos, to a melodious phrase for the horn, realises what the Italian musicians designate as "ondeggiando," at once suggests that we are about to be entertained with a spectacle in which some of the actors are fairies, and that the habitation of those fairies will, in all probabilty, turn out to be rather aquatic than terrestrial. Lurline's romance (Act 1), "When the night winds sweep the wave" (in A minor—already mentioned), a most original and beautiful piece in itself, offers, perhaps, the most remarkable example in the entire work of the fanciful treatment of the orchestra in which Mr. Wallace has shown himself so skilled an adept. The accompaniments to this are as uncommon as they are characteristic, and, at the same time, masterly.

The opening of the first scene (after the symphony to which allusion has been made) is somewhat ineffective. No one cares greatly for Rhine*berg* (an odd name for a king who resides underneath the water), and no one cares a straw for Zelieck, the gnome (we thought gnomes were earth spirits), whom he wildly invokes in the bold and vigorous air, "Idle spirit, wildly dreaming" (in F minor). So that, however excellent per se, and however well given by Mr. Santley, the air and the recitatives that precede and follow it—the last being dialogue, in which Mr. Corri (the gnome) takes part—fall somewhat flat. The "other nymphs" (vide book) whom Mr. Fitzball summons "from their shells of opal" (no nymphs having yet appeared), in a pretty choral strain ("Hark, hark, hark,"—A flat) from behind, begin to awaken attention, and the graceful quasi-Weberish chorus ("King of the Rhine"—same key) with which, when before the footlights, they greet their dripping monarch, at once imparts life and interest to the scene. The apparition of Lurline, at the foot of a rock, singing to "an antique harp," the confession of her love for Rudolph, is illustrated by a brief concerted piece, in which the other personages, including Liba, a water-nymph (a part, we may here add, very prettily played and very prettily sung by Miss Fanny Cruise, a young and promising beginner), are concerned. The first romance of Lurline ("Flow on, flow on, oh silver Rhine"—E major), in which she begs the river, the flowers, and the spirits to explain her sentiments to Rudolph, is based on a melody sure from its piquant, simple, and unpretending character to become popular, and, moreover, graced with florid cadences and a florid coda, or tailpiece, precisely fitted to the peculiar talent of Miss Louisa Pyne, who warbles it exquisitely. The chorus divides the two couplets, and in the second verse the accompaniment is judiciously varied. A scene between Lurline and Rhineberg, in accompanied recitative—a form, by the way, into which Mr. Wallace (a task as difficult as it is thoroughly well accomplished) has thrown all those parts of the opera which would otherwise be spoken dialogue—leads to the delicious romance, "The Night Winds," already described, a revelation on the part of the water-nymph of the history of her love for Rudolph. The chorus that brings the first scene to an end ("Sail, sail, sail"—D flat), in which the principal characters join, though spirited and appropriate, offers no particular point for notice.

In the second scene, where we have to do with simple mortals, the music assumes an essentially different character—as in duty bound. It sets out with a very admirably written duet ("Oh! Rudolph, haughty Rudolph"—D major) for the Baron Truenfels (carefully represented by Mr. Honey, as a decrepid old man, with bent knees and crooked legs) and Ghiva (Miss Pilling) his daughter. This duet, of which, as in many of those of Auber and other French composers, the orchestra claims the lion's share, the voices being often little more than accompaniments, contains a very charming episode, in which a passage occurs on the words, "Oh, soft affection, to thy rest," equally to be admired for its melody and its harmony. The arrival of Rodolph (Mr. Harrison) brings some clever concerted music, conducting to a trio (A major):—

"I see by the gray of the sky
That morning is now very nigh,"—

where the composer, by showing how it is not absolutely necessary that the music and poetry in a dramatic composition should breathe the same spirit, has upset the pet theory of Herr Wagner, who, in his Kunstwerk der Zukunft, would fuse all the arts into one, and make them inseparable and dependent on each other. Although French in colour and in the turn of its leading phrases (the last especially—"Good night, sir, good night")—as, indeed, is frequently the case with the lighter music of Mr. Wallace—this trio may be unreservedly eulogised for spirit and scenic propriety.

The third scene (Rudolph's castle) opens with a drinking chorus, "Drain the cup of pleasure" (D major), in bolero measure, cheerful and animated, if not strikingly original, which owes no little of the favour it enjoys (it is always redemanded) to the admirable singing of the chorus (men's voices, of course). Some effective concerted music leads to a romance, with chorus for Rudolph ("Our bark, in moonlight beaming"—D minor), which embodies the legend of Lurline, the Rhine-spirit. Here the ordinary method of treating such matters at the French Opera has not been discarded, notwithstanding which the romance has both character and merit of its own. Though decidedly simple, it is imbued with a feeling of dreamy mysteriousness, entirely in keeping with the sentiment conveyed in the text. The finale (beginning in A flat, and ending in F minor), sets out with a harp arpeggio, while snatches from the ballad, "Flow on, flow on, oh! silver Rhine," indicate the approach of Lurline, who shortly emerges from the river and mingles with the noisy guests of her lover. Placing the ring on his finger, which is to be a pledge of mutual faith, no less than a potent charm, and a safeguard in case of subtidal difficulties, she at length, in spite of opposition from Rudolph's associates, lures him into a skiff, which immediately disappears. Rhineberg, with "a host of spirits," is seen among the rocks, vowing vengeance against Rudolph: a storm arises; the skiff is supposed to sink beneath the waters, and the curtain falls. All this is combined with vigorous, striking and picturesque music, and the result is a finale which brings the act to a climax in a thoroughly effective manner.

The second act ("Crystal dwelling of Lurline; doors of bronze") begins with a chorus of gnomes ("Behold, behold, wedges of gold," E minor), gloomy, savage, and monotonous, as befits the singers, and leading to an unpretendingly graceful ballad for Lurline ("Under a spreading coral wave"—G major), which Miss Pyne sings charmingly. In the absence of Rhineberg, the water-nymphs disport themselves in dance and song to a very lively chorus (B flat major), at the end of which a compliment to the River-King's sagacity is conveyed in the following language :—

> "Though lock'd in your breast, he the secret can find,
> 'Neath one beam of his eye your poor heart must unclose,
> And out floats the truth like the bee from the rose."

This chorus interrupts and mixes with the ballad of Lurline. The sparkling music of Mr. Wallace, however, here once more controverts the dogma of Herr Wagner. Rudolph's début as a vocalist under water is in a cavatina ("Sweet form that on my dreamy gaze"—B flat major), which, though it can boast an elegant melody, is even more strictly noticeable for the ingenuity of the accompaniments. Lurline's brindisi (with chorus), "Take this cup of sparkling wine" (E flat major)—which obtains an encore every evening, thanks to Miss Louisa Pyne's brilliant singing—is, in its chief feature, a sort of reminiscence of the old English nursery tune—"Girls and boys come out to play." The concerted piece (E flat minor and G flat major), where Liba and her companions avert the watchfulness of Zelieck, intrusted with the guardianship of his master's treasures, is animated and clever. The introduction here of snatches of the foregoing air is felicitous; and the drinking song at the end (there are too many drinking songs and choruses), "As in this cup the bead flies up" (G minor and major), while in some passages too florid for Mr. Corri's method of vocalisation, is eminently characteristic of the situation. Ghiva's ballad in the next scene ("Troubadour enchanting"—F major), almost primitive in its simplicity, is, nevertheless, extremely pretty and attractive. Miss Pilling (the new "contralto") sings it well, and, being invariably called for twice, it helps to lengthen the performance. A chorus of huntsmen ("Away to the chase"—E flat major) is one of the most vigorous pieces in the opera. The introductory symphony, with the unanticipated notes for various brass instruments, modifying the harmony of each section, is of itself remarkable, and the rest fully bears out the promise it entails. Rhineberg's ballad (B major), "The nectar cup may yield delight," (for which Mr. Santley's admirably expressive singing elicits an inevitable "encore"), is one of those model drawing-room ditties certain to gain the favour both of sentimental young gentlemen and sentimental young ladies, the especial delight of music-publishers, and of which Mr. Balfe has invented the most admirable and popular specimens. The next piece—an "Ave Maria" (E major) supposed to be sung by Rudolph's friends in a boat on the Rhine, for the soul of their comrade, whom they imagine dead, while Rudolph, from his subaqueous and supernatural abode, actually overhears them, and responds to their appeal, is of a very different stamp. Nothing could be more beautiful of its kind, more ingeniously constructed and impressive. The finale to the second act (chiefly in E major) is superior to that of the first. The incident is the return of the Rhine King, who, at Lurline's intercession, spares the life of Rudolph, and sends him back to his mortal home, loaded with treasures, amid the mutual despair of the lovers, who, resigned to fate, are still loth to part. The music here is thoroughly dramatic, and most skilfully composed, the grand passage of combination (or "ensemble") consisting of a large and energetic melody, upon which (as in some of the operas of Donizetti and Verdi) is brought to bear the united power of chorus and orchestra, while the voice of the chief soprano (Lurline) predominates over the rest, in high, prolonged, and resonant tones, until the culminating point is attained (as by the same originals) in a broad phrase of unison, allotted to all the voices, choral and solo, and all the instruments except those of the lower register.

The third act (prefaced by a capital orchestral interlude—in which an episode belonging to the overture, in F sharp minor, is developed with much interest and skill)—although quite equal in interest to the others, must be more briefly dismissed. Rudolph's song, "My home, my heart's first home!" (A major) is another approved drawing-room ballad, inferior, however, to the one in which the Rhine King gives gushing expression to the sentiment of paternal love, and at the same time still more nearly shaped on some of the specimens to which Mr. Balfe owes so many laurels. "Gold and wine heal every care" (E flat major) is another extremely effective chorus for male voices, comprising, moreover, one or two novel points—as, for instance, the pauses at the end. As in the drinking-chorus (Act I.), and the hunting-chorus (Act II.), the execution of this piece confers the highest credit on the singers. The duet which follows, for Rudolph and Ghiva (B flat major), is, in a great measure—like the duet between the baron and the same lady (Act I.)—a display for the orchestra, in which the fiddles shine to their heart's (strings?) content, while the voices are too frequently subordinate. It is clever, nevertheless, and would have more pretensions to be styled "original," but for the provokingly Auberish phrase occurring at the end of the second movement ("Telling of fond eyes that weep.") The short chorus of "storm-spirits" (same key), that ensues upon Ghiva's casting into the Rhine the magic ring she has snatched from Rudolph's finger, may pass as a mere allusion. Lurline's grand scena (beginning and ending in F major), "Sad is my soul," which includes two beautiful slow movements—the second one (a prayer in A flat major—"Oh, Thou, to whom this heart") to the melody allotted the stringed instruments in the opening of the overture—and terminating with an extremely spirited allegro ("As a bounding barque"), is a very striking composition, in which the voice-part and orchestral accompaniments are alike interesting, while the dramatic feeling is sustained with unabated vigour to the end. This is one of the capital pieces of the opera, and in it Miss Louisa Pyne exhibits her finest singing, whether expression or fluent execution be taken into consideration. Scarcely less effective, while equally well written, is the duet (commencing and terminating in A major) where Lurline first reproaches Rudolph for losing her ring, and then restores it to him. Abounding in passionate phrases, although somewhat too lengthy, for the situation in which it occurs, this duet never once flags in interest. Both the foregoing would gain by being placed somewhat earlier in the opera. There still remain to be mentioned a lively chorus with ballet ("Now with joy each bosom beating"—D major), at the opening of the last scene, which might have fallen from Auber's pen without raising a doubt about its genuineness; and last (in some respects best of all), the unaccompanied quartet, for Lurline, Liba, Rhineberg, and Zelieck ("Though the world with transport bless me"—E flat major), which in every respect fully warrants the enthusiastic reception it meets with from the audience. A genuine English glee, with florid passages and cadenza for the principal voice (Lurline), this quartet is attractive enough to have saved a weak opera, and may be accepted as all the more remarkable, considering the effect it produces after so much that is excellent has gone before. In a word, it is a faultless example of vocal part writing, and everywhere as pleasing as it is ingenious. The finale to the third act is, according to precedent, the least ambitious of the three. The commencement (in D major), with the accompaniment in triplets for violins, again smacks of Auber. Lurline's exhortation to the Rhine to devote its waters to the destruction of the conspirators (which climbs, by an ordinary sequence of semitonic progressions, from A minor, through B flat minor, to B minor), and the storm-movement (in F sharp minor) that follows, whore the first subject of the allegro in the overture is presented in the relative minor key, are undistinguished by any very salient characteristics; while the concluding vocal display for the prima donna is merely a repetition of Lurline's first air ("Flow on, oh silver Rhine," in the same key as in Act I.—E major*), embellished with ornaments and "bravura" traits to show off the neatness and brilliancy of Miss Louisa Pyne's vocalisation. It brings down the curtain, however, with great animation, and is exactly fitted for the place it fills at the end of an opera, which, independently of its intrinsic merits, is the most successful dramatic work of a deservedly successful composer.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

THIS very important institution, for the interests of music inaugurated its public proceedings for the present year with its first concert of the season, in St. James's Hall, on Wednesday evening, when that spacious saloon was crowded by a most elegant assembly, among whose numbers were nearly all the most eminent musicians at present in London. The most powerful rivalry, if not the only one with which the Council of the Society have to contend, is the reputation of the series of performances during 1859, which were so remarkable and so eminently meritorious that they will be difficult to equal and almost impossible to surpass, while still they prompt most sanguine expectations as to what interesting matter a second series may furnish. A most happy augury for the success of the coming performances is the retention of Mr. Alfred Mellon in the office of conductor; and the general sense of the members of the high value of this arrangement was loudly expressed in the enthusiasm which greeted the appearance of that excellent artist at his post in the orchestra. A band over which this able director has to preside, is almost entirely the same as that of last year, the only very slight changes that have been made being yet further to strengthen its universally pronounced efficiency. The policy which drew great credit to the management of the Council of last year, as proving the liberal principles of the Society, and the active zeal of the executive in carrying these into operation,—the policy of including in each performance some work little known, and entirely new to a London audience,—was proved still to influence the arrangements, by the very interesting programme of this initial concert, and we may safely infer, from the indication thus given of the intentions for the future, that the concerts of 1860 may bear comparison even with those of the previous year, and still be felt to have realised the first object of the Musical Society, in having tended to the yet further advancement of music in England. The concert opened with Robert Schumann's overture to Tieck's historical tragedy of Genoveva, played, to the best of our belief, for the first time in London. The romantic story this composition illustrates,—of the Count's repudiation of his guiltless wife, of her despairing flight from the effects of his jealous fury, of her concealment in the forest, of her inability to nourish her infant, of his being suckled by a doe, of the Count's wounding the wild nurse of his child while on a hunting party, of his tracking his prey to its covert, and there finding the exiled Genoveva and her son, of his ascertaining her innocence, and of receiving her, pure and faithful, to his remorseful heart, furnishes wide scope for the poetical qualities of the musician, and calls in exercise the loftiest powers of passionate expression. It is the well-known characteristic of the class of musicians with whom Schumann is associated, and of the style of criticism of which he is the best ornament, unduly to exalt the ideal above the technical—unmindful that while ideality is essential to artistic production, music must be music in order to bring it within the range of art, and that unless we be moved by the effect of the elemental beauty of a composition, we can have no perception of its poetical purport. The first hearing of the present work, however, agreeably impresses us with a clearer idea of its technical design, and a more definite sense of its musical interest, than almost any other production on the scale of its author; it must be admitted that it approaches not, in its intrinsic merit, the great characteristic overtures of Beethoven and Mendelssohn, and that it neither equals these masterpieces in its power of suggesting the features of the subject it is designed to illustrate; still, it amply proves the thoughtful mind, the deep musical feeling, and the mastery of the artistic resources of the composer, and we expect that all these qualities will be made yet more manifest to general appreciation, by the repeated hearing of this effort of his genius. Compared with that of the overture of Gade, and of the immensely interesting symphony of Schubert, at the concerts of last season, the reception of the overture to Genoveva, on Wednesday, may be considered as bordering on enthusiasm; and we trust its success on this occasion may induce its repetition on some future series of concerts. A knowledge of this work must prompt respect for the composer, if it fail to awaken admiration of his production.

Herr Reichardt sang the aria of Adolar, in Euryanthe, which was assigned to Mr. Sims Reeves in one of last year's programmes, with a dramatic feeling, an animation, an excellence of vocal delivery, and a general good effect, that brought out beauties which before were wholly unrevealed in this charming specimen of Weber's too-little-known opera. The introductory symphony for wind instruments to this piece was not so perfectly executed as most of the music of the evening,—a misfortune attributable to the fact of the song having been substituted, without rehearsal, for one which Signor Belletti was prevented from singing by sudden illness.

A concertino in D, by Ernst (an honorary member of the Society), which we do not remember to have been played by the composer in England, was executed by Mr. Blagrove in a manner which surprised even the admirers of this gentleman's talent. Not only was his performance marked by the exquisite beauty, the perfection of finish, and the purity of intonation, which are his justly acknowledged qualities as a violinist, but it was equally distinguished by an amount of passion such as he rarely displays, and it raised his high artistic character in the estimation of all who heard it. The cordial and spontaneous applause throughout and at the close of the concertino was a worthy tribute to the great merit of the executant.

The admirable dramatic scena of Madame Ankastrome in the third act of Auber's Gustave, a piece as new to a concert-room as it was thoroughly welcome, was excellently sung by Mdlle. Parepa, one of the best of our present English vocalists. This lady has come forward as a concert singer at a fortunate moment for the public and for herself. Now that Mad. Clara Novello and Mad. Lemmens Sherrington are both away from London, our public performances would be sadly deficient without the fine voice and good style of Mdlle. Parepa, and she would have less opportunity to prove her ability were those two merited favourites here to share her chances of public applause. The selection of this clever song was a suitable compliment to its author (one of the Society's honorary members), and a good refutation of the silly prejudice that would exclude Auber from the rank of first-class composers.

Sterndale Bennett's overture, The Wood Nymphs, was a revival that must have gratified every disinterested lover of art, and must have made everyone who is interested in the progress of art among us truly proud of their countryman. Too long, indeed, is it since this beautiful work has been heard in public, but not so long that its exquisite traits have passed from the memory of those whom they once delighted; not so long but that everyone who remembered its charming effect rejoiced to hear it again. Twenty years have passed since the then prolific author produced this, the last of his three admirable concert-overtures; these twenty years have not sufficed for sound critics to determine whether this, or its predecessors, the Naiades and Parisina, is the best; each has its individuality, while all are peculiar to the composer, and all have pre-eminent excellence; and our only regret, in bearing testimony to their beauty, arises from the consideration that thrice as long a period as elapsed between the creation of the first and last of these has been insufficient for the production of a companion to them from the same source. The purely musical beauty of this work vies with its picturesque and fanciful imagery to charm the sense and delight the intelligence; and while there exists nothing that does more honour to our artistic character as a nation than the emanation of this masterpiece from one of our countrymen, there exists but very few works which more brightly adorn the art itself. The good effect of the performance would have been much increased had the marks of ritenuto been less rigidly observed, which the composer has too profusely inserted in his score; they induce an interruption of the continuous character of the whole, and thus take from the spirit and the animation which naturally belong to the composition.

* We should have preferred the finale in D major, the key of the overture. "Pourquoi?" Mr. Wallace will ask, and we shall be at a loss to answer him. Nous ne savons pas; but we should have preferred it. Voilà-tout.

Up to this point, the close of the first part, the place of Mr. Mellon (whose absence was compelled by the Queen's second visit to the performance of Mr. Wallace's Lurline at the Royal English Opera) was effectually filled by Mr. Henry Smart. The commencement of the second part was delayed till Mr. Mellon's arrival from the theatre, when Spohr's symphony, The Power of Sound, was performed in memory of the illustrious composer. One of the greatest successes of last year's concerts was the remarkable rendering of this excessively intricate and difficult work, which till then had never, save under the author's direction, had an approximation to a perfect performance in England; the performance on that occasion was not an approximation, but an attainment of such perfection as would have enraptured the veteran master, could he have witnessed such a presentation of his most esteemed orchestral composition. Only less fully complete than that celebrated performance, but immeasurably surpassing every other attempt, was the justice rendered to the symphony on Wednesday evening. Spohr, too, was an honorary member of the Musical Society, and the honour the institution received by the enrolment of his glorious name, was worthily reflected by the tribute paid to his greatness in such an interpretation as this was of his masterpiece. Each movement might have been supposed metaphorically to picture some aspect of the artist's career, or of his relation with the world—his struggles as a student, the dawning and the acknowledgment of his genius, the penetration of its influence into the homes and hearts of men, his triumph on the attainment of the pinnacle of his greatness, his own meek estimation of this and of its derivation, the sorrow of mankind for his loss, and our consolation in the possession in the treasures he has left us—some of the most noble examples of the Weihe der Töne.

Mdlle. Parepa appeared to less advantage than in Auber's scena, in the aria from Robert le Diable, "Idole de ma vie" a second impromptu substitution, in consequence of Signor Belletti's illness. Although possessing immense compass and great volubility of voice, this lady has not the finished execution with which Madame Dorus Gras made this song familiar to London audiences; she sings the last movement quicker, and with less of the pointed distinctness which gave a peculiar charm to her predecessor's rendering. As another honorary member of the Society, Meyerbeer will receive better justice when some other of his compositions are chosen for performances.

Rossini (also one of the Society's honorary members) received his homage in the selection of his overture to La Siège de Corinth, the sparkling brilliancy of which was spiritedly brought out in the glittering performance. And thus closed the concert, which was as creditable to the Society as it was obviously interesting to the large proportion of its fifteen hundred musician members who were present.

MUSICAL FESTIVAL IN DURHAM.

(From a Correspondent.)

Was it, we wonder, a real love of music which drew together, on Tuesday and Wednesday last—under the roof of the New Markets—so many hundreds of the inhabitants of this city and the neighbourhood. There must have been a strong attraction in some direction; for despite the weather, which could not have been scarcely more unfavourable, we have seldom seen in this city audiences so numerous, or who appeared so thoroughly to appreciate the entertainment which had been provided for them. The large building was fitted with heating apparatus, matting, &c., kindly lent by the Dean and Chapter of Durham Cathedral, to ensure the comfort and convenience of the patrons &c., during the festival. The following is a list of patrons, viz:—His Grace the Duke of Cleveland, The Most Noble Frances Anne, Marchioness of Londonderry, The Right Rev. Lord Bishop of Durham, The Earl of Durham, The Earl of Scarborough, Viscount and Viscountess Boyne, Sir William Eden, Bart., Lady Eden, The Solicitor General, The Very Rev. The Dean of Durham, The Ven. Archdeacon Thorpe, The Worshipful The Mayor of Durham, Rev. Canon Edwards, Lady Williamson, Lord A. V. Tempest, M. P., The Right Hon. J. R. Mowbray, M. P., The High Sheriff, H. Fenwick, Esq., M. P., Colonel Stobart, S. Rowlandson, Esq., and E. Peele, Esq., &c. &c. &c.

On Tuesday evening, Judas Maccabæus was performed, and we heard but one opinion—that it was highly creditable to all concerned. The larger portion of the band and chorus were selected from the Bradford Festival Choral Society, including those who had the honour of performing at Buckingham Palace, before Her Majesty, a short time ago, assisted by efficient local talent. The principal singers were Mrs. Sunderland, Miss Hiles, Miss Illingworth, Miss Wheater and Miss Pringle, and Messrs Walker, Bates, Ashton, Lambert, and Heming, of the Durham Cathedral Choir, and Mr. D. Lambert, of St. George's Chapel Royal, Windsor. The band was led by Mr. T. Smith, of York; and Mr. Burton presided at the organ and pianoforte. The organ, which was built for the occasion, is a very fine instrument, and was very effective in the choruses. Mr. Jackson, who has gained some celebrity as a composer of oratorio music, was conductor, and Mr. Kaye, director. The performance of Judas Maccabæus, as we have already said, was highly creditable, to all parties concerned, and gave every satisfaction to a numerous audience. The choruses were given with a breadth, precision, and effect, that would have done credit to a band of more pretensions. Mr. D. Lambert (Simon) sang the recitative and air for the bass, "I feel the deity within"—"Arm, arm, ye brave," with fine effect, and was very successful in "The Lord worketh wonders," the florid runs of which were clear and distinct. Mr. Ashton was much applauded in the recitative and air "'Tis well, my friends"—"Call forth thy powers," and showed the capabilities of his voice in "Sound an alarm." Miss Hiles sang "From mighty kings," and "Shall the lute," with ease and purity of tone. Miss Illingworth and Miss Wheater also sang their parts very judiciously, and Mr. Lambert, senior, gave "Rejoice, O Judah," with much effect. The performance was brought to a close at eleven o'clock, half-an-hour after the time announced, in consequence of the never-to-be-sufficiently-reprobated practice of indiscriminate encoring, which is especially out of place in oratorios.

On Wednesday morning, the Messiah (as usual) attracted an immense assemblage of persons from the adjoining towns and villages, as well as all the principal families of the city and neighbourhood. The choruses were very good, the voices keeping well together, and manifesting the great advantages of practice. We cannot say as much for the band, which was very often at loggerheads, and running a race for supremacy. The brass instruments, on the one hand, loudly claimed almost exclusive attention, and the violins and violoncellos were continually treading on each other's heels. Nevertheless, there is an excuse in the fact that the instrumentalists were not accustomed to play together, and some were out of their element altogether in such music as Handel's chef-d'œuvre. Mr. Ashton sang "Comfort ye" and "Every valley" in excellent style; his best and most successful effort, however, was in "Thou shalt dash them." Mr. Lambert, senior, a general favourite in Durham, was much applauded in "Behold, darkness," the accompaniments of which were played with precision by the band. Of the three young ladies, we may say that they sang their music correctly and in tune; that Miss Wheater has a good voice, that Miss Pickles ought not to attempt a shake till she can execute one, and that Miss Illingworth was passable. Mrs. Sunderland sang the opening recitatives very impressively. Her triumph was in "I know that my Redeemer liveth." Mrs. Sunderland's voice is as clear and resonant as ever, and if there is a change at all in her singing, it is, that she sings with greater fervour. "Why do the nations" was sung in such a manner by Mr. D. Lambert as amply to justify the good opinions entertained of him; he also gave the recitative and air, "Behold I tell you a mystery," and "The trumpet shall sound," which elicited the warm applause of the audience. The organist, Mr. Burton, presided in a talented manner, and Mr. Jackson, the conductor, displayed good tact in keeping together his instrumentalists. The whole performance went off well, and gave great satisfaction to the crowded assemblage.

On Wednesday evening, the building was again visited by a very large and respectable company, when the following miscellaneous programme was gone through:—

PART I.

Madrigal, "Since first I saw your face"	Ford.
Madrigal, "Down in a flowery vale"	Festa.
Song, Mrs. Sunderland, "Why, my harp"	Bellini.
Part-Song, "Awake the starry midnight hour" ...	Mendelssohn.
Song, Mr. D. Lambert, "The village blacksmith" ...	Weiss.
Part-Song, "O, could I with fancy stray"	Hatton.
Part-Song, "The dawn of day"	Reay.
Song, Mrs. Sunderland, "Merrily o'er the snow" ...	Schlesser.
Glee and Chorus, "The sisters of the sea"	Jackson.

PART II.

Part-Song, "The wreath"	Benedict.
Madrigal, "I saw lovely Phillis"	Pearsall.
Song, Mrs. Sunderland, "Captive Greek girl" ...	Hobbs.
Part-Song, "Oh, hills! O, vales of pleasure" ...	Mendelssohn.
Song, Mr. D. Lambert, "I'm a roamer"	Mendelssohn.
Part-Song, "Pack clouds away"	Jackson.
Duet, Miss Illingworth and Miss Pickles, "I heard a voice"	Glover.
Madrigal, "In the merry spring"	Ravenscroft.
Chorus à la Valse (organ accompaniment), "Oh, the flowery month of June"	Jackson.

Finale, "God save the Queen."

The choir in the part-songs elicited frequent encores. In Bellini's song, "Why, my harp," Mrs. Sunderland's singing charmed the audience, and she won an undeniable encore in "The captive Greek girl," with a repetition of which she favoured the audience. Mr. David Lambert sang Weiss's popular song, "The village blacksmith," with great force, and enhanced his reputation with his Durham friends: he was encored. The concert gave great satisfaction, and the Festival, on the whole was, in every point of view, decidedly successful. Great credit is due to Mr. Thomas Kaye, director and manager, and we have no doubt that the endeavours to popularise the performances by adopting a moderate scale of prices has had much to do with the result.

LEICESTER—(From a Correspondent).—A concert of Handel's music was given by the New Philharmonic Society, in connection with Mr. Nicholson's cheap series, on Monday evening. The attendance, considering the badness of the weather, was large. The pieces selected were the Dettingen Te Deum, and portions of the Messiah. The former piece has never been given before in Leicester, and must, therefore, have been new to a large majority of the audience. Mr. Nicholson is deserving of much credit, for bringing such a masterpiece of sacred music within the reach of the whole of a population which has always been distinguished for its musical taste. The execution of the choruses reflected the highest credit on the performers. The chorus, "To Thee, cherubim and seraphim," was finely given. In the quartet and chorus, "The glorious company of the apostles," the vocal parts were sustained by Miss Jackson, Mr. Harrison, Mr. Sills, and Mr. Christian. Mr. Briggs sang the bass solos, and Mr. Oldershaw the solo, "When thou tookest upon Thee." The trio, "Thou sittest at the right hand of God," was well sustained by Messrs. Harrison, Wood, and Christian. The performance of the Te Deum occupied exactly one hour. The selections from the Messiah were "Comfort ye my people," "Every valley," "And the glory of the Lord," "For behold darkness," "The people that walked," the "Wonderful" chorus, "Behold I tell you a mystery," "The trumpet shall sound," and the Hallelujah chorus. Mr. Sansome sang "Comfort ye," and Mr. Briggs, in his allotted parts, fully sustained his reputation; but the precision which characterised the choruses exceeded anything ever heard in Leicester before. At the conclusion of "The trumpet shall sound," in which Mr. Harper fairly excelled himself, the audience instinctively broke out into loud and long applause. The air, however, was very properly not repeated, and the Hallelujah chorus brought the concert to a close, soon after ten o'clock. We should state that the principal instrumentalists were Messrs. Harper, Farmer, Gill, Selby, Weston, Smith, &c., &c. Mr. Nicholson conducted.—Leicester Journal.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

SCOTCHMAN.—The papers have not come to hand.

J. A. J.'s "trite" communication will receive attention next week.

A. W. (Hanover).—Next time.

F. S. C.—Next time.

ARTIST (Brighton).—We believe there are three in all, but will make inquiries.

CHARLES MCKORKELL.—Next time.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*

Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 3RD, 1860.

WE believe it is still to be decided whether it is an advantage or a disadvantage for a composer to have good verses to set to music. Many composers seem to prefer bad ones, but perhaps they have no choice in the matter, for we have very few poets in the present day who know how to write tolerable songs. In "comic operas," we mean those in which singing and speaking occur alternately, the well-known rule, laid down by a writer who had too much wit to conform to it himself, is that which is too stupid to be spoken should be sung; and some of our English librettists seem to have improved upon this, and to have concluded that nothing ought to be sung except what is too stupid to be spoken. According to this precept then, grand operas, in which there is no speaking at all, ought to be stupid from beginning to end, and we confess that when we heard that Lurline was to be a grand opera, we expected to find the libretto one mass of nonsense, more or less melodious. But we reckoned without Mr. Fitzball, who laughs at rules, and who in Lurline has produced a poem which, in many respects, must be considered a masterpiece. We know that Mr. Fitzball's "book" has been sneered at by a large portion of the press, and that a number of critics, without taste or learning, pretend to have discovered faults in it. But nothing is more easy than to point out trifling errors in a work of high imagination, and it is usually found that those critics who are most apt at detecting flaws, are also the most insensible to great beauties. Dryden has expressed this tersely enough in the following couplet:

> "Errors, like straws, upon the surface flow,
> He who would search for pearls must dive below."

In Lurline it is especially necessary to "dive below," because all the most remarkable portion of the opera takes place at the bottom of the Rhine; it is in the "halls of liquid crystal" where Rhineberg dwells, in the "coral cave" of Lurline herself, and in the "opal shells" of her attendant nymphs, that we must look for our poetic pearls.

What first strikes us in the subaquatic scenes of Lurline, is not the novelty of introducing coral, which is a marine product, in the bed of a river, nor any other of those details which have fixed the attention of the undistinguishing critics who contribute to the columns of our daily and weekly contemporaries; it is the fine use Mr. Fitzball makes of supernatural machinery, and the manner in which he has abolished, once and for ever, the limits which formerly separated the different regions of spirits. The learned and ingenious Paracelsus divided the world of spirits into four great kingdoms, corresponding to the four elements into which the ancient philosophers divided the material world. The gnomes inhabited the earth, not as Mr. Fitzball and we, ourselves, inhabit it, but dwelling in the bowels thereof, usually in the heart of a mountain, and with a marked preferrence for volcanoes. The air was peopled by sylphs, elfs, and fairies of all kinds. The water was the home of nixes and undines; and in the fire lived salamanders, whom the superstitious think to have been a species of devils, it being a well-established fact that devils are of so chilly a temperament that they can only exist with comfort in an atmosphere of flames. Some say that Paracelsus invented the salamanders because he was determined, while he was about it, to make his system complete. At all events, the salamander is not the hero of any popular tale or tradition, whereas the spirits of the earth, the air, and the water, appear in innumerable legends; and this has led to another theory, that trees, rivers, and rocks or stones, to all of which the ancient Germans sacrificed, were the true habitations respectively of the fairies or wood-nymphs, the nixes or water-nymphs, and the gnomes or dwarves, and that no other spirits than those just named (the ghosts of humanity excepted) can be considered genuine. The swan-nymphs are usually classed with the nixes, but they alone had the capacity of living in two elements; the delicate little fairies would have been drowned if they had attempted to visit the water-nymphs in the rivers, and suffocated if they had joined the gnomes in the mines, nor could gnomes live with water-nymphs, or water-nymphs with gnomes. Now to Mr. Fitzball belongs the merit of changing all this. He has understood that it is as easy to exist without air in one place as in another, and if a being—say Mr. Corri or any one else—could live in a state of interment, he could live in a state of submersion. Accordingly he makes his gnomes and his water-nymphs reside together at the bottom of the Rhine, where they form a sort of spiritual happy family; and thus the poet enlarges the realms of romance, and shows the way to new and endless combinations of the supernatural.

Mark, too, how Mr. Fitzball has treated the character of Rhineberg; and in the first place observe his name, Rhineberg; berg means mountains; gnomes liked to live at the foot of a mountain, and the gnome Zelieck is always "crouching" at the feet of Rhineberg! Then how human this Rhineberg is. Other poets, when they introduce spirits, make them speak not like people of our own species, but like beings of quite a different order. Rhineberg, however, though a marine monster, is as eloquent about a "father's love" as a parishioner of Marylebone who has just been registering the birth of his first little boy.

Cowley, in a letter to a friend, says: "You tell me that you do not know whether Persius be a great poet, because you do not understand him." If any one says this about Mr. Fitzball, we can only reply that he humanises monsters, and breaks down the barriers which once separated the earth from the water.

Pantagruel was fast asleep, happy as if he had swallowed the wondrous narcotic of Monte Christo, made up after the Old Man of the Mountain's own prescription. For he thought he was Paris passing judgment on the three goddesses, who were exact likenesses of ——, we need not say whom, for we know that our readers are fully capable of filling up the blank. While he was rolling his eyes this way and that, wondering whether M. W., M. T., or L. T.—Juno, Pallas, or Venus—best deserved the prize, the golden apple suddenly slipped from his hands, and began bounding upon the ground like a gutta percha ball, making all the time such an odd noise that the goddesses at last melted away, and the mighty Pantagruel awoke. The lovely forms were gone, but the noise remained; for there was such an unseemly knocking over head, that Pantagruel thought a whole committee of spirit-rappers had hired Panurge's bedroom for the purpose of holding a full board.

So, being in an angry mood, he took his night-lamp and walked up-stairs till he reached the door of the offending apartment.

"Worshippers of the devil!" roared Pantagruel, "why do ye make such an infernal disturbance at this time of night? If you must summon the shades of departed fools, why didn't you furnish them with gloves, that their hard knuckles might sound less loudly upon your accursed table. Deal with all the fiends and ghosts of Tartarus if you will, for I know the bottom of the bottomless pit will not throw up rascals more damnable than yourselves, but, miscreants as ye are! dare not to disturb my slumbers, or there shall be such a rapping of spirits as never was since the fall of Lucifer."

"It's only me, master," squeaked Panurge.

"Respect Lindley Murray, thou slave! if thou carest not for me,—and at least say 'it is only I,'" retorted Pantagruel. "But what the devil art thou doing? I know thou art not the man to call about thee a mob of fleshless, penniless ghosts that could not lend thee a farthing. Let me hope at least that thou art making thy own coffin, and intend to be buried in it to-morrow."

"I am investing my property," squeaked Panurge; "but walk in, an thou wilt, for the door is neither locked nor bolted."

Furiously did Pantagruel open the door, but he soon stood still and gazed with much curiosity, for there was Panurge fastening a thin sixpence to the wall, with a nail as thick as a skewer, which he struck with the end of the poker, looking all the while as grave and as wise as if he were making some singular philosophical experiment. And on other parts of the wall were nailed sundry other coins, all of small value,—silver three-pences, fourpenny-bits, rusty farthings,—with a pewter medal or two for the sake of variety and ornament.

"Expound the meaning of this stupendous foolery," bellowed Pantagruel, but his voice and his countenance were not half so angry as his words, for he was really amused to see the ugly face of Panurge wear an aspect of such exceeding gravity, and anxious to know the purpose of his strange operations.

"Look ye now," said Panurge, "I am acting on the advice of Watts"——

"Dr. Watts?" asked Pantagruel. "Art thou fancying thyself a little busy bee? when thou art infinitely more like a blue-bottle, making much noise to no profit."

"Not Dr. Watts—but Watts Phillips," proceeded Pantagruel, "who hath written a play called Paper Wings, which was brought out to-night at the Adelphi. Now this same play is not only distinguished by remarkably fine acting on the part of Mr. and Mrs. Wigan, but it aboundeth in so many wise precepts, that I can only compare it to the Hitopadesa, which the Gentoo nurse read to me in my infancy."

"Gentoo nurse, ignoramus!" thundered Pantagruel,—"Who talks of Gentoos now-a-days?—Can'st thou not say 'Aya,' like a gentleman, when I have paid for thy admission into the upper gallery of the Haymarket, in order that thou mightest pick up Oriental lore from Tom Taylor's Overland Route?"

"Let me go on," said Panurge, humbly. "The passages in this play, whereof I speak, warned me, through three long acts, against the danger of ordinary investments. The good man and the bad man, the stock-broker and the clerk, the housemaid and the footman, however they might differ in other particulars, all united against banks, shares, and paper representatives of value. And shall I let all this wisdom be poured into my ears for nothing? Not I, forsooth." And so saying he dealt a mighty blow at the nail, that made the whole street echo, and caused the policeman in the neighbouring square to pause in the pursuit of a little boy, who had been taking a sight at him from behind the lamp-post.

"No," continued Panurge; "I will be ruined by beer, I will be brought to starvation by tobacco; yea, oceans shall roll over my treasury, but my money shall never have paper wings, now I am counselled by Watts Phillips. Here it all standeth—it is not much—but, nevertheless, here, I say, it standeth an unimpeachable testimony to the moral utility of the stage, that I trust will be found perfectly satisfactory by the whole bench of bishops."

MDLLE. PICCOLOMINI is said to have been recently married in Dublin to an Italian nobleman.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.—This great establishment opens with Der Freischütz. The novelty of the season will be Félicien David's grand opera, Herculaneum.

THE VOCAL ASSOCIATION will repeat Mendelssohn's psalm, "Hear my prayer, O God!" on Thursday evening, at St. James's Hall, with Mdlle. Parepa and choir of 200 voices. Miss Arabella Goddard will perform Handel's "Harmonious blacksmith," and Benedict's "Where the bee sucks."

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Last evening, Judas Maccabæus was performed, with Miss Parepa, Miss Banks, Miss Laura Baxter, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Montem Smith, and Signor Belletti as principal vocalists. Particulars next week.

MYDDLETON HALL MONDAY EVENING CONCERTS.—At the fourth concert, on Monday last, when the following artistes were engaged:—Mesdames Cooper, Woodward, Paget, and Fanny Reeves; Messrs. G. A. Cooper, G. C. Rowland, and Elliot Galer; pianist, Mrs. Seymour.—Mr. Frank Mori conducted. The first part of the programme comprised selections from the sacred works of Mendelssohn, Haydn, Handel, and Rossini; the second part was miscellaneous. Mr. Elliot Galer sang Handel's "Deeper and deeper still," eliciting a loud encore. He also received the same compliment in a new song by Lutz, "Under the linden tree." Miss Fanny Reeves (a great favourite at these concerts) was encored in Mr. Frank Mori's new ballad, "Where art thou wandering, little child?" Miss Woodward, Miss Paget, and Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Cooper all acquitted themselves to the entire satisfaction of the audience.

HERR MAURICE NABICH, a celebrated soloist on that rather unwieldy and decidedly inconvenient instrument, the trombone, and who first made his appearance some years ago at one of the New Philharmonic Concerts with such eminent success, gave a soirée on Tuesday last, at Willis's Rooms, assisted by Madame Rudersdorff, Mr. and Mrs. Weiss, Herr De Becker, the "Islington German (!) Gesang Verein," Herr Pauer, M. Papé, and Mr. Svensden, with Sig. Randegger and Herr Ganz as conductors. The bénéficiare's performances were an arrangement of the grand septet from Lucia, for trombone and pianoforte, David's concertino, in which, we believe, he made his début, and some other solo, whose title did not transpire. His pure tone and singular command over the instrument elicited universal admiration. Mr. Svensden's flute solo was encored, and all the vocal pieces gave much satisfacton.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

Lurline increases in attraction, and the management has announced its performance nightly up to the end of the season. No curtailments have been deemed necessary, or, perhaps, found practicable. The performance, as a matter of course, is smoother than on the first night, and thereby considerably abbreviated.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

DR. WYLDE has this year again taken the field early, and again taken the initiative in the great classic performances of the season. The director and conductor of the New Philharmonic Concerts has issued his prospectus, but stands pledged to nothing definite. He intimates persistence in his former course of administration, and proclaims non-interference with the open policy of the Musical Society of London, especially that part of it which holds out a protective hand to the British musician. The first concert of the ninth season was given on Monday evening week. The programme was as follows:—

PART I.

Overture (Abenceragen)	Cherubini.
Aria, "Parto, ma tu ben mio"	Mozart.
Concerto in E minor, violin and orchestra	Spohr.
Chorus (Ruins of Athens)	Beethoven.
Romanza ed Aria, "Einst träumte," (Der Freischütz)	Weber.
Symphony in B flat	Beethoven.

PART II.

Concerto in G minor, pianoforte and orchestra ...	Mendelssohn.
Sarabanda e Gavotte, violoncello	Bach.
Madrigal, "In going to my lonely bed" ...	Edwardes, A.D. 1560.
Aria, "Batti, batti"	Mozart.
Overture (Ruler of the Spirits)	Weber.

Conductor—Dr. Wylde.

The only fault in the selection was the introduction of the two concertos, one of which should have been omitted, more particularly as there was another single instrument performance. Mr. H. Blagrove played the violin concerto, and Mdlle. Marie Wiecke the pianoforte. The violin concerto—one of Spohr's noblest contributions to the instrument—was performed by Herr Joseph Joachim at one of the concerts of the Musical Society last year. It was at once correctly and brilliantly executed by Mr. Blagrove. Mdlle. Marie Wiecke played Mendelssohn's concerto with immense vigour, exhibiting something akin to her sister's manner, but wanting the poetical depth and energy of style which have been long recognised as the distinctive characteristics of Madame Clara Schumann's playing. Signor Piatti's execution of Bach's Saraband and Gavotte, was faultless.

The band has not deteriorated—that is a great matter. Beethoven's symphony—the irresistible No. 4—was splendidly executed, and called forth enthusiastic plaudits from the audience. The overtures were both finely played, and both welcome for different reasons, one as a new, the other as an old acquaintance.

Dr. Wylde, who is conducting with more and more intelligence and decision, comes forward again with a capital choir. The choral performances have constituted from the commencement an eminent attraction at the New Philharmonic Concerts. The two pieces given on Monday night went admirably, especially the wonderfully dramatic chorus from the Ruins of Athens. Edwardes' madrigal was encored.

Mdlle. Parepa and Madame Rudersdorff were the solo vocalists. The last-named lady appeared to supply the place of Signor Belletti, who was prevented from attending by illness, and gave both her songs with great power and great expression. The clarinet obbligato in Mozart's air was played by M. Pape; and the viola obbligato to the romanza from Der Freischütz, by Mr. R. Blagrove. Few are more successful than Madame Rudersdorff in the interpretation of strong emotions; and this is the reason why she is better than any one else we have heard in this country in the finale from Mendelssohn's unfinished opera, Lorely. Mdlle. Parepa is making ground fast with the public. She is a brilliant bravura singer, and has a clear penetrating soprano voice, with plenty of power. She came late having to sing in Sonnambula at Covent Garden, but not too late to achieve a triumph, which she did in a most unmistakable manner, both her songs being applauded with enthusiasm.

The attendance was very large, and Dr. Wylde was honoured at the beginning and at the end with the customary ovations.

CRYSTAL PALACE.

Two concerts have been given since we last wrote about musical doings at the Crystal. One took place on Saturday, the 18th ultimo, and was signalised by the first appearance this season of Mdlle. Piccolomini, whose attractive power appears as great as ever. Nearly five thousand people went out on a raw uncomfortable day, to hear the popular little lady warble some of her pet tunes. The new music hall was besieged at every point of access, and hundreds were content to remain standing during the entire performance, within reach of the faintest echo of the singer's voice. Mdlle. Piccolomini sang six times, and was encored four, all her solos being repeated. She gave "Vedrai carino;" a new valse "Il bacis," written for her by Signor Arditi; the brindisi from La Traviata; the duet "La ci darem," with Signor Aldighieri; the duet, "Sulla tomba" (Lucia), with Signor Belart; and Martini's laughing trio, "Vadasi via di qua," with Signor Belart and Aldighieri. Signor Belart, in addition, sang the romanza "Maria Sperando" from the Figlia, and the air "Ecco ridente" from the Barbiere." The first was charming, the latter wanted more breadth and power of voice. Signor Aldighieri does not overflow with humour. His "Largo al factotum" is not humorous. The band, under the direction of Signor Arditi, played the overture to Martha; and Signor Giraldoni played a fantasia on the contra-basso.

At the concert last Saturday, Mdlle. Parepa, who had not appeared at the Crystal Palace since she was a member of Mr. Gye's Italian troupe, was the vocal star. She sang a scena by Benedict, and the "Shadow song," from Dinorah, both with great brilliancy. The latter was encored, and Mdlle. Parepa repeated the coda. Miss Lascelles sang the contralto song from Dinorah, "Fanciulle che il core," and joined Mdlle. Parepa in Mendelssohn's two part-songs, "I would that my love" and "May Bells," both of which were taken too slowly.

Miss Lascelles was announced to sing Balfe's "Reaper and the Flowers," but Mr. Manns apologised for the lady, who was suffering from hoarseness. The symphony was Haydn's in G, one of the best. The minuetto contains as bold and extraordinary syncopation as anything which Beethoven has written, and the work generally has less of the antique about it than many of the composer's orchestral compositions of this class. It was well played, as, indeed, were the accompaniments throughout the programme. The brothers Louis and Adolph Ries (violin and pianoforte) joined in a duet by Wolff and Vieuxtemps on Don Giovanni, and each played the first movement of a concerto, that for the pianoforte by Ferdinand Ries, and that for the violin by Félicien David. M. Hector Berlioz's fanciful "Carnaval Romain" overture brought the concert to a conclusion, to quote a Sunday contemporary, with due clangour.

To-day, Mendelssohn's operetta, Son and Stranger, will be performed entire.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—The second concert took place on Thursday evening week, when, notwithstanding the counter-attraction at Covent Garden—it being the first night of Mr. Wallace's new opera—St. Martin's Hall was crowded in every part. The selection comprised—madrigal (Dowland), "Fine knacks for ladies;" part-song (S. Reay), "The clouds that wrap the setting sun;" madrigal (Weelkes), "Welcome, sweet pleasure;" madrigal (T. Morley), "What saith my dainty darling;" part-songs, for small voices, "Evening" (Henry Leslie), and "The arrow and the song (Macfarren); solo and chorus (Purcell), "Come, if you dare;" madrigal (G. Croce), "Cynthia, thy song and chaunting;" glee (W. Horsley), "See the chariot at hand;" madrigal (Wilbye), "Stay, Corydon;" part-song (Benedict), "Home, sweet home;" glee (J. Elliott), "The bee, when varying flowers are nigh;" part-song (F. Mori), "Welcome, heavenly peace;" part-song, for male voices (Mendelssohn), "Eastern drinking song;" cradle-song (H. Smart), "Lullaby, the winds are singing;" and madrigal (Saville), "The Waits." A more admirable selection Mr. Leslie never gave at any former concert. Every piece was applauded, and encores were awarded to Weelkes' fine madrigal, "Welcome, sweet pleasure;" to Mr. Leslie's part-song for male voices; to Horsley's glee, "See, the chariot at hand;" to Mr. Benedict's part-song, "Home, sweet home;" and to Elliott's glee. Mr. Macfarren's part-song, "The arrow and the song"—one of the most beautiful and masterly things in the selection—was loudly applauded, and might have been repeated without any strain on the inclinations of the audience. Several of the pieces were given for the first time by the choir, whose performance was entitled to the highest praise in almost every instance. In the course of the first part Mr. J. C. Ward executed Spohr's fugue in C on the organ.

MR. RANSFORD'S ANNUAL CONCERT.—That old favourite of the public, Mr. Ransford, gave his annual concert on Tuesday evening, at St. James's Hall, to one of the most crowded audiences of the season. It was his first appearance in public since the severe accident which so disabled him from giving his nautical entertainment, announced some time back under the title of "The Tales of the Sea." The bénéficiaire sang, with great spirit, Dibdin's "Tom Tough," with other of his popular ballads, in his usual vigorous and manly style, and, with his daughter, the duet, "Oh, tell me, gentle stranger," which was loudly encored. Mr. and Mrs. Weiss sang solos each, and a duet. Miss M. Collins gave the ballad of "Tripping down the lane." Miss Ransford afforded her admirers an opportunity of hearing her sweet and powerful voice in an Italian aria, and one or two English songs. Miss Palmer, Miss Leffler, Mad. Vinning, Miss Laura Baxter, with several other singers, likewise gave specimens of their vocal abilities. Miss Arabella Goddard performed Benedict's fantasia, "Where the bee sucks," with brilliant success. She afterwards played a new and brilliant fantasia, by Ascher, on the "Shadow song" from Dinorah, which was one of the gems of the concert. It was unanimously encored. Mr. Viotti Collins gave "La Clochette" in first-rate style. Messrs. Lazarus on the clarinet; Pratten, on the flute; and Blagrove, on the concertina, executed solos. A portion of the band of the Coldstream Guards, under the direction of Mr. C. Godfrey, performed several popular morceaux. The concert afforded great satisfaction to Mr. Ransford's numerous patrons.

LONDON QUINTET UNION.—This new society, under the direction of Mr. Willy, gave the first of a series of four concerts, at St. Martin's Hall, on Tuesday evening. The members of the Union comprise, in addition to Mr. Willy, Mr. Westlake (second violin), Mr. Webb (tenor), Mr. Pettit (violoncello), Mr. Reynolds (contra-basso), and Mr. Maycock (clarinet). The instrumental part of the programme of Tuesday's concert included two quintets by Onslow—A minor, Op. 34, and D, Op. 18; Mozart's pianoforte quartet in E flat; and Weber's clarinet quintet in B flat. One of the quintets of Onslow might have advantageously made way for Beethoven, Spohr, or Mendelssohn. Mr. Willy, probably, has some special object in view which inclines him to favour this semi-Gallic composer. We infer this, not merely from the two quintets of Onslow given at the first concert, but from two others being announced for the next. "Verily," as a morning contemporary observes, in an execrable pun, "this favour shown to Onslow is not the way for the London Quintet Union to get 'on fast.'" Mr. Willy and his coadjutors did their utmost to recommend them to the hearers. There was applause certainly, but the applause was bestowed rather on the excellent playing than on the music. Weber's quartet is brilliantly written for the clarinet, but by no means an inspiration. Mr. Maycock played capitally, exhibiting fine execution and a clear sound tone. Mozart's quartet was the instrumental gem of the evening, and executed à merveille by Miss Arabella Goddard, Messrs. Willy, Webb, and Pettit. The last movement elicited a round of applause. Miss Goddard also performed Benedict's sparkling and admirably effective fantasia, "Where the bee sucks," with wonderful brilliancy and delicacy, and was honoured with a tumultuous recall. The vocal music, in consequence of the sudden indisposition of Miss Lascelles, was restricted to two songs by Mr. Sims Reeves, "Adelaida," and "The last rose of summer," both of which he sang with consummate beauty of voice, and a taste and expression entirely his own. He was encored in both, but only returned to the platform to bow. We doubt if we ever heard Mr. Sims Reeves sing "Adelaida" more admirably. Miss Goddard accompanied him on the pianoforte, and by her expressive and perfect playing added materially to the effect. It was, indeed, a duet between two consummate singers. Mr. Lindsay Sloper accompanied Mr. Reeves in the Irish song, how well we need hardly say. The hall was well attended.

Mr. Howard Glover's Concert.—Mr. Howard Glover's Annual Morning Concert at Drury-Lane Theatre (crowded to the roof) was almost as long as the speech in which the Chancellor of the Exchequer unfolded, one by one, the items of his budget for 1860; but, as in the instance of that remarkable and eloquent address, the many things to be said were perfectly well said, and, moreover, as in Mr. Glover's case there was no "opposition," his success was unequivocal. The programme comprised upwards of 40 pieces, in the elucidation of which the majority of the musical talent now in London was called into request. To attempt anything like a description of such an entertainment (which required no fewer than four eminent conductors—Messrs. Benedict, Lindsay Sloper, F. Berger, and Alfred Mellon, besides Mr. Glover himself, to direct) would be out of the question. Enough that the regularity and skilful management which invariably distinguish these enormous musical "pasticcios" were as apparent as at former anniversaries. The only disappointment experienced was in the unavoidable absence, on account of indisposition, of Signor Belletti. We cannot even record the names af the singers, with Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Weiss, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper at the head of the head of the gentlemen, and Madlle. Parepa, Madame Rudersdorff, and Miss Palmer (our most rising "contralto") at the head of the ladies, much less glance, however rapidly, at the innumerable pieces set down for them. In addition to the plaintive and beautiful song to Shelley's stanza, "I arise from dreams of thee" (Mr. Sims Reeves), and two graceful and thoroughly charming new ballads, "A sweet good night," and "The violet" (Madame Rudersdorff), from the pen of the concert giver, the programme included his dramatic and vigorous overture to Comala. An efficient band being thus at disposal, one of Haydn's genial and masterly symphonies was also put down. There was several instrumental displays, among the rest a solo on the violin by Herr Molique, and another on the clarinet by Mr. Lazarus. Especial mention, however, is due to Mr. Glover's youthful and very clever pupil, Miss Emma Green, who, in Beethoven's first (and too much neglected) pianoforte concerto in C (with a masterly cadenza composed expressly for her by her instructor), exhibited a marked advance both in style and execution. Miss Green's talent is worth serious cultivation.

Death of Mr. Haydn Corri.—With regret we announce the demise, on Saturday, the 12th ult., of the above well-known and clever artiste, both as a composer and teacher of music, in Dublin, where he had been settled for many years. Mr. Corri was son of the celebrated Domenichino Corri, who composed the once popular opera of The Travellers, in which the elder Braham, in days of yore, used to excite the utmost enthusiasm by his splendid singing of "He was famed for deeds of arms," and was brother-in-law of Dussek. Mr. Haydn Corri held the responsible post of organist to the Cathedral in Dublin, Great Marlborough-street, for years, where many of his sacred works were performed. Cherubini was said, with what truth we will not vouch, to have intrusted Mr. H. Corri to arrange for the organ from the great score for orchestra, his famous Mass in D, composed for the Coronation of Charles the Tenth, and to supply an additional voice part, which he did to his entire satisfaction. Mr. Corri has left a numerous family, some of them occupying important positions in the musical world. His talented sons, Henry, Pat, and Master Corri, are well known to the theatrical and musical world. Mr. Corri died at the advanced age of seventy-five. He was beloved and respected by his numerous friends and pupils, who have heard of his death with deep regret.

Why is Mrs. Howard Paul like a twenty pound note? Because she is the "double" of a "tenor."—Punch.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, February 29th.

If some old Roman had been thrown into a lethargic state for a few centuries, like the Sleeping Beauty, and by the stroke of some magician's wand suddenly transported to Paris, were he to wake up in one or other of the principal lyrical theatres, his astonishment would not be as great as we might expect; for he would find himself surrounded with all the splendour of the pagan ages. At the Théâtre-Lyrique alone, he could one night descend with Orpheus into the dark regions of the lower world, and wander with him in search of his Eurydice; and the next night he could, in the same Théâtre-Lyrique, sup, in company with Philémon and Baucis, in their humble cot, with the great chief of the Olympian deities. The libretto of M. Charles Gounod's new opera is written by MM. Jules Barbier and Michel Carré. It is in three acts. Instead of a grand overture there is a simple introduction, worthier of a classical subject and in accord with the subdued tone of the first act, the more striking and brilliant efforts of the composer coming in the later parts of the opera. This introduction is a pastoral, in F, and on its last notes, the curtain rising, we find ourselves in the cottage of Philémon and Baucis, which, poor as it looks, is rendered a pleasant spot by the happiness of the good old couple. In a duet these happy beings celebrate their love, which has resisted time and poverty and age. While they are softly singing this, sounds of quite a different kind are heard in the distance. The other inhabitants of the village, who have lost all fear of the gods, are giving themselves up to their impious saturnalia. The effect of this ensemble is striking. Soon, however, the rising sounds of a tempest are heard, and while the storm is raging round the little cottage, two strangers knock at the door, asking shelter. Philémon, who is for the moment alone, receives them. These two strangers are Jupiter and Vulcain. There is here a very good trio, after which Vulcain sings a few stanzas with a very characteristic accompaniment, to represent the strokes of a hammer on the anvil. The air sung by Jupiter which next follows, "Allons, Vulcain," is also good. Baucis makes her appearance, and, after a long speech, sings in a manner that proves she can sing as well as she talks. But as Vulcain says, "Supper, not singing, is now the object," and to supper they accordingly go, when Jupiter, by changing their humble fare into a more recherché repast, declares himself, and promises to reward Philémon and Baucis for their virtue and piety, but, wishing them to avoid seeing the vengeance he intends taking on the impious villagers, he throws them into a deep sleep, and a melange of horns, arpeggios on the harp, and the tremolo of the violins, is a pleasing termination to the first act.

The second represents the people of Sybarites reclining in gala attire, under the portico of the Temple of Cybele. Here the composer strives to assume all the passion and fire such a scene requires. The stanzas sung by Madlle. Sax (a bacchante), "C'est le vin," are not, however, worthy of the rest of the score. In the midst of the dances to which they are giving themselves up, Vulcain appears, and upbraids them. They wish to drive away this bird of ill-omen, when Jupiter appears, and, in a grand and dramatic finale, destroys this sacreligious people. All this time Philémon and Baucis have been sleeping, and, in the third act, the curtain rising to the refrain of the pastoral in the first act, Baucis is discovered in all the splendour of youth and beauty, and in festive attire. Still in a trance, starting up, she seeks Philémon, to whom his youth and good looks have also been restored. Hardly knowing each other at first, the truth then breaks on them, but for a moment their felicity threatens to be troubled, for Jupiter, like Pygmalion, is very nearly falling in love with his own work. Baucis, however, rather than listen to any other voice than Philémon's, implores her gray hairs and wrinkled features may be restored to her. Jupiter, thereupon, like a gentlemanly deity, withdraws his suit, but leaves the happy pair in the enjoyment of their renewed youth. Battaille performed the part of Jupiter, M. Froment that of Philémon, and Madame Miolan-Carvalho that of Baucis, and M. Balanqué Vulcain.

A slight accident occurred on the first night: a bouquet, thrown to Madame Carvalho, fell on the foot-lights and took fire; after a few minutes' suspense, a fireman advanced, and bore the bouquet off to a watery doom.

The concerts are going on still. The one given by Kruger on the 10th of February, in the new salons of Erard, was one of the best. Kruger played the grand sonata (Op. 57) of Beethoven, and the duet in D major of Mendelssohn, with the violoncellist, Rignault. He also gave "La chanson du chasseur," "Guitare et marche nocturne." Kruger had just returned from Stutgardt, were he had gone to be present at a festival given in honour of his father, on the occasion of the latter's completing the fiftieth year of his membership of the Chapel-Royal. The violinist, M. Servais, has just arrived here (Paris); he proposes making some stay here. The third concert of the Société des Concerts gave the symphony in E flat of Félicien David, the benediction of the flags from the Siège de Corinthe, and fragments from the ballet of Prométhée, the Berceuse de Cherubini, the Symphony in D of Beethoven completed the programme. The Société de Jeunes Artistes, under the direction of M. Pas de Loup, pursues its course with success. At their third concert some fragments, never played before, of Meyerbeer's opera of Struensée were given; the "Revolte des Gardes" and "Le bal et l'arrestation" were the titles of these pieces; the overture was also given, but it is well known here. The rest of the concert was equally well composed. To-morrow a concert that is looked forward to with the greatest interest will be given in the salons of the Louvre, M. and Mad. Sainton (late Miss Dolby) being the great attraction. Mad. Pleyel will perform on the 7th. M. Jacques Bauer also gives a concert to-morrow at the Salle Erard. A banquet was given the other day at the Café Véfour, at which many English and French writers assisted. M. Delaporte presided. He is the clever director of the concerts of the French Orpheonists. The object of the banquet was to publish the project that has been decided on, and which will be accomplished in the month of June. At that period 3,000 French Orpheonists will go to England to renew at the Crystal Palace the festival held by them in Paris in 1859. Twelve steamers will convey these artists over. Every one seems to think the company of the Crystal Palace have behaved in the most liberal manner. 200,000 francs is the sum said to have been given to defray the expenses. The Orpheonists stay one week in England, and they will give three concerts. This enterprise has been welcomed in the warmest manner here, and will doubtless prove successful. These are some of the choruses that will be sung: "Le Septuor des Huguenots," "Le Cimbres et Teutons," "Le Psaume de Marcello," "Le Veni Creator," "La Retraite, le Départ des Chasseurs," "Le Chant des Montagnards," and "Le Chœur des Prêtres des Mystères d'Isis." Paris has been making up this last week for the tranquillity of the winter; three masked balls, one at Colonel Fleury's, one at M. Fould's, and one at the Comte Tascher de la Pagerie's, have all been remarkable for their elegance and brilliancy. The Emperor and Empress, of course, were at them, though masked as the others. A great French artist has just died at Genoa—Raffet—as much beloved for his amiable character as admired for his talent; his two most remarkable paintings are, "La Revue passée aux Champs Elysées," and the "Dernière charge des lanciers rouges à Waterloo." An Indian instrument, called "The Xilo," composed of wood and straw, has been performed on with success by M. Henri Spira. He played national airs on it, and also the Carnaval de Venise.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

LURLINE.—WALLACE'S NEW GRAND OPERA for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets, by W. H. Calcott; also Fantasias and Rondos from "Lurline" by Wallace, Favarger, Osborne, and other eminent composers. Valses and Quadrilles from "Lurline."
Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."—Reverie, for the pianoforte, on the above popular Song, by R. Andrews, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC PERRY.

			s.	d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to		Miss Baron	3	0
The Wardour Masurka	,,	Lord Arundell	4	0
The Vancouver Quadrille	,,	T. B. Chilty, Esq.	3	0
The Valentia Polka	,,	George Griffiths, Esq.	3	0
The Augusta Masurka	,,	Miss C. A. Thistlewayte	2	6
The Avondale Schottische	,,	Miss Barron	2	0
The Helena Polkas	,,	The Misses Northey	3	0
The Pauline Valses	,,	The Misses Warner	3	0
The Castellon Polka	,,	Miss Fanny Hutchinson	2	0
The Gotham Polka	,,	Miss Mary Lorymer	2	0
The Promenade Polkas	,,	Miss Kirwan	2	0
The Salopian Quadrilles	,,	Miss Brown.	3	0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 33	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dediée à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dediée à Edouard Roeckel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby .. 3 0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

DONALD DUNCAN'S
PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,
ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 1s postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

MUSICAL DIRECTORY, REGISTER & ALMANAC FOR 1860.—Contents: Almanac with musical data; list of musical societies throughout the kingdom; musical transactions of the past year; names and addresses of professors, music-sellers and instrument makers; and list of music published between the 30th November, 1858, and 30th November, 1859. Price 1s. 6d.; per post, 1s. 8d. Publishers: Rudall, Rose, Carte and Co., 20, Charing Cross, S.W.; and Keith, Prowse and Co., 48, Cheapside, E.C.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

MARCH OF THE VOLUNTEER RIFLES. By W. VINCENT WALLACE. Inscribed to Lieut.-Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay, commanding the St. George's Rifles (11th Middlesex). 3s.

HAMILTON'S DICTIONARY OF 3,500 MUSICAL TERMS. Edited by JOHN BISHOP. 60th Edition, carefully revised, 1s. "There are many hundreds of words in this Dictionary that I cannot find in others which cost me ten times more money; and what is more to the purpose, they are words or terms which are daily used in the higher musical circles."—Cheltenham Looker-on.

CLARKE'S CATECHISM OF THE RUDIMENTS OF MUSIC, 60th Edition, 1s.; Clarke's Alphabet of Music, 6d.; Hamilton's Modern Instructions for the Pianoforte, enlarged and fingered by Czerny, 249th Edition, 4s.; Hamilton's Modern Instructions for Singing, 15th Edition, 5s.

THE DREAM OF THE WANDERER. By BRINLEY RICHARDS. Romance for Piano. 2s. 6d. "A very graceful and striking melody, the work of a true musician."—Preston Guardian.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "CHIME AGAIN, BEAUTIFUL BELLS." As a piano duet, 3s.; piano solo, 2s. 6d.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' "WARBLINGS AT EVE." Arranged as a duet for two performers, on one pianoforte, by the same popular composer, 3s.; piano solo, 2s. 6d.

London: ROBERT COCKS and CO., Publishers to Her Most Gracious Majesty the Queen; and of all music-sellers.

CAUTION TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS.—"Thou art so near, and yet so far," Song, composed by Alexander Reichardt.—Notice is hereby given, that the above-named song is copyright of Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co., and that legal proceedings will be taken against all persons infringing the same. The only publishers whose names and addresses have been printed on the title-page of the said song, by Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co., are Messrs. Boosey and Son, Cramer and Co., and Chappell and Co.

London: 244, Regent-street, March 1, 1860.

BOOSEY AND SONS' LIST OF POPULAR SONGS OF THE
PRESENT SEASON,
BY FAVOURITE COMPOSERS.

		s.	d.
1.	"Bird of Song," by Hatton	2	0
2.	"Margaretta," by Balfe	2	6
3.	"Why don't he tell me so," by Berger	2	0
4.	"Nelly Gray," by Balfe	2	6
5.	"Sister Mary," By Meyerbeer	2	0
6.	"O tender shadow," by Meyerbeer	3	0
7.	"You chide me for loving," by Berger	2	0
8.	"Sweetheart," by Balfe	2	0
9.	"Don't come teasing me," by Hatton	2	0
10.	"It was fifty years ago," by Hatton	2	0
11.	"Sweet Katie," by Callcott	2	0
12.	"When you and I were young," by G. B. Allen	2	0
13.	"Many a time and oft," by Duggan	2	6
14.	"Song of love and death," by Balfe	2	0
15.	"O live or let me die," by Meyerbeer	2	0
16.	"Swifter than the swallow's flight," by Berger	2	0
17.	"The maid I love hath many a grace," by Hatton	2	0
18.	"Thou art so near," by Reichardt	3	0

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

REICHARDT'S
CELEBRATED SONG,
"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."
Sung with immense success by the Composer,
Price 3s.
Also arranged for the Pianoforte, by
JOSEPH ASCHER,
Price 3s.
And arranged as a Valse—"Beloved Star," by
LAURENT,
Price 4s.

BOOSEY & SONS, Holles-street.

Published this Day. Price 2s. 6d.
AN EASY AND POPULAR EDITION OF
"O TENDER SHADOW,"
SONG,
FROM MEYERBEER'S DINORAH.
Adapted for the use of amateurs unable to accomplish all the passages in the original edition, by M. Jules de Glimes. With English and Italian words, price 2s. 6d.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Lately published,
THREE NEW SONGS
BY
EMILE BERGER.
Price 2s. each.
SWIFTER THAN THE SWALLOWS' FLIGHT.
YOU CHIDE ME FOR LOVING.
WHY DON'T HE TELL ME SO.
From the Daily News.
"M. Emile Berger is evidently a composer of merit. His melodies are flowing, graceful, and embellished by musician-like accompaniments."

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

In Cloth Boards, price 8s.
A COMPLETE EDITION OF
GLUCK'S OPERA,
IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS,
FOR
VOICE AND PIANOFORTE,
WITH ENGLISH AND FRENCH WORDS.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW CATALOGUES.
Boosey and Sons beg to announce that they have just published a New and General Catalogue of their Publications; also, a New Non-Copyright Catalogue, and a Catalogue of Cheap Editions and Bound Works. These Catalogues, with Boosey and Sons' new Prospectus of Trade Terms, will enable the Trade and Profession to see at a glance the discount allowed on all Messrs. Boosey's publications.
Holles-street, 20 Jan., 1860.

GOLLMICK—DRIPPING WELL, Morceaux Fantastique for the pianoforte. Third Edition, price 3s. One of the most popular original pieces of the day. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

"THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A FRESHENING BREEZE," new song by Alberto Randegger, composed for and sung with the greatest success by Mr. Thomas, when on his last tour, and always encored. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

Now Ready (March), Part I., Price One Shilling,
(To be published in Eight Monthly Parts)
A COMPLETE EDITION
OF
MEYERBEER'S CELEBRATED OPERA, DINORAH,
FOR Voice & Pianoforte,
WITH ENGLISH AND ITALIAN WORDS,
THE FORMER BY
H. F. CHORLEY.
As Performed at the Royal English Opera, Covent Garden.

Subscribers' Names received by all Musicsellers and the Publishers,
BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES-STREET, LONDON.

NEW EDITION OF THE BEST AND MOST POPULAR OVERTURES,
FOR LARGE AND SMALL ORCHESTRA.

Messrs. BOOSEY and SONS beg to announce that they will publish, in twelve monthly numbers (commencing April 1st, 1860) an entirely New Edition of the following Twelve Popular Overtures, arranged expressly for Large and Small Orchestra, by M. LAMOTTE, the celebrated composer and conductor. Each Overture will be 8s. for full orchestra, and 5s. for septet. Subscribers to the Series will receive the same post-free, at half these prices by forwarding their names to the Publishers in advance. Those Subscribers who have not an account with the Firm are requested to forward a remittance for the Twelve Overtures in advance, or a reference to a friend in London.

1860.
No. 1. (April) CROWN DIAMONDS .. .. .. Auber.
,, 2. (May) ZAMPA.. .. .. Herold.
,, 3. (June) ZANETTA .. .. Auber.
,, 4. (July) OBERON .. .. Weber.
,, 5. (August) FRA DIAVOLO .. .. Auber.
,, 6. (September) DER FREISCHUTZ .. .. Weber.
,, 7. (October) DOMINO NOIR .. .. Auber.
,, 8. (November) GAZZA LADRA .. .. Rossini.
,, 9. (December) DAME BLANCHE .. .. Boieldieu.
1861.
No. 10. (January) MASANIELLO .. .. Auber.
,, 11. (February) PART DU DIABLE.. .. .. .. Auber.
,, 12. (March) GUILLAUME TELL.. .. .. .. Rossini.

TWO NEW SHILLING BOOKS FOR THE VIOLIN.

DE BERIOT'S SEVEN AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN.—(Nos. 1 to 7.) complete with all the variations in one book. Price 1s.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN; by Strauss, Lanner, and Labitsky. Price 1s.

These two works form the last addition to BOOSEY AND SON'S Shilling Series of Publications for the Violin.

LURLINE.—The following are the favourite pieces in WALLACE'S new and successful Opera, LURLINE;—"Under a spreading coral," "Take this cup of sparkling wine," "Flow on, oh, silver Rhine," "When the night winds," "Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer," sung by Miss Pyne; "Gentle troubadour," sung by Miss Pilling; "Our barque in moonlight beaming," "Sweet form that on my dreamy gaze," "The chimes of home," sung by Mr. Harrison; "A Father's love," "Love, transient passion," sung by Mr. Santley.
Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

NEW SONGS

PUBLISHED BY

MESSRS. DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.

"OH! TAKE ME TO THY HEART AGAIN!"

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE.

Price 2s.

Oh! take me to thy heart again!
I never more will grieve thee:
All joys are fled and hope is dead
If I indeed must leave thee.
Forgive the wild and angry words
This wayward heart hath spoken;
I did not dream those cherished chords
So lightly could be broken.
Oh! take me to thy heart again.

I think how very sad and lone
This life would be without thee;
For all the joys my heart hath known
Are closely twined around thee.
Oh! teach me to subdue the pride
That wounded thee so blindly;
And be once more the gentle guide
Who smiled on me so kindly.
Then take me to thy heart again.

"THE SULIOTE WAR SONG,"

Sung by Mr. SANTLEY.

Composed by BRINLEY RICHARDS.

Price 3s.

Rouse ye Palikari,
Men of Suliote, rouse ye,
See on yonder mountain's brow,
Glows the beacon light!
Warlike songs are singing,—
While the trumpets ringing
Call the valiant Palikari,
To the coming Fight.

What though foes surround us,
Though their chains have bound us,
We will live as freemen live,
Or die as warriors die.
Come with weapons gleaming—
Come with banners streaming,
Raise your glorious battle cry,
Suliote shall be free.

"SYMPATHY,"

POETRY BY ELLIS BELL,

COMPOSED BY E. AGUILAR,

Price 2s.

There should be no despair for you,
While nightly stars are burning;
While evening pours its silent dew,
And sunshine gilds the morning.

There should be no despair, though tears
May flow down like a river:
Are not the best-beloved of years
Around your heart for ever.

They weep, you weep, it must be so;
Winds sigh, as you are sighing,
And winter sheds its grief in snow,
Where autumn's leaves are lying.

Yet, these revive, and from their fate,
Your fate cannot be parted;
Then, journey on, if not elate,
Still, never broken hearted.

"AWAKE LITTLE PILGRIM."

Poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. DRUMMOND.

Composed by MAURICE COBHAM.

Price 2s. 6d.

Awake, little pilgrim, the day is at hand,
The rays of the morning appear on the land;
O, haste with thy burden to life's narrow gate,
Ere the night shadows falling proclaim thee too late

Knock, little pilgrim, it shall not be vain,
Thy feeble entreaties admittance shall gain;
Thy Saviour is waiting to bid thee God speed,
He turns none away from his door in their need.

"THE DEW-DROP AND THE ROSE."

Poetry by ISABELLA HAMPTON.

Composed by G. A. OSBORNE. Price 2s. 6d.

A dew-drop reclined on a beautiful rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love,
When near that sweet flower, to seek soft repose,
A sunbeam fell down from above!

The dew-drop instinctively felt there had come
A rival—his loved one to prove,
A shelter he sought next the heart of the rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love.

Still nearer came that sunbeam gay,
As he called the rose his bride,
Those words the dew-drop heard him say,
Then drooped his head and died.

"THE CHRISTMAS ROSE."

Poetry by M. A. STODART.

Composed by LOVELL PHILLIPS. Price 2s. 6d.

"The Christmas Rose! The Christmas Rose!
'Mid wintry frost and snow it blows;
And opes its portals pure and fair,
When winds have swept the gay parterre.
Just like a true and constant friend,
Whose faith no storms of life can bend;
Not the mere friend of summer day,
But firm when joy hath passed away.

This flower is like the joys that shine,
In sorrow's hour and life's decline,
When youth hath passed and pleasure flown,
And sad the spirit sighs alone;
Then marvel not that thus I twine
My thoughts around this gift of thine,
And muse on hopes and joys that last,
And bloom through life's most piercing blast."

"I'M NOT IN LOVE, REMEMBER."

Poetry by JESSICA RANKIN.

Composed by M. W. BALFE. Price 2s.

Prithee tell me, gentle air,
Why my heart is full of care,
And why no pleasures charm me?
It is not Love torments me so:
I scorn the wily urchin's bow,
His arrows cannot harm me!

I try to sing—my voice is sad!
I sleep! but then 'tis just as bad—
Such gloomy things I dream on!
Can you not tell? nor you? nor you?
Oh then I know not what to do
To charm away the demon.

I sometimes think, if "I know who"
Were here, he'd tell me what to do,
To bid the demon slumber!
Could I but hear his voice again,
I'm sure 'twould cheer my heart—but then
"I'm not in love, remember!"
I'm not in love, remember.

"ARE THEY MEANT BUT TO DECEIVE ME."

Poetry from the Polish.

Composed by A. REICHARDT. Price 2s. 6d.

Are they meant but to deceive me,
Those fond words that tell of love
Ah! for ever it would grieve me
If their falsehood I should prove.
Though my heart would trust them gladly,
Though belief, alone, is bliss,
Yet I still must ponder sadly,
Ah! what bitter pain is this.

All my inmost soul concealing,
Shall I sternly answer "No?"
Or each secret wish revealing
Shall my words unfettered flow.
Ever lingering, never speaking,
Here my thoughts shall I express
For my heart if you are seeking,
Strive to find it by a guess.

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON & CO.,
(DÉPOT GÉNÉRAL DE LA MAISON BRANDUS DE PARIS),
244, REGENT STREET, CORNER OF LITTLE ARGYLL STREET.

WORKS EDITED BY J. W. DAVISON.

1.

In one volume, price 4s., or bound in cloth, 6s. 6d., large size,

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA SONATA,

AND

WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA SONATA,

With Biographical and Critical Introductions, by

J. W. DAVISON.

(In a few days.)

2.

In stiff sides, price 8s., or bound in cloth, 10s. 6d., large size,

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

(COMPLETE)

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Critical Preface, and Portrait of Chopin.

3.

In stiff sides, price 6s., or bound in cloth, 8s. 6d., large size,

(In a few days),

MENDELSSOHN'S

SONGS WITHOUT WORDS,

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Descriptive and Critical Preface and Portrait of Mendelssohn.

 Another Edition of this Work is published, in large 4to, cloth, gilt, price 7s. 6d.

4.

In two volumes, 10s. 6d. each, or bound in cloth, price 13s. each, large size,

BEETHOVEN'S

PIANOFORTE SONATAS,

(COMPLETE)

Edited by J. W. DAVISON,

With Descriptive and Critical Introductions, and Portrait of Beethoven.

 Another Edition of this Work is also published, in two volumes, large 4to, cloth, gilt, price 10s. 6d. each; uniform with Mendelssohn's Songs Without Words.

[London]: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW PUBLICATIONS.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

New and Complete Edition for the Pianoforte,

BY

HENRY SMART,

[Price 3s., or handsomely] bound, 5s.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS,

New and Complete Edition, for Pianoforte, with

Illustrations by BRANDARD,

And Introduction, describing the Plot and Music.

Price 6s., in cloth,

Forming the Twentieth volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Pianoforte Operas.

EVANS' ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.

BOOSEY AND SONS

Beg to announce, that owing to the demand for these instruments having for some time past considerably exceeded their means of supply, they have now made arrangements to

GREATLY EXTEND ITHEIR MANUFACTORY,

BY THE ADDITION OF

LARGE PREMISES,

IN

DAVIS-STREET, OXFORD-STREET,

Which, with their extensive establishments in

WELLS-STREET AND RED LION-YARD,

Will enable them to execute orders, to an unlimited extent, with the greatest promptitude.

Holles-street,
March 3, 1860.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex.
Saturday, March 3, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 10. SATURDAY, MARCH 10, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d

U. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1846, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes .. .. .. — Dr. MARK.

Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping .. .. — Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ .. .. — Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte .. .. — Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin .. .. — Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola .. .. .. — Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet .. .. .. — Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments .. .. .. — Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Counterpoint (German and English) .. .. .. — Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Culture .. .. — Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE FIFTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 12th, 1860.

AN ITALIAN NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

QUINTET, in A major (Op. 20, No. 5) .. .. .. Boccherini.
(First time.)
Herr Becker, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, M. Paque, and Signor Piatti.

RECITATIVE e RONDO, "Ah non sai qual pena" .. Sarti.
Madlle. Euphrosyne Parepa.

SONATA, in A major (Op. 25), Pianoforte .. .. .. Clementi.
(First time.)
Mr. Charles Hallé.

ARIA, "Pieta Signore." .. .. Stradella.
(First time.)
Mr. Sims Reeves.

CAPRICCIO, "Il Trillo del Diavolo," Violin .. .. Tartini.
(First time.)
Herr Becker.

PART II.

GRAND QUARTET, in E flat major (No. 1.), for two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello (By desire) .. .. Cherubini.
Herr Becker, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.

ARIA, "Pria che spunti in ciel l'aurora."
(Il Matrimonio Segreto.) .. .. Cimarosa.
(First time.)
Mr. Sims Reeves.

HARPSICHORD LESSONS .. .. Scarlatti.
(First time.)
Mr. Charles Hallé.

GRAND ARIA, "Se il ciel mi divide" (Didone Abbandonata.) .. .. Piccini.
Madlle. Euphrosyne Parepa.
(By desire.)

QUARTET, in D. major (No. 4) .. .. Donizetti.
Herr Becker, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.
(First time.)

CONDUCTOR—Mr. BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 23, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Ostzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradberry's Lond, Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanover-street; Wylde, Great Hall, Hungerford Market; Chidley, 135, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, South; Humphreys, 4, Old Change-street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

MR. CHAS. HALLE will perform Clementi's Sonata in A major, Op. 25, and a Selection from Scarlatti's celebrated Harpsichord Lessons for Piano Solo, at the Monday Popular Concerts, St. James's Hall, on Monday evening next, March 12. Sofa stalls, 5s.; balcony, 3s.; unreserved seats, 1s.

ITALIAN NIGHT.—MR. SIMS REEVES at the Monday Popular Concerts.—Owing to the great success of the programme selected from the works of Italian composers, performed on Monday evening, Feb. 27, the Directors of the Monday Popular Concerts have much pleasure in announcing that they have made arrangements to repeat it on Monday evening next, March 12th. Principal performers:—Mr. Chas. Hallé, Herr Becker, Signor Piatti, Madlle. Parepa, and Mr. Sims Reeves. Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER, Tenor. All communications respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Italian or English opera, to be addressed to his private residence 17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MR. CHARLES SALAMAN'S EVENING CONCERT, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday, March 29th, at Half-past Eight. Vocalists:—Madame Catherine Hayes, Madlle. Parepa, Miss Stabbach, Miss Eliza Hughes, and Herr Reichardt. Instrumentalists:—Pianoforte, Mr. Salaman. Violin, Herr Molique and Mr. H. G. Blagrove; Viola, Mr. R. Blagrove; Violoncello, Herr Lidel. Accompanyist, Mr. Frank Mori. Programmes will be shortly published. Tickets, 7s. each; family ticket, for four persons, One Guinea; of Mr. Salaman, 36, Baker-street, and of the principal music-shops.

MISS STABBACH will sing Charles Salaman's New Ballad, "Good bye! a long good bye," at the composer's concert, on the 29th March. Published by Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street. Price 2s. 6d.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 63, Burton-crescent, New road.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

MDLLE. MARIE WIECK, Pianist.—Letters respecting engagements for concerts and lessons to be addressed, 14, Leinster-square, Hyde-park, W.

MR. T. SCOTSON CLARK is in town for the season.—Letters respecting lessons or engagements for the pianoforte or harmonium to be addressed to him, care of Messrs Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 18, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

CAUTION to Musicsellers, Booksellers, and others whom it may concern.—"AM I NOT FONDLY THINE OWN?" adapted to a German air, entituled "Du du liegst mir im herzen;" the English version by Maria Hutchins Callcott, and music adapted by William Hutchins Callcott.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN that the copyright in the above-mentioned song is vested in C. Lonsdale, of No. 26, Old Bond-street, music-publisher, and legal proceedings will be taken against any person who may be found to have pirated, or shall hereafter be found pirating, such copyright in the before-named song.

Dated this 1st day of March, 1860.

(Signed) CHRISTOPHER LONSDALE.

CAUTION TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS.—"Thou art so near, and yet so far," Song, composed by Alexander Reichardt.—Notice is hereby given, that the above-named song is copyright of Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co., and that legal proceedings will be taken against all persons infringing the same. The only publishers whose names and addresses have been printed on the title-page of the said song, by Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co., are Messrs. Boosey and Son, Cramer and Co., and Chappell and Co.

London: 244, Regent-street, March 1, 1860.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winser, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

TO CHOIR-MASTERS AND ORGANISTS.—A Bass Singer (occasional deputy at St. Paul's Cathedral) is desirous of an engagement on a Sunday (full choral service preferred). Address, E. A., Brooks' Office, 24, Old Cavendish-street, W.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to

THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

TO ORGANISTS AND CHOIR MASTERS.—WANTED, an Organist and Choir Master, for the Parish Church of the Holy Trinity, in the City of Coventry. Salary, £50 per annum. He must be in communion with the Church; must produce satisfactory testimonials as to character and ability; and will have to provide a choir consisting of not less than 12 men and 16 boys, towards which £25 per annum will be allowed by the Vestry. Applications to be sent to William Lynes, Esq., Accountant Churchwarden, Coventry, on or before Wednesday, the 28th instant.

Coventry, 8th March, 1860.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

MUSICAL UNION.—Members who have not received the RECORD, 1859, containing a Portrait of Spohr, and a Sketch of Music in Paris, &c., to notify the same to the Director. Subscriptions are now due, and tickets will be issued before Easter. Extra copies of "Record," 1859, to be had, 2s. 6d. each, on applying by letter to J. ELLA, Director.

Shortly will be Published,

TWO EVENING SERVICES IN A MAJOR: Cantate and Deus, Magnificats, and Nunc Dimittis, with Organ Accompaniment. Composed by E. Bunnett, Mus. Bac., Cantab. Assistant Organist of Norwich Cathedral. Price (to Subscribers) 8s. Subscriber's names will be received by the Author, Upper Close, Norwich, and by the Publishers, Messrs. Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London, W.

Second Edition, Folio, pp. 40, stitched. Price, complete, 7s. 6d.

R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately, Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

"THERE'S NOTHING LIKE A FRESHENING BREEZE," new song by Alberto Randegger, composed for and sung with the greatest success by Mr. Thomas, when on his last tour, and always encored. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

ALBERT DAWES' "AULD LANG SYNE," with Variations for the pianoforte, is just published, price 5s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where the popular "South Down" Polka, for pianoforte, may be obtained, price 1s.

REVIEWS.

"The Quadroon Girl"—words by Longfellow, music by Balfe. "Magenta," music by Balfe (Boosey and Sons). Mr. Balfe has bestowed unusual pains upon the fortunes or misfortunes of the poor Quadroon Girl, set forth with such eloquent impressiveness, accompanied by so revolting an insinuation, in the poetry of Professor Longfellow, who, in the last stanzas, plainly intimates that the planter sells his own daughter to become the slave and minion of the slave-dealer:—

"'The soil is barren, the farm is old,'
The thoughtful planter said;
Then look'd upon the slaver's gold,
And then upon the maid.

His heart within him was at strife
With such accursed gains,
For he knew whose passions gave her life,
Whose blood ran in her veins.

But the voice of nature was too weak,
He took the glittering gold;
Then pale as death grew the maiden's cheek,
Her hands as icy cold."

"The heart within" the bosom of this planter must have been a heart of slow "beat"—not such a heart as Longfellow ordinarily delights in pourtraying, not such a heart as the heart of his "Blacksmith." In all respects the position of the unfortunate Quadroon was deplorable—for, sings the poet:—

"Her eyes were like a falcon's, gray,
Her arms and neck were bare;
No garment she wore, save a kirtle gray,
And her own long raven hair."

(If she had a hawk's nose and a swan's neck, she must have been a most bird-like Quadroon, and was purchased, peradventure, by the slaver for his legitimate wife's aviary). More puritanical than the American verse maker, Mr. Blatchley (who embellishes the song with a striking pictorial frontispiece) has clad her decently in a long white gown, with blue girdle, and scarlet dressings, besides placing bracelets on her arms, and red and pink roses in her "raven" hair. Mr. Balfe's music—assuming the form and dimensions of a scena, with recitatives and movements in varied tempi—is eminently dramatic and expressive. It would suit any contralto or bass singer now before the public, and, delivered earnestly, could not fail of producing a marked sensation. Our prolific composer has no doubt felt deeply for the miserable Quadroon, whose beauty might excite the compassion of even a less sensitive son of Orpheus than the author of "The power of Love."

Of "Magenta," too—where the words (anonymous?) represent the solitary grief of a bereaved girl (whose true-love has been slain in battle), alternated and, at times, combined with the shouts of victory and demonstrations of joy, to which the inhabitants of a disenslaved country give vent outside—Mr. Balfe has (less ambitiously) made a species of dramatic scena. His martial touches are confined to imitations of trumpets and reproductions ("transcriptions?") of trumpet-calls, assigned to the peaceful Benedict or Jules de Glimes of the piano; but with the tender complaints of the unhappy girl, his melody is entirely and appealingly sympathetic. Here, again, we have a song fitted alike for contralto or bass, its highest note being D on the fourth line, while the highest note in the "Quadroon-girl" is F on the fifth, of the upper stave.

"The Poor Orphan Child"—written by R. Lincoln Cocks, composed by F. Campana (Boosey and Sons). An arietta in the pleasantest and most unlaboured manner of its agreeable and unlaborious composer—a simple ballad, in short, giving real musical charm to a poetical appeal on behalf of the friendless orphan, from the pen of Mr. Cox, which, if sung to Sig. Campana's melody, at the door of an asylum, would be pretty sure of obtaining admission for any pitiable protegé (or gée) either, or both, of them might adopt.

"Adieu, dear Home"—words by Richard Bennett, music by E. J. Loder (Boosey and Sons)—is another unpretending ballad, superior even to the one just criticised, combining a graceful and easily-remembered melody with an accompaniment the neatness and propriety of which are alike eminent. The lines of Mr. Bennett, although on a hacknied theme, are simple, healthy, and unaffected.

"The Dew-drop and the Rose, song for voice and piano"—poetry from the German, music by G. A. Osborne (Duncan Davison and Co.)—is remarkable alike for expression without exaggerated sentiment, and for cleverness without pedantry. (Dr. Johnson, or Mr. Chorley might here interpose—"Sublime without whiskers?—melancholy without a white waistcoat?" but the "withouts" in this instance are not open to such carping.) Not only is Mr. Osborne's song well written and expressive; it is marked by decided character, and character well sustained throughout, which in a composition of so little pretence is a quality that at once arrests attention. The words, moreover, are so nicely exhibited in their English costume—by a poet (ess?) who need not have adopted the anonymous—that we are tempted to quote them:—

"A dew-drop reclined on a beautiful rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love,
When near that sweet flower to seek soft repose,
A sunbeam fell down from above!

The dew-drop instinctively felt there had come
A rival—his loved one to prove,
A shelter he sought next the heart of the rose,
And whispered soft vows of his love.

Still nearer came that sun's bright ray,
As he called the rose his bride,
Those words the dew-drop heard him say,
Then droop'd his head and died."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

MOZART'S TRIOS.

SIR,—Can you inform me how many original violin trios, by Mozart, are in existence besides the well-known Grand Trio in E flat, Op. 19. My object in asking this is to complete my collection of original violin trios, quartets, and quintets. By publishing this in the Musical World, you will oblige, Sir, your obedient servant,

ARTIST.

Brighton, March 1st.

FAIR PLAY.

SIR,—I take the liberty of addressing you, hoping you will allow me a space in your columns, for which I shall feel much obliged.

I played at the competition for the situation of organist at St. Luke's, Chelsea, which took place on Monday the 6th instant, and was returned by the umpires (three in number) as the best player; notwithstanding the organ is not my principal instrument. It would be out of place to repeat the umpire's report here, as it could do no one but myself any good. However, three were selected for election—No. 8, first; No. 2, second; and No. 9, third. The election took place on Monday the 20th instant, when Mr. Carter (a resident of Chelsea), the worst of the three, was elected by a large majority. Is it not a most shameful proceeding to bring a dozen men from different parts of London and elsewhere, to play for an appointment that was virtually, if not actually, given to Mr. Carter long before the playing? I, for one, lost a whole day's teaching, Monday being one of my busy days.

One thing, I have not yet mentioned, I think deserves more than ordinary condemnation; that is, the fact of several of the trustees telling me that they had made up their minds to vote for the best man. I (from the judgment of the umpires) thought they would vote for me, and, in consequence, made sure of my election. I should not take this step, were this the first time I have been thus treated in a like affair. I never played in a competition but once before, and being returned by the umpires as the best, and not being elected, I made up my mind never to play in competition again, which resolution I kept until the time that Chelsea became vacant. Should Mr. Carter refer to a competition that took place for St. Helen's, Bishopgate, years back, I answer him in the following terms, "I did not play for it;" that is to say, I played one piece, but finding that there was something to play at sight, I declined going on further (having at that time very imperfect sight, which is now, thanks to Mr. Bowman, of Clifford-street, quite perfect). Hoping that you will not find this letter too long, and that you are of my way of thinking—that is, that such things should be made known, for the good of organists as well as of congregations—I remain, sir, yours respectfully, F. SCOTSON CLARK.

4, Union-grove, Wandsworth-road, S.,
Feb. 29*th*, 1860.

P.S.—The trustees have not thought fit to write to inform me of their decision. "How very business-like!" but what is one to expect? Perhaps they are ashamed of their conduct—and well they may be.

THE BROTHERS HOLMES.

SIR,—Having had the great pleasure to make the acquaintance of the English violin virtuosos, the Messrs. Alfred and Henry Holmes, I ought to write you some lines on this occasion.

Believing it will be interesting for you and the musical public to know the artistical movements of your praiseworthy countrymen, I beg to inform you that they have been for the last two weeks staying here amongst us, during which time they have played at the Court with the greatest success. They so enchanted the King, that after hearing them the first time, he begged them to stay for some days longer, that they might play again at the palace; and further, by his wish a concert was arranged for them in the Opera-house, which went off most brilliantly. They were recalled with the greatest enthusiasm, after each of the solos and duets which they performed.

Previous to their arrival here they were two months in Copenhagen, where they created a great sensation by their concerts and by their performances in the Society of the Musik-verein. They also gave several concerts in the provinces of Denmark with the greatest success. Therefore the young artists have sufficiently confirmed the great praise which my cousin the happy deceased senior of the violists Mr. Spohr often had spent them; and on that account my sincere interest for the two brothers will excuse this letter and my bad English therein.

I am, sir, yours truly,
ARNOLD WENNER,
Kapellmeister of his Majesty the King.

Hanover, 27th Feb., 1860.

MR. RANSFORD'S CONCERT.

SIR,—In a letter addressed to you last Monday, I called your attention to several errors in the account given by one of the morning papers of Mr. Ransford's annual concert. I now trouble you again to point out that in the Musical World of last Saturday you have, in your report of this concert, printed the same errors with some additional ones.

Your reporter says: "The bénéficiaire sang, with great spirit, Dibdin's 'Tom Tough,' with other of his popular ballads, and, with his daughter, the duet, 'Oh, tell me, gentle stranger,'" &c. Mr. Ransford sang only "Tom Tough" and the duet, not any "other of his popular ballads."

Miss Ransford did not (as stated) sing "an Italian aria," and one or two English songs, but one solo only and the duet. The fantasia by Ascher, played by Miss Goddard, was not on the "Shadow song" only, but on several airs from Dinorah; and, finally, Mr. Lazarus did not execute a solo on the clarinet—in fact, he did not make his appearance at the concert at all.

Your reporter (like he of the morning paper previously alluded to) makes no mention of the fracas caused by the non-appearance of Mr. Sims Reeves, and of which I gave an account in my previous letter.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant, H. T. A.

[Our reporter has not been dismissed.]

ROYAL SOCIETY OF MUSICIANS.

THE one hundred and twenty-second anniversary festival, which took place on Thursday evening, at the Freemasons' Hall, was the most successful in our remembrance. In the first place, the assembly was larger than on any former occasion; in the next, Mr. Charles Dickens, one of the most entertaining and accomplished of chairmen, presided; and lastly, the donations, if they did not exceed that of any previous year, were more liberal than ordinary. The concert, too, was on an unusually ambitious scale, and the dinner, served by Mr. Elkington, a bonâ fide Freemasons' Tavern repast. The utmost hilarity prevailed throughout the evening, in a great measure due to the president, who was the sun of the festival, and shed a light on all around, and infused warmth into every bosom. Mr. Charles Dickens, to speak in theatrical parlance, made a decided hit. He was voted nem. con. the very best chairman who ever occupied the seat of honour at one of the Society's dinners; and, we have little doubt, if he was installed "perpetual president," it would enhance the prosperity of future festivals, to say nothing of the effect it might have on the general state of affairs. Mr. Dickens is not personally mixed up in musical matters, but on behalf of charity no more appropriate president could be found. No bad specimen of Mr. Dickens's oratorical powers will be found below; but even this admirable impromptu display can convey but a remote idea of his readiness to seize upon a point for illustration, the fertility of his imagination, his piquant style, his logical acumen, and his wonderful powers of accommodating himself to his particular hearers. Moreover—and this is the rarest virtue in a public speaker—he is never diffuse, and consequently never wearies. If copious at times, it is because his matter is abundant and thought flows freely; and, to crown all, we never knew a chairman or president who knew better the exact moment when to speak and when to refrain.

If there was any drawback to the enjoyment of the evening, it was that the first part of the concert was much too long. The practice of giving more than one musical performance after each toast is, we fancy, a mistake. If, instead of fifteen pieces in the first part of the programme, there had been ten, no one would have complained, although ten would have been too many, more especially with such long operatic pieces among them as the recitative and aria, 'Ah! fora' è lui," from the Traviata. The fact that the first part was not over until near eleven is enough to show that the system is wrong. Fortunately there was but one encore (to Miss Arabella Goddard, in Stephen Heller's Improvisation on Mendelssohn's air, "On song's bright pinions," for which "The last rose of summer," of Thalberg, was substituted), or there's no knowing at what unusual hour the concert would have terminated. A good selection, on the whole, was provided, and justified the announcement that "the festival should be considered more in the light of a musical entertainment than a public dinner." This will be at once granted, after perusing the following list of artists, all of whom gave their gratuitous services:—vocalists—Misses Augusta Thompson, Lascelles, Haywood, and Rachel Gray, and Mad. Rieder Schlumberger (soloists); with Messrs. R. Barnby, H. Buckland, W. Coward, J. Coward, W. Distin, W. J. Fielding, A. G. Ferrari, Handel Gear, Donald King, F. Kinkee, E. Land, T. Whiffin, T. Williams, Whitehouse, and T. Wallworth, for the madrigals, glees, and chorus;—instrumentalists—Miss Arabella Goddard, M. Paque, Mr. John Thomas and Mdlle. Sophie Humler—who, at the last moment, volunteered a solo on the violin, and played it capitally in the bargain, and pleased all the amateurs by her choice of the music. The band was under the direction of Mr. Lazarus, and consisted of sixteen wind and brass players. And to conclude our catalogue, Messrs. James Coward and W. G. Cusins presided at the pianoforte.

The royal toasts having been proposed and duly honoured by the company and the musicians, the next on the list was "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians."

MR. CHARLES DICKENS rose and said: Ladies and gentlemen, I suppose I may venture to say that it is pretty well known to everybody, that all people, whenever they are brought together at a dinner in private society, for the declared purpose of discussing any particular matter or business, it has invariably happened that they never can by any ingenuity be brought to approach that business, and that they invariably make it the one sole subject and ground on which they could not be rapped into the utterance of a syllable. This being the curious concurrent experience of all mankind, it is the cautious custom of this particular public dinner, to place its business in the very front of the evening's engagements. It commits it to paper, and places it in black and white before the unhappy chairman whilst he feasts. (Laughter.) It guards him with a long row of distinguished gentlemen on either hand, to keep him up to the mark, and force him to approach the thing from which everybody knows he has a secret tendency to retreat, and there is a voice in his ear—a sonorous voice—which, like the warning voice of the slave of old, reminds him in all stages of the pageant, that he is but a mortal chairman, and that it is the common lot of all his race to be commanded to "speak and to die." This, ladies and gentlemen, is the one hundred and twenty-second anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians. (Loud cheers.) One hundred and twenty years have passed since the casual contemplation by two gentlemen, standing at a coffee-house door, of two poor boys driving a pair of milch asses through the London streets, within half-a-mile of the place where we are now assembled, led to its establishment. These two poor boys were the sons of a deceased musician, and the two rich hearts that took pity on them were the hearts of two deceased musicians, and the noblest soul that came spontaneously to their aid was the soul of a deceased musician, known amongst the natural nobility of the art but by one "Handel" to his name—(Great cheering)—and that a very glorious one, and derived, as I venture to take it, directly from God. (Hear, hear, hear.) Now, ladies and gentlemen, that "harmonious blacksmith" hammered so soundly upon the iron of his order, while it was hot, that he struck out of it the sound of self-respect, independence, and prosperity, which are present in this society at the moment while I speak. During the remaining nineteen years of his musical life he wrought for it at the forge of his art with a truth, faith, and vigour belonging only to a great nature; and when he died he left it the princely bequest of £1,000. (Loud cheers.) We now see what good seed is, and we see what good music is. One hundred and twenty-two years have gone, the ruffles and powder have gone, the lace and buckles have gone, the white-cape great coats and the huge cravats and top boots have gone; but the good seed is here, in the shady and flourishing tree under which we sit to-night, and the good music is here, ever young, and the young ears, the young fingers, have it every new generation. (Cheers.) Ladies and gentlemen, it is my custom, when I have the honour to hold such a position as this, to offer to those amongst the company who may not be personally acquainted with the society under consideration, those recommendations in its behalf which have been most powerful with myself. Will you allow me to sum up, under a few heads, the reasons that I have for regarding with particular sympathy and respect this Royal Society of Musicians. First, because it is a real thing—(Hear, hear)—because it is, in fact, as well as in name, a society of musicians—not a heterogeneous concourse of nondescripts and toadies, with here and there a musician smuggled in to justify the misuse of an art; but a society of professional men bound together in a love of their common art, and with the object important to their art. (Cheers.) Because these gentlemen come together, as they only usefully and independently could come together, as a benefit society—(Hear, hear)—making timely provision, if not for their own old age, distress, or infirmity, certainly for those casualities in the life of their brethren, and for their widows, and for their orphan children. Because it not only grants money for the education and apprenticeship of those children, but afterwards preserves a parental care over them in this way, that when they have done well in their apprenticeship, it encourages them to come back and be rewarded for having done well, and to stimulate them to continue to tread the paths of truth and duty. (Applause.) Because it is not an exclusive society, but concedes to its youngest members the privileges of its oldest, and freely admits foreigners as members who are really domiciled in England as practitioners of music. Because it manages its own affairs—(Hear, hear)—and manages them in a manner so excessively unnational and unpopular that it pays only two small salaries for real services, while the governors actually pay the expenses of their own meetings out of their own pockets. (Loud applause.) Ladies and gentlemen, you have no notion what confusion would be carried into a certain literary society if the ferocious person who now addresses you were in his own plain way to get up there, and propose the musicians in these respects as an example for imitation. (Laughter and cheers.) Lastly, ladies and gentlemen, I recommend this society to such of this assembly as do not know it, because it is a society of artists who begin by putting their own shoulders to their own wheel. Every member of this body stands pledged to every other to exercise his talents gratuitously at any performance whatsoever and whensoever given in aid of the society's objects. Every member is formally and distinctly reminded on his enrolment that he accepts the responsibility of a great work connected with the labour of his art, and to that he is understood to pledge himself thenceforth. Now these, ladies and gentlemen, are the main features of the body of professional men that pass to night the one hundred and twenty-second milestone on the road of its life—the main features, except one—and that is that the annual income derived from the one source, the annual subscription of its members, is not much more than a tithe of the money annually expended in the execution of its excellent objects. Turning over this book just now, with the words "one hundred and twenty-second night" printed on its outside, I feel in a half kind of fancy—remembering the wonderful things which music has, of course, suggested to me from my earliest childhood; I feel a kind of fancy that I might have gone back to the one hundred and twenty-second of the Great Arabian Nights, and have heard Dinarzade saying, about half-an-hour before daybreak, "Sister Schehrazade, if you are still awake, and my lord the Sultan will permit, I pray you to finish the story of—the British musicians"—(Laughter and cheers)—to which Schehrazade replied that she would willingly proceed, but that to the best of her belief, it was a story without an end—(Cheers)—because she considered that so long as mankind lived and loved, and hoped, so long music, which draws them upwards in all their varying and erring moods, could never possibly cease out of the world. (Cheers.) So the Sultan, who changed his name for the purpose for the time, girded on, not his scimitar, but a scythe, and went out, graciously resolving that the story should have its one hundred and twenty-second night, and that the brotherhood should live for ever. (Loud applause.) Ladies and gentlemen, these may appear to you vagrant ideas, but music is suggestive of all fancies. You know it can give you back the dead; it can place at your side the congenial creature dear to you who never lived. You know that the blind see in it; the bedridden have hope in it; the dead hear it. We all hear it, from the sounds of the varying seasons to the beating of the waters upon which our Saviour walked. Let me, in conclusion, entreat you to listen also to one strain which will certainly be heard through all the sweet sounds of to-night, and which will be simply this—no less, no more. The hand cannot always keep its hold upon the bow, the strings, the keys; the breath will sometimes fail. It is the inevitable result of the skilful combination of many instruments, that there must have been some players who never can hope to attain a great success or great reward, but who are nevertheless quite inseparable from, and necessary to, your delight; and so the strain will say, and, if you listen to it, it will say, "I am one of those; I have been young, and now am old; my hand has lost its mastery; my breath has failed. Now, for the love of the much that music has done for you, do that little for me." I beg to propose to you to drink, "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians."

Mr. Dickens resumed his seat amidst loud applause from all parts of the room.

The other toasts were "The Patrons of the Society," "The Army and Navy," "Charles Dickens, Esq., President of the Day," "The Ladies who honoured the Festival with their presence," "The Chaplain and the Honorary Officers of the Society," "The Professional Ladies and Gentlemen who assisted at the Festival," and "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Female Musicians and other Musical Societies." In giving the toast of the "Army and Navy," Mr. Dickens drew a graphic picture of the influence of music as exercised in every phase of the life of a soldier or sailor; and in proposing the health of the ladies, he created infinite merriment, by remonstrating against the separation of the sexes at the dinner table.

At the commencement of the second part, Mr. G. F. Anderson, honorary treasurer, read a list of the donations, which is too long to insert in this place. We may, however, mention that Messrs. Broadwood and Sons gave £50 (the seventeenth donation, making the entire sum bestowed on the charity by that eminent firm £2050); Mr. Collard, £50; Messrs. Addison and Lucas, 10 guineas; Miss Arabella Goddard, 10 guineas; Mr. Benedict, 5 guineas; Mr. Bowley, 5 guineas; Signor Ferrari, 2 guineas; Mr. Gruneisen, 2 guineas; Mr. Metzler, jun., 5 guineas; Mr. Handel Gear, 1 guinea, &c., &c. The entire amount had not been made up when we left, but we have every reason to suppose it will be considerable.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

PROBABLY a larger audience was never assembled in St. James's Hall—which, though calculated to admit two thousand persons, was by no means sufficiently spacious to accommodate more than three-fourths of the amateurs of classical music who applied for admission at the doors—than at the eleventh concert. Many hundreds were unavoidably denied admission, and almost as much money was "returned" as would have made an ordinarily successful evening. The programme was as follows:

PART I.

Quintet, in A, stringed instruments and clarinet	...	Mozart.
Song, "Soft and bright"	...	H. Smart.
Song, "I quit my pillow" (Don Quixote) ...	...	Macfarren.
Sonata, in A flat, pianoforte, "Plus Ultra."	...	Dussek.

PART II.

Sonata, in E flat major, for pianoforte and clarinet		Weber.
Song, "Adelaide"	...	Beethoven.
A Lullaby, "Golden slumbers kiss your eyes"	...	17th Century.
Quartet, in D major, Op 18	...	Beethoven.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

The Quintet of Mozart was repeated by desire. Its manifold beauties, and the faultless execution of the clarinet part by Mr. Lazarus, were dwelt upon in appropriate terms some weeks ago, when Herr Becker took the principal violin part. Herr Molique was now at the head of the stringed instruments—as much as to say that both reading and execution were masterly. In the quartet of Beethoven (in which, as in the quintet, the other players were Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti), Herr Molique exhibited the same artistic qualities that have long constituted him one of the foremost "classical" violinists of the day.

The pianoforte sonata—Dussek's Plus Ultra, or, as the composer himself entitled it, Le Retour à Paris—is one of the most magnificent, no less than one of the most difficult, ever contributed to the repertory of "the universal instrument." Dussek wrote it when, after a life of unprofitable excitement and artistic vagabondage, he had settled down quietly in Paris, as pianist and concert-master, in the residence of the famous Talleyrand, with whom he seems to have enjoyed other intimate sympathies besides those springing from a mere community of musical tastes. A piece occupying more than forty minutes in performance may be regarded by those who are sceptical about the influence of what is denominated "high art" as something beyond the endurance of an audience of considerably beyond 2,000 persons; but there appear to be no sceptics among the patrons of the Monday Popular Concerts. At any rate, neither the lovers of Dussek's music nor the admirers of Miss Arabella Goddard's playing could have been otherwise than satisfied with the attention bestowed on the sonata, and the hearty appreciation of the efforts of the performer, who, though she had more than once previously introduced the Plus Ultra in public, had never before essayed it in presence of so vast an assembly, and whose task became, therefore, doubly arduous, while its successful accomplishment was doubly honourable. Equally well received was the beautiful duet of Weber, for pianoforte and clarinet, in which Miss Goddard enjoyed the co-operation of that unrivalled master of his instrument, Mr. Lazarus. Every movement of this genial inspiration of the author of Der Freischütz was heard with unequivocal delight.

Miss S. Cole gave the the graceful ballad of Mr. H. Smart, and the charming "Lullaby" from Mr. Wm. Chappell's Popular Music of the Olden Time, with irreproachable taste; and to the plaintive romance from Mr. Macfarren's opera of Don Quixote, Mr. Sims Reeves imparted such heartfelt tenderness, that no Quiteria would have hesitated for an instant to abandon however wealthy a Camacho in answer to such an appeal. Beethoven's "Adelaida," in which Mr. Reeves was accompanied on the pianoforte by Miss Goddard, and which he never sang to greater perfection, was encored with such enthusiasm and unanimity that there was no alternative but no repeat it from the first note to the last. The other vocal pieces were accompanied by Mr. Benedict in that refined and artistic manner to which he has always accustomed the musical public.

At the twelfth and final performance of the first series (second season), the programme included Mendelssohn's quintet in A, Beethoven's quartet in D, Weber's pianoforte sonata in A flat, and Beethoven's rarely heard variations on "See the conquering hero comes," for pianoforte and violoncello—all "for the first time." A more rich and varied selection could not have been made; and that ample justice was awarded may be guessed from the names of the performers—Messrs. Molique, Ries, Doyle, and Piatti in the quartet, with the addition of Mr. Schreurs as second viola in the quintet, Miss Arabella Goddard in the sonata, and the same pianist, associated with Signor Piatti, in the variations. The singers were Miss Susanna Cole, Miss Fanny Rowland (who introduced, with eminent success, a very fine air from Gluck's Iphigenia in Aulide), and Mr. Sims Reeves. The ladies were encored in "Sull' aria," Mr. Sims Reeves being similarly complimented in "I arise from dreams of thee" (H. Glover), and in "Adelaida" (accompanied by Miss Goddard), the last of which composer created a furor.

The concert of Monday week (the first of the new series, the 13th of the second season), was one of the greatest possible interest. It was composed entirely of works, vocal and instrumental, of the Italian masters. The selection was as follows:—

PART I.

Quintet, in A major, for two violins, viola, and two violoncellos	Boccherini.
Aria, "Resta in pace, idolo mio" (Gl' Orazi ed i Curiazi)	Cimarosa.
Recitativo e Rondo, "Ah non sai qual pena" ...	Sarti.
Scena Tragica—Grand Sonata, in G minor, for pianoforte alone (Didone Abbandonata) ...	Clementi.
Duetto, "Cantando un' dì"	Clari.
Aria, "Com' ape ingegnosa" (Tarara)	Salieri.
Quartet, in E flat (No. 5), two violins, viola, and violoncello	Rossini.

PART II.

Grand Quartet, in E flat major, for two violins, viola, and violoncello	Cherubini.
Grand Aria, "Se il ciel mi divide" (Didone Abbandonata)	Piccini.
Capriccio (Moto Continuo), violin alone	Paganini.
Aria—Almaviva—"Io son Lindoro" (Barbiere di Siviglia)	Paesiello.
Duetto—Almaviva and Bartolo—"O che umor" (Barbiere di Siviglia)	Paesiello.
Terzetto—Rosina, Almaviva, and Bartolo—"Ah chi sà questo suo foglio" (Barbiere di Siviglia)	Paesiello.
Trio, in for violin, viola, and violoncello ...	Correlli.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

We may at once state, that the concert was eminently successful.

The grand features were Clementi's sonata and Cherubini's quartet. These created the profoundest impression. The sonata is the work of a poet as well as of a great musician, and sets at nought the idea entertained by some modern amateurs, that Clementi was a pedant. Whoever heard Didone Abandonata, executed as it was magnificently and with kindred feeling by Miss Arabella Goddard, and did not feel his spirit bowed before genius, must have been hard to please indeed, or hard of hearing. The quartet of Cherubini is one of three, which, with a sonata for two organs and a pianoforte fantasia, are all he is known to have dedicated to the chamber. The quartet is a work of large proportions, written with peculiar breadth and dignity of style, increases in interest from the second movement to the end, and gradually captivates the hearer. It was superbly executed by Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle and Signor Piatti, and, like Clementi's sonata, received with enthusiastic plaudits from all parts of the hall. Correlli's sonata is by no means devoid of interest, if for no other reason than that it shows the kind of instrumental music which attained popularity some century and a-half ago in England. Rossini's quartet, an amusing bagatelle, was (together with four others) written at the age of sixteen, and published without the consent or knowledge of the master.

Herr Becker's performance of Paganini's Variations on "Nel cor piu," took everybody by surprise. That he was a first-rate quartet player all who had heard him at St. James's Hall were aware; but that he could stand his ground with the most accomplished fantasia players remained to be proved. He was recalled by the whole audience at the termination of the performance.

The selection from the Barbiere of Paesiello excited general curiosity. The tenor air (remarkably well sung, by the way, by Mr. Tennant) was at once remembered by the old opera-goers as the late Mr. Tom Cooke's duet, "Ah! maiden fair," interpolated in place of the great air, "Ecco ridente," in Rossini's Barbiere. In those days managers and directors had little respect for masterpieces. Paesiello's (not Tom Cooke's) air, however, is eminently graceful. It must be remembered, Paesiello's Barbiere was written thirty or forty years before Rossini's. The duet (Mr. Tennant and Mr. Winn) and the trio (the same gentlemen with Miss Susanna Cole) are extremely graceful and quaint, and, no doubt, on the stage, would open a vein of comedy which they seem to want in the concert-room. Mdlle. Parepa was highly successful in Piccini's splendid scena, which Mozart might have endorsed, and which Gluck, Piccini's great rival, has not always equalled. Allowing high praise to Mdlle. Parepa, Miss Susanna Cole, and Mr. Winn for their several solos—the first in the recitative and words, by Sarti; Miss Susanna Cole in Cimarosa's air; and Mr. Winn in the aria from Turara—(admirable specimens all three)—we must close our remarks with a word of commendation to the two ladies for the artistic manner in which they sang Clari's very difficult duet.

A "Beethoven Night was given on Monday, and attracted an immense audience. The programme could not have been better selected:—

PART I.

Posthumous Quartet, in F major (No. 17)	Beethoven.
Song, "Ave Maria,"	Schubert.
Air, "Deh per questo"	Mozart.
Air, "Le Pastorella dell' Alpi"	Rossini.
Sonata Appassionata, in F minor, Op. 57	Beethoven.

PART II.

Sonata, in A major, Op. 30, for pianoforte and violin	Beethoven.
Songs, "Ah, how sweet it is to love!" and "On the brow of Richmond Hill"	Purcell.
Song, "A bird sat on an alder bough"	Spohr.
Septet, in E flat, Op. 20	Beethoven.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

The miscalled "Posthumous" Quartet, executed by Herr Becker, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti, created, as before, an immense effect, and the slow movement was again encored and repeated. The execution was magnificent, and Herr Becker—"the new discovery of the Monday Popular Concerts," as a morning contemporary calls him—more than ever established his claims to be considered a "genuine artist." About the septet, so well-known and so much endeared to all amateurs of music, we need only say, it was grandly played, the executants being Messrs. Becker, Doyle, Lazarus, C. Harper, Chisholm, Severn, and Piatti. The two sonatas exhibited Miss Arabella Goddard's talent to perfection; and in that for the piano and violin, she enjoyed the powerful co-operation of Herr Becker. A more thoroughly satisfactory performance of both works could not be given. The intensely poetical "Appassionata" (though "Appassionata" was not Beethoven's title) was listened to with breathless attention, and at the end the fair pianist was recalled and overwhelmed with applause from all parts of the hall. The sonata in a major, which betrays the influence of Mozart in every movement, more especially in the finale, afforded unqualified gratification.

The vocal music was divided between Miss Parepa and Mr. Sims Reeves. The lady was encored in Rossini's air, No. 6 of the Soirées Musicales, and gave Schubert's "Ave Maria," with much expression. Spohr's song would not have suffered by being taken a little faster. Mr. Sims Reeves gave the air from the Clemenza di Tito with infinite taste and refinement. The two songs of Purcell (with accompaniment arranged by Mr. J. L. Hatton), are somewhat old-fashioned, but still interesting as coming from Purcell. Both were admirably sung by Mr. Reeves, and the last unanimously encored. Mr. Benedict conducted all the vocal music, and especially distinguished himself in the picturesque accompaniment to the song from Tito.

A second "Italian night" will be given on Monday, with an entirely new instrumental selection, one piece excepted—the grand quartet of Cherubini in E flat, which created so profound a sensation at the first Italian concert.

FESTIVAL OF THE FRENCH ORPHEONISTS IN LONDON.

A GRAND Choral Festival will take place at the Sydenham Palace, in the course of next June. Three thousand French Orpheonists are invited to participate in this artistic solemnity, which will be a landmark in the history of the two countries, and mark another and a glorious step on advance, taken by the human mind on the sacred road of the fraternity of nations. During a visit I lately made to London, I settled the general arrangements of the Festival with the committee of the Sydenham Crystal Palace. The following are the principal clauses of the agreement concluded with the Company:—

"All travelling expenses will be paid for the three thousand Orpheonists, both ways, from Paris to London, and from the intermediate stations of the network of the Western lines of railroad, as well as from Dieppe to Hâvre, and thence to London.

"The same privilege is accorded to those Societies which come from the various points of the Northern line, from Arras and Vergnier to Calais, and thence to London.

"Those Societies, participating in the Festival, who are not situated on the line of the Northern or Western Railway, will have to pay their own travelling expenses from their respective localities, either as far as Paris or to some station of one of the railways just mentioned.

"The Societies existing in that part of the country which is traversed by the Orleans line can reach the Western railway at Mans, by the branch line from Tours, without the necessity of coming to Paris.

"The Societies on the Eastern line can take the branch rail running from Rheims, and joining the Eastern to the Northern line, they will thus not have to pass through Paris.

"The Societies on the Lyons line will have to come to Paris.

"The Orpheonists will remain in London for one week. They will embark on one Sunday and return the Sunday following."

The stay of a week in London is indispensable. We are to give three concerts, and it is natural to suppose that, without rehearsals, it would be impossible to carry out so grand an artistic manifestation, which is unprecedented, and, in all probability, will not be repeated. As the three concerts must be preceded by rehearsals, which take up a long time, it would be difficult, if we were to stop in London only from Monday to Thursday, for us to visit the public monuments and enjoy the repose and amusements required by such a journey. The Orpheonists of the central and southern portions of France, and of the localities beyond the range of the northern and western railways, will perceive at once that it was impossible to extend the invitation for the London Festival to the whole meridional portion of France. It is the Crystal Palace Company who have undertaken to pay all travelling expenses on the northern and western lines, as well as on board the steamers, as far as London, but we shall neglect no means to enable the Orpheonists living beyond the range of these privileged lines to participate conveniently in the solemnity. Measures have been taken for lodging and boarding the Orpheonists cheaply and well in London. The expenses under these heads will not exceed forty francs a head for the week. At the request of the Crystal Palace Committee we shall sing the following choruses, which were executed at the Paris Festival: the Septet from Les Huguenots, "Les Cimbres et les Teutons;" "Le Psaume de Marcello;" the "Veni Creator;" "La Retraite;" "Le Départ des Chasseurs;" "Le Chant des Montagnards;" "Le Chœur des Prêtres," from Les Mystères d'Isis. The other choruses which will be comprised in the programme of the grand London festival will be fixed on very shortly. The new choruses will be forwarded gratis to those Orpheonists who take part in the festival. The choruses sung in Paris will not be sent to the Societies which were present at the Palais l'Industrie, but they will be sent gratuitously to those Societies which took no part in the Paris Festival, and which shall announce their intention of co-operating in the London Festival. The notices of co-operation must be sent in before the 10th March. They should contain the nominal list of the members of the Society, and, opposite each name, a notification to which class the member's voice belongs. It is most necessary that the promises of co-operation should be serious and definitive, since the number of executants is fixed at three thousand. Those Orpheonists who are not certain of having a week at their disposal should not enter their names. Inspections will be held in the various co-operating Societies, and members will only be definitively admitted after these inspections, which will necessarily be rigorous.

E. DELAPORTE,
President of the Choral Association of Paris.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

H. F. A.—The letter accompanying our correspondent's private note was mislaid last week. It is now too late to possess any interest.

A LOVER OF JUSTICE.—It was merely an oversight. The article on the death of Mr. H. Corri, and that of Mr. Ransford's concert, were borrowed from The Era. We merely rectified the statement that Mr. Corri was Dussek's nephew, the fact being that he was his brother-in-law.

CONCERTS FOR THE PEOPLE (Windsor).—We regret to inform our correspondent that we cannot undertake to print articles written upon what is conventionally termed "flimsy."

Dr. F. R.—With thanks. Next week.

W. N. S.—We believe the celebrated artist's Christian name is Corno-Capricorno, or Cornuto, but are not sure, since it has been currently bruited that, being a Jew, the celebrated artist, properly speaking, has no Christian name; which, after all, may be a matter of taste on the part of the celebrated artist. For a satisfactory answer to the other question of our correspondent, we cannot do better than refer our correspondent to the celebrated artist himself, who, no doubt, will answer it with extreme alacrity.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)	2s. 6d.
Every additional line (ten words) ...	0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 10TH, 1860.

THE Musical Campaign is about to begin, and, from symptoms that have come beneath our notice, an unusually severe spring may be anticipated. We say spring, because we do not believe the season will extend very far, if at all, into the summer, unless people persist in calling June a summer month. Our advertising columns inform us that artists and musical professors are flocking to London from all parts of the world, and many of them have already issued their challenges, in which, singly or supported by a certain number of friends, they offer to meet the public at morning and evening concerts. But this sort of thing will not last long, and we are told that travelling carriages may be ordered this year as early as the first days of July.

A long essay might be written on the causes that have tended to abridge the London musical season, but we will not inflict it upon our readers. We may, however, call attention to the abolition of the before-Easter period at the Italian Opera, or Operas, which managers found too great a penance even for the last weeks in Lent, when some sort of mortification ought of course to be practised by all men People at last get tired of everything, even of losing money, and our Italian directors object now to open their theatres until there is some chance of filling them. Then, we fancy those families who visit London for fashionable purposes are really glad when their laborious pleasures are at an end; and they also retire to the country earlier in the summer than of old, because, thanks to the railways, they can come back to London at any other period of the year at less expense, and with far less inconvenience than accompanied travelling in the days of post-chaises. However, if in the year 1860 there is less time than ever for hearing music, there are certainly more musicians anxious and determined to make themselves heard, and accordingly there will be such a production of "sweet sounds" during the coming months of April, May, and June, that those who, like ourselves, have ears and must hear, run a considerable risk of getting their acoustic organs damaged. Last season there were sometimes as many as three morning concerts in one day, to say nothing of two Italian operas in the evening. This was quite as much as we could bear, but we are told that during the season that is approaching we shall have to suffer even more. All we can say is—we hope not: it is the last chord that shatters the musical critic's tympanum.

If concert givers would take our advice, we should counsel them, partly for their sake but principally for our own, not to make a point of giving their entertainments within the narrow limits of the London season. Those who can only count upon selling tickets to pupils and patrons have of course no choice, and must hold their matinées and soirées when their pupils and patrons are within earshot, or not at all. But a really great artist can now find a large and appreciative audience at any period of the year, and many foreign vocalists and instrumentalists who at present only visit London during the great musical months, when the market is sure to be overstocked, would probably find their journeys to England far more profitable—or, at all events, less unremunerative—if they were to make their appearance among us during the winter.

If Mr. Ella, of the Musical Union, were to advertise in the month of January that "Rubinstein is coming from the banks of the Neva," the announcement would not produce the same effect which it, doubtless, would have on the perusers of the Record in the middle of May. But as Rubinstein possesses remarkable talent, the frequenters of the Monday Popular Concerts and the audiences at St. Martin's Hall are sure to recognise it; and it would be to the interest of concert-givers to engage him, as they engage Joachim, Wieniawski, Becker, and other visitors from abroad, during what is usually considered our dull season.

Anxious to know the worst as soon as possible, we have already, by an abstruse calculation, discovered on what day the Feast of Easter (no feast, alas, to us!) will fall this year. Easter-Day, be it known, is always the first Sunday after the Full Moon which happens upon, or next after, the twenty-first day of March; unless the full moon happens upon a Sunday, when Easter-Day is the Sunday after. But the scientific and orthodox mode of determining the occurrence of Easter for any given year is by performing certain operations with the Golden Number or Prime, and the Dominical or Sunday Letter. To find the Golden Number or Prime for the present year, it is only necessary to add 1 to 1860, and then divide by 19; the remainder, if any, is the Golden Number; but, if nothing remains, then 19 is the Golden

Number. The Dominical Letter is not to be found quite so easily; but having ascertained, by a lengthy process, what it was, we consulted certain tables in our possession, in which the Golden Number indicates to us the day of the Paschal Full Moon, and the Dominical Letter the day next to the Full Moon on which Easter falls. From this we learned that Easter-Day falls on the 8th of April, and consequently, that April the 9th will be Easter Monday. We might perhaps, have obtained this information by the less arithmetical process of consulting an almanac, but however that may be, the London season begins on the 9th of next month, and on the 10th we shall have two Italian Operas in the evening, and doubtless innumerable concerts in the morning. We are here reminded that the 10th of April is the anniversary of certain metropolitan riots. Let us trust that we may be able to do our duty in the character of musical "special constables!"

A STRANGE sight met the eyes of Pantagruel, when, at a quarter before seven, P.M., he entered the large room of the "Edinburgh Castle," for there, upon the floor, extended on his back, lay Panurge, kicking and howling, and by him knelt John the waiter, vainly endeavouring to recall him to a condition of self-respect.

"He's been like this ever since eight o'clock yesterday evening," said John, mournfully, "and I have poured more glasses of brandy down his throat than he will pay for in a twelvemonth."

"What's the matter, thou infernal idiot?" affectionately asked Pantagruel.

Thereupon Panurge began to shriek and kick anew with greater vigour than ever, making such an abominable noise that even the deaf old gentleman who was reading the day before yesterday's paper in the further box to the left was interrupted in his studies.

"Say what is the matter, and I will pay for all the liquor thou hast gorged, and thou shalt now have, in addition, a large glass of hot brandy-and-water," said Pantagruel.

Those consoling expressions brought the upper-half of Panurge into a vertical position, while his legs remained horizontal upon the floor, so that the ingenious might have compared him to the letter L. But he did not say a word till the lively John placed in his hands a steaming tumbler, from which he took a draught so huge, that his eyes incontinently blinked with the effect thereof. Then he spake thus:—

"I have seen Nebuchadnezzar, King of Babylon, walking on all-fours and browsing on the grass of the field. I have seen Troy turned into a corn-field, and trampled upon by clodhoppers.

'——— Ilion, Ilion,
Fatalis incestusque judex
Et mulier peregrina vertet
In pulverem ———.'"

"What do you mean? What do you mean?" shrieked Pantagruel.

"I have seen the King Uzziah usurp the priest's office; I have seen the boor Mummius insult the marvels of Greek art; I have seen the Palladium defiled by unclean hands; I have seen immortal Cæsar, dead and turned to clay, stopping a hole to keep the winds away."

"Tail of Beelzebub! doth all this rhodomontade denote anything beside the aqua vitæ, for which, ass as I was, I promised to pay?" roared Pantagruel.

"I ought to have known it," screamed Panurge, wildly. "I ought to have known it. There is nothing certain in human affairs beyond their perishable quality—

'Omnes eodem cogimur; omnium
Versatur urna serius ocius
Sors exiture et nos in æternum
Exsilium impositura cymbæ.'"

"At least make thy madness methodical, accursed pedant!" bellowed Pantagruel, frantic with impatience.

"True, true," said Panurge—

"Durum; sed levius fit patientia Quidquid corrigere est nefas."

And then he put on a marvellously sober countenance, and greeted Pantagruel with a melancholy smile that almost moved him to tears.

"Thou mindest, master mine—a theatre—a small, pretty theatre—where the graces do flourish, and where profound wisdom is taught by philosophers who wear a comic mask?"

"I were much less wise than I am, if I knew it not," said Pantagruel. "Thou referrest to that small spring-head, whence issues the broad stream of wisdom, that so greatly refreshes and invigorates the population of this enormous town."

"A spring-head, too, over which the loveliest of nymphs presides," added Panurge. "But now, master, what wouldest thou have said if thou hadst seen cats drowned in Hippocrene, and the 'Fons Bandusiæ splendidia vitro' sullied by the paddling of tittlebat-seeking boys? Bend thine head, master mine, and I will pour into thine ear a tale of woe, that I dare not trust myself to speak aloud."

Pantagruel bent his head and listened, and lo! his face became so long and his eyes so wide, that John, the waiter, betook himself to the bar, and swore that Pantagruel had changed himself into the giant of the Drury Lane pantomime.

"And what is the piece called?" asked Pantagruel with a gasp, when Panurge had ended.

"I will not pronounce the name of ill omen," said Panurge with a shudder. "But as the Greeks termed their most ill-conditioned goddesses the Eumenides, or good-humoured, and the unlucky or left side the euonymous, or well-reputed, so will I term the matter to which I allude the Delectable Chance." At this moment the clock of St. Clement Danes told the hour of seven, and was confirmed in its assertion by the clock of St. Mary's.

"Knowing that thou art a scurvy toper and a liar," said Pantagruel, "I will go and see with mine own eyes, whether it be as thou sayest, or whether thou hast been hatching a vile fraud, for the sake of warming thy ignoble bowels at my expense." And he stalked out of the room and down the passage, looking so awful, that John the waiter, who lingered near the door, and whose countenance is never very florid, looked whiter than the table-cloth spread in the fourth box to the right for the gent who had ordered a kidney. Also John hesitated considerably before he executed Panurge's order for another tumbler of hot brandy and water, as he knew that if Pantagruel had quarrelled with him, his means of payment would be absurdly limited. However, John hath a large heart, so, after five minutes and a-half spent in deliberation, he supplied the consoling beverage, and Panurge gratefully acknowledged the obligation by sipping the liquor slowly, and making it last till eight o'clock, amusing himself in the meanwhile by watching the image of the dial in the looking-glass over the fire, and considering how absurd it was that time should seem to travel backwards. Also, he reflected, how happy he should be if that were actually the case, and how, in his endeavours to return to babyhood, he would contrive to skip over all the floggings, kicks, and cuffs, that would be sure to encounter him on his retrograde journey.

As the clock struck eight, he was interrupted by the reappearance of Pantagruel, who came in, looking so wondrously sorrowful, that John the waiter immediately burst into tears, and the gent in the fourth box felt a bit of kidney sticking uncomfortably in his throat. But, Pantagruel placing his hand on the shoulder of Panurge, spake thus, in a broken voice:

"Old friend, I ask thy pardon. Generally thou art an abominable knave and a liar, and he is a fool who putteth trust in thee; but, in this instance thou art right."

And sitting down, with his elbows on the table, and his face in his hands, Pantagruel wept bitterly. Panurge howled by way of accompaniment. The gent in the fourth box, who had finished his kidney, and who, though he knew nothing of particulars, felt oppressed by a general sense of woe, lit a pipe and sat gloomily by the fire; while John the waiter, folding his arms, and leaning against the door-post, philosophically meditated upon things in general.

MADEMOISELLE PICCOLOMINI is Mademoiselle Piccolomini still. The highly-popular little lady is not yet married, but, we believe, will change her state about the end of the month. Mademoiselle Piccolomini is at present performing with Mr. Willert Beale's troupe, in Italian opera, in Dublin.

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—The second Subscription Concert took place on Thursday evening, changed from Wednesday, to avoid clashing with the Volunteer Ball at Covent Garden. But this was like avoiding Scylla and falling into Charybdis, since the Anniversary Festival of the Royal Society of Musicians was held on Thursday. Mr. Benedict is not very lucky in fixing his nights, his first concert of the year being given on an evening when there was a powerful counter-attraction at St. Martin's Hall. The concert of Thursday evening, however, did not seem to be affected in any way by musical currents in other parts of the metropolis. St. James's Hall was filled in every part; and, among the fashionables in the reserve seats were the Earl of Dudley, President of the Association, and party.

The feature of the selection was again Mendelssohn's Hymn, "Hear my prayer," the impression it made at the first Concert necessitating its repetition. Miss Parepa again sang the solos. In the miscellaneous division of the concert, Miss Parepa sang a new Polka, the air "L'Alouette," from Clapisson's Promise, and the "Shadow Song" from Dinorah, and was encored in all three. Four part-songs were performed for the first time by the choir—"John Anderson, my Jo," arranged by Mr. Hargitt; "The Nightingale," by Mendelssohn; "The Last Rose of Summer," arranged by Mr. G. W. Martin; and "The Forest Home," by Mr. Benedict. The last was encored. The prayer from the market-scene, Masaniello, was also given for the first time. Herr Francisco Berger's part-song, "Night, lovely night," was redemanded and repeated. The choir are evidently making progress. Miss Arabella Goddard played two solos—Handel's "Harmonious Blacksmith," and Benedict's "Where the bee sucks." The first being rapturously encored, Miss Goddard substituted Heller's improvisation on Mendelssohn's air, "On song's bright pinions." The last was hailed with such vociferous applause as might with equal reason have been accepted for an encore; but Miss Goddard only returned to the platform and bowed. Mr. Benedict and Mr. C. E. Horsley alternated the conducting.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.—This Society gave its third concert of the season on Monday last, at the Hanover-square Rooms. The programme was not in accordance with the usual custom of the amateurs, as it did not contain a symphony, but, on this occasion, a chorus of some fifty voices was added to the instrumental force, and selections from Guillaume Tell and Euryanthe, with the choral fantasia of Beethoven, were the features of the concert. A printed apology was distributed, claiming the indulgence of the audience on behalf of Miss Emily Gresham, Mr. Richard Seymour and Mr. Gadsby, all of whom were suffering from colds, and at the last moment Mr. Winn was obliged to supply the place of Mr. Gadsby. The following was the collection:

PART I.

Overture and Introduction (William Tell)		Rossini.
Choral Fantasia		Beethoven.

PART II.

Overture (Cheval de Bronze)		Auber.
Part-Songs	"When the shades of eve" ...	Henry Leslie.
	"Love's heigho"	W. C. Macfarren.
Overture and Finale to Act I. (Euryanthe) ...		Weber.

Conductor—Mr. Henry Leslie.

Considering that the majority of pieces was in a school entirely different to that in which the amateurs are most at home, the performance was highly creditable. One slight hitch took place in the choral fantasia, but the rebellious instruments were soon brought back to their allegiance, and all was well. Angelina was all that could be desired in the solo pianoforte part of the fantasia, and the applause with which she was greeted on entering the overture was redoubled after her performance. A few words of praise are merited by the principals (by Miss Emily Gresham and Mr. Richard Seymour especially) for their careful singing. The chorus was too weak for the hand, but they were encored in Mr. Leslie's part-song, "Where the shades of eve." The solo parts in the introduction to Guillaume Tell and the Finale from Euryanthe were sustained by Miss Emily Gresham, Miss Leffler, Mr. Richard Seymour, and Mr. Winn; the solo parts in the Choral Fantasia by Misses Chambers, Fosbroke, Leffler, Messrs R. Seymour Walker, and Winn. The room was very full.

HERR WILHELM GANZ gave a soirée musicale at his residence in Queen-street, on Thursday evening week. The special pieces were Beethoven's quartet, in E flat, Op. 16, for pianoforte, violin, tenor, and violoncello, executed by Herr Wilhelm Ganz, Herr Deichmann, Herr Adolphe Ganz, and M. Paque; grand duo for pianoforte and violin, "Les Huguenots" (Thalberg and De Beriot), played by Herr Ganz and Herr Deichmann; and a duo for pianoforte, the composition of Herr Ganz, played by the composer and his cara sposa. These were all good performances and were all well received, the preference perhaps being for the quartet. The voice music was superabundant. The singers were Madame Louisa Vinning, Miss Lascelles, Madame Jenny Bauer, Madame Ganz, Herr Reichardt, and Mr. Allan Irving. The Spinning-wheel Quartet, from Martha, sung by Madame Jenny Bauer, Miss Lascelles, Herr Reichardt, and Mr. Allan Irving, was encored, as were also Venzano's valse "Ah che assorta," by Madame Jenny Bauer, and the popular song, "Thou art so near, and yet so far," by Herr Reichardt. The last was the vocal pet of the concert, and was sung to perfection by the German tenor. Madame Ganz displayed a pleasing voice and a cultivated style in the air, "Und ob die Wolke," from the Freischütz, in which she was admirably accompanied in the violoncello obbligato by M. Paque. The rooms were crowded by a brilliant and fashionable company.

HENDON CHOIR.—A series of three amateur concerts, under the direction and management of the Rev. F. D. Rabbitts, B.A., curate, were given last month by the choir of this suburban village, in aid of the funds for building class-rooms. The programmes consisted of a very good selection of vocal and instrumental music, and several of the glees, madrigals, and part-songs were deservedly encored. Mr. Butterworth, organist, presided at the piano. The solo singers and instrumentalists were the Rev. Mr. Rabbitts, Messrs. G. B. Tanqueray, Foot, Cooper, and Dearden. The two solos, played by Annie Butterworth, aged eight years, elicited much applause: and the performance gave universal satisfaction. The proceeds amounted to more than £40.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—Judging from the attendance at Exeter Hall on Friday se'nnight, we may safely infer that Judas Maccabæus is now fairly taking as high a place in public favour as that so long awarded to, and still held by, the Messiah, and more recently to its no less admirable compeer, Israel in Egypt. Long before the commencement of the oratorio, every corner of the vast but inconvenient building was crowded, and many were the disappointed ones who were turned away with the money in their hands, casting longing and envious eyes upon those who had made the wise provision of taking their tickets in advance. Judas Maccabæus was undertaken by Handel at the command of Frederick Prince of Wales, to celebrate the return of his brother the Duke of Cumberland, who, on the 16th of April, 1746, had won the battle of Culloden. It was began and completed in thirty-two days—between the 9th of July and the 11th of August, in the same year as the victory, and achieved a remarkable success (for those days), being performed thirty-eight times, and on the thirtieth occasion the receipts amounting to £400. However, like many other of Handel's great compositions, it was soon comparatively neglected, and, even when occasionally performed, regarded as a work rather heavy in character, though relieved by some pieces which by some chance having become better known are consequently more popular. "Nous avons changé tout cela;" and with such performances as that of Friday, there is no fear of Judas being denied one atom of that esteem which is so justly its due. Taken in its entirety, we may safely say, that so unexceptionable an execution of the work has not before been heard. The influence of the Handel Festivals continues to make itself felt, and the frequent practices have rendered the chorus-singers so thoroughly proficient in their work, that little if any fault or shortcoming could be detected even by ears most critical. Abounding as this work does with choruses of the loftiest and most majestic character, it is eminently calculated to display the quality and test the training of the executants, and, although all were well given, we must single out, "Hear us, O Lord," which ends the first part, "Fall'n is the foe," commencing, and "We never will bow down," concluding the second part, as especially worthy of praise. The last-named choruses are among the most magnificent ever penned, and their effect on this occasion was nothing short of marvellous. Ample testimony was borne to this by the long-sustained applause which followed from the audience.

We observe, by the way, that the Society have withdrawn from their programmes the stereotyped edict forbidding any manifestation of feeling, and wisely, so we think, as it had long ceased to be regarded by the public. It is folly on the part of any givers of entertainments, sacred or secular, to prescribe what shall or shall not be done by the audience, who, after all, please themselves in the matter, and applaud or remain silent precisely as they are impressed with any particular portion of the performance.

We have spoken highly of the chorus-singing, and it is no less gratifying to award equal commendation to the soloists, who, one and all, exerted themselves with the best possible result. Miss Parepa made her first appearance at the Sacred Harmonic, and was heard to considerable advantage in all the music allotted to her. Of the three airs, "O Liberty," "From mighty kings," and "Wise men flattering," sung by Miss Parepa, we are inclined to adjudge the highest place to the last, which was given in a highly artistic manner. Miss Banks, too, who is slowly and surely rising in public favour, confirmed the opinion we have frequently expressed of her singing when at St. Martin's Hall; the air "Pious orgies" being given with remarkable chasteness and expression. Miss Laura Baxter, who only appeared in the third part, sang the air, "Father of Heaven," with great taste and feeling, and joined the before-named ladies in the trio, "See the conquering hero comes," also taking part in the duet, "O lovely peace," with Miss Banks, all of which were highly effective.

Signor Belletti being prevented by indisposition from appearing, a most efficient substitute was found in Mr. Weiss, who, as usual, showed himself a thorough master of Handel, displaying all his well-known qualities of voice and style to the best advantage, and more especially in "Arm, arm ye brave," and "Rejoice O Judah." Every person who has heard Judas, must know that it contains two of the most trying tenor airs ever written, "Call forth thy powers," and "Sound an alarm." On Friday night, Mr. Reeves fairly outshone himself in these, and the effect created, especially by "Sound an alarm," was electric. It was curious to watch the faces of the audience; the excitement produced was just such as we could have imagined the composer to have intended, and we need hardly say the enthusiasm that followed this display was unbounded. Had there been a heavy legal penalty against applause, we think that the most apathetic of the audience would have been mulcted in a severe fine, for such a burst of feeling it would be next to impossible to repress. Totally different in style, but equally well given, was the florid air, "How vain is man," and finer singing throughout could not have been heard. As second tenor, Mr. Montem Smith rendered efficient service in the small part allotted him. The band went as it always does under the bâton of Mr. Costa, and was in every way worthy of fame.

At the next performance, Haydn's Seasons will be given.

ENGLISH OPERA.—An English Opera, under the direction of Dr. James Pech, will be given at the Princess's Theatre, commencing in May next. The season will extend over a period of fifteen weeks. We hear engagements are pending, and in many instances concluded, with some of our most eminent artistes, amongst whom are Mdlle. Parepa, Miss Susan Pyne, Miss Emma Heywood, Mdlle. Jenny Baur, Messrs. Durand, Weiss, and Haigh, with Mdlle. Bury, an eminent cantatrice of Berlin, who, some years back, created a great sensation at Drury Lane Theatre, and who possesses a charming voice, combined with great powers of acting. The band and chorus will be very complete, numbering some 70 or 80 artistes. The operas to be placed upon the stage are spoken of as Gustavus, Oberon, Acis and Galatea, and Les Mousquetaires de la Reine, which ran for 500 nights when produced at Paris, with some of the earlier works of Balfe and other English composers.

BARNSBURY.—On Monday evening, the 27th inst., a lecture was delivered at the Barnsbury Schools, on behalf of the funds, by Mr. Nathaniel Cork. The subject was, "Music, the Church, and the Fire-side." The lecturer traced the origin of many of the psalm tunes found in the various collections now in use. Quoting from the Puritan writer, Myles Coverdale, the lecturer showed that his work, entitled, "Psalms, or Songs of Sion, turned into the language, and set to the tunes of a strange land," contained many of the abominations, in the way of psalm-tunes, even now popular in some sections of the Christian church. Speaking of Fire-side music, Mr. Cork contended that its cultivation would do much to give the English the character of a music-loving nation; that the concert-giving societies now so common fostered a love of display rather than devotion to the art, and that thus although there are thousands of singing classes and choral bodies in and around the metropolis, scarcely one singer in a hundred can take an independent part in a quartet, or sing a song, without displaying ignorance of the first principles of vocalisation. Speaking of the importance of the children of the poor being instructed in the rudiments of the science, the lecturer observed that—

"The cultivation of music does more than is generally imagined in creating a happy and agreeable tone of mind. Long, long after the words of the song have fallen from the lips of the loved one, will its melody float over the troubled spirits—involuntarily and almost unperceived, will calm them like oil upon the waters. Teach the little children of the poor man how to sing, and you do more to make his home happy, to soften down his troubles, than by any other mode you can devise. He may have, without expense, a continual source of enjoyment. Music is God's gift to man, and, properly used, it may diminish much of the moroseness, the dulness, the drunkenness, and the brutality which characterise the labouring classes."

The illustrations, consisting of old chants, chorales, anthems, madrigals, and part-songs, were given in excellent style by Messrs. Belton, Giles, Fluit, Farquharson, Bryne, Hursthouse, Volckman, Alexander, and Stevens. Four young gentlemen of the Abbey Choir also assisted.

LIVERPOOL.—The concerts given by the very talented Brousil Family are honoured with a considerable share of the patronage of our townspeople, and deservedly so, for assuredly if there be a family in which real musical genius, combined with the ability to appreciate more scientific compositions, is concentrated, it is in that of the Brousils. On the occasion of their former visit to Liverpool we spoke of their entertainment in terms of the warmest commendation, and are now glad to remark that their performance evinces a perceptible improvement; their style is more finished, more artistic, and there is a nicer blending of the instruments than was noticed formerly. The programme of the first concert comprised a good selection, and the pieces generally were rendered with a taste and precision which, taking into account the extreme youth of the performers, were truly remarkable. The entertainment commenced with a concerted piece, Airs Russes, including a violin solo, beautifully played by Mdlle. Bertha Brousil. Ernst's Elégie, a lovely composition, given by her in charming style, elicited much applause. Beriot's Potpourri Burlesque, in which the whole of the family were engaged, and acquitted themselves admirably, was vociferously encored. In this piece Mdlle. Bertha executed some passages in harmonics, showing an extraordinary command of the violin. A solo for the concertina, by Regondi, was given by Mons. Adolphe Brousil with an effect but seldom heard from that comparatively insignificant instrument. A great addition has been made to the performance of the Brousil family in the person of Miss Blanche Cole, a charming and talented little creature ten years of age. Her strength of voice, and artistic, easy execution, are far beyond her years, and must be heard to be properly appreciated.

GLOUCESTER—(From a Correspondent).—The third concert of the Gloucester Philharmonic Society took place on Monday, and, like the previous concerts, the Corn Exchange was well attended. Mr. R. G. Morris presided at the pianoforte, in the place of Mr. T. Goodfellow, who was prevented by illness from fulfilling his accustomed duties. The principal singer was Miss Clara Frazer, hitherto unknown in Gloucester. Although suffering from illness on Monday, her début was most successful, and should she again visit the fair city, she may anticipate a hearty reception. Her ballad, "The spell is broken," was warmly applauded, but, under the circumstances, Miss Fraser was unable to do justice to the aria, "Ah, fors' è lui." In the second part, however, the audience were delighted with the manner in which the fair vocalist rendered the once famous, still welcome, "Cherry ripe," and the Scotch ballad, "Comin' through the rye." An encore was in each case unanimously demanded. The other vocal selections were, Mr. Macfarren's glee, "The arrow and the song," well rendered, and "The cottage by the sea," sung by Mr. Dawes with so much effect that the audience were highly pleased. The overtures to La Gazza Ladra and Le Pré aux Clercs, were well played by the band, and agreeably varied the programme.

BIRKENHEAD—(From a Correspondent).—The Birkenhead Amateur Musical Union gave their fourth concert on Wednesday evening, at the Craven Rooms, before a crowded audience. Mr. Gunton was the conductor, and Mr. Charles W. Smith pianist. The concert was unusually interesting, being the first at which the Society has given an entire work. They very wisely selected Professor Sterndale Bennett's May Queen, one of the most genuine and beautiful works of the English school. Although Miss Millar, who sustained the part of the May Queen, was suffering from severe hoarseness, the execution of the cantata was, in every respect, most creditable. Several pieces elicited much applause, particularly the trio, "Shall a clown," &c. The second part of the concert consisted principally of some of the most popular airs from Der Freischütz. Miss Armstrong, in "Softly sighs," was remarkably effective. "Why, good people," elicited a hearty encore. The manner in which Mr. Smith accompanied the singers, particularly in the May Queen, was highly creditable to the talented young professor.

DUBLIN.—Verdi's opera of Trovatore (says the Freeman's Journal of March 6th,) was presented last evening, for the first time this season, with Madame Rudersdorff as Leonora. We deem it but just to advert to this lady's personation of the leading part in this opera, and to speak of her performance with due commendation. Only a few nights since Madame Rudersdorff took the musical public of Dublin by surprise, exciting their delight by her admirable version of the part of Lucrezia Borgia, notwithstanding the difficulty she had to contend with because of the want of adequate support in the male voices. This state of things would have been fatal to an artist of less capacity than Madame Rudersdorff, but it only served in her case to confer upon her an individuality which will not be soon forgotten by the Dublin public. The Leonora last night of Madame Rudersdorff was very little short of the perfection of operatic performance. Her solo singing was truly splendid, and her musical genius, sustained itself nobly throughout the entire of her arduous part, unsustained, we regret to say, by an efficient tenor. The applause she received was pointedly marked, and bestowed with a cordiality and earnestness indicative of the intensity of public appreciation of the genius and ability of this charming vocalist and able actress. Nothing could be more admirable than the vocalism and acting of Madame Borchardt as Azucena, and the Conte di Luna of Signor Aldighieri showed that this popular actor and vocalist has entirely recovered from his recent indisposition. The choruses were effectively rendered, and in all the opera went off smoothly and pleasantly. Il Puritani is announced for repetition this evening.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

PARIS, March 7th.

NEVER hardly has Lent been so little kept in this gay city as at present. Generally during the weeks that precede Easter, there is a dearth of novelty in the dramatic world, and the various brilliant saloons of Paris close for awhile their hospitable doors against the beau monde. But this season a new impetus seems given. All goes on actively. New operas are in preparation; new dramas are brought out; and the various "Concerts d'Artistes" have to keep head against the "Concerts d'Amateurs." This latter amusement has extended itself even to the Tuilleries, where the Empress and a privileged few join in this innocent way of passing their time. While waiting the representation at the Grand-Opéra of the Pierre de Médicis of Prince Poniatowski, the habitués of this theatre have just had a novelty, in the shape of M. Michot, a tenor, who used to sing at the Théâtre-Lyrique. He débuted at the Grand Opéra in the Favorite, in the part of Fernand. He sang remarkably well, especially the airs, "Une ange, une femme inconnue," and "Ange si pure." He was most ably seconded by Madame Barbot in the rôle of Leonora. At the Opéra-Comique, Le Roman d'Elvire—Galathée, and Don Gregorio, draw full houses; and the Théâtre-Lyrique has no reason to repent of its adhesion to the mythology of the ancients, the receipts being anything but mythological. Roger, after performing in the Traviata the part of Alfredo (with Mdme. Penco and Graziani as coadjutors) with unbounded success, has concluded his engagement at the Italian Opera; he has now left for Antwerp. Tamberlik will soon be here to fulfil his engagements at the Italian opera. Meanwhile, the rehearsals of Il Crociato of Meyerbeer are going on actively under the direction of M. Fontana. M. Merly will have a part in this opera.

At the Théâtre-Français no new piece has lately been played, but with such acting as that of Madlle. Plessy and M. Bressant, the attraction of the old ones continues unabated.

A comedy in five acts, and in verse, written by M. Amedée Rolland, has just been brought out at the Odéon. M. Rolland belongs to the school of MM. Ponsard, Augier, &c. His verse is remarkable for its facility, and the piece itself is full of telling speeches, and sound sense. There is not very much plot. The title is Un Parvenu, but the title of "parvenu" can hardly, with justice be given to the sensible old man who, however, fills the part. The tale runs somewhat thus:—Mercier, a man who has made an immense fortune in trade, at length retires on his fortune, and determines to spend his days peaceably. He makes his home comfortable, though not splendid, and surrounded by his wife, his son (a young man of twenty-five), his orphan niece and ward, Laure, and his two brothers (who are the real parvenus), he thinks to pass his life happily. But this kind of quiet little suits his son, whose mind seems made of feeble material, and under the influence of a Count de Mosca, a ruined nobleman with a few generous impulses still left in him, he is inducted into all kinds of dissipation, and at last owes so large a sum to a money-lender that he dare not tell his father of it.

Laure, who really loves her cousin, is, by the artifices of De Mosca, who wishes to marry her himself, induced to break off her marriage with Albert, whom the father proposes to marry to some young lady of noble family. Laure, hearing of Albert's large debts, withdraws her fortune from her guardian's care, and, without Albert's knowledge, pays his debts. Mosca gets Albert to intercede for him with his cousin. Laure refuses, and, deeply hurt, De Mosca gets up a quarrel with Albert. A duel ensues; neither are killed. Albert, learning how nobly his cousin has behaved, repents his follies. Of course, Laure forgives, and a happy marriage is the termination. The title of the piece thus becomes rather vaguely applicable, were it not for the sentiments and speeches scattered here and there. As to the moral, the piece has none in particular. Some speeches were very much applauded, especially these two lines—

"Oui: l'on est quelque chose avec une fortune, Mais on n'est pas quelqu'un."

M. Tisserant played the part of Mercier—M. Delay that of Laure. The other theatres are "waiting" for their pieces, or rather the public are; they will soon be satisfied. The Compère Guillery, at the Ambigu-Comique, you shall soon have an account of. The concerts go on with unabated ardour; one feels astonished sometimes to think how it is that the rooms generally fill. That given by Madame Sainton-Dolby last Thursday, in the salons de l'Hôtel du Louvre, was very successful. The splendid salon was crowded, and Mad. Sainton most warmly received by both her French and English audience. The family of our ambassador was there. M. Sainton performed some very charming pieces on the violin—Ritter on the piano gave equal satisfaction. Jules Lefort sang two songs, a cantique and a very pretty French ballad, "Aimons toujours." The songs Mad. Sainton gave were rather of a grave kind, but then it is that suited to her voice, and yet the song that seemed to please most of all was a little Scotch ballad, "Over the sea, over the sea," and I could hear many of the French portion of the audience humming the air as they left the concert-room. The young prima donna, at St. Petersburgh, Mademoiselle Lagrua, has been re-engaged for three years, so says Le Nord, at the rate of 100,000 francs for five months. The demolition of part of the Théâtre-Français is at length decided on; the municipal administration have just made themselves adjudicataires of the house No. 216 in the Rue St. Honoré, and which quite recenly belonged to the Ministère d'Algérie. In April this house will be pulled down, and then the new alterations be made in the theatre. Mr. Chabrol has been charged with the works. The Théâtre-Français, which presents at present only two façades, one in a line with the Rue de Richelieu, and the other with the little Rue de Montpensier, will now have a third, looking on the Rue St. Honoré. Upon the spot occupied by the house that will be pulled down, a new place is to be built, which will bear the name of Place Napoléon. This great central building will leave the Rue St. Honoré to join the Rue Richelieu, passing by the corner of the street. The enlargement of the house will take the actual foyer, and the entrance on the Rue Richelieu will only serve for those on foot.

The sisters Marchisio are expected here at the commencement of April, and then the rehearsals of Semiramide, translated into French by Méry, will begin. Two new compositions, on dit, are being prepared, one at the Théâtre-Lyrique (by Theodore Semet—Gil Blas; they must be quick, however, for as Mad. Carvalho goes to London in April, but little time is left); and the other is at the Opéra-Comique, Chateau Trompette, by Gevaert. At the Vaudeville, Mdlle. Jane Elslèr has succeeded Mad. Doche in the Penélope. Mdlle. Dejazet is again playing in a little vaudeville in one act, P'tit fi, p'tit mignon. She fills by turns the part of a young Zouave and an old grandmother.

BRITISH MUSEUM.—Lord Taunton has been elected a Trustee of the British Museum in the place of Lord Macaulay.

MRS. KEELEY, reappeared, on Thursday evening, at the Lyceum Theatre, in the revived drama of the Sergeant's Wife.

ST. PETERSBURGH.—At the Italian opera, La Traviata has been produced, in which a young English lady, the daughter of a distinguished composer, sang with great success; but we did not hear Mdlle. Balfe ourselves, and shall not be able to give our own opinion of her until after the revival of Rigoletto, which will be restored to the repertory expressly for her the day after to-morrow, Sunday. At present, all we can say is that the public did not cause Mdlle. Balfe to suffer, in La Traviata, from the recollection of that sublime and deeply-regretted lady, poor Madame Bosio, whose glory and most striking triumph were the part of Violetta. It was to be feared that the painful remembrance of one so dear might be fatal to the daring young artist, who thus took possession of a part which is, of itself, difficult to support, and which might prove still more formidable by the emotion the audience might not be able to resist, and dangerous on account of the comparisons which, ever without justice, but swayed by their imperfectly soothed regret, they might institute to the detriment of the débutante. Nothing of the kind took place, however. Mdlle. Balfe was rapturously applauded two successive evenings. She was called before the curtain, flowers were showered on her—in fact, nothing was wanting to her success.—Journal de St. Pétersbourg.

PARIS.—Less than a year ago, we gave, in these columns, an account of the grand musical fêtes got up by the Orpheonists of France assembled at the Palais de l'Industrie, Paris. At present there is in preparation a fresh solemnity, which we joyfully announce, being convinced of the success of the enterprise, and of the importance of such a manifestation for musical art; we allude to the trip of the Orpheonists to England. Three thousand French singers will proceed, about the 15th of next June, to London, and repeat, in the Crystal Palace, the pacific demonstration witnessed in Paris. These gentlemen are servants of Art, and—whether they appreciate all the importance of their mission, or whether they do not—obey the mighty agent of civilisation, which is pushing forward and widening its sphere of action every day. From all points of France they gathered together at Paris; this was the first step. Starting to-day from this centre, they will irradiate, in every direction, through England, Germany, and, perhaps, Russia, carrying with them the highest civilisation—that civilisation which imposes itself on nations without arms or combats—that civilisation which unites men and bids them live! Everything is being prepared for this splendid enterprise. Last Thursday, the managers of the Orphéon paper invited to a family dinner a large number of the representatives of the Parisian Press, and the correspondents of the principal English newspapers. It was, indeed, a family dinner, for all who partook of it felt the same desire for the success of the enterprise, and the same wish to co-operate in effecting it; several toasts were given. We must especially mention the generous words of M. Delaporte, the indefatigable director of the Orpheonic Societies, and the speech of the correspondent of the English paper, the Globe,* who succeeded in uniting to real simplicity that pungent and sterling humour which distinguishes good English speakers. M. de la Bédollière sang some couplets of his own to the air of La Vigne, by P. Dupont. The original words of the song expressed, as our readers will recollect, but faint sympathy with England. They would have been rather badly adapted for the occasion, so M. de la Bédollière merely retained the air, which he really improved by his words. It is superfluous to add that M. de la Bédollière was rapturously applauded; the applause was, as it were, but the prelude to the cordial reception which awaits our compatriots on the other side of the water.—Europe Artiste.

THE HAGUE.—It is not in a few hastily written lines that we can convey even a faint idea of the prodigious effect produced yesterday evening, by one of the most celebrated of contemporary violinists, M. Henri Wieniawski. All those who enjoyed the privilege of hearing, on various occasions, and always with fresh interest, this celebrated artist, during his last tour in Holland, and who had the satisfaction of being present at the brilliant solemnity, yesterday evening, will share our opinion that M. Wieniawski has, since his last visit, made a degree of progress that then appeared impossible. Yet nothing is more true. The quality of sound peculiar to M. Wieniawski, a year or two ago, assuredly possessed a delicacy, a caressing sweetness, beyond description; the great artist has improved it, by imparting to it greater breadth, and marvellous suavity, without allowing it to lose aught of its penetrating quality. We again admired in Herr Wieniawski that wonderful fingering, the dexterity of which is incomparable, enabling him to execute immense difficulties with frightful rapidity and imperturbable correctness. What we are never tired of admiring in this celebrated artist is the fact that, placed in his magic hands, we do not think we are listening to a violin, but to some new and unknown instrument, which emits incomparable sounds, by which he sways the most exquisite emotions of the soul, by which he causes his hearers to experience those ineffable joys which it is hopeless attempting to describe. This, in fact, is what constitutes the great triumph of M. Wieniawski. There are players who are perfect masters of the mechanical difficulties of their instrument, and whom it is impossible to accuse of the slightest defect, but who, notwithstanding, will never produce the shadow of that enthusiasm which Wieniawski excites and augments each successive time. On being brought into contact with his totally exceptional and, in the highest degree, sympathetic musical organisation, the assembly are subjugated, fascinated, and carried away by the profound impressions the artist sends thrilling through them.

* The well-known "Father Prout."—ED. M. W.

M. Wieniawski played three times: a concerto by Viotti, with a splendid cadence; two new pieces of his own composition—a Légende, most ravishingly poetical, and a Rondo giocoso, sparkling with wit and dash—and, lastly, the celebrated Di tanti palpiti, as he had never been heard to play it before, for, in this case, it is not difficult to believe that he is continually advancing towards a degree of perfection, the boundaries of which he appears not yet to have attained.

Is it necessary to add that M. Wieniawski was honoured with the warmest marks of approbation, and recalled three times after each piece?

THE APOLLO AND MARSYAS AT VENICE.—On Monday, the 27th ultimo, His Excellency the Governor of Venice, accompanied by Baron Prato, secretary to the Luogotenenza, visited the I. R. Arcade mia di Belli Arti, in order to inspect Raphael's painting of Apollo and Marsyas, on exhibition there side by side with the original drawing for it belonging to the Accademia. His Excellency spent a considerable time in admiring this masterpiece, and in comparing the two works. Before leaving his Excellency added his signature to Mr. Moore's collection of autographs of conspicuous persons who have visited the picture. It is said, in order to pay every possible honour to so a great a work of art, and to diminish risk of damage to it, the government at Vienna has forwarded a despatch to Venice, ordaining that Mr. Morris Moore's baggage be exempted from search by the Custom-house officials on his leaving the latter city. The artists and lovers of art express themselves in the most rapturous terms upon the obvious authenticity of this, in various respects, unique work of Sanzio.

DON GIOVANNI AT THE ITALIENS.

(From an Occasional Correspondent).

PARIS, Feb. 26th.

THE production of Mozart's great work, in spite of many serious drawbacks, has proved eminently successful, the special attraction being Alboni's Zerlina. The report that M. Roger would undertake the part of the hero has turned out a mere canard. The suggestion was made to him, I learn, but I cannot believe that he ever entertained it seriously for one moment. If Mario, with all his captivating graces of person and his thorough instincts as a refined gentleman, failed to realise the character, what chance could M. Roger have, who has but little of the elegant comedian, and would have to sacrifice the music no less than his Italian confrère. For the admirable French tenor's sake, for Mozart's sake, and for the public's sake, it is as well the exhibition did not take place. Signor Badiali, a good artist, notwithstanding, is far from being the beau idéal of a Don Juan; but he sings the music correctly and with style, which are the most essential considerations. We have to wait a long time before another Tamburini arrives; but, in the meanwhile, let us be content with a singer like Signor Badiali, who comes forward only as the representative of Mozart.

Having found Madame Penco so charming in Zerlina, I did not expect to see her so excellent in Donna Anna. Her conception of the part was extremely good. Grandeur and dignity do not constitute the principal elements in her acting, as in Grisi and Titiens; but her passion was not without force, while her pathos was genuine. She sang the music well throughout, and was altogether an honourable successor to Madame Frezzolini. Madame Cambardi (why not Chambard, her real name?), who has been filling all sorts of parts at the Italiens with more or less success, from Leonora in the Trovatore, down to Elisa in La Sonnambula, sustained the part and sang the music of Elvira creditably.

I have said that Alboni's Zerlina was the special attraction of the performance. The readers of the Musical World, who cannot have forgotten this great artist in the part, will readily credit me. More exquisitely beautiful, pure, musician-like singing I never heard. Alboni, who invariably pays such respect to Rossini's music, of which she is one of the few living real interpreters, is not disposed to meddle with Mozart. The most rabid German could not be more scrupulous. This, after all, is a small merit in a legitimate singer like Alboni, who is not compelled to have recourse to clap-trap to produce effect, and has no one part of her voice better than another. Of the two great airs, "Batti, batti," and "Vedrai carino," I will not take upon myself to say which was most exquisite, which most perfect. "Batti, batti," made the heart beat; but "Vedrai carino" filled the eyes with tears. I never heard anything in singing more delicious than the opening of the last air by Alboni. But why should I dwell upon Alboni's Zerlina, when you and your readers know all and all about it? I must add, nevertheless, that her acting, full of life and heartiness, completely realized the picture Mozart must have had in his mind of the impressible peasant girl when he composed the duets, "Giovinette, che fate all' amore" and "La ci darem."

Signor Gardoni is a favourite with the audiences of the Salle Ventadour, and Don Ottavio, to my thinking, is one of his best performances. He sings "Il mio tesoro" with infinite taste, and goes through the part gracefully and unobtrusively, as becomes the love-sick swain of the old comedy. Signor Zucchini is a long way off from Lablache in Leporello, and Signor Angelini not quite equal to Signor Tagliafico in the Commendatore.

The opera has proved an undoubted attraction, when many of the old favourites of the popular school could not draw. This is a good sign, and speaks well for the growing taste of the French public.

HOW SPOHR LEARNED THE HORN.

(From the "Autobiography.")

IN 1808, there was held at Erfurt the famous Congress, during which Napoleon had as guests his friend, the Emperor Alexander, and the kings and princes of Germany, his allies. All the sight-seers of the neighbourhood flocked to Erfurt to view the pomps displayed there. I, also, set out from Gotha, with some of my pupils, less with the object of seeing the grandees of this earth, than of admiring those ornaments of the Théatre-Français, Talma, and Mdlle. Mars. The Emperor had sent for his tragic actors from Paris, and, every evening, they gave one of the classic works of Corneille or Racine. I thought that I and my travelling companions should be able to be present at one of these performances, but I learned that, unfortunately, they were intended only for the different sovereigns and their suites, and that every one else was excluded. I hoped, however, I should still be able to obtain a place in the orchestra, by the aid of the musicians, but I was compelled to give up this idea, for they were strictly prohibited from introducing any person whatever. At length I hit upon the plan of replacing, with my pupils, an equal number of musicians, and of witnessing the performance, by playing the music between the acts. A small present gained the consent of the musicians, who knew very well that their substitutes would replace them properly. But another difficulty sprang up. The violin and alto parts furnished us with only three places, and as we did not know how to play any other orchestral instrument, one of us would have been compelled to give up the performance. In this crisis, I suddenly conceived the idea of trying whether I could not, in a day, learn enough of the horn to take the part of second horn. I went off at once to the person whose substitute I wished to be, and, borrowing his instrument, set about practising. After dinner, my pupils went out for a walk; I, however, resumed my practising, and, despite the pain I felt in my lips, I could not be easy until I was capable of playing correctly the horn-part in the overture—which, it is true, was very easy—and the occasional music to be executed in the course of the evening.

Thus prepared, I, with my pupils, joined the other musicians, each bearing his instrument under his arm, and we reached our places without difficulty. We found the room, in which the stage had been erected, brilliantly lighted up, and already filled by the numerous suite of the sovereigns. The places reserved for Napoleon and his guests were quite close to the orchestra. Being such a newly-fledged cornist, I confided the task of conducting the orchestra to the most capable of my pupils, and placed myself under his guidance. Very shortly after we had tuned our instruments, the august personages appeared and the overture commenced. The orchestra formed a long line turned towards the stage, and the musicians were strictly prohibited from looking round at the princely visitors, to gratify their curiosity. As I had been informed of this beforehand, I had taken with me a little looking-glass, by the help of which I was enabled to examine at my ease the arbitrators of the destinies of Europe, directly the overture was over. I was, however, soon so much captivated by the admirable acting of the tragedians, that I abandoned my looking-glass to my pupils, and devoted all my attention to the stage. But the pain I felt in my lips increased each time I had to play between the acts; and, at the conclusion of the performance, my lips were so swollen and discoloured that I could scarcely sup. Even the next day, on my return home, my young wife was not a little surprised at beholding me thus with lips like a negro's; and I augmented her consternation by informing her they were reduced to that state in consequence of kissing the pretty girls of Erfurt. She laughed heartily at me, however, when she heard the story of how I learned the horn.

MUSICIANS ONLY MUSICIANS.—"It is worth notice," says the Scotsman, "that excellence in poetry, painting, and sculpture, and other artistic pursuits, has been found compatible with high ability in political performance and the whole range of human business. Rubens, Michael Angelo, Leonardo da Vinci, Milton, Dante, Petrarch, Goethe, Hugo, Lamartine, were mixed up with the conduct of the world's affairs, but a mere musician was never known to excel in aught beyond the gamut."

[Our contemporary perhaps intends "a mere Scotch musician;" otherwise, he is completely in error.—ED.]

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

THE HIGHLAND ECHO, by W. H. Holmes, for the pianoforte, price 3s., is published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where may be obtained W. H. Holmes's Selections for the drawing-room, of Pianoforte Works by eminent composers. No. 1, "Inspiration," by Wolff; No. 2, "Gaiety," by Handel. Price 1s. each.

LES ETOILES ET LEUR LANGAGE, by Georgiana Holmes, an elegant Nocturne, for the pianoforte, price 3s., is published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

LA CHASSE, by L. Guenee, Morceau Caracteristique, for the pianoforte, is published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

CAPRICE BOHEME, by R. Lindley, is published, for the pianoforte, price 4s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW GALOP, "The Reindeer Galop," by Louis Diehl, is just published, for the pianoforte, beautifully illustrated in colours, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where may be obtained, price 2s., "Yet ere I seek a distant shore," composed by L. Diehl, and sung with great success by Mr. George Perren.

NEW FANTASIA, "Bella Adorata," by Jules Brissac (on two favourite Italian airs), is just published, for the pianoforte, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where the following compositions for the pianoforte, by Jules Brissac, may be obtained, "Bella Figlia" (Rigoletto). price 2s. 6d., and "Quando le sere" (Luisa Miller), price 3s.

NEW SONG, "The Suliote War Song," by Brinley Richards, sung with distinguished success by Mr. Santley, is published, price 3s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where the following compositions of Mr Brinley Richards may be obtained, "The blind man and summer," sung by Miss Palmer, price 2s. 6d.; "The harp of Wales," sung by Mr. Sims Reeves; and "Etifel," romance for the pianoforte, price 2s.

NEW SONG, "The Dew-drop and the Rose," by G. A. Osborne, is published, price 2s 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where "Pauline," Nocturne, for the pianoforte, by G. A. Osborne, may be obtained, price 3s.

NEW SONG, "Sympathy," by E. Aguilar, poetry by Ellis Bell, is just published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where "Sunset Glow," Reverie, for the pianoforte, by E. Aguilar, may be obtained, price 3s.

NEW SONG, "I would I were a butterfly," by A. Schloesser, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONG, "Flowers! lovely flowers," by Charles McKorkell, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where may be obtained "Souvenir de Gluck" (Armide), 3s., and "La Joyeuse," Souvenir des Champs Elysees, 3s., composed for the pianoforte by C. McKorkell.

NEW SONG, "Fare thee well," by Dr. James Pech, is just published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where the following compositions by Dr. James Pech may be obtained:—"Weeds and flowers," song, for voice and piano, price 2s. 6d.; "The bridal morn," four-part song, for soprano, alto or contralto, tenor, and bass, sung by the Vocal Association, price 2s. in score; and "Introduction and fugue," for the organ, price 3s.

NEW ITALIAN SONG, "Il Sogno," by Signor G. Monreal, is just published, for mezzo-soprano or baritone, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where may be obtained "Ah, possa il ciel arridere," tersetto, for soprano, tenore, e baritone, and "La Divina melodia," Nocturne, for the pianoforte, price 3s., composed by Signor Monreal.

NEW SONG, "Wert thou mine," by Frank Mori, composed expressly for, and sung by Mr. Sims Reeves with the greatest success, is published, price 2s. 6d., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONG, "Leonora," by Elizabeth Stirling, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW FOUR-PART SONGS, by G. A. Macfarren, for two tenors and two basses. No. 1, "The fairies' even song," price 2s.; No. 2, "The world's festivals," price 3s.; No. 3, "The arrow and the song," price 2s. The above have been sung with great success by Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, Mr. Benedict's Vocal Association, and the Polyhymnian Choir. London: Published by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where may be obtained the following vocal compositions of Mr. G. A. Macfarren, "Psquita," price 2s. 6d., and "The thoughts of youth," poetry by Longfellow, price 2s.

NEW SONG, "The stepping-stones," by Henry Baker, poetry by Charles Mackay, Esq., is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

NEW SONGS by Maurice Cobham, "Awake, little pilgrim," poetry by the Rev. D. T. K. Drummond, price 2s. 6d., and "Look on the brightest side," price 2s. 6d. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W., where may be obtained "The Glory of Scotland," favourite national airs, for the pianoforte, arranged by Maurice Cobham, price 3s.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW LIST.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS.

Complete for the Pianoforte, in cloth. Price 6s. Forming the 20th volume of Boosey and Sons' series of Operas.

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA and WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA.

Edited by J. W. Davison, with Critical and Biographical introductions. In one volume. Price 4s.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

Complete in one volume. Edited by J. W. Davison, with Introduction and Portrait. Price 8s.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

Complete for Pianoforte. By Henry Smart. Price 8s.

DE BERIOT'S AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN,

Complete with all the Variations, Nos. 1 to 7, in one book. Price 1s.

 Pianoforte part (ad. lib.), price 3s. 6d.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN.

By Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky. Price 1s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' ARRANGEMENT

Of Balfe's "Rifleman form," as a March for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. 6d.

 As performed by command of the Queen by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace.

KUHE'S TWO NEW FANTASIAS

On "Domino Noir" and "Zampa." Price 3s. each.

GLUCK'S IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS.

ow ready, the Three Principal Songs, with English words. Price 2s. each.
1. "Oh, Greece, how mourns thy hapless daughter."
2. "Ever linked from early childhood."
3. "Oh, thou that wert of life the source."

The complete Opera, in English and French. Price 8s.

E. J. LODERS' NEW SONG,

"ADIEU DEAR HOME." Ballad. Price 2s.

CAMPANA'S POPULAR SONG,

"THE ORPHAN CHILD" (M' appar' sulla tomba). New Edition. Price 2s.

BALFE'S TWO NEW SONGS,

"MAGENTA" and "THE QUADROON GIRL." Both beautifully Illustrated in Colours. Price 2s. 6d. each.

REICHARDT'S SONG,

"THOU ART, O NEAR." Price 3s. Also, arranged as a Waltz, by Laurent, price 4s.; and for Pianoforte, by Asher, price 3s.

DINORAH. PART I.

For Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words. Price 1s. To be completed in Eight Monthly Parts.

STANDARD OVERTURES,

For Large and Small Band. The first number of Boosey and Sons new series (The Crown Diamonds) will be ready by April. Price 5s. and 8s. To be continued every month.

SCHLOESSER'S THREE GRAND DUETS,

On "Martha," "La Traviata," and "Dinorah." Price 5s. each. Published this day.

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

DANCE MUSIC BY FREDERIC PERRY.

			s.	d.
The St. Andrew's Quadrille, dedicated to	Miss Baron	.. ..	3	0
The Wardour Mazurka ,,	Lord Arundell	.. .. ..	4	0
The Vancouver Quadrille ,,	T. B. Chilty, Esq.	.. .. ..	3	0
The Valentia Polka ,,	George Griffiths, Esq.	.. ..	3	0
The Augusta Mazurka ,,	Miss C. A. Thistlewayte	.. ..	2	0
The Avondale Schottische ,,	Miss Baron	.. .. ..	2	0
The Helena Polkas ,,	The Misses Northey	.. ..	3	0
The Pauline Valses ,,	The Misses Warner	.. ..	3	0
The Castellon Polka ,,	Miss Fanny Hutchinson	.. ..	2	0
The Cotham Polka ,,	Miss Mary Lorymer	.. ..	2	0
The Promenade Polkas ,,	Miss Kirwan	.. .. ..	2	0
The Salopian Quadrilles ,,	Miss Brown	.. .. ..	3	0

Addison, Hollier and Lucas, 210, Regent-street, London.

LURLINE.—The following are the favourite pieces in WALLACE'S new and successful Opera, LURLINE:—"Under a spreading coral." "Take this cup of sparkling wine," "Flow on, oh, silver Rhine," "When the night winds," "Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer," sung by Miss Pyne; "Gentle troubadour," sung by Miss Pilling; "Our barque in moonlight beaming," "Sweet form that on my dreamy gaze," "The chimes of home," sung by Mr. Harrison; "A Father's love," "Love, transient passion," sung by Mr. Santley.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

LURLINE.—WALLACE'S NEW GRAND OPERA for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets, by W. H. Calcott; also Fantasias and Rondos from "Lurline" by Wallace, Favarger, Osborne, and other eminent composers. Valses and Quadrilles from "Lurline."

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

CHARLES LUDERS' COMPOSITIONS.

FOR THE PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
SIX ROMANCES ANGLAISES, Op. 27	6	0
LA CAPRICIEUSE, Grand Valse, Op. 31	3	0
LA DANSE DES SORCIERES, Op. 38	3	0
GALOP, Composé pour le Roi de Prusse, Op. 34	3	0
LA TARENTELLE, Op. 41 (Dediée à Ferdinand Praeger)	3	0
LE CORSAIRE, Op. 42, Mélodie historique (Dediée à Edouard Roeckel) ..	3	0

VOICE AND PIANOFORTE.

	s.	d.
L'EMIGRE IRLANDAIS, Ballad, translated from the English poem of Lady Dufferin by the Chevalier de Chatelain. Sung by Miss Dolby ..	3	0

LONDON: DUNCAN DAVISON, 244, REGENT-STREET.

JUST PUBLISHED.—Eight Ballads by Adolfo Ferrari, price 2s. each:—

No. 1. "SWEET DAYS OF YOUTH."
2. "LONG YEARS OF CARE."
3. "WHEN MID THE FESTIVE SCENES WE MEET."
4. "BREAK NOT BY HEEDLESS WORD THE SPELL," for contralto or barytone.
5. "SWEET HOPE."
6. "REMEMBRANCE."
7. "GRATITUDE."
8. "I LOVE THE OAK," for contralto or barytone.

London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.,
Where may be obtained

Two Chamber Trios for soprano, mezzo-soprano, and contralto: "Come, sisters, let us dance and sing," 2s. 6d. "Come, fairies, come, the stars shine bright," 2s. 6d. Three Italian Songs: "Vieni, Vieni," serenade, 2s.; "L' onda che mormora, romance, 2s. 6d.; "Ah, se piacer mi vuol," romance, 2s.

"These ballads are beautiful compositions, thoroughly English in their style and character. The words, always selected with literary taste, are set to music with the utmost attention, not only to sentiment and expression, but to all the niceties of accent and of prosody."

"The two trios, which are for female voices, and calculated for the accomplished lady-singers who are now found in every social circle, are among the most attractive drawing-room music that we have heard for a long time."—Spectator.

"Signor Ferrari's "Eight Ballads" are, without exception, charming. They are purely vocal, and they have this precious quality—that the melody, in every instance, enables the singer to give the clearest and most expressive utterance to every word and syllable of the poetry. Where all are so good we find it difficult to pick out any of them for special notice; we may say, however, that the greatest impression on us has been made by "Sweet days of youth," with its rich accompaniment; by "Sweet hope," with its graceful and expressive simplicity; and by "Long years of care," with its great tenderness.

"The two chamber trios are both on fairy subjects, and are charmingly light and delicate. They are for female voices; and gracefully warbled by three sweet-voiced damsels, are truly fairy music. Of the Italian Songs it is sufficient to say, that "Vieni, Vieni," a serenade, with elegant verses, by the accomplished Signor Maggioni, possesses all the features which we have attempted to describe as characterising Ferrari's music."—Illustrated News.

"THOU ART SO NEAR AND YET SO FAR."—Reverie, for the pianoforte, on the above popular Song, by R. Andrews, is published, price 2s., by Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex.
Saturday, March 10, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 11. SATURDAY, MARCH 17, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

U. K.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SIXTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 26th, 1860.
THE INSTRUMENTAL PIECES BY BEETHOVEN.

PROGRAMME.
PART I.

GRAND SEPTET, in E flat major, Op. 20 .. .. .. Beethoven.
For Violin, Viola, Clarinet, Horn, Bassoon, Violoncello, and Contra Bass.
Herr Becker, Mr. Doyle, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. C. Harper, Mr. Chisholm, Mr. Severn, and Signor Piatti.
(By unanimous desire.)

SONG.
SONG.
SONATA, in E major, Op. 109, for Pianoforte Solo .. Beethoven.
(First time.)
Miss Arabella Goddard.

PART II.

TRIO, in E flat, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello.. .. Beethoven.
(First time.)
Herr Becker, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.

SONG.
SONG.
GRAND SONATA, in A (Op. 47), for Pianoforte and Violin, dedicated to Kreutzer .. .. Beethoven.
Miss Arabella Goddard and Herr Becker.

CONDUCTOR—MR. BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradberry's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Wylde, Great Hall, Hungerford Market; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church, street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Loader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—On Wednesday evening, March 28, the Vocal Association (President, the Right Hon. the Earl of Dudley). Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Mr. C. E. Horsley. Artist—Madame Sainton-Dolby, Miss Fanny Bowland; pianoforte, Miss Eleanor Ward; violin, Mons. Sainton. Madrigals and part songs by the choir, under the direction of M. Benedict. Tickets, 1s., 3s., and 5s., at the Hall.

MISS LAURA BAXTER has the honour to announce that her Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert will take place, at St. James's Hall, on the 15th of May. Under the immediate patronage of The Marquis of Lansdowne, The Right Honorable The Earl Mount Edgcumbe, The Countess Mount Edgcumbe, The Lady Brownlow, Viscount Valletort, M.P., The Lady Katherine Valletort, &c. Communications respecting the Concert, Lessons, &c., to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, 155, Albany-street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MR. AGUILAR'S SECOND SOIREE will take place at 17, Westbourne-square, W., on Saturday, March 24, at Half past Eight, when he will be assisted by Miss Lindo and Mr. Henry Holmes.—Programme. Sonata in G (Op. 29, No. 1), Beethoven; Songs, Rossini and Beethoven; Variations in A, Mozart; Solos, Violin, Tartini and Corelli; Volkslied and caprice in E (Op. 33, No. 2), Mendelssohn; Song, Schubert; Grand Sonata in A minor, Piano and Violin, Beethoven; Rondo brillant, Weber. Ticket, 5s.; Triple admission, 10s. 6d.; at the principal music warehouses.

MADAME CLARA NOVELLO'S FAREWELL.—MADAME CLARA NOVELLO respectfully acquaints her friends and the public that she will revisit England in the autumn to sing at a few Oratorios and Concerts in London and the provinces, being her last appearances in public. Communications from Musical Societies to be addressed to Cramer and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MASTER HORTON CLARIDGE ALLISON (Pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes), begs to announce that at the first of his Pianoforte Performances, which will take place at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Tuesday, March 27th, to commence at three o'clock precisely, he will have the honor of playing a selection from the works of the following composers:—S. Bach, Handel, Haydn, Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Herz. Master H. C. Allison will be assisted by the following eminent artistes. Vocalists: Miss Ransford, Miss Fanny Rowland; Mr. Allan Irving. Instrumentalists: Mr. H. Blagrove, Mr. R. Blagrove, Mr. Aylward. Accompanyist, Mr. Hammond. Tickets, for the series, One Guinea; for a single performance, 10s. 6d.; to be had of Master H. C. Allison, 143, Marylebone-road, N.W. All seats reserved. The pianoforte used at the above performances will be by Messrs. Broadwood and Sons.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER, Tenor. All communications respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Ballad or English opera, to be addressed to his private residence, 17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MR. CHARLES SALAMAN'S EVENING CONCERT, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday, March 29th, at Half-past Eight. Vocalists:—Madame Catherine Hayes, Madlle. Parepa, Miss Stabbach, Miss Eliza Hughes, and Herr Reichardt. Instrumentalists:—Pianoforte, Mr. Salaman; Violin, Herr Molique and Mr. H. C. Blagrove; Viola, Mr. R. Blagrove; Violoncello, Herr Lidel. Accompanyist, Mr. Frank Mori. Programmes will be shortly published. Tickets, 7s. each; family ticket, for four persons, One Guinea; of Mr. Salaman, 36, Baker-street, and of the principal music-shops.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—Mr. Gye has the honour to announce that the season will commence on Tuesday, April 10th. The Programme, with full particulars of the arrangements, will be issued in a few days.
Royal Italian Opera, March 14, 1860.

MISS STABBACH will sing Charles Salaman's New Ballad, "Good bye! a long good bye," at the composer's concert, on the 29th March. Published by Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street. Price 2s. 6d.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 66, Burton-crescent, New-road.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

MDLLE. MARIE WIECK, Pianist.—Letters respecting engagements for concerts and lessons to be addressed, 14, Leinster-square, Hyde-park, W.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 20, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

W. T. BRIGGS (Bass).—Communications relative to engagements for oratorios or concerts, to be addressed, "Cathedral Choir, Worcester."

MR. F. SCOTSON CLARK is in town for the season.—Letters respecting lessons or engagements for the pianoforte or harmonium to be addressed to him, care of Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MADEMOISELLE ANTONIA SPEYER begs to announce her return to town for the season. All letters to be directed to 7, Belgrave-street South, S.W.

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON.—Mr. C. M. SHEE respectfully informs Musical Professors that he continues to undertake the arrangement of Concerts, Soirees, Matinees, as well as Programmes and Books of Words, at very moderate charges. Address, 105, Wardour-street, Oxford-street.

CONSERVATORIO AT COLOGNE.—Under the direction of Capellmeister FERDINAND HILLER.—Beginning of the next term, the 2nd April. For particulars or any information, apply to the Secretary of the Conservatorio, 35, Marzellenstrasse, Cologne.

"THE ARION" (Right-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 18, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.
F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.
Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

ST. MARK'S, MYDDLETON-SQUARE.—An Organist is required for the above church. Candidates (capable of conducting a choir) are requested to forward testimonials, etc., to Mr. H. Johnson, Churchwarden, 36, Amwell-street, E.C., on or before Wednesday, the 21st inst. Salary, £40 per annum.

ORGAN WANTED.—The Guardians of Mile End Old Town are desirous of obtaining for the Workhouse a Finger Organ. The size of the Chapel is 70 feet long, 24 feet broad, and about 30 feet high. Descriptive particulars and terms for 3 months' hire, including fixing and removal, with price, if then purchased, to be forwarded to Mr. E. J. Southwell, Clerk to the Board, Bancroft-road, Stepney, N.E.

MICHAEL COSTA, the Eminent Composer, beautifully engraved on Steel, from a Photograph by Mayall, is the Portrait to be issued with the ILLUSTRATED NEWS OF THE WORLD, No. 111, March 17, or any other of the 100 Portraits already published, may be had in lieu of the above if preferred. Price 6d., by Post, 7d. THE THIRD SERIES of the DRAWING ROOM PORTRAIT GALLERY (for 1860), containing Forty Portraits and Memoirs, (issued to subscribers only), with the paper for Forty weeks, from date of subscription, for 30s., post free. FIRST and SECOND SERIES for 21s. each, (without papers). Quarterly subscription, 7s. 11d., post free. Of all Newsvenders. Office, 199, Strand, W.C.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address, M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son.

WANTED, immediately, a Pupil in a Musical Establishment, where he will have an opportunity of acquiring a thorough knowledge of the profession in all its branches. Apply to Herr Winzer, Newcastle, Staffordshire.

IMPORTANT.—To be disposed of, immediately, a well-established Music Practice, including New Organ at good salary, in a Town of upwards of 40,000 inhabitants, and surrounded by large populations. The Advertiser is about to leave the kingdom. Apply, by letter only, to the care of Messrs. Addison and Co., 210, Regent-street, London, W.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.
Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to
THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons' military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

NEW SONGS. By the Composer of "Speak gently," "Castilmon," &c., &c. "Minnie, I would dwell with thee!" dedicated by permission to Mr. Sims Reeves, 2s.; "Were I a little bird like thee!" illustrated title-page, 2s. Post-free for half-price in postage stamps, of the composer, Brook-house, Hackney, and all music-sellers.

Shortly will be Published,
TWO EVENING SERVICES IN A MAJOR: Cantate and Deus, Magnificate, and Nunc Dimittis, with Organ Accompaniment. Composed by E. Bunnett, Mus. Bac., Cantab., Assistant Organist of Norwich Cathedral. Price (to Subscribers) 8s. Subscriber's names will be received by the Author, Upper Close, Norwich, and by the Publishers, Messrs. Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London, W.

Second Edition, Folio, pp. 40, stitched. Price, complete, 7s. 6d.
R. R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately, Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.

REVIEWS.

"A set of Four-part Songs, for voices"—composed by Henry Smart (Cramer, Beale and Chappell). One of these —"Cradle-song" (No. 3)—has been heard at the concerts of Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, where it was unanimously extolled as one of the most attractive things of its kind—as one, in short, of its accomplished composer's very best, and therefore worthy any amount of praise. The voices, as managed here by Mr. Smart, are a match for the orchestra itself, as a vehicle for what is somewhat affectedly denominated "colour-music." Never did sweeter "Lullaby" soothe baby to repose. The other three are as good in their way; "What are the Joys of Spring?" (No. 4) charms by its freshness as it enlivens by its vigour; "Morning" (No 1) has a genial touch of Mendelssohn in its melody and harmony, without, however, being in the slightest degree a plagiarism; while "Hymn to Cynthia" is of a more elaborate but by no means less agreeable texture. All four songs are models of vocal writing, and welcome additions to the repertory of English part-music.

"'L'Avviso,' canzone per mezzo soprano"—Giulio Regondi (Wessel and Co.)—is the composition of a thorough musician, graceful, melodious, and expressive.

"Voice of the summer wind, tender and low"—written by T. Douglas, composed by G. A. Macfarren, (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell.)—This really charming ballad may be apostrophised in precisely similar terms, with the additional acknowledgment that it possesses, what the other can hardly lay claim to with equal justice, viz.—character.

"'Never, my child, forget to pray,' sacred song"—by Frederick Spotson Clark, (Aggazzotti and Co.)—would extort unqualified praise, as a composition marked alike by taste and correctness, but that, at the end of each verse, occurs a section of a phrase, neither more nor less than a plagiarism from Sterndale Bennett's second Impromptu (in the same key too—E major).

In "'Rita,' mazurka for the pianoforte"—by W. Seymour Smith, (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas)—we have neat writing, the true mazurka accent, everything, in short, but originality, in which particular it is wholly deficient. Every phrase, or section of a phrase, seems as familiar as "God save the Queen," —or even "King," which is still older.

For "mazurka" read "nocturne," and for the attributes of "mazurka" substitute the attributes of "nocturne," and precisely identical criticism will suit "'Liebe wohl,' reverie for the pianoforte" (Addison, Hollier, and Lucas), by the same composer. Mr. W. Seymour Smith certainly composes well, and fluently; but his ideas are by no means new.

"The Harp and the Poet," romance—by J. Mc Ewan (Cramer, Beale, and Co.)—is neither unmeritorious nor inexpressive; but the bare fifth in the progression of harmony to the words, "The wind before it woos" (bar 1), is unworthy of the rest, and the whole is scarcely good enough for such a beautiful little bit of poetry as that of Mr. T. Powell, versemaker for the occasion. Let our readers judge:—

The wind, before it woos the harp,
Is but the wild and tuneless air;
Yet as it passes through the chords,
Changes to music rare.
And so the poet's soul converts
The common things that round him lie
Into a gentle voice of song—
Divinest harmony.
The Harp and Poet fram'd alike
By God, as His interpreters,
To breathe aloud the silent thought
Of ev'ry breath that stirs.

"'Ye Banks and Braes, Scotch Melody,' for the pianoforte" —by Brinley Richards (R. Mills)—is one of those moderately easy and very effective arrangements of popular airs, as short fantasias, for which its composer maintains a just renown. Though within reach of performers of modest attainments, it is not for that the less showy and brilliant.

"Hail, hail to thee! beautiful spring"—words by J. C. Prince, music by J. Dürrner (R. Mills)—like all the late Mr. Dürrner produced, is interesting, and shows the taste and knowledge of a well-tutored musician. There is also an original turn about it, the words being set in a manner not likely to have suggested itself to an ordinary composer.

"The Young Pilgrim"—written by Mrs. Veitch, composed by T. M. Mudie (R. Mills)—is another capital song, declamatory in style, after the manner in which Longfellow's "Excelsior" has been rendered more than once in music, but perfectly original notwithstanding, and highly expressive, to boot. Apart from these considerations, too, "The Young Pilgrim" is a composition in which the hand of an accomplished musician is everywhere apparent.

"'A short and easy Morning Service,' 'Te Deum' and 'Jubilate,'" with accompaniment for organ or pianoforte—by Ch. Fr. Hauptmann (Ewer and Co.)—is exactly what it is stated to be in the words on the title-page, neither more nor less. On the other hand, the worthy organist of St. Mary's, Tenby, may be especially complimented on the correctness and purity of his harmony.

"My Love wants no jewels" ("Mein Lieb braucht nicht Perlen")—Song, composed by Bernhard Althaus (Ewer and Co.)—is an elegant, unexceptionably-written commonplace.

If every composition of the same character was as spirited, rhythmical and unaffected as the "Grand triumphal March," for the pianoforte, by T. M. Mudie (R. Mills), we should hail the announcement of each successive new one with greater glee; but unhappily that is not the case, and Mr. Mudie must be ticketed with forming an honourable and vigorous exception to a general rule of dulness. His march, indeed, is all that a march should be—more than which it is needless to say in praise of it.

"Thou art gone" ("Du bist fern")—song, composed by Bernard Althaus (Ewer and Co.)—is less commonplace than "Mein Lieb braucht nicht Perlen," by the same composer (noticed above), but hardly more original in its general physiognomy. It is well written, like its companion.

HAMBURGH.—At the 125th Philharmonic Concert, Herr Joachim played two pieces—Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D major, and Tartini's "Devil's Sonata." In comparison with the mighty blade that Herr Joachim wields, in the guise of a violin bow, all the Lauterbachs and Rappoldis draw mere toy-swords out of their sheaths. Moreover, to the greatest power, Herr Joachim unites the sweetest gentleness. The applause at the conclusion of his performance seemed as if it would never cease. —German Paper.

BERGAMO.—Our travelling correspondent in Lombardy informs us, that Mad. Guerrabella appeared at Bergamo with immense success in Pacini's Stella di Napoli, and that the favour with which that opera was received was entirely due to her singing and to her admirable acting, especially in the last act. The soprano part in the Stella is extremely difficult, and in some passages the singer has to sustain B, C, and even D above the line. After the cavatina, Mad. Guerrabella was recalled several times, and she was forced to re-appear again and again in the course of the opera, at the conclusion of which she was accompanied home by a large body of enthusiastic amateurs, and serenaded.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE "APOLLO AND MARSYAS."

SIR,—I enclose for publication a translation of a document which has been forwarded to me by order of His Excellency the Governor of Venice, and signed by him. So high a tribute to genius cannot but prove of great interest to every man of refinement.

I am, Sir, yours obediently,

MORRIS MOORE.

[TRANSLATION.]

"We have the pleasure to communicate to you that in consequence of your having, with immense success publicly exhibited in Paris,* Munich, Dresden, and Vienna, in furtherance of pious and philanthropic objects, the picture of 'Apollo and Marsyas' in your possession, and of this picture having been every where acknowledged to be not only an undoubted original by Raphael, but one of singular interest; and in consequence, moreover, of your having desired to exhibit the said picture in this Accademia di Belle Arti, side by side with the corresponding original drawing by Raphael, the Supreme Ministry of Worship and Public Instruction, in reply to the petition which you had addressed to it, and in consideration that the exhibition of your famous picture side by side with the original drawing belonging to this Academy would be of the deepest interest to all artists and lovers of art, forwarded orders to the government of this Luogotenenza, not only to grant you the public exhibition of your picture of 'Apollo and Marsyas' side by side with the corresponding drawing belonging to this Academy, in a suitable place in the same, but in every possible way zealously to assist you towards this object.

"At the same time, the Supreme Ministry of Worship and Public Instruction, in order to protect so great a treasure as an original picture by Raphael from every possible risk through inadvertent handling, enjoined the Government of this Luogotenenza to make arrangements that the usual Custom House operations be waived respecting the case containing it, especially on your quitting Venice, and that, above all, be omitted the opening of it or the placing of any seal upon it, lest its contents be endangered.

"In the orders given on this head to the Presidency of the Accademia di Belle Arti, and in the understanding entered into with the I. R. Prefecture of Finance, you will have recognized the ready zeal with which the Government of this Luogotenenza has fulfilled the high behests of the Supreme Ministry.

"In the mean time, steps will at once be taken that the name of Montagna be removed from Raphael's original drawing of 'Apollo and Marsyas' belonging to the Accademia di Belle Arti of Venice, and that its authenticity be established in a way to cause all doubt to cease.

"Accept the assurance of my highest consideration,

"TOGGENBURG.

"Vienna, March 1st, 1860."

LEEDS TOWN-HALL ORGAN.

SIR,—I regret to see, by a report copied in the pages of the Musical World from the Express, that a feeling of doubt and dissatisfaction exists in Leeds regarding the new organ in your Town Hall. I had an opportunity of hearing and playing on it some weeks since, and, as an impartial observer, interested in the welfare of the art of organ-building, I beg you will allow me to express my opinion concerning this magnificent instrument.

I am acquainted with the finest organs in this country, as well as those in Paris and Germany, including those at Frankfort, Ulm, Weingarten, Haarlem, &c., and still have no hesitation in saying that yours is a master-piece of art and science combined.

The design alone displays consummate knowledge of organ-building; whilst the more artistic portions, such as the choice of registers, voicing, &c., reflect equal credit on the artists who planned the instrument, and the artificer who executed his share of the work.

It is essentially a concert-organ, adapted to the requirements of festivals, solo performances, &c.; and the general quality of tone, I consider excellent. The ensemble is superb. The groundwork, viz., the diapasons, are distinguished for breath and grandeur; and the voicing of the delicate wood flue-work, the free reeds, tuba and solo stops generally, I think very successful; whilst the Voix Humain certainly rivals that at Fribourg, or rather the more celebrated one at the Madeleine. Nor should I omit to specify the Mixtures (that glorious and exclusive monopoly of the organ) which are each definite in character, and designed on a new and excellent principle. The amazing amount of combination movements affords greater variety of effect than has hitherto been introduced, I believe, in any other organ. Respecting the working condition of such elaborate mechanism, my visit was too brief to form a decided opinion on it, and I never tamper with any instrument. No one can reasonably object to the weight of a touch which offers a resistance of only half-a-pound on each key; and if the delightful elasticity of the old action (well made) is wanting, when the pneumatic movement is applied, this addition was indispensable to counteract the high pressure of the wind.

The absence of a 32-feet wood open in the pedal organ is to be regretted, although the Bourdon is very good of its kind.

There can be no doubt that a most conscientious feeling has been displayed in the design and execution of the Leeds organ, and with due allowance for slight and temporary imperfections, the skill of the builder, and a just regard for his own credit, will cause these drawbacks to disappear. The external appearance is splendid, and in perfect keeping with your noble hall; and, with Mr. Best, I take the liberty of recommending some caution in placing the organ under the hands of every new comer.

I write only with the motive of upholding excellence in any organ-builder, of whatever nation; as although my experience has inclined me to a preference for the great German school of organ-building (to which we owe so much), I yet feel that candour and justice impel an acknowledgment of merit in our own countrymen, when deserved.

I am, &c.,

Northampton, Feb. 28, 1860. CHARLES MCKORKELL.

TO OUR POETICAL CONTRIBUTORS.

WE are compelled to reiterate our declension of any further so-called poetical contributions. Judge, by the following specimen, recently forwarded to our office, of the absolute necessity to which we are reduced of closing our columns against the whole community of bards:—

LOVE SICK SOL CURED BY A CLOUD.

On a violet bank lay sleeping
Sweet Julia, bright and fair;
Sol, blushing, down was peeping,
And kissed her shining hair;
Then swiftly hid behind a cloud,
Ashamed for what he'd done,
And trembling sat as bashful-browed
As any mortal one!

The Cloud, lamenting thus to see
Poor Sol so heavy-hearted,
Determined to amuse his glee—
Sought her for whom he smarted.
He on the bank fair Julia spies,
At once unto her steers,
And drops from out his ogling eyes
Some crocodile-like tears.

Then in a dreaming voice she spoke,
In accents known to none,
And list'ning Sol the trance near broke
By one more kiss—just one.
The Cloud, to stay their feeling, then
Quick deluged all his sheen,
And, jumping, Julia cried, "Where's Ben!
Ice 'stryde my erin-er-loen!"

DOVER.—(From a Correspondent).—The seventy-fifth season of the Catch Club being announced to close on Tuesday evening, March 8th, the Apollonian Hall was crowded, notwithstanding the inclemency of the weather. The vocalists were Miss Louisa Jarrett, Miss Harcourt, and Mr. D. Lambert; and the programme excellent of its kind. Miss Jarrett's singing gained great applause, and in "I'll follow thee," she was encored; as also in the duets with Mr. Lambert, who justly received his share of approbation. Mr. Lambert sang "The Sailors War Song," and Bishop's, "Oh! firm as oak, and free from care," and in both was encored. Miss Harcourt, in her songs, afforded great satisfaction, and was also more than once encored. The instrumental part of the programme, consisting of overtures, galops, and valses, was well executed, and the entertainment concluded with "God save the Queen."

* The "Apollo and Marsyas" was not so exhibited at Paris. At Munich and at Vienna it was exhibited in aid of the Artists' Benevolent Fund; at Dresden and Vienna in aid of the Schiller Foundation Fund.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

LET not the Germans henceforth imagine that they are the only people who can compose chamber-music. The concerts of February 27th, and March 12th, are a convincing proof that some Italians, at least, have invented combinations of harmony no less attractive than the melody which is characteristic of the "Sunny South." A programme, rich in gems, drew together on Monday last an audience which, braving the inclemency of a miserably wet night, crowded every part of St. James's Hall, and remained, with few exceptions, to the end of one of the most delightful entertainments ever provided.

The instrumental selection comprised Boccherini's quintet in A major (Op. 20), Cherubini's grand quartet in E flat (second time), and Donizetti's quartet in D major. In the hands of Herren Becker and Ries, Mr. Doyle and Signor Piatti, with the able co-operation of M. Paque in the first piece, each of these compositions received more than justice, being indeed played to perfection. Especially noticeable was again the quartet of Cherubini, displaying a freshness, and geniality, and science alike admirable, at times reminding us of the vigorous energy of Beethoven, at others of the delicate fancy of Mendelssohn, and yet without a trace of plagiarism, the whole being thoroughly original.

Mr. Charles Hallé contributed two solos—Clementi's sonata in A major (Op. 25), and three of Scarlatti's harpsichord lessons (including the fugue in D minor). Both authors were given irreproachably, in a style uniting all requisite light and shade with the most perfect mechanism, and both pleased unanimously.

Herr Becker once more distinguished himself as a soloist, and in Tartini's Trillo del Diavolo more than confirmed the opinion expressed of his powers recently. He has fairly taken his place in the front ranks of "virtuosi" no less than quartet players. A hearty recall followed his really wonderful performance.

Mdlle. Parepa and Mr. Sims Reeves again shared the vocal music, the lady repeating Sarti's "Ah non sai qual pena," and the grand aria from Piccini's Didone Abbandonata, in both of which she was much applauded. The two airs allotted to Mr. Sims Reeves offered a great contrast, the first being "Pieta Signore," from an oratorio of Stradella's; the second, "Pria che spunti," from Cimarosa's Matrimonio Segreto. More exquisite singing never was heard, and in the last-named piece the voice and taste of our great tenor were displayed to such perfection that an encore was inevitable, and he repeated the air to the delight of every one in the hall.

On Monday next the instrumental portion will be from the works of Beethoven; the grand Septet and the Kreutzer Sonata, by Miss Arabella Goddard and Herr Becker, being included in the programme, to say nothing of one of the latest sonatas (Op. 109) for the first time at the Monday Popular Concerts.

THEATRICALS AT CAMPDEN HOUSE.

(From our Kensington Correspondent, by Omnibus Express.)

AN interesting performance took place on Tuesday last, at Mr. Wolley's miniature theatre, in aid of the funds of that excellent institution the Royal Benevolent Society. The entertainment commenced with, Our Wife, or the Rose of Amiens, an adaptation from the French, by Mr. Palgrave Simpson; followed by Peake's farce of the Omnibus, and concluding with Betsey Baker, the work of Mr. J. M. Morton, and some French person or persons unknown. In the comedietta, the Viscount Raynham, the Captain Mackinnon, the Sieur Wolley, the Lord Wallscourt, and the Ladies Colthurst and Anne Sherson appeared: the Viscount Raynham and the Lady Colthurst particularly distinguishing themselves. In the Omnibus, the Honourable Evelyn Ashley, the Major Mackinnon, the Sieur Maitland, the Honourable Reginald O'Grady, the Lord Wallscourt, and the demoiselles Newton and Barker performed. The Sieur Maitland is an excellent representative of the comic Irishman, and was seen to much advantage in the part of Pat Rooney. The fun of Peake's ancient farce turns upon the inconveniences likely to result to suburban residents from the invention of omnibuses. He, however, whom Hood, himself somewhat of a punster, called "punning Peake," always fortified his farces with a certain number of solid verbal jokes, and the great point in the Omnibus is the double meaning given to the word curaçoa, which the Irishman should pronounce "cure a sow," and thereupon inquires whether it will also "cure a mare." The joke was so much relished in its time that it not only made the success of the farce, but attracted amateurs of jeux de mots from all parts of England, and we are assured that hundreds of families visited the metropolis solely in order to hear Mr. Peake's pun. On Tuesday night it was by some error omitted, and we expected that cries for "the pun! the pun!" would have been raised from all parts of the house, but the audience bore their loss very composedly. We must add, in all seriousness, that the acting throughout the evening was most creditable to the amateurs, who, we believe, had never until this occasion played together.

Before the comedietta, a capital prologue, written by S. H. G. Wright, the physician to the institution, in aid of which the entertainments were given, was delivered by the author. It contains some excellent lines on the subject of amateur acting, and in reference to the charitable object of the performance of Tuesday evening, and it was much applauded.

The same amateurs re-appeared at Campden House on Thursday evening, the proceeds of the sale of tickets being again devoted to the "Royal Benevolent Society."

CONCERTS.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The concert given on Saturday, the 3rd instant, was principally devoted to a selection from Mendelssohn's operetta Son and Stranger, including the overture and the most important pieces in the work. The singers were, Mad. Weiss, Miss Fanny Huddart, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Smythson and Mr. Weiss. Mr. Manns had evidently taken pains, and the result was an excellent performance, thoroughly enjoyed by all present. The Son and Stranger was brought out in England in 1851 (the first time in public, although written in 1829), at the Haymarket Theatre, with Miss Louisa Pyne, Mr. Donald King, and Mr. Weiss. It obtained a great success, although by no means satisfactorily executed, the band and chorus being indifferent, and was pronounced by universal assent a masterpiece of comic music. It seems strange indeed, that after such a success none of our lyric theatres, Italian or native, should have contemplated its production. At the Crystal Palace more than half its beauties were lost, as the music is eminently dramatic and the libretto spirited and amusing. The pieces which pleased most were the delicious romance of Herrmann, "When the evening bells are chiming," capitally sung by Mr. Wilbye Cooper; Ursula's song at the spinning-wheel; Lisbeth's air, "How oft the young have wandered;" and, of course, the famous buffo song, "I'm a roamer," splendidly given by Mr. Weiss. The concerted music might in some instances have gone better. The artists seemed as though they were unwilling to ruffle their drawing-room placidities by any dramatic perturbations—all except Mr. Weiss, who proved himself, even remote from the stage, every inch a pedlar. The remaining pieces in the programme were Beethoven's overture to Prometheus; the splendid "War March" from Mr. Horsley's Gideon; the "Rataplan" duet from the Figlia, by Mr. and Mrs. Weiss; the ballad, "Three fishers went sailing," sung by Miss Fanny Huddart; and a new song composed by Mr. Hullah, "The doubting heart," given by Mr. Wilbye Cooper. The concert-room was tolerably full—not crowded.

On Saturday last the programme comprised, for the band, Schumann's symphony in E flat, Mendelssohn's overture to Ruy Blas, and Weber's "Invitation à la Valse," arranged for orchestra by M. Hector Berlioz—an especial favourite with Mr. Manns, and deservedly so, the beauty of the composition and the extreme brilliancy of the instrumentation considered. The symphony of Schumann in B flat was performed for the first time at the Crystal Palace—though not for the first time in this country, as the annals of the Old Philharmonic can tell. It is an eminently characteristic work—that is, characteristic of its lamented author. The second movement, which is melodious and somewhat devotional in tone, could not fail to please. Mr. Manns, however, will no doubt afford a second opportunity of judging the symphony. Miss Arabella Goddard played Hummel's rondo in A major, and Thalberg's Mosè in Egitto. The latter was loudly encored, but Miss Goddard only returned to the platform and bowed. We need hardly say with what incomparable brilliancy and grace both pieces were played. Miss Parepa, the favourite of the hour, sang Mr. Wallace's new song "Hope in sorrow," the cavatina, "Oh, bright were my visions," from Victorine, and the aria, "Gia dalla mente involasi," from Signor Alary's Tre Nozze. The florid cavatina from Mr. Alfred Mellon's opera was most favourably received, and Miss Parepa, we think, shines more in expression than in bravura singing. She gave Mr. Wallace's ballad admirably, but was not so much applauded as in the cavatina and the valse.

To-day M. Sainton and Madame Sainton-Dolby will appear.

An engagement has been concluded with Mdlle. Piccolomini for a series of twelve concerts, commencing on Monday the 2nd and terminating on Saturday the 14th of April—the usual one shilling admission to the Palace to be retained.

LONDON QUINTET UNION.—The second concert came off on Wednesday evening, at St. Martin's Hall. Again the music of Onslow predominated; not, however, exactly to the same extent as before, only one quintet, and a part of another, being given. Mr. Willy's admiration for Onslow must indeed be great, since he has introduced in two concerts three entire quintets, and one movement from another, of that composer. The entire quintet performed at the last concert was that in B flat, Op. 33, and the one which finished the single movement was the D minor, No. 3, Op. 1. The quintet in B flat was finely executed by Messrs. Willy, Westlake, Webb, Pettit, and Reynolds, and listened to with attention. The last movement of the quintet in D minor, Presto Finale, was heard by few, and therefore played to disadvantage. The remaining part of the selection was unexceptionably good. The other instrumental pieces were Mozart's quintet in A major, Op. 108, for clarinet, two violins, viola, and violoncello, and Professor Bennett's chamber trio in A., Op. 26, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. These two masterpieces would have made amends for any amount of dryness, and their introduction must exonerate Mr. Willy from any design of rendering his concerts heavy. Mozart's quintet was the instrumental feature of the evening. Every movement awakened a new delight, and it was difficult to say which created the greatest sensation, the exquisitely beautiful and plaintive andante, or the deliciously quaint air and brilliant variations of the finale. The performance was first-rate, Mr. Mayoock especially distinguishing himself on the clarinet. The pianoforte trio was hardly less admired, the slow movement, in which the pizzicato for the stringed instruments is employed with so much effect, eliciting, perhaps, the greatest admiration. The vocal music was assigned to Miss Banks and Madame Sainton-Dolby. The last-named lady, who has lately been winning laurels in Paris, made her first appearance since her marriage, and was received with warm and genuine tokens of admiration. She sang two of her most popular songs—"Cangio d' Aspetto," from Handel's opera of Admetus, and Mr. Balfe's "The green trees whispered low." Both were given to perfection, and the latter unanimously encored. Miss Banks gave Mozart's "Parto," from the Clemenza di Tito, and Mr. Henry Smart's song—a very charming one, by the way—"Love me, or love me not," and won the suffrages of the whole room, singing sweetly, expressively, and without ostentation. Mr. Lindsay Sloper accompanied the vocal music, and played the pianoforte part in Professor Bennett's trio, which we should already have signalised as a very fine performance on the part of the accomplished pianist and his coadjutors, Messrs. Willy and Pettit. The attendance was but indifferent, the body of the hall being no more than half, and the galleries about two-thirds full.

HERR WILHELM GANZ'S SOIREE.—In our notice of this young artist's Soirée Musicale, we should have stated that it took place at his residence, 15, Queen Anne-street, Cavendish-square, and not Queen-street.

THEATRE-ITALIEN, PARIS.—Mad. Borghi-Mamo has created a great sensation in the character of Desdemona, in Rossini's Otello.

MR. AGUILAR'S FIRST PERFORMANCE OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC took place on Saturday evening, the 10th instant, at his residence, Westbourne-square. The following excellent programme was given:—

Sonata, in C, for pianoforte (Op. 2, No. 3), Beethoven.—Recitative and Aria, "Lascia ch' io pianga" (Rinaldo), Handel.—Prelude and Fugue, G minor, ditto in G major, J. S. Bach.—Caprice in B flat minor, for pianoforte (Op. 33, No. 3), Mendelssohn.—Recitative and Aria, "Deh vieni non tardar" (Le Nozze di Figaro), Mozart.—Sonata Quasi Fantasia, in E flat, for pianoforte (Op. 27, No. 1), Beethoven.—"Invitation a la Valse," for pianoforte, Weber.

The task Mr. Aguilar set himself was an arduous one for a single evening's performance; but his powers showed no abatement at the last, and Weber's sparkling "Invitation to the Waltz," the last piece in the programme, was played with as much facility and vigour as anything which preceded it. The performance, however, which appeared to afford most unqualified satisfaction was the sonata in E flat of Beethoven, in which Mr. Aguilar displayed his thorough feeling for classic music no less than his mechanical dexterity. Mendelssohn's caprice, too, was a capital performance and pleased unanimously. The two vocal pieces were assigned to Miss Lindo, who exhibited considerable talent in both, and evidenced genuine taste and feeling in the air from Figaro, "Dove sono," one of the very loveliest Mozart ever wrote. There was a full attendance, and the concert was of that reasonable length that, combined with its sterling character, must have satisfied everybody.

SOCIETY FOR THE ENCOURAGEMENT OF THE FINE ARTS.—On Thursday evening last, the second trial of musical compositions in connection with this society took place, at the Architectural Gallery, Conduit-street. The members of the "Arion," under the direction of Mr. Alfred Gilbert, gave the following programme:—Pater Noster, Meyerbeer; Contralto Hymn, Mendelssohn; "The Dream," Costa; Misericordias (double choir) Reichardt; "To love I wake" (double choir), Webbe; New Part-Songs (second time), Mendelssohn.

OXFORD—(From a Correspondent).—The current series of Lectures and Concerts was brought to a termination on Tuesday evening with a miscellaneous entertainment of vocal music, in which Miss Emily Gresham, Mrs. R. Paget, Mr. George Tedder, and Mr. Horsley assisted, and Mr. W. Ringrode acted as accompanyist. It was but a dull affair to the real lovers of music, there being no instrumental performances. Not so, however, thought the good people of Oxford, who were enchanted beyond measure with everything, and would fain have every piece over again. The singers were not of the same mind, except Mr. Horsley, who being a townsman and volunteer to boot, could not resist the onslaught made on him when he gave that war-exciting song, "Riflemen, form," but returned incontinently, and repeated it hilariously. There were fierce acclamations, too, when Miss Emily Gresham and Mr. George Tedder joined in the duet, "The Duke of Athol's Courtship," which the audience would fain have over again. This constrained the tenor to come forward and apologise for non-compliance on the score of indisposition, which speech was hailed with even more plaudits than the duet. Miss Emily Gresham pleased immensely in her solos, more particularly in Flotow's "Ave Maria," and Bishop's "Bid me discourse;" and Mrs. Paget was very effective in Mr. Hullah's song of "The Three Fishers," and "Kathleen Mavourneen." Although the concert seemed to please everybody, I should strongly advise the manager of the City Public Lectures and Concerts to think a little more of art next year and less of pleasing the mob.

EDINBURGH—(From a Correspondent).—The fifteenth of Howard's Saturday Evening Concerts took place in the Music Hall on Saturday evening last. In addition to his usual staff, Mr. Howard was assisted by the bands of the 15th Light Dragoons and West York Rifles, by the Edinburgh Orchestra, and Mrs. Howard, Messrs. Kennedy, Bishop, and D. Lambert (the last of whom made his début before an Edinburgh audience as vocalist). The first part of the concert consisted of the overture to Weber's Oberon, and Handel's serenata, Acis and Galatea, in which Mrs. Howard and Messrs. Bishop and Kennedy sustained their reputation. Mr. Lambert made a very favourable impression, and narrowly escaped an encore in "O ruddier than the cherry." Mr.

Howard judiciously introduced between the first and second parts of the programme, "The Garb of Old Gaul," composed by the late General Reid, in honour of whose memory this concert was announced to take place. In the second part Mr. Lambert sang, "Oh! firm as oak, and free from care;" and on being encored, gave the audience another specimen of his abilities. The crowded state of the hall attested the popular appreciation of Mr. Howard's services; as well as the fervid reception of his own Flora, &c., the Rifle Band's selection from Scotch airs. A more strict adherence in the programme to the national music of Scotland would perhaps tend materially to the gratification of the class—and a large one it is—for whom these concerts were designed, and by whom they are supported.

NORFOLK AND NORWICH MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

(Communicated.)

PREPARATIONS and engagements for the Festival, which will commence on Monday, the 17th September, under the conduct of Mr. Benedict, are already going on with activity. We understand that the services of Madame Clara Novello, Madame Weiss, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, Mr. Charles Santley, and Mr. Weiss, have been secured, and that other important engagements are pending. Upon this occasion, a lively and peculiar interest attaches itself to the name of Clara Novello, because it will probably be the last time that the public will have an opportunity of hearing that accomplished artist prior to her final retirement from the profession. Standing upon the pinnacle of fame, as an English vocalist, this gifted lady has determined to descend from it whilst she can do so with dignity and grace. She is not one of those who would ever degrade her art, or suffer herself to be degraded by it, through a painful exhibition of incompetent efforts. Of Clara Novello it will never be said,—

"Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage."

Amongst the propositions about to be submitted by the sub-committee to the general committee, if not already accepted by the latter (a point on which we are not quite sure), is a performance of Haydn's oratorio of The Creation, on the Monday evening, at a greatly reduced price, instead of having cheap preliminary concerts. This will enable many lovers of music belonging to a class whose avocations will not allow them to attend morning performances, to enjoy a great work interpreted by first-rate voices and instruments. On the Tuesday evening it has been proposed to do Gluck's Armida, in either the first or second part of the concert. The success of Gluck's Iphigenia in Tauris, produced under the auspices of Mr. Charles Halle, at Manchester, was complete.

On the Wednesday morning it is proposed to do The Last Judgment of Spohr, in honour of that illustrious composer's memory; this will be preceded, or followed, by Handel's famous "Dettingen Te Deum." On Wednesday evening, a leading feature will be Professor Bennett's May Queen; and on Thursday evening, Mr. Benedict's Undine, composed expressly for this Festival; on Thursday morning, a selection, and Herr Molique's new oratorio of Abraham; and on Friday, The Messiah. Two symphonies have been proposed, namely, Haydn's Military Sinfonia, No. 12, and Beethoven's in C minor. It will be seen that the novelty of the Festival will be Molique's Abraham. Of this work we can say nothing of our own knowledge, but we have heard it highly praised by musical authorities.

MADAME DOLBY-SAINTON AND M. SAINTON IN PARIS.

(Abridged from La France Musicale.)

WE were not wrong in predicting that the names of Madame Sainton-Dolby and M. Sainton would excite the curiosity not only of all the English of distinction who reside in Paris, but also of those Parisians who love serious and high art. The great room of the Hôtel du Louvre was scarcely large enough to contain the numerous audience attracted by these two names justly popular in England, and which are beginning to be so among ourselves. Last year, M. Sainton proved himself, at a concert given by Herz, one of the most correct and brilliant violinists of the day. Such, too, he proved himself at the concert which he gave on Thursday last, with his wife, Mad. Sainton-Dolby. He played with incomparable maestria the violin part in Mendelssohn's famous trio in C minor,* and in Beethoven's sonata in A minor.† We wish all the violinists in Paris had been there to hear him. They would, like ourselves, have been charmed by his neat and modest execution—as it ought to be in pieces where the violin is not alone—expressive without exaggeration, and, in a word, perfect. It was the first time Mendelssohn's trio had been played in Paris as it should be played. Sainton played it twice as quickly as it is always played here, and the work gained considerably in consequence. M. Sainton played, also, two delicious pieces of his own composition, which were warmly applauded—a "solo de concert," and a "valse brillante." Perfect correctness, sentiment, brio, nobleness, marvellous bowing, and, in a word, all the various qualities which constitute a concert virtuoso hors ligne, are possessed by M. Sainton in the highest degree. We can assure our readers that the success he achieved will be long and universally remembered.

We have reserved Mad. Sainton-Dolby as the "bouquet," not from mere gallantry, we beg our readers to believe, but because we thought so great a name and such marvellous talent ought to have a place by themselves in our appreciation, as they do in the hierarchy of fair concert-singers. As the interpretress of Handel, Haydn, and Mozart—of the sacred and profane music of those admired and venerated masters—Miss Dolby, now Mad. Sainton, has no rival in England. Her name is popular in all parts of the United Kingdom, and the fact of its appearing in the programme of a concert is sufficient to fill, as though by enchantment, the largest rooms, and Heaven knows there are plenty of them. We have heard her at Manchester, at the Sydenham Palace, and at Exeter Hall, sing before assemblies of from fifteen to twenty thousand persons, and never did they fail to salute her, on her appearance, with the most enthusiastic ~~choors~~. The English adore Miss Dolby; she is their favourite singer, and as, in her case, the woman is, at least, as distinguée as the artist, there is no mark of affection which this people, so jealous of its national glories, does not shower down upon her. We cannot describe with what joy she was welcomed, the other evening, in the rooms of the Hôtel du Louvre, by the English, who constituted a good half, at the least, of the distinguished persons who had flocked to hear her. When she appeared, beaming with grace and beauty, and with that charming smile and gentle look which fascinates and attracts one, the applause burst forth from all parts of the room, and lasted several minutes.

We will not mention all the pieces sung by this great artist. We must content ourselves with stating that her style of interpreting the thoughts of such masters as Haydn and Handel is quite new for us; that it is the true, the good style, and the only one which should be allowed. It is impossible to possess, at the same time, more grace, more grandeur, and more sensibility; it is impossible to identify one's self more intelligently and more truly with the musical idea, no matter how grandiose and profound it may be. A fact, too, which proves the suppleness of her prodigious talent, is that it adapts itself, without difficulty and with exquisite grace, to the forms of modern music, without ever sacrificing aught to the exigencies of a public spoilt by bad example. Madame Sainton sang in English an admirable melody of Haydn's; "L'Ame errante," a sublime air, from Handel's oratorio of Samson; a scena admirable for its simplicity, "The Irish Emigrant," by Luders; an English serenade, and a Scotch ballad. In all these pieces, varying in character and style, she displayed the admirable and extraordinary compass of her voice, a mezzo-soprano, peculiar in quality, which goes direct to the heart, besides exhibiting her rhythmical accentuation, her magistral phrasing, and, above all, her deep musical feeling. She was recalled, we cannot say how many times, and applauded with sincere enthusiasm. Among the entire audience there was not a single voice which did not say to her mentally: "Au revoir!"

* With M. Ritter (piano), and M. Rignault (violoncello).

† The "Kreutzer"—piano, M. Ritter.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

PARIS, March 13th.

At last the long-expected opera of Prince Joseph Poniatowski has been brought out at the Grand-Opéra, and for some days the opinions "for and against" it will form one of the principal topics of conversation. The first representation was given on Friday last, the Emperor and Empress, and all the beau monde of Paris, being present. Pierre de Medicis is an opera in four acts; the libretto is written by MM. de St.-Georges and Vanin. From the title of this work, one would be led to think that it had something to do with the history of Tuscany. But it is not so, and the authors have chosen the heroes of their drama in the noble and powerful family of the Medicis, to give room for the gorgeous scenery and decorations with which this opera has been mounted.

Pierre and Julien de Medicis are sons of Laurent de Medicis, called the Magnificent. Pierre de Medicis, tired of the discontent of the Florentines, comes to establish his court at Pisa. His brother, Julien, who is the governor of the town, gives up willingly the command, and wishes for nothing better than to retire from the cares of state, and to marry the beautiful Laura Salviati, the niece of the Grand Inquisitor. But Pierre de Medicis is also in love with her, and, when alone with the Grand Inquisitor, tells him of his passion for his niece, and, of course, ambition easily leads the uncle to second his suit. Julien, however, who hears of this, goes to Laura's palace, and begs her to fly; this she refuses to do, and in a very expressive duet the first act finishes. In the second, Pierre de Medicis, with his court, are witnessing a splendid fête, given in honour of Laura. The gorgeousness of this scene, in point of decoration, has rarely been rivalled. The scene represents gardens, with every floral treasure; a fountain, from which veritable eaux pures flows over marble statues; and beyond, the gardens, gradually ascending. The scene begins with daylight; and numerous Florentine peasants, in their picturesque costumes, are grouped about. Then, after the court has arrived, the ballet begins. It has for subject the loves of Diana and Endymion, and gives ample scope to Madame Fornaris to display her wonderful talents in choreographic art. Meanwhile the Inquisitor has told Pierre de Medicis of the affection of his brother for Laura, and to get rid of his rival, Pierre creates him admiral, and orders him to leave with the fleet that is to set sail the next day. Julien contrives to speak to Laura, and they agree to meet in a fisherman's hut, and to fly together. Night has now come on, and suddenly the gardens are most brilliantly lighted up, and each of the peasants bearing in their hand an illuminated tulip, while they dance about, the effect is very novel—this ends the second act. In the third we find Laura waiting in the fisherman's hut for the signal that a devoted friend of Julien's is to give her that all is ready, when the door bursts open, and the Inquisitor and Pierre de Medicis enter. The latter offers Laura his hand and crown, which Laura refuses; and when told she will be shut up in a cloister if she persists in this refusal, chooses the latter alternative, and is half dragged away just as the barcarole is being sung under her window that was to serve as signal for her departure. We have next a very lovely moonlight view of the Campo Santo, with a view of Pisa and the Leaning Tower in the distance. Julien de Medicis is praying at the tomb of his mother, when several conspirators enter, tell him of Laura's detention in a cloister, and of the revolution that is going on in the town. Julien determines to head it, and with a grand finale this act ends. The fourth opens near the ramparts of the town; the people are dancing and singing, while further on fighting is going on. Suddenly Pierre de Medicis enters, mortally wounded, and repenting of his cruelty to Laura, wishes to save her from taking the veil. Julien enters, and, supporting his brother, they both go off together. The scene then changes to the most striking part of the opera—the interior of the convent, filled with nuns, monks, and the frères de la miséricorde—monks covered in black and only their eyes showing. Laura in splendid wedding garments is brought in; the Grand Inquisitor once more offers her freedom, on condition of her marrying the Grand Duke; she refuses, and after vainly imploring mercy of her uncle, her wedding wreath is taken off, the black veil is thrown over her, when suddenly the doors burst open, the De Médicis and their soldiers enter, but it is too late. When Julien asks the Inquisitor, "What have you done with her?" he touches the veiled figure: "She belongs now," he says, "to Heaven," and while Laura is dragged towards the steps of the cloisters, and Julien bends, overwhelmed with sorrow, Pierre de Medicis expires. As music, this opera, though it can never bear comparison with the more inspired works of the great masters, is a work Prince Poniatowski will add greatly to his laurels by. Mdlle. Gueymard was admirable in the part of Laura Salviati: dramatic and touching as her acting ever is, she surpassed herself. Obin, in the part of the Grand Inquisitor, shared the honours of the evening with her. M. Gueymard, as Pierre de Medicis, and Bonnehée, as Julien, did their best. The two most striking morceaux in the whole opera are the trio in the fisherman's hut, and the duet between Obin and Ladra, when she takes the veil.

At the Opéra-Comique, Galathée is still being played. At the Italiens, Tamberlik has been singing in Otello. The Théâtre-Lyrique, has suspended for a short time Philémon et Baucis, as Madame Miolan-Carvalho has sustained a sad loss—her mother having just died. Very little is going on in the way of novelty at the theatres: at the Vaudevilles old pieces are being performed, but soon M. Octave Feuillet's new work, which is to bear the title, I believe, La Tentation, will be given at the Théâtre de l'Ambigu. The Compère Guillery drama, in five acts and nine tableaux, has just been brought out. It were impossible to wade through the tissue of nonsense and improbabilities contained in a melodrama of this class. It turns on the wonderful adventures of a wonderful gentleman brigand, who is at last reclaimed by the affection of some young lady de grande famille. Mélinque of course plays well. Various are the concerts going on. Last Wednesday Madame Pleyel gave a concert at which she played the first concerto of Mendelssohn, and a concert piece by Littolf, in her most charming manner. Many are the improvements projected here in the architectural line, and projects about some of the theatres are going on. I hear that the Maritana of Wallace is to be performed at the Théâtre-Lyrique next season. The accounts of the termination of the season (the theatrical one) at Naples is deplorable. The management is even worse than under the Duke de Salarino.

CHERUBINI.—Those artistes and amateurs who have a passion for works not printed or published of a great master, will learn with pleasure that the compositions of the renowned composer, Cherubini, the greatest contrapuntal writer that ever existed, are now for sale at Paris by his widow, in manuscript, consisting, in his own handwriting, of overtures in score, masses, operas, sacred pieces, cantatas, orchestral pieces, quartets, quintets, solfeggi, &c., &c., consisting of nearly 300 works, composed between the years 1773 and 1841. Here is a field for musical societies, students, and directors of music to produce novelties, and study one whose works, hitherto known and printed, are patterns of excellence in every point of view, and held up as models of perfection to the student. The directors of the Philharmonic Societies, Musical Unions and Sacred Harmonics, &c., should look after the works. They will find overtures, chamber-music, oratorios, and choral pieces never produced before the public, and what better name could they have than the renowned one of Cherubini to grace their programme. There are also the Psalms of Marcello, in four volumes, 1,540 pages; some of the works of Pergolèse, Iomelli, Clari, Durante, Sarti; the canons of Padre Martinè, with various other of the old Italian great masters, all arranged, and in the writing of M. Cherubini. So varied and public a collection by one author has seldom or ever been offered for sale before. Madame Cherubini is now in her eighty-seventh year. The collection ought to be secured for some institution—the British Museum or Royal Academy of Music—as standard works of art in every branch of music.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

A PROFESSOR OF MUSIC.—Neither of the copies of the Scotsman came to hand.

S. (North Brixton).—We shall be glad to hear from our Correspondent at all times.

BELFAST.—We shall be glad to hear from our recent Correspondent always, at his leisure.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words) ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 17TH, 1860.

An advertisement, headed "Jullien Fund," will be read on the front page, and a paragraph, headed "M. Jullien," in the leading columns of our impression of to-day. The object of the framers of both was a very commendable one—viz.: that of raising an amount sufficient to maintain an old and well-deserving servant of the British public in a Lunatic Asylum, to which the most terrible affliction in the list of mortal ills and penalties had consigned him, and to save those nearest and dearest to him from the impending fate of penury, which, in case of M. Jullien's recovery being hopeless, awaited them. Scarcely, however, had the advertisement and paragraph been committed to type, than the sad news came from Paris, that death had solved the doubts and allayed the professional anxiety of those who were in attendance on the suffering musician. M. Jullien passed away, after having spent about a week at the asylum, superintended by M. le Docteur ——— at ———, near Paris.

At present it is superfluous, and indeed would be obtrusive, to enter into details about the causes and progress of that disease which has thus fatally terminated. Nor is this the time or place to attempt a history of M. Jullien's very remarkable career, the most brilliant epoch of which, eminent and prosperous as he had been in other countries, and especially in France, was achieved in England and its immediate dependencies. It is enough—while recording the unwelcome intelligence of his being thus cut off in the prime and vigour of life—to offer some brief reflections on the man now lost to the world, and the influence, social and artistic, which he exercised.

Jullien was essentially and before all a man for the people. He loved to entertain the people; he loved to instruct the people; and the people were just as fond of being taught as of being amused by Jullien. His peculiarities, even his foibles, were but particles of a whole, portions of an idiosyncracy, which—combined with such geniality, moral and physical, such hearty earnestness and such intense devotion to his task, as has seldom distinguished a public character in that particular walk of life in which his energies were exhibited—made Jullien what he was. The performance of his public duties became not so much a task as a delight to Jullien. Pleasure beamed on his countenance as he rapped upon his conductor's desk, with that much admired, never-to-be-forgotten bâton; pleasure as he began, pleasure as he advanced, pleasure as he ended his labours, with the innate conviction that his aim had been accomplished and his audience gratified. There was, too, between him and them a kind of magnetic sympathy. Jullien knew, when he appeared, that his apparition was welcome to the crowd, and that only he in the same position could have afforded them the same degree of satisfaction. And this satisfaction on the side of his supporters did not simply arise from the indisputable fact of his having, during a long series of years, done more for their recreation, and at a cheaper rate, worked more zealously for their service in his peculiar way, and with proportionate success, than any other within the memory of the oldest of them. There was something more than all in the background. The mere personality of the man exercised a spell, a fascination, which rendered it a forlorn chance for a rival, no matter what his gifts, no matter what his experience, no matter what his acquirements, to attempt to fill the post, if Jullien was known to be alive, still more if Jullien was known to be at hand. Much of his popularity has been, and not altogether unreasonably, attributed to his physical conformation. To features intelligent and even handsome, a frame robust and firmly knit—with no sign of corpulence, however, but, while beneath the ordinary stature, almost a Hercules in strength of frame and symmetry of proportions—there was added a stamp of originality so marked, that Jullien could by no possibility ever be mistaken for another, even by those who might have obtained a glance at him for once and once only. It sufficed to place any temporary interloper before the same rostrum, at the so-called Promenade Concerts, to prove the immeasurable superiority—unaccountable it may be, but immeasurable—of Jullien. So singular and vivid, indeed, was the physical impression he created, that his figure became a household shape no less than his name a household word, throughout the length and breadth of the country in which for so many years he resided, and to the delight of whose populations he had so long, indefatigably and successfully ministered.

No public man ever so suddenly achieved popularity as Jullien. He had scarcely taken the conductor's stick out of the hands of Mr. Eliason (one of the earliest institutors of the London Promenade Concerts), than he became famous. He figured as often in Punch (never, be it remembered, to his detriment) as any of the political notorieties of the day. Such unprecedented vogue, too, he preserved, undiminished, for a period of over twenty years; and it is more than likely, had it been permitted him to resume, next November, his accustomed functions, in one of our great theatres (Drury Lane had been confidently reckoned on) he would have approached the public without one atom of his popularity abated. As the winter months that usher in Christmas were gloomy without him, so were they cheerful and brilliant with his periodical presence, which kindled like a fire, dissipated the fog, and warmed and enlivened all who came under its influence. The public and Jullien were, like old intimate friends, accustomed to look forward to an annual meeting—a meeting which was a festival to both of them, and the failure of which was a grievous disappointment. The last of those pleasant festivals, however, has been held; and henceforth—in our time, at least, when a new Jullien is not likely to arise—Promenade Concerts (should such speculations again be projected) will resemble any other entertainments, good, bad, or indifferent, as the case may be, but with nothing to mark them out, as exceptional and apart from such things in ordinary.

That Jullien did not make an ill use of his amazing influence with his patrons—whom, as we all remember, he could take by the button-hole when it suited his humour, and chide like children, if they were not as orderly during a performance of classical music, as he thought decorous and expedient—it is unnecessary to insist. What he was as a conductor, as a composer, and especially as a refiner of the public taste, is too notorious and too recent to be argued in detail. But it was to a combination of mental with physical attributes quite peculiar to himself, that his unexampled popularity must be traced, and that potent spell which he exercised over the public mind for so lengthy a period of time. Add to this a keen and lively intellect, uncommon enthusiasm, and as warm a heart as ever beat with kindly sympathy for others, and we have summed up the qualities that not merely explain Jullien's triumphs in the sphere to which his public talents called him, but the universal regard and affection in which he was held by those who counted among the number of his friends. He has gone to his last home, and, we believe, with the deep and unanimous regret of all who knew him either in his public or private capacity. Let us, then, express an earnest hope that the general sympathy excited by the news of his having been confined in a lunatic asylum will not be extinguished by the fact of his now being beyond earthly succour, and that those who have instituted and superintended the progress of the Jullien Fund, will carry out their benevolent object on behalf of the devoted wife and near relatives whom Jullien's death has left without the means of subsistence.

M. JULLIEN.—Though the report of M. Jullien having attempted suicide is without foundation, the fact of his being now in a lunatic asylum, with but slender hopes of ultimate recovery, is undoubted. It is also true that, owing to unsuccessful enterprises which led to his recent appearance before the Bankruptcy Court in Paris, he and those dependent on him are left wholly without resources. Under these circumstances a subscription has been set on foot by the friends of M. Jullien, to which the English public will doubtless be glad to contribute, in testimony of their appreciation of services long and zealously rendered. For upwards of 20 years the concerts of M. Jullien have afforded gratification to thousands upon thousands of persons; and it was not his least claim to notice that, in providing for the amusement of his patrons, he also contrived to improve and elevate their taste, and thus—while establishing an essentially popular entertainment—to aid in the great work of art-progress.—Times.

"SUMMER is icumen," as Mr. William Chappell might say, and Summer and Italian Opera in this country come together. No sooner had Mr. E. T. Smith issued his preliminary programme than the snow which had fallen a few days previously, melted, and with Mr. Gye's announcement that the Royal Italian Opera would open on the 10th of April, there was a further change in the weather, the barometer indicated "set fair," and a swallow made his appearance in the Green Park. By the time the rival managers have published their prospectuses the trees, already blooming in gardens with southern aspects, will have put forth ther leaves, and simultaneously with the first rehearsals the birds in the neighbourhood of London will begin to sing. Indeed, although we are in the middle of Lent, a few rural concerts have already taken place. We assisted at one, only a few days since, in the vicinity of Turnham-green, and were much struck by the performances of some of the rising vocalists. The youthful soprani have voices full of flexibility, and we noticed a linnet who excelled in the ornamental style. This was a morning concert, and before the general performance commenced, a lark, apparently the tenor of the troupe, made his appearance, and went through a very difficult solo with remarkable ease, and executed some passages in altissimo which quite surprised us. Neither Giuglini nor Mario, nor Mongini nor Tamberlik could go so high. In engaging tenors the rule appears to be that the higher they go the higher the manager must go in offering them terms; and we could not help reflecting what an enormous salary this lark might command if an operatic aviary or rather an aval opera were to be founded. At one time he attained such a height that we almost fancied he was never coming down again, and we thought how largely a director would have to come down if anxious to retain the services of such a vocalist. We waited for the cadenza of our tenor, who had a fluttering tremulous voice, reminding us occasionally of Tamberlik, but need only say that it was performed in the well-known style peculiar to the lark.

A party of young linnets, who had wandered from the maternal nest, sang a part-song, and were afterwards recalled.

Besides the linnets and the larks, who had a large field for display, several thrushes were heard to advantage in a neighbouring grove; but they exhibited even more than the usual nervousness incident to a first appearance, and as if suspecting that we were present in a critical capacity, took to flight as we approached, and could not be prevailed upon to re-appear. This final allegro movement was scarcely worthy of them, but the cantabile passages by which it was preceded were given in the best taste.

Blackbirds appear to be the baritones and basses of the air, and we have remarked more than one who, as much as by the fulness of his voice as by the rotundity of his person, recalls poor old Lablache.

The bullfinches can only be classed as second tenors, but some are of no mean flight, and are determined, if possible, to soar in the highest regions of their profession.

These "ancient concerts," as they may be called—for are they not the oldest in the world?—are very interesting, and form tolerable substitutes for the before-Easter performances that used formerly to take place at the Opera. Unfortunately it is very difficult just now to get a seat at any of them, in consequence of the dampness of the grass. Nor, while we have excellent concerts of true music, must it be imagined that we are without "miscellaneous" musical entertainments at Turnham Green, for in one of our ponds there is an unusually fine collection of frogs.

With regard to the kind of music executed by our rural and aerial vocalists, we need only say that it has hitherto been chiefly of an amorous character. Romeo e Giuletta has been a good deal performed, and, at night, serenading is occasionally heard.

Philomela, however, our most distinguished prima donna, has not yet arrived, and is not expected until the middle of June. Let us hope that she will be accompanied, if not preceded, by Mdlle. Titiens.

WHILE Panurge, having taken a short trip by the third-class of the South Western train, was recreating himself by a stroll through the quadrangles of Eton College, he was not a little surprised to see that old humbug, Epistemon, standing by the mysterious door that shuts from profane eyes those birchen implements whereby Etonians are impelled, willy nilly, into the paths of sound learning. Epistemon was absorbed in grave discourse with a subaltern official of the college, who, after sundry coughs and shakes of the head, unlocked the tremendous portal, and drew thereout a wondrously constructed rod, which, in exchange for sixpence, he placed in the pedant's hand.

Epistemon, tucking his valuable purchase under his arm, was quitting the Etonian precincts with a step blither than usual, when to his surprise he was thus accosted by Panurge, whom he had supposed to be in London, safely lodged in the coffee-room of the "Edinburgh Castle," or in the station-house, or in one of the snug apartments in Fetter-lane, or in some other place of metropolitan recreation and repose:

"Quid agis, dulcissime rerum? What art doing, most detestable of mankind? Art thou, by the profligate waste of thy miserable sixpence, attempting to demonstrate anew the speediness of the parting that proverbially takes place between the fool and his cash?"

"A truce to thy gibes," said Epistemon, "since it is for thy profit and instruction I have expended my substance on this potent talisman. Truly, I am glad thou hast come down, for I can now try the effects of the charm here, instead of bearing it with me all the way to London."

"With what dost thou charge me, most superficial of smatterers, that thou darest to menace me with thy pedagogic weapons?" asked Panurge, with exceeding wrath.

"Read that!" said Epistemon, and he drew from his pocket the last number of the Musical World, and pointed to the report of the delectable discussion held by Pantagruel and Panurge. "Read that, thou 'Parcus deorum cultor et infrequens'—the gods whom thou most insultest being Apollo and his Muses."

To these words, which were uttered on the way towards Windsor, Panurge answered not a syllable, but he kept his eye fixed on the Musical World, looking exceeding crest-fallen and humiliated, while Epistemon continued his objurgations.

"Faith, here's a pretty smashing of Priscian's head—here is a rich harvest of solecism—here's a joyous infraction of every metrical law—here is a falsity of concord, that would delight the god Mavors. A choice companion thou wert to grin and shake thy sides when the classical writer of the Entr'acts, in the plentitude of his righteous indignation, exclaimed 'Qui bono,' instead of 'Cui?' Thou must sneer, forsooth, when the editor of the Morning Advertiser said 'Quoniam tandem, abutere, Gladstone, patientiam nostram,' as if thine own Latinity smacked so much of the Golden Age. Truly, thy pleasantries might rouse even Cato to merriment."

> "O rem ridiculam, Cato, et joccsam, > Dignamque auribus et tuo cachinno!"

By the time they had reached this part of the discourse, they had ascended the broad staircase of the "Castle" Inn, and entered one of the best rooms, where Pantagruel lay asleep on a sofa, snoring most musically. Panurge first unlocked his jaws by ordering the waiter to bring him up a large glass of brandy and water, and set it down to Pantagruel's account. This he emptied at a single draught, and then he proceeded thus:—

"I see thy drift, great Epistemon—thou meanest that 'Cymbæ' and 'Bandusiæ' are both spelled erroneously, with the Œ diphthong instead of the Æ. Now that, I contend, is the fault of the reporter—doubtless the heavy-looking man who devoured kidnies at the end of the room—seeing that the combinations are both pronounced alike, I will claim a like indulgence for the 'vertet,' which is wrongly put for 'vertit,' for when one is in the tempest and fury of passio1, one is not careful as to the vocalisation of short syllables terminating with a consonant."

"I suppose I must concede so far," murmured Epistemon. "But what sayest thou to that delicious concord, 'Sors exiture'?"

"Still the fault of the reporter," said Panurge, with marvellous assurance. "Thou knowest that when I quote Latin verse, I speak it not in the manner of prose, as many others, but I regard the laws of metre, mine ears having been trained by the melodious numbers of Fitzball. I know as well as thou that the word ought to be 'exitura,' but thou wilt understand that I cut off the final 'a' altogether, out of regard to the following vowel. Thereby I made use of the Synalœpha"—["Synalœpha be ——" muttered Epistemon]—"complying with the precept of the great poet, who wrote the Westminster prosody:—

'Vocalem Synalœpha delet truncare, sequatur
Si socia, aut h!——

If the reporter, muddle-pated by the dyspepsia arising from his too liberal consumption of kidnies, supplied my gap with the wrong vowel, the transgression was clearly his, not mine. So, all being satisfactorily explained," added Panurge, hilariously, as he slipped the Musical World into his pocket, "let us order another glass of brandy-and-water at the expense of Pantagruel, whom, I rejoice to see, we have not awakened, and then let us discourse of something else."

"Oh, monstrous!" ejaculated Epistemon. "I thought thy ignorance more stupendous than anything in the world, but I find that it is as nothing compared to thy truly colossal craft and assurance. Reproduce that valuable journal from that sink of iniquity, thy pocket: firstly, because it is my property; secondly, because the worst blunder of all has been left unnoticed. I willingly admitted thy plea in the case of the diphthongs, less willingly thy defence of 'vertet,' most unwillingly thy reference to the synalœpha; but what say'st thou to 'splendidis vitro,' when there is not a call-boy of the Royal Effingham Saloon who does not know that the word should be 'splendidior'—or—or ——? Clap not this revolting blunder on the broad back of that much-suffering reporter, whom thou so readily wouldst make the scape-goat of thy crass ignorance. Truly if he suffered from dyspepsia, it was not the kidney, but thine execrable Latinity which he was unable to digest. If thou hadst quoted scanning-wise, as thou pretendest, thy raven voice would have come down strongly on that final syllable 'or'—aye, with an aplomb like that of Lydia Thompson in the Sailor's Hornpipe, so that the ears of the veriest ass could not have taken it for an 'a.'"

"Well," said Panurge, "that I confess was a slip."

"Slip, indeed!" echoed Epistemon. "Rather say a fall into the lowest depths of Tartarus. Thou trained by Fitzball, forsooth! Thank thy stars that great lyrist did not hear thee, for if he had, he would have lashed thee soundly with a severe epigram after this fashion:—

'Defective lines I cannot bear,
For when the heart's oppressed with care,
It longs for something smooth and neat,
Which readers happiness complete.'

Also I should have preferred *Bland*usiæ to *Ban*dusiæ."

"Now, at last, do I snap my fingers at thee, "replied Panurge" with all the contempt thou so richly deservest. There is, I know, such a reading as Blandusiæ, but Bandusiæ is to be found in admirable texts, and why should'st thou so greatly affect the 'Bland' rather than the 'Band?' Has thy heart been more than usually exhilarated by the light comedy of Mr. Harcourt Bland, of the Princess's, or is thy brain strongly impressed with the image of Louis XV., as played by Mr. James Bland, at the Strand, with a portentous beard, that thou art pertinaciously set upon the more unusual reading? Truly thy learning is but superficial, after all, and I will henceforth call thee Joseph Surface"—

These last words seemed to have a magical effect on the sleeping Pantagruel, who with a mildly benignant face, softly murmured forth in his slumbers: "Joseph Surface—grand and dignified form—Charles Surface, solemn monument of the past. Ye veritable Dioscuri. Grave are ye all, from Sir Peter down to Snake. I am Pericles, and when I took the affairs of Athens into my hands, I swore that I would not again smile, and I thank ye, gentlemen, that, by your performance of the School for Scandal, you do not tempt me to break my oath. I will venture to say, that when the Adelphi of Terence was produced in honour of the funeral of Paulus Æmilius, it was acted much in this style. But what is this—Forty Thieves! Oh, how droll is Talfourd—how truly comic is Byron—how glibly flew the quips from the lips of Buckingham—Robert Brough, whether as author or actor, thou art a prince of burlesquers—ha, ha, ha!—ho, ho, ho! Oh, I am Pericles, and I have broken my vow, and the Eumenides are lashing me about like this—like this—"

And so saying, he jumped off the sofa, snatched up the rod which Epistemon had laid upon the table, and with it chased both him and Panurge round the room, lashing them with such vigour, that, forgetful of minor differences, they howled together in the most perfect unison. Having sufficiently exercised his muscles by this notable feat, Pantagruel sank once more upon the sofa, and was again wrapped in slumber, while, with eyes and mouth opened to their full extent, Epistemon and Panurge gazed upon each other.

SPOHR'S LETTERS FROM PARIS.

(From Alexander Muliebran's Louis Spohr. Sein Leben und Wirken. Frankfurt-am-Main. J. D. Sauerland's Verlag. 1860).

II.

Paris, 31*st December*, 1820.

A very agreeable fortnight has elapsed, since my first letter was despatched, and we have heard and seen much that is beautiful since then; but, for the present, I must content myself with writing to you only about what is more immediately connected with my art. I have now made my début before artists and dilettanti, connoisseurs and laymen, as violinist and composer—first at Herz Baudiot's, first violoncello of the Royal chapel; the next day at Kreutzer's; and then at three parties. On the first two occasions, hardly any persons but artists were present: at Kreutzer's especially there were nearly all the distinguished composers and fiddlers of Paris. I gave several of my quartets and quintets, and, on the second day, my nonetto. The composers paid me a great many compliments on my compositions, and the fiddlers on my play. Of the latter, Viotti, both the Kreutzers, Baillot, Lafont, Habeneck, Fontaine, Guérin, and many others, whose names are not so well-known in Germany, were present; so you perceive that it was a grand occasion, and that I had to exert myself to the utmost, to do honour to my countrymen. The parts for the wind instruments in my nonetto were played by the five artists, of whose masterly execution of Reiche's quintets you must often have read in the accounts from Paris. I had the pleasure of hearing them play two of these quintets, but shall defer writing to you in detail about them, till I am acquainted with more of them. At the unanimous request of the artists present, we were obliged to repeat my nonetto the same evening; and if my fellow performers had surprised me the first time by the readiness with which they played this difficult piece of music a prima vista, they satisfied me far more when the piece was repeated, by entering into and rendering its spirit. The young pianist, Herz, of whom, also, you must have read in the musical chit-chat of Paris, played twice in the course of the evening—first variations of his own on a theme from Die Schweizerfamilie, and then Moscheles' well known variations on the Alexander March. The extraordinary manual skill of this young man is astonishing; but in his case, as well as in that of all the young artists here whom I have as yet heard, technical culture seems to have preceded mental cultivation; he would otherwise have given something more sterling than these break-neck tricky things, in a society where none but professionals were present. It is, however, a striking fact that all here, old and young, endeavour to distinguish themselves only by mechanical dexterity; and people in whom, perhaps, there are the germs of something better, devote all their powers, for whole years, to practising a single piece of music, which, as such, frequently does not possess the slightest value, in order to perform it in public; that, by such a course, the mind must be killed, and that such people can become nothing much better than musical automata, is easily conceivable. The consequence is that you seldom or never hear a serious sterling piece of music, such as a quartet or quintet of our great masters for instance; every one rides his own hobby; there is nothing but Airs variés, Rondos favoris, Nocturnes, and such like trifles, while the singers give you only romances and little duets; and, however incorrect and insipid all these things are, they never miss producing their effect, provided only they are rendered smoothly and sweetly. Poor in such pretty nothings, I come second best off with my serious German music, and in such musical parties I feel, not unfrequently, like a man speaking to people who do not understand his language; for though I often hear the praise which is awarded, by some one or other of the audience to my play, extended to the composition, I cannot be proud of it, since, immediately afterwards, the same eulogiums are bestowed on the most trivial things. I blush at being praised by such connoisseurs. It is exactly the same in the theatres; the great mass, who set the fashion, are completely unable to distinguish the worst from the best; they hear Le Jugement de Midas, with the same ecstasy as Les Deux Journées, or Joseph. One does not require to be here long, to come over to the often expressed opinion that the French are an unmusical people. Even the artists here think so, and frequently reply, when I speak of Germany in relation to this point, "Ay, music is loved and understood there, but not here." This explains how, in Paris, good music may be unsuccessful when connected with a bad piece, and wretched music prove a great triumph when united to a good piece. This fact has deprived me of all desire to write for any of the theatres here, as I formerly wished to do; for, apart from the fact that, as a young composer, I should have to begin again, since, with the exception of a few things for the violin, my compositions are little or not at all known here, and, furthermore, apart from the fact that I should have to battle my way through a thousand cabals, which would be doubly formidable, on account of my being a foreigner, before I could get my work produced—I should, after all, though conscious of having written good music, not be certain of the result, which, as I have already said, depends here almost entirely upon the book. This is evident from the criticisms in the papers on new operas, where the writer speaks for pages about the libretto, while the music is merely mentioned casually in a few words. Were it not so lucrative to write for the theatres here, it is long since any good composer would have devoted himself to the task. On account, however, of the large sum an opera, if successful, brings in a man for his lifetime, new works are produced nearly every day; poet and composer are thinking incessantly of new effects; but, meanwhile, they do not neglect to work the public, by means of the papers, for months, to provide, on the evening of representation, a due number of claqueurs in the pit, in order, by all this preparation, to secure for their work a brilliant reception, and, by frequent performances of it, to obtain, in the end, rich profits. Were only half as much to be gained by an opera in Germany, we should soon be as rich in distinguished composers for the stage as we now are in instrumental composers, and it would no longer be necessary to transplant to our stage foreign productions, frequently so unworthy the artistic education of Germans.

That, after a stay of three weeks, we have visited each of the theatres repeatedly, is a matter of course. I am doubly glad of this, since, on account of the increase of my acquaintances, my engagements for the days and evenings have so accumulated, that we should be able to dedicate very few evenings in the course of the next fortnight to the theatre. I do not write anything about the Théâtre-Français, the Odéon, and the four small theatres, because they offer nothing remarkable in a musical sense. In the first two, you hear only Entr'actes, and in the two others scarcely any thing but vaudevilles. That pieces of this kind (which, thanks to Apollo and the Muses, have as yet been transplanted to no other country) are here so exceedingly popular, that four theatres play them almost exclusively, proves most convincingly that the French are unmusical; for the sacred art cannot be abused more shamefully than in these songs, which are neither sung nor spoken, but blurted out in intervals, diametrically opposed to the melody marked down, and to the accompanying harmony. All Frenchmen of taste, though, agree in saying that these vaudevilles, formerly given at one theatre only, smother, by their extension, the feeling for true music more and more, and thus exert a highly injurious effect on artistic progress. We have visited each of these theatres once, in order to see the celebrated comic actors, Brunet, Pothier, and Perlet, but we shall not, I think, make up our minds to pay a second visit, since the enjoyment these artists cause, by their wit and inexhaustible humour, is too dearly purchased by hearing such bad music. A thing which I found very remarkable in these theatres was the skill with which the bands manage to follow the singer, who does not pay the slightest attention to the tune, or the value of the notes. But this is their greatest merit; in other respects, they are but middling. We have, however, been to the Italian Theatre several times, and had many an artistic treat there. Yesterday we at last heard Don Juan, after it had been allowed to lay by for rather a long time. The house was crammed, as at the previous performances, hundreds being unable to find places, even half an hour before the opera began. I was inclined to think the Parisians had, at length, comprehended the classic excellence of the work, and thronged, in continually increasing crowds, to enjoy it; but I soon relinquished this opinion, on perceiving that the most magnificent pieces in the opera, the first duet, the quartet, the grand septet, and many others, passed over without producing any effect on the audience, while only two pieces were greeted with tumultuous applause, which, however, was intended more for the singers than for the composer. These two pieces, which were asked for da capo on each occasion, were the duet between Don Juan and Zerline: "Reich mir die Hand, mein Leben," and the aria of Don Juan, "Treibt der Champagner," the first—because Herr Garcia wants depth—transposed to B flat, and the latter actually a tone higher, to C. Mad. Mainville-Fodor, who, no doubt was well aware that Zerline's pieces would please the Parisians more than anything else in the opera, very wisely chose this part, and the result shows that she calculated correctly. What does it matter to her that the opera is cast most faultily, if she is only greeted with tumultuous applause! This, however, the connoisseur can only allow her to merit by forgetting that she plays the part of a peasant girl, and by entirely renouncing all truth of pourtrayal, for she decks out the simple strains of her part with a number of high-trotting ornaments, which, however magnificently she executes them, are here doubly exceptionable, firstly, because they are altogether out of place in Mozart's music, and secondly, because they do not agree with the character of her part. If we leave these out of consideration, it certainly is an unusual treat to hear this part, which, in Germany, is generally given to the third lady, sung here by the first, and one, moreover, so distinguished. Herr Garcia, as Don Juan, gave us too much of a good thing. Whenever he can, by any means, manage it, he is ready with some ornament an ell long. Such ornamentation is most out of place in the serenade, where the figured mandolin accompaniment forbids even the simplest. In spite of this, however, he runs about in the wildest fashion, and, in order to do so, has the tempo taken very slowly. To make up for this, however, he sings his air, "Treibt der Champagner" incomparably, and I confess I never heard it so well given. The fluent Italian language is, however, of great service to him, and instead of his breath failing him, as it generally does our German singers, his strength goes on increasing to the very end.

The other parts were, on the whole, well cast; at any rate, none were badly so; and it must be thankfully allowed that every one exerts himself to the utmost to do honour to the work. We may, too, be very well satisfied with the performance, if we only forget what we have a right to expect from such a distinguished body of artists. Thus much, however, soon becomes evident to a German, namely, that these singers, who give modern Italian music, especially Rossini's, with the greatest perfection, cannot execute Mozart's with the same degree of excellence—it is of too different a sort. The effeminate, sweet style, quite in keeping with the former, weakens too much the energetic character, which is more peculiar to Don Juan than to any other of Mozart's operas.

The orchestra, which the Parisians always call the first in the world, displayed, at any rate, some few weak points this evening. In the first place, the wind instruments were twice most strikingly deficient, and, secondly, the whole body was so unsteady, several times, that the conductor was obliged to have recourse to beating time. I am now still more strengthened in my conviction that a theatrical orchestra, however excellent, should not, on account of the great distance between the two ends, be conducted otherwise than by beating time, and that it is not advisable for the conductor himself to play, not even when, as Herr Grasset did, he continually marks the time by the movements of his body and by his violin. The orchestra is, however, justly celebrated for the discretion with which it accompanies the singers, and might, in this respect, serve as a model for all the other Parisian orchestras, as well as for many German ones.

The chorus, also, is admirable, and produced an especially strong and magnificent effect in the concluding allegro of the first finale. But why was this allegro, here too, as in most other places, taken with such immoderate quickness! Do conductors never reflect that they only impair instead of increasing its strength, and that the triplet-figures of the violins, which are intended to give life and movement to the broad masses, can no longer, with such frantically rapid time, be brought out distinctly and vigorously, so that all the public at last hears consists merely of skeleton-like outlines, without anything to fill them up, instead of the living whole?

When any one hears the effect of so magnificent a piece of music lessened by a false tempo, he must again feel an earnest wish that, at length, the marking of the tempi should be universally determined in Malzel's or Weber's manner (or, still better, in both). It is true that the conductors would then be obliged to conform conscientiously to this plan, and not, as they do at present, unreservedly follow their own feeling.

MOZART—CHILD AND MAN.

(Continued from page 113, Vol. 38.)

74.

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, July 21*st*, 1770.

We congratulate you on your fête day, wishing you good health, and before all the grace of God. It is the one thing necessary, all the others are added blessings. We have been to hear a mass performed at Civita-Castellana, after which Wolfgang played on the organ. On the 16th we went to Loretto, I bought several relics there; amongst others a splinter of the true Cross. We saw the fair at Sinigaglia; yesterday we came here. We left Rome on the 10th; the Count Pallavicini has offered us here all that we wanted. I accepted the offer of his carriage. If Wolfgang continues to grow as he does, he will be very tall.

P.S. of Wolfgang.—I congratulate my dear mother on her fête-day, and hope she may live a hundred years. It is what I pray God for every day, and what I shall continue to ask for her and for my sister in my prayers. I can only offer my mother the bells, the wax candles, the caps and the ribbons, that we bought at Loretto, and which we will bring her. Meanwhile I remain her faithful child.

~~La vi augura d' cuore vi dia compimento e vi lasci vivere cent anni, e vi fanno mentre quanch avrete mille anni.~~ Spero che ovi imparerete meglio conoscermi in avvenire e che poi ne giudicherete come ch 'egli vi piace. Il tempo non mi permetto di scriver molte la penna non vale un corno, ne pure quello che la dirigge. Il titolo dell' opera che ho da componere a Milano non si sa anchora.

I have just received as a present from our hostess at Rome, the "Thousand and One Nights," in Italian; they are very amusing tales to read.

75.

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, July 28*th*, 1770.

My leg has not got quite well yet; this accident will cost us 13 ducats. It is not very gay work being ill while at an inn; if I had made 1000 ducats at Naples I could easily console myself for the expense of my illness. However we have always something in hand, and with that, thank God, we live happily.

Yesterday we received the libretto, and the names of those who compose the Opera company. The title of the opera is, Mitridate re di Ponto, and it is written by a poet of Turin, Vittorio Amedeo Cigua Santi by name. The opera was performed in 1767. The dramatis personæ are:—

Mitridate, King of Pontus, Signor Gulielmo d' Ettore, tenor.

Aspasia, betrothed to Mithridate, Signora Antonia Bernasconi, prima donna.

Tipare, Son of the King, in love with Aspasia, Signor Santorini, first soprano, (who played in the last Carnival at Turin.)

Farnace, eldest Son of Mithridate, in love with Aspasia, Signor Cicognani.

Ismene, Daughter of the King of Parti, in love with Farnace, second prima donna, the Signora Varese.

Arbate, Governor of Mijea soprano.

Magio, Roman Tribune, tenor.

We heard Sartonini sing at Rome, we already know La Bernasconi, and Cicognani is also our friend.

The two portraits have pleased us very much, but one must not look too closely at them, for a pastel is not a miniature. They are rather too highly coloured, but they lose this looking at them from a distance; and we are satisfied and that is enough.

P.S. of Wolfgang.—Cara Sorella mio, Io vi devo confessare che ho un grandissimo piacere che vi avete mandat i minuetti i quali mi piaccio in molto.

76.

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, August 4th, 1770.

I shall be surprised if my illness costs me less than 20 ducats, if it is even as little. With the help of God, if one keeps one's health let the devil take the money! Mislinetscheck* who has just paid us a visit, has the first opera for the Carnival of 1772, to do at Milan.

P.S. of Wolfgang.—I am truly sorry for poor Martha, who still continues ill, and I pray every day for her return to health; tell her from me not to agitate herself, and to eat a great many salt things. Apropos! Have you given my letter to Robini? You have said nothing about it; when you see him tell him he has quite forgotten me. I cannot write better than this, as my pen is made for making notes, not for letters. I have got fresh strings to my violin, and I play every day. I only tell you this because my mother wished to know if I still played on the violin. I have had the honour of going alone at least six times to different churches, and assisting in some magnificent ceremonies. Meanwhile I have already composed four Italian symphonies, besides five or six songs, and a motet.

Does your M. Balordo come often? and does he still honour you with his interesting discourses? and Monsieur Charles Noble, of Vogt, does he still condescend to listen to your insupportable voices? Tell Mr. Schidenhofen to help him often to compose minuets, or else he shall have no more bons-bons. My duty would be, if I had time, to inflict on MM. de Mœlle and Schidenhofen a letter, but I have not a minute to spare. I pray them then to excuse me, and reserve myself the honour for another time. My sole amusement consists in the somersaults I permit myself from time to time. Italy is a country for making one sleep, and one always feels sleepy in it.

* Composer born near Prague, in 1737, and that the Italians called Il Boemo. He died in Rome in 1781, after having struggled against poverty a long time. He only received from his operas 50 to 60 sequins, that is about 16 pounds.

(To be Continued.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JULLIEN FUND.—A severe illness, ending in mental aberration, has rendered it necessary to place M. Jullien in a lunatic asylum, as the only chance of his ultimate recovery. For some years—through causes not unknown to the public—M. Jullien's affairs have been in a hopeless state, and very recently he was compelled to appear before the Bankruptcy Court in Paris. Having obtained his certificate, M. Jullien was about to institute, with the countenance and support of several influential persons, a series of musical performances on the Continent previous to his return to this country. The first concert was to take place on the 10th inst., all the preparations having been made, but the excitement attendant on his arduous duties in superintending them, combined with a keen sense of his recent misfortunes, brought on a state of anxiety which led to M. Jullien's present unhappy condition. Under these circumstances M. Jullien and those dependent on him are left destitute. With a view of raising such a sum as may provide for his maintenance in the asylum, and secure a modest provision for his family, an APPEAL is made to the generosity of the British public, to whose amusements M. Jullien has diligently and faithfully administered for upwards of twenty years. Honorary Treasurers—Messrs. John Mitchell, 33, Old Bond-street; Thomas Chappell, 50, New Bond-street; W. R. Sams, 1, St. James's-street. Bankers—Messrs. Coutts, Strand; Heywood, Kennards, and Co., Lombard-street; London and County Bank, Hanover-square; who as well as the Honorary Treasurers, have kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

First Subscription List.

F. Gye, Esq.	£20 0 0	Albert Smith, Esq.	£2 2 0
T. Chappell, Esq.	10 10 0	Arthur Smith, Esq.	2 2 0
A. Chappell, Esq.	10 10 0	M. Posno, Esq.	2 2 0
A. W. Hammond, Esq.	10 10 0	Charles Coote, Esq.	1 1 0
Mowbray Morris, Esq.	5 5 0	Louis Ries, Esq.	1 1 0
E. T. Smith, Esq.	5 5 0	C. Doyle, Esq.	1 1 0
Sims Reeves, Esq.	5 5 0	A. Bowlby, Esq.	1 1 0
A Friend	5 5 0	W. Winterbottom, Esq.	1 1 0
Miss Arabella Goddard	5 5 0	G. Metsler, Esq.	1 1 0
W. R Sams, Esq.	5 5 0	W. H. Russell, Esq.	1 1 0
H. L. Bischoffsheim, Esq.	5 5 0	John Leech, Esq.	1 1 0
F. Vilmet, Esq.	5 5 0	J. H. Dillon, Esq.	1 1 0
W. Bowley, Esq.	5 5 0	Samuel Lucas, Esq.	1 1 0
Messrs. Leader and Cock	2 2 0	E. Coulon, Esq.	0 10 6

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Public is respectfully informed that this establishment will open for the season, on Tuesday, April 10th.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE, HAYMARKET.—The Lessee and Director, having completed arrangements which enable him to make the announcement under peculiarly favourable circumstances, has the gratification to acquaint the nobility, gentry, and public, that Her Majesty's Theatre will Open for the Season on the 10th of April next. Her Majesty's Theatre has been for more than a century recognized as the first Lyric Theatre in Europe. With this magnificent establishment are intimately associated all the splendours and glories of Italian Opera. The history of Her Majesty's Theatre is identified with the progress of music in this country, and its name is made memorable by the special patronage of Royalty. Its spacious and noble area, its peculiarity of construction—which renders it the finest theatre in the world for sound—its perfect adaptation for the purposes of music, and, more than all, its locality in the most fashionable and easily-accessible part of the metropolis, point to it as the temple of high-art entertainment best adapted to the taste and accommodation of the Court and the aristocracy. In short, no other Opera-house in existence can boast of equal advantages, in convenience of site, fitness and commodiousness of construction, and elegance of appearance. During his previous seasons at Drury Lane Theatre, the Director received from the nobility and subscribers a gratifying recognition of his endeavours to place before them, under the most adverse circumstances, the best works, supported by the best available talent. Nor did the fidelity with which he adhered to the programmes, and, still more, the liberality shown in exceeding the promises contained therein, pass unnoticed. The experience of last year, however, has led him to appreciate the serious objections to the establishment of an Italian Opera in any situation separated from the West-end, and not accessible by easy approaches. To ensure success to his new management, a removal from Drury-lane to the Haymarket was imperatively necessitated. The untoward circumstances which have precluded the opening of Her Majesty's Theatre need not be alluded to in this place. It is enough to say that steps have been taken to place the Italian Opera on a permanent footing in its appropriate home, and with such complete arrangements in every department, as to lead to a confident hope that "Her Majesty's" will be restored to its ancient splendour and prestige. The lessee is deeply impressed with the responsibilities of his new undertaking. He feels that he has made himself answerable to all his patrons for the production of every work at Her Majesty's Theatre in a style of completeness and excellence worthy of their support. As an assurance that due exertion will not be wanting to arrive at this result, he refers only to the list of artists in the programme for the coming season, which will be immediately published. The Director has the greatest satisfaction of announcing that he has been able to retain the invaluable services of Mademoiselle Titiens, now universally acknowledged to be the greatest living dramatic vocalist, and to secure those of Madame Alboni, the unrivalled queen of song; also Madame Borghi Mamo, of the Grand-Opéra and the Theatre Imperial Italian, Paris, who will make her first appearance in this country. In making engagements for the orchestra, the greatest care has been taken to secure thorough efficiency in every department. The direction has been confided to Signor Arditi and M. Benedict. To Her Majesty's Theatre belong the most brilliant reminiscences of the ballet, which department will be complete in every respect, comprising artists of reputation. Among the engagements already concluded, may be mentioned Madlle. Pocchini, Madlle. Ferraris, and Madlle. Oucchi (of the Imperial Opera, Vienna), who will make her first appearance. Considerable alterations and improvements will be made in Her Majesty's Theatre, to conduce to the comfort and satisfaction of the subscribers and the public. The crush room and entrances will be rendered commodious and elegant, a perfect system of ventilation will be adopted, and every care be taken to insure the accommodation of the audience. With a répertoire so extensive and attractive as that of Her Majesty's Theatre, an assemblage of talent so remarkable, and with so magnificent a theatre, in every way peculiarly adapted to the various performances, the Director confidently looks to the nobility and the public for support. To fulfil the conditions entailed in carrying on so vast an establishment, requires more than common energies and common resources; and it is only by liberal assistance from the patrons of art, among the aristocracy and the public, that any good result can follow. While no labour, effort, or expense will be spared to render the performance of the highest excellence, the Lessee expects to receive that powerful aid, without which art, in its delicate and expressive form, cannot prosper. The conservation of Italian Opera in its proper temple rests more particularly with the exclusive classes; and the Director trusts that he shall obtain, as he shall earnestly endeavour to merit, their liberal patronage and assistance. Such assistance has been afforded to him on another occasion. May he not, without presumption, anticipate its extension to him in the present loftier and more onerous enterprise? The Director has ventured to speak thus openly, thinking it just and necessary to assert his full comprehension of the various and arduous duties and responsibilities which must devolve on the Manager of Her Majesty's Theatre. The Box-office of the Theatre is open daily for subscribers under the management of Mr. Nugent.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LURLINE.—The following are the favourite pieces in WALLACE'S new and successful Opera, LURLINE:—"Under a spreading coral," "Take this cup of sparkling wine," "Flow on, oh, silver Rhine," "When the night winds," "Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer," sung by Miss Pyne; "Gentle troubadour," sung by Miss Pilling; "Our barque in moonlight beaming," "Sweet form that on my dreamy gaze," "The chimes of home," sung by Mr. Harrison; "A Father's love," "Love, transient passion," sung by Mr. Santley.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

LURLINE.—WALLACE'S NEW GRAND OPERA for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets, by W. H. Calcott; also Fantasias and Rondos from "Lurline" by Wallace, Favarger, Osborne, and other eminent composers. Valses and Quadrilles from "Lurline."

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW LIST.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS.

Complete for the Pianoforte, in cloth. Price 6s. Forming the 20th volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Operas.

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA and WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA.

Edited by J. W. Davison, with Critical and Biographical Introductions. In one volume. Price 4s.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

Complete in one volume. Edited by J. W. Davison, with Introduction and Portrait. Price 8s.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

Complete for Pianoforte. By Henry Smart. Price 8s.

DE BERIOT'S AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN,

Complete with all the Variations, Nos. 1 to 7, in one book. Price 1s.

 Pianoforte part (ad. lib.), price 3s. 6d.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN.

By Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky. Price 1s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' ARRANGEMENT

Of Balfe's "Riflemen, form," as a March for the Pianoforte, Price 2s. 6d.

 As performed by command of the Queen by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace.

KUHE'S TWO NEW FANTASIAS

On "Domino Noir" and "Zampa." Price 3s. each.

GLUCK'S IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS.

Now ready, the Three Principal Songs, with English words. Price 2s. each.
1. "Oh, Greece, how mourns thy hapless daughter."
2. "Ever linked from early childhood."
3. "Oh, thou that wert of life the source."

The complete Opera, in English and French. Price 8s.

DINORAH. PART I.

For Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words. Price 1s. To be completed in Eight Monthly Parts.

STANDARD OVERTURES,

FOR LARGE AND SMALL BAND. The first number of Boosey and Sons new series (The Crown Diamonds) will be ready by April. Price 5s. and 8s. To be continued every month.

SCHLESSER'S THREE GRAND DUETS,

On "Martha," "La Traviata," and "Dinorah." Price 5s. each. Published this day.

THE POPULAR SONGS OF THE SEASON.

Sung by Madame DOLBY, Madame LOUISA VINNING, WILBYE COOPER, and SIMS REEVES.

	s.	d.
Janet's Choice, by Claribel ..	2	6
Don't come teasing me, Sir, by Hatton	2	6
Sweetheart, by Balfe	2	0
Bird of Song, by Hatton	2	0
Thou art so near, by Reichardt ..	3	0
O live, or let me die, by Meyerbeer	2	0
Sister Mary, by Meyerbeer ..	2	0
It was fifty years ago, by Hatton	2	0
Why don't he tell me so? by Berger	2	0
Swifter than the swallow's flight, by Berger	2	0
When you and I were young, by Allen	2	0
O tender shadow, by Meyerbeer..	3	0
Margaretta, by Balfe	30
The maid I love hath many a grace, by Hatton	2	0
You chide me for loving, by Berger	2	0
The Quadroon girl, by Balfe ..	2	6
The song of love and death, by Balfe	2	0
Sweet Katie, by Callcott	2	0
Magenta, by Balfe	2	0

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.

MONDAY, March 19th.

GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT for the BENEFIT of a LITERARY GENTLEMAN, long suffering from severe illness.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

Duet, "Tell me, Gentle Stranger" .. .. Parry.
Mr. and Miss Ransford.

Song, "Dear, Delightful Dancing" .. .. Montgomery.
Miss Louise Keeley.
Composed expressly for her.

Song, "The Red-Cross Banner" .. .. Nelson.
Mr. George Tedder.

Song, "Gentle Troubadour" .. .. Wallace.
Miss Emily Jeans.

Romantic Ballad, "The Two Castles" .. .. S. Lover.
Mme. Catherine Hayes.
Written and composed for her.

Solo, Violin, "Saltarella" .. .. Molique.
Herr Molique, accompanied by Mr. Lindsay Sloper.

Duet, "The Swiss Maidens" .. .. Holmes.
The Misses Brougham.

Song, "Margaretta" .. .. Balfe.
Mr. Sims Reeves.

Glee, "Maying" .. .. Muller.
Quartet Glee Union.

Song, "Where Trembling Lotus Flowers Lie" .. .. .. H. Bodor.
Miss Louise Keeley.

Song, "Tom Tough" .. .. Dibdin.
Mr. Ransford.

Song, "The Last Rose of Summer" .. .. Moore.
Madame Catherine Hayes.

Cavatina, "Away to the Fairies' Well" .. .. E. Land.
Miss Ransford.

Grand Duet for Two Pianofortes, "Les Huguenots" .. .. G. Osborne.
Messrs. Benedict and Lindsay Sloper.

Mr. ALBERT SMITH has kindly consented to appear in the course of the evening.

PART II.

Glee, "The Soldier's Love" .. .. Knyvett.
Quartet Glee Union.

Song, "The Young Volunteer" .. .. Vianesi.
Miss Stabbach.
Composed expressly for her.

Song, "Under the Greenwood Tree" .. .. Hatton.
Mr. Sims Reeves.

Solo, Violoncello, Fantasia.. .. .. Piatti.
Signor Piatti.

Ballad, "Home, Sweet Home" .. .. H. Bishop.
Miss Laura Baxter.

Song, "Ah, si, ben mio" .. .. Verdi.
Mr. George Perren.

New Ballad, "Clarine" .. .. L. Williams.
Miss Lascelles.

Song, "The Thorn" .. .. Shield.
Mr. George Tedder.

Song, "Shadow Song" .. .. Meyerbeer.
Mdlle. Parepa.

Duet, "Si la stanchezza" .. .. Verdi.
Mr. George Perren and Miss Laura Baxter.

Song, "La Vivandiera" .. .. Vianesi.
Miss Stabbach.
Composed expressly for her.

Mr. and Mrs. GERMAN REED will generously lend their assistance in a short selection from their POPULAR ENTERTAINMENT.

Conductors—Messrs. BENEDICT, LINDSAY SLOPER, and WILHELM GANZ.

The concert to commence at 8 o'clock. Places to be obtained from Mr. Austin at the Box Office, open daily, at the following prices:—Dress Circle, 4s.; Stalls on the Stage, numbered and reserved, 4s.; Upper Boxes, 3s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Private Boxes, £2 2s. and £2 12s. 6d.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBRAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 66, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex.—Saturday, March 17, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 12. SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

U. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	DR. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	MR. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	MR. BAKER.
Piano	HERR SIEMERS. MR. ELDER.
Violin	MONS. ROQUIER. MR. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	MONS. VIEUXTEMPS. MR. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	SIG. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	MR. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	MR. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	MESSRS. POWELL and ELDER.

DR. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above Institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expenses.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

~~Dr. Mark is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.~~

DR. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

12

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SIXTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 26th, 1860.

THE INSTRUMENTAL PIECES BY BEETHOVEN.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

GRAND SEPTET, in E flat major, Op. 20 .. .. .. Beethoven.
For Violin, Viola, Clarionet, Horn, Bassoon, Violoncello, and Contra Bass.
Herr Becker, Mr. Doyle, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. C. Harper, Mr. Chipshalm, Mr. Severs, and Signor Piatti.
(By unanimous desire.)

SONG.
SONG.
SONATA, in E major, Op. 109, for Pianoforte Solo .. Beethoven.
(First time.)
Miss Arabella Goddard.

PART II.

TRIO, in E flat, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello.. .. Beethoven.
(First time.)
Herr Becker, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.

SONG.
SONG.
GRAND SONATA, in A (Op. 47), for Pianoforte and Violin, dedicated to Kreutzer .. .. Beethoven.
Miss Arabella Goddard and Herr Becker.

CONDUCTOR—MR. BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Braidbury's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Wylde, Great Hall, Hungerford Market; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cocks and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church, street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

SAINT MARTIN'S HALL. The GREATEST COMBINATION of TALENT of the SEASON.—A GRAND EVENING CONCERT, at the above Hall, on MONDAY, March 26, for a CHARITABLE PURPOSE. The following eminent Artists have kindly promised their valuable assistance:—Vocalists: Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Miss Fanny Huddart, the Misses Brougham, and Mdlle Euphrosyne Parepa; Messrs. Wilbye Cooper, G. Perren, G. Tedder, Patey, Allan Irving, and Santley, Signor Oliva, Pianists: Mr. Charles Salaman, Miss Auerhann, Miss Howard, Miss Julia Woolf, R.A., Violin:—Herr Greebe, Trombone: Herr Nabich. Accompanyists: Messrs. Frank Mori, Francesco Berger, Signor A. Randegger, and Charles Salaman. To commence at eight o'clock. Reserved seats, 5s.: Balcony, 3s.: Area, 2s.: Platform, 1s. Tickets to be had at the Hall; the principal musicsellers; and at Mr. Austin's, St James's Hall.—S. Phillips, Hon. Sec., 37, Alfred-place, Bedford square.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—On Wednesday evening next, March 28th, the Vocal Association (President, the Right Hon. the Earl of Dudley). Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Mr. C. E. Horsley. Artist:—Madame Sainton-Dolby, Miss Fanny Rowland: pianoforte, Miss Eleanor Ward; violin, Mons. Sainton. Madrigals and part songs by the choir, under the direction of M. Benedict. Tickets, 1s., 2s., and 5s. each, at the Hall. Commence at 8, terminate 10·15.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Mis JULIA WOOLF'S new Concertante Duett for piano and violin will be performed for the first time by her and Herr Greebe, at the above Hall, on Monday evening next.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW LIST.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS.

Complete for the Pianoforte, in cloth. Price 6s. Forming the 20th volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Operas.

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA and WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA.

Edited by J. W. Davison, with Critical and Biographical Introductions. In one volume. Price 4s.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

Complete in one volume. Edited by J. W. Davison, with Introduction and Portrait. Price 8s.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

Complete for Pianoforte. By Henry Smart. Price 8s.

DE BERIOT'S AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN,

Complete with all the Variations, Nos. 1, to 7, in one book. Price 1s.

 Pianoforte part (ad. lib.), price 3s. 6d.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN.

By Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky. Price 1s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' ARRANGEMENT

Of Balfe's "Riflemen, form," as a March for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. 6d.

 As performed by command of the Queen by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace.

KUHE'S TWO NEW FANTASIAS

On "Domino Noir" and "Zampa." Price 3s. each.

GLUCK'S IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS.

Now ready, the Three Principal Songs, with English words. Price 2s. each.
1. "Oh, Greece, how mourns thy hapless daughter."
2. "Ever linked from early childhood."
3. "Oh, thou that wert of life the source."

The complete Opera, in English and French. Price 8s.

DINORAH. PART I.

For Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words. Price 1s. To be completed in Eight Monthly Parts.

STANDARD OVERTURES,

FOR LARGE AND SMALL BAND. The first number of Boosey and Sons new series (The Crown Diamonds) will be ready by April. Price 5s. and 8s. To be continued every month.

SCHLOESSER'S THREE GRAND DUETS,

On "Martha," "La Traviata," and "Dinorah." Price 5s. each. Published this day.

THE POPULAR SONGS OF THE SEASON.

Sung by Madame DOLBY, Madame LOUISA VINNING, WILBYE COOPER, and SIMS REEVES.

	s.	d.
Janet's Choice, by Claribel ..	2	6
Don't come teasing me, Sir, by Hatton	2	6
Sweetheart, by Balfe	2	0
Bird of Song, by Hatton	2	0
Thou art so near, by Reichardt ..	3	0
O live, or let me die, by Meyerbeer	2	0
Sister Mary, by Meyerbeer ..	2	0
It was fifty years ago, by Hatton	2	0
Why don't he tell me so? by Berger	2	0
Swifter than the swallow's flight, by Berger	2	0
When you and I were young, by Allen	2	0
O tender shadow, by Meyerbeer..	3	0
Margaretta, by Balfe	30
The maid I love hath many a grace, by Hatton	2	0
You chide me for loving, by Berger	2	0
The Quadroon girl, by Balfe ..	2	6
The song of love and death, by Balfe	2	0
Sweet Katie, by Calcott	2	0
Magenta, by Balfe	2	0

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

SADLER'S WELLS THEATRE.

MONDAY, March 19th.

GRAND VOCAL and INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT for the BENEFIT of a LITERARY GENTLEMAN, long suffering from severe illness.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

Duet, "Tell me, Gentle Stranger" .. .. Parry.
Mr. and Miss Ransford.

Song, "Dear, Delightful Dancing" .. .. Montgomery.
Miss Louise Keeley.
Composed expressly for her.

Song, "The Red-Cross Banner" .. .. Nelson.
Mr. George Tedder.

Song, "Gentle Troubadour" .. .. Wallace.
Miss Emily Jenns.

Romantic Ballad, "The Two Castles" .. .. S. Lover.
Mme. Catherine Hayes.
Written and composed for her.

Solo, Violin, "Saltarella" .. .. Molique.
Herr Molique, accompanied by Mr. Lindsay Sloper.

Duet, "The Swiss Maidens" .. .. Holmes.
The Misses Bredgham.

Song, "Margaretta" .. .. Balfe.
Mr. Sims Reeves.

Glee, "Maying" .. .. Muller.
Quartet Glee Union.

Song, "Where Trembling Lotus Flowers Lie" .. .. .. H. Beder.
Miss Louise Keeley.

Song, "Tom Tough" .. .. Dibdin.
Mr. Ransford.

Song, "The Last Rose of Summer" .. .. Moore.
Madame Catherine Hayes.

Cavatina, "Away to the Fairies' Well" .. .. H. Land.
Miss Ransford.

Grand Duet for Two Pianofortes, "Les Huguenots" .. .. G. Osborne.
Messrs. Benedict and Lindsay Sloper.

Mr. ALBERT SMITH has kindly consented to appear in the course of the evening.

PART II.

Glee, "The Soldier's Love" .. .. Kuhlau.
Quartet Glee Union.

Song, "The Young Volunteer" .. .. Vianesi.
Miss Stabbach.
Composed expressly for her.

Song, "Under the Greenwood Tree" .. .. Hatton.
Mr. Sims Reeves.

Solo, Violoncello, Fantasia.. .. .. Piatti.
Signor Piatti.

Ballad, "Home, Sweet Home" .. .. H. Bishop.
Miss Laura Baxter.

Song, "Ah, si, ben mio" .. .. Verdi.
Mr. George Perren.

New Ballad, "Clarine" .. .. L. Williams.
Miss Lascelles.

Song, "The Thorn" .. .. Shield.
Mr. George Tedder.

Song, "Shadow Song" .. .. Meyerbeer.
Mdlle. Parepa.

Duet, "Si la stanchezza" .. .. Verdi.
Mr. George Perren and Miss Laura Baxter.

Song, "La Vivandiera .. .. Vianesi.
Miss Stabbach.
Composed expressly for her.

Mr. and Mrs. GERMAN REED will generously lend their assistance in a short selection from their POPULAR ENTERTAINMENT.

Conductors—Messrs. BENEDICT, LINDSAY SLOPER, and WILHELM GANZ.

The concert to commence at 8 o'clock. Places to be obtained from Mr. Austin at the Box Office, open daily, at the following prices:—Dress Circle, 4s.; Stalls on the Stage, numbered and reserved, 4s.; Upper Boxes, 3s.; Pit, 2s.; Gallery, 1s. Private Boxes, £2 2s. and £2 12s. 6d.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at the office of BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 66, St. Martin's lane, in the Parish of St Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex.—Saturday, March 17, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 12. SATURDAY, MARCH 24, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

U. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organized in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	DR. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	MR. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	MR. BAKER.
Piano	HERR SIEMERS. MR. ELDER.
Violin	MONS. ROQUIER. MR. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	MONS. VIEUXTEMPS. MR. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	SIG. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	MR. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	MR. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

DR. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above Institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

~~Dr. Mark is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.~~

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

12

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SIXTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, MARCH 26th, 1860.

THE INSTRUMENTAL PIECES BY BEETHOVEN.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

GRAND SEPTET, in E flat major, Op. 20 .. .. .. Beethoven.
For Violin, Viola, Clarinet, Horn, Bassoon, Violoncello, and Contra Bass.
Herr Becker, Mr. Doyle, Mr. Lazarus, Mr. C. Harper, Mr. Chipham, Mr. Severs, and Signor Piatti.
(By unanimous desire.)

SONG.

SONG.

SONATA, in E major, Op. 109, for Pianoforte Solo .. Beethoven.
(First time.)
Miss Arabella Goddard.

PART II.

TRIO, in E flat, for Violin, Viola, and Violoncello.. .. Beethoven.
(First time.)
Herr Becker, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.

SONG.

SONG.

GRAND SONATA, in A (Op. 47), for Pianoforte and Violin, dedicated to Kreutzer .. .. .. Beethoven.
Miss Arabella Goddard and Herr Becker.

CONDUCTOR—MR. BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradbury's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Wylde, Great Hall, Hungerford Market; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cock and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church, street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

SAINT MARTIN'S HALL.—The GREATEST COMBINATION of TALENT of the SEASON.—A GRAND EVENING CONCERT, at the above Hall, on MONDAY, March 26, for a CHARITABLE PURPOSE. The following eminent Artists have kindly promised their valuable assistance:—Vocalists: Madame Rudersdorff, Miss Rebecca Isaacs, Miss Fanny Huddart, the Misses Brougham, and Mdlle Euphrosyne Parepa; Messrs. Wilbye Cooper, G. Perren, G. Tedder, Patey, Allen Irving, and Santley, Signor Oliva, Pianists: Mr. Charles Salaman, Miss Auerbach, Miss Howard, Miss Julia Woolf, R.A., Violin:—Herr Greebe, Trombone: Herr Nabich. Accompanyists: Messrs. Frank Mori, Francesco Berger, Signor A. Randegger, and Charles Salaman. To commence at eight o'clock. Reserved seats, 5s.: Balcony, 3s.: Area, 2s.: Platform, 1s. Tickets to be had at the Hall; the principal musicsellers; and at Mr. Austin's, St James's Hall.—S. Phillips, Hon. Sec., 37, Alfred-place, Bedford square.

ST. JAMES'S HALL.—On Wednesday evening next, March 28th, the Vocal Association (President, the Right Hon. the Earl of Dudley). Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Mr. C. E. Horsley. Artist—Madame Sainton-Dolby, Miss Fanny Rowland: pianoforte, Miss Eleanor Ward; violin, Mons. Sainton. Madrigals and part songs by the choir, under the direction of M. Benedict. Tickets, 1s., 2s., and 5s. each, at the Hall. Commence at 8, terminate 10·15.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Mis JULIA WOOLF'S new Concertante Duett for piano and violin will be performed for the first time by her and Herr Greebe, at the above Hall, on Monday evening next.

MISS LAURA BAXTER has the honour to announce that her Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert will take place, at St. James's Hall, on the 15th of May. Under the immediate patronage of The Marquis of Lansdowne, The Right Honorable The Earl Mount Edgcumbe, The Countess Mount Edgcumbe, The Lady Brownlow, Viscount Valletort, M.P., The Lady Katherine Valletort, &c. Communications respecting the Concert, Lessons, &c., to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, 155, Albany-street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MASTER HORTON CLARIDGE ALLISON (Pupil of Mr. W. H. Holmes), begs to announce that at the first of his Pianoforte Performances, which will take place at Willis's Rooms, King-street, St. James's, on Tuesday, March 27th, to commence at three o'clock precisely, he will have the honor of playing a selection from the works of the following composers:—S. Bach, Handel, Haydn, Beethoven, Mozart, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Herz. Master H. C. Allison will be assisted by the following eminent artistes. Vocalists: Miss Ransford, Miss Fanny Rowland: Mr. Allan Irving. Instrumentalists: Mr. H. Blagrove, Mr. R. Blagrove, Mr. Aylward. Accompanyist, Mr. Hammond. Tickets, for the series, One Guinea; for a single performance, 10s. 6d.; to be had of Master H. C. Allison, 144, Marylebone-road, N.W. All seats reserved. The pianoforte used at the above performances will be by Messrs. Broadwood and Sons.

MR. CHARLES SALAMAN'S EVENING CONCERT At the Hanover square Rooms, on Thursday next, March 29th, at Eight o'clock precisely. Vocalists:—Madame Catharine Hayes, Mille. Parepa, Miss Stabbach, Miss Eliza Hughes, and Herr Reichardt. Instrumentalists:—Pianoforte, Mr Salaman; Violin, Herr Molique and Mr H. G. Blagrove; Viola, Mr. R. Blagrove; Violoncello, Herr Lidel. Accompanyist, Mr. Benedict. Programmes are published. Tickets, 7s. each, with a reserved seat; family ticket, for four persons, one Guinea; of Mr. Salaman, 36, Duke-street, and of the principal music-shops.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER will sing at Miss CHIPPERFIELD'S CONCERT, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Monday 26th instant; at Myddelton Hall, Islington, April 17th; and Hanover Square Rooms, April 26th.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—MR. GYE has the honour to announce that the Season will commence on Tuesday, April 10th.

The programme, with full particulars of the arrangements, will be issued in a few days.

MUSICAL UNION.—Members' Tickets are all issued, Changes of residence, nominations of new members, and non-delivery of of tickets to be notified to the Director. Extra copies of RECORDS, with Portrai. of Spohr, and account of Music in Paris, 1859, are just published, 2s. 6d. each. Letters to Cramner's, Chappell's, and Ollivier's, will receive prompt attention addressed to

J. ELLA, Director.

WANTED, in a Large Provincial Musical Establishment. an Assistant to manage the Paper Department. Apply, by letter, to H. L., care of Messrs. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London, W.

MR. RAMSDEN respectfully announces that he will return to Town, for the Season, on the 2nd of April. Communications respecting Engagements, Pupils, &c., to be addressed to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201, Regent-street, W.

SIGNOR ROMMI, the well-known professor of singing, has returned to London, after a lengthened tour through Italy, France, and Switzerland, quite re-established in health.

MR. DYSON (Tenor), Vocalist, will sing the MESSIAH at Bury St. Edmunds, March 27th; Reading, April 9th, morning and evening; Uxbridge, 10th; Slough, 11th; Windsor, 12th, morning and evening; Maidenhead 13th. Letters to be addressed, 23, Cloisters, Windsor Castle.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER, Tenor. All communications respecting engagements for Oratories, Concerts, and Italian or English opera, to be addressed to his private residence, 17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 63, Burton-crescent, New-road.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford street, New Bond-street, W.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MISS STABBACH will sing Charles Salaman's New Ballad, "Good bye! a long-good bye," at the composer's concert, on the 29th March. Published by Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street. Price 2s. 6d.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and R. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

MEYERBEER'S NEW WORK—"ASPIRATION"—CANTIQUE. (Short Anthem.) The words from the original latin of Thomas a Kempis, "De imitatione Christi." Composed for SIX VOICES (three sopranos, two tenors, and bass), with Recitatives for a BASS SOLO, and Organ (or Harmonium) accompaniment ad libitum, by GIACOMO MEYERBEER. Price, in score, 4s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where Meyerbeer's setting of the Lord's Prayer, for four voices, 3s., and the Serenade, for eight voices, "This house to love is holy," 4s., may be obtained.

WANTED, A GOOD TUNER.—For particulars, address, M. N., care of Messrs. Boosey and Son,

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to

THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons' military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

LURLINE.—The following are the favourite pieces in WALLACE'S new and successful Opera, LURLINE;—"Under a spreading coral." "Take this cup of sparkling wine," "Flow on, oh, silver Rhine," "When the night winds," "Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer," sung by Miss Pyne; "Gentle troubadour," sung by Miss Pilling; "Our barque in moonlight beaming," "Sweet form that on my dreamy gaze," "The chimes of home," sung by Mr. Harrison; "A Father's love," "Love, transient passion," sung by Mr. Santley.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

LURLINE.—WALLACE'S NEW GRAND OPERA for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets, by W. H. Calcott; also Fantasias and Rondos from "Lurline" by Wallace, Favarger, Osborne, and other eminent composers, Valse and Quadrille from "Lurline."

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The Public is respectfully informed that this establishment will open for the season, on Tuesday, April 10th.

FERRARI'S WORK ON THE VOICE AND SINGING, price 8s., may be had at his residence, Devonshire-lodge, Portland-road, Portland-place, and at all the principal music-sellers.

"Of all the treatises on the cultivation of the voice that have appeared for many years, it is the most sensible, concise, and useful."—Daily News.

"There is more sense in this work than we find in nine out of ten publications of a similar kind."—Athenæum.

"Here is a really sensible work."—Musical World.

REVIEWS.

"Dussek's 'Plus Ultra' and Woelfl's 'Ne Plus Ultra,' Sonatas for the Pianoforte, with Biographical and Critical Introductions—edited by J. W. Davison (Boosey and Sons)." We spoke some time since of Messrs. Boosey's new edition of Woelfl's Ne Plus Ultra, and suggested that it should be followed up by a re-issue of the far greater work, which Dussek gave to the world under the title of Le Rétour à Paris, and his London publishers rechristened Plus Ultra. We have now the two sonatas before us—remarkable compositions both, whatever difference may exist in their respective values as artistic creations—in one elegant volume, and at a price* which, not very many years ago, would hardly have paid for The Battle of Pragua, or for the once familiar Sonata dedicated to Mrs. Chinnery.† That every zealous pianist, amateur or professional, will make himself master of treasures so cheaply attainable, there can hardly be a doubt.

We have an objection or two to make, which, though of no great weight, is perhaps worth consideration, and may therefore be stated at once. The order in which the two sonatas are given in Messrs. Boosey's edition should be reversed. That Woelfl's Ne Plus Ultra was both composed and published before its present companion; and even were that not the case, it would appear from the title page of the London edition of Plus Ultra:—

Plus Ultra,

A

SONATA,

For the

Piano Forte,

COMPOSED & DEDICATED

To

Ne Plus Ultra,*

BY

J. L. DUSSEK,

Ent. at Sta. Hall Op. 71. Price 7s.

LONDON.

H. Falkner, 8, Old Bond Street.

(*) It alludes to a Sonata published under this title.

On comparing the edition before us with an old copy of the Plus Ultra in our possession, we find two alterations, for which Mr. Davison (being manifestly responsible) should, we think, have stated in the preface his reason for adopting. In the old copy, the sixth bar of the first page stands thus:—

Mr. Davison, however, we know not on what authority, but probably on that of some German edition, has given it as follows:—

The object of the new reading was probably to get rid of consecutive octaves between extreme parts. In the other instance, the latter half of the 17th bar (same page), appears in the original, as subjoined:—

This the modern editor (or some foreign copy, in the correctness of which he has faith), modifies thus:—

In page 10 of the old edition (second part of the first movement), the same point occurs twice, in different keys, and in both cases have been altered accordingly. Now that in the first instance a harsh, unpleasant effect of octaves, and in another a still more disagreeable feint at fifths is done away with, we admit; but at the same time, unless on some undoubted authority, it is always dangerous to meddle with classical works. Who, for example, would presume to interfere with any of Beethoven's seeming eccentricities? Dussek was certainly not a Beethoven; but he was a man of genius, and is accepted universally as a classic. He was, moreover, by no means one of the most uniformly correct of writers, and for these reasons we trust that in the next issue Mr. Davison will enter into some explanation of the liberties he has taken. Elsewhere he has dispensed with a good number of wholly superfluous accidentals, a proceeding in which we wish every editor would follow him, since the only result of such a flux of flats and sharps is to perplex and add to the difficulty of the player, when deciphering a piece of music for the first time. By their partial evasion, the scherzo (which, though virtually in the key of A flat major, begins in F sharp minor), becomes much less of an enigma, and is twice as easy to read.

* Four shillings. † Dussek's Opera, 24.

The introductory essay, which considerably enhances the value of Messrs. Boosey's edition of the Plus Ultra, especially to those who love Dussek's music, and are curious about the man and his life, is much fuller of interesting details than that which is prefixed to Woelfl's Ne Plus Ultra. It contains, perhaps, the longest biography of Dussek that has hitherto appeared, together with copious remarks on his works, and on the influence they have exercised on pianists and pianoforte composers. We are unable to afford space for much quotation, but an extract or two, taken at random, may not be unacceptable. One of the most interesting passages is contained in a foot-note. Dussek, in his youth, it appears, was the paid organist at various places, and among others at Ruttenberg, Maliver, and Bergop-zoom :—

"This early familiarity with the organ," says Mr. Davison, "explains in some measure the constant addiction to full, rich, and expressive harmony which is remarkable in all Dussek's best sonatas for the pianoforte. Some of his slow movements—instance that of Les Adieux à Clementi (grand sonata in E flat, Op. 44), that of Le Retour à Paris, better known as Plus Ultra (grand sonata in A flat, Op. 71), and that of L'Invocation (grand sonata in F minor, Op. 77)—might almost have been written purposely for the organ."

To the foregoing is appended the note just mentioned. Professor Marx, a great authority in the present day, says nothing of the organ, but a great deal about the keyed harmonica,* and still more about English pianofortes, to which jointly he attributes the prominent features of Dussek's manner. That Dussek played upon the former instrument in Berlin, and afterwards at Milan, is unquestionable; but that it had any influence on his artistic development we cannot believe. Passing over, therefore, the majority, the high-flown sentences in which Professor Marx loves to establish this fanciful relationship between a frivolous instrument and an eminently thoughtful man, we cite with pleasure the observations of the same writer that relate to English pianofortes :—

"Dussek began his musical career" (says very incorrectly the Professor), "as a player on the harmonica, and the choice of this sensitive instrument appears just as much to have proceeded from the inmost nature of the artist, as to have nourished and confirmed it."

* * * * * *

"His residence in London, and afterwards with Prince Louis Ferdinand, brought another and congenial influence from without to bear upon his artistic faculties. This was, that in both places he found no instruments to play upon but the English grand pianoforte, of which Prince Louis had in course of time imported no less than thirteen, being dissatisfied (we are credibly informed) with the effect of all others. Whoever is acquainted with English grand pianofortes, and compares hem with those of other countries (for instance the Viennese) cannot fail to observe that a certain unconquerable sameness is peculiar to them, which easily imparts itself to the player, more especially when this characteristic happens to be congenial to his nature. The tone of the English grand pianoforte, similar to the quality of the clarionet, is so full and continuous, so powerful and concentrated, that it wholly satisfies the ear, and that it both seizes and retains the undivided attention. This can by no means be said of other (for instance, the Viennese) instruments, whose tone, less satisfying, less resonant, in short, less decisive, leaves freer play to the fancy, whilst the character of the English grand piano is still extended by the soft pedal, with its highly sentimental, but somewhat monotonous effect, and by the great depth of the touch, which precludes almost every other style of performance than a legato of broad masses of harmony in extended positions, full of grandiose, noble and tender sentimentality. With this definition, to which we have almost unconsciously given expression, we believe that we have pronounced the basis of Dussek's character, as it reveals itself in his many (mostly instrumental) works, especially in his compositions for piano, in which it continually more and more developed itself."

In considering the foregoing (Mr. Davison remarks, with justice), it should be borne in mind, that Professor Marx is writing about the English pianofortes of more than half a century ago. The allusion of Professor Marx to Prince Ferdinand of Prussia has led to a note by the editor, which is worth quoting, as affording us a glance, however brief, at the private character and artistic idiosyncracy of an energetic and distinguished warrior, whose absorbing passion was love of music, and hatred of the French :—

"Frederick Christian Louis Ferdinand, Prince of Prussia, nephew of Frederick William II., born November 18, 1772, at Berlin, killed at the Battle of Salfield, October 9, 1806. This courageous, intellectual and amiable, though somewhat dissolute prince—one of the fiercest haters of the French, although a generous patron of Lamarre, the celebrated French violoncellist—was passionately addicted to the study and performance of music. An enthusiastic admirer of Dussek, he cultivated his society to such an extent, that disparity of rank was altogether overlooked, and the Prince and the Musician became friends. Dussek gave him finishing lessons in pianoforte-playing and in composition, to such good purpose that Louis Ferdinand achieved fame in both departments. When John Cramer visited Berlin, the Prince, delighted to show his proficiency, and also, as a graceful compliment to the musician, played without book, Cramer's own first Pianoforte-Concerto. "Prince," said the composer "your memory is astonishing; and you play my concerto much faster than I can myself." Beethoven dedicated his Third Pianoforte Concerto, (in C minor, Op. 37—first performed in public at Vienna, in 1804, by Ferdinand Ries, Beethoven's pupil) to Prince Louis Ferdinand, for whom he entertained a high esteem. Dussek inscribed to him the Quartet in E flat for pianoforte and stringed instruments (Op. 56), and afterwards consecrated to his memory the grand and pathetic Elegy in F sharp minor. Among the engraved compositions of the Prince of Prussia are a quintet for strings, an ottet for wind and strings, two quartets and two trios for piano and strings, a four-part fugue for piano solus, and a variety of smaller works. In the best and most important of these the influence of Dussek's manner is strongly apparent. "It may be"—writes Professor Marx, in alluding to the intimacy between Dussek and Prince Louis—"that the Prince excelled the Musician in talent, at least in largeness and elevation of ideas, but he appears to have been indebted to the latter for much technical assistance. At least, so far as we can judge from the conflicting testimony of their contemporaries, the mutual influence of these two distinguished men upon each other is indisputable. It is apparent in the works of both, though it is likely to have been more to the advantage of the Prince than of Dussek, since the technical part of art is easier to communicate than the spiritual. But whoever is acquainted with the high-souled productions of Prince Louis will feel grateful to his friend for the share he has had in them."

That Professor Marx is more of a courtier (it must not be forgotten that he resides at Berlin) than the modern Plus Ultra, is revealed through a foot-note, in which the latter, somewhat ill-naturedly, surmises "that Dussek did more than advise the Prince of Prussia in his compositions" —which can only be translated that he helped him to compose them. While on the subject, we are at a loss to explain why Mr. Davison should have discarded Professor Marx's critical analysis of Dussek's style, which, though wordy and occasionally vague, contains some valuable suggestions. We are able, however, to supply the omission :—

"If we wish to obtain a full and vivid perception of Dussek, we must begin with the contemplation of his early, easy works, and proceed from them to the later, larger and maturer ones, of which we quote here, as examples, the concertos in G minor and the sonatas.

"In all these we perceive, together with a thorough and well-developed technical proficiency, an aspiration, quite free from all purpose of executive display or trickery, to draw forth all the resources of the instrument, a noble aim directed to the inward recesses of art, an emotion which strives to communicate itself to the soul of the hearer. We could say, without exaggeration, especially of his later and larger works, that this striving is evident in every one of his subjects, and certainly that it is apparent in the general tenor of the majority of his works. But it is just as undeniable that throughout this resignation to the softer impressions, this condition of mind dilating the heart without strengthening it, that he was never roused to a bolder flight, by either a rich ideality within, nor by important and exciting circumstances of life, nor by incentives from without, (such as commissions to write for the church, theatre, &c.)

* The manufacture of one Hessel, an instrument which Dussek only took up for some immediate purpose, and then abandoned.

"Upon such a spirit, the instrument, in whose keyboard he had domesticated himself, could not but exert a decisive influence. Widespread, resonant chords, harmonies rich in modulation, especially in chromatic modulations, often unquestionably overloaded with these sort of secondary effects and attenuated to the extreme of vagueness; intimately connected with this, a rich, always soft, often enharmonically conducted modulation, which alternates between the most extraneous flat and sharp keys; manifold reduplication of the parts, out of which proceed the doubling of entire phrases, especially in imitation of the effect of the combination of clarionet and horns; extensive, resonant and flowing divisions and passages, mostly in several parts, very many triplets; the melody, when it appears in a single part, interspersed and embellished with sweeping passages of ornamentation; these are among the characteristics, which may severally be found in many pianoforte composers, but in such rich combination, and so constantly appreciated, so united with every thought and conception, like the body with the soul, they belong exclusively to the artistic physiognomy of Dussek (and of one living composer, besides the imitators of both). That this course of feeling, and its manifestation, became a mannerism, and spread monotony over his works, is, according to the above remarks, undeniable. In his later works, for instance, in the above-mentioned sonata, in the one in E flat (Op. 44), some cheerful pieces for four hands, this mannerism attains complete maturity, and we perceive how, under this all-penetrating, all-levelling habit of construction, the flow of composition, impeded by the accumulation of material, drags its slow course along, like a petrifying stream of lava; such as with an almost always felicitous, often but too symmetrical, framework, the composition drags itself onward, as it were without distinct sections, without appreciable phrasing, without perceptible rhythm, piling masses of chords one over the other.

"Although the deleterious and, in course of time, wearing features of this style are not to be denied, and scarce anyone who is familar with the pianoforte works of Beethoven and C. M. Weber, will go through several of Dussek's compositions conscientiously with the same perseverance and sympathy, yet Dussek merits, on account of the rich assemblage of single beauties, deeply-felt movements, and on account of his noble and grandiose style, which often makes us forget every monotony,—to have his memory perpetuated, at least in his principal works, by every lover of true art.

"It seems to be the inevitable fate of all players (to whom the development of the resources of their instrument has been paramount) that a certain manner, which grows out of their own executive peculiarities, should adhere to their productions. Thus has it been with Dussek, and we should the more easily reconcile ourselves to his manner, when we have come to the perception of all that is noble, and fraught with meaning, behind the veil.

"The halls of musical art would become too deserted, if we judged differently, more severely—I may say, more unartistically and uncharitably—and if we turned our contemplation solely towards those culminating points in which an entire period, an entire tendency, is concentrated.

"Least of all is abstraction permitted to the artist, and certainly as pianist, no composer for the pianoforte will study Dussek's works without abundant profit. His achievements and his failures, both will be instructive: the former to gladden us, the latter, by the side of them, will be absolved."

Finding fault as much with M. Fétis, Mr. Davison, nevertheless, quotes that eminent bibliographer's opinions of Dussek and his talent, on more than one occasion :—

"M. Fétis, who is able to remember Dussek's performance at the Odéon (1808), says: 'The extraordinary sensation he produced is still remembered. Until then the pianoforte had only been heard to disadvantage as a concert-instrument; but, under the hands of Dussek, it eclipsed all that surrounded it. The broad and noble style of this artist, his method of singing on an instrument which possessed no sustained sounds, the neatness, delicacy, and brilliancy of his play, in short, procured him a triumph of which there had been no previous example.' So that even if Cramer (and not, as some have asserted, Woelfl, or as would be still more likely to approximate to the truth, Beethoven, in his earlier period) was the 'Ne Plus Ultra' of the pianists of his time, Dussek again steps forward as 'Plus Ultra.'"

Again, the summing-up of M. Fétis' (very scanty) biography is cited in a foot-note :—

"Endowed with a most amiable character, full of kindness and courtesy towards other artists, of great natural parts, ripened and perfected by varied instruction, of a lively disposition, and distinguished manners and deportment derived from the high society in which he had lived, Dussek made friends of all who knew him. He could only be reproached with one defect—one more injurious to himself than to others. This was an incurable carelessness, which caused him to neglect the management of his affairs, and often was the means of placing him under circumstances of great and serious embarrassment. In the last days of his life, his embonpoint had become excessive, which, however, in no degree impaired the agility of his fingers; but the difficulty of moving about, which was the consequence, induced him to contract the habit of passing the greater part of the day in bed. To rouse himself from the sort of apathy that results from such a mode of existence, he was compelled to make an immoderate use of wine and ardent spirits, as stimulants, which ended by ruining his constitution, and ultimately causing his death."

With Plus Ultra Mr. Davison himself is evidently enamoured; but from an appreciation of considerable length we can afford space for a satire or two :—

"The passionate expression that stamps the Allegro non troppo, from which a sort of Weberian feeling repeatedly peeps out, the tranquil beauty and rich development of the Adagio, the plaintive character of the Scherzo (regarded by many as a kind of prophecy of Chopin—Chopin at his best, must be intended), and the animation, gaiety, and varied detail of the brilliant and sparkling Finale, are alike attractive and alike original. Rich invention and felicitous performance are apparent throughout the sonata, which, though resembling neither Mozart nor Beethoven, is not the less welcome on that account—being no more nor less than pure Dussek."

* * * * * *

"In contrasting the Ne Plus Ultra of Woelfl with the Plus Ultra of Dussek, the superiority of Woelfl as a musician has sometimes been cited, in contradistinction to Dussek's far higher claims as an imaginative and poetical composer. 'See'—argue the Woelflites—'how clear and symmetrical is Woelfl's first movement compared with that of Dussek.' 'Granting this to be true'—retort the adherents of Dussek—'see with what different materials they had to deal. Woelfl was trimming a garden—Dussek clearing a forest.'"

The fact that Dussek, in one of his quartets for stringed instruments* (in E flat), had already used the minuetto (though not the trio) of the scherzo, which forms part of the Plus Ultra, is interesting as a proof of the value set upon this singularly beautiful movement by its composer. A comparison of the two versions will show that Dussek was at pains to improve the original when he transferred it to the sonata, and that his pains were not thrown away. The trio of the sonata, although bearing some faintish resemblance to that in the quartet, is far superior. The key of the quartet being E flat, the minuetto is in E flat; while the trio is in B major—which responds to the A flat and E major of the sonata.

In this cursory review we do not pretend to have given any idea of the contents of the literary and critical introduction to Messrs. Boosey's edition of Plus Ultra; but as we have already transgressed our limits, we can only add that the musical text is remarkably correct, while the engraving, writing, and other accessories of publication all that can be desired, such, in short, as to constitute a handsome addition to any musical library.

* Trois Quatuors, pour two Violons, Alto, et Violoncello—Op. 60—à Leipsic—chez Breitkopf & Härtel." How is it, by the way, that these works have hitherto eluded the research of those lynx-eyed entrepreneurs, the Directors of the Monday Popular Concerts.

THE LATE M. JULLIEN.

THE mental aberration of M. Jullien did not last very long, nor was he destined to survive more than a few hours the partial restoration of his faculties. On Tuesday he became sensible, and on Wednesday at 7 p.m. he expired, just a day too soon to see his wife, who had been summoned from London to attend him in his last moments.

In M. Jullien the British public have lost one who served them with ever increasing zeal during a more lengthened period than has ordinarily been given to entertainers of the class to which he belonged, and of which he was the undisputed chief. His career, though one of seemingly uncheckered success since he first superintended the concerts which were wont to enliven the dullest part of the winter in this metropolis, was by no means one of uncheckered prosperity. He was alternately rising and falling, not in popularity, but in the ways and means that helped him to his ends. When the Promenade Concerts, at one time a joint concern among the members of the orchestra, became a failure, M. Jullien boldly assumed the undivided responsibilities of speculation and command. What vogue he shortly obtained, and how rapidly his name became a household word, just as his face and figure and dress were familiar household shapes, is remembered even now, although nearly twenty years have elapsed since he first waved his conductor's stick over the enormous temporary structure that used to constitute his orchestra alternately at Drury-lane and Covent-garden Theatres As the entertainment he had invented became more and more the fashion, and the crowds that besieged the doors began to originate those Saturnalia which used to signalise the opening nights of his season, M. Jullien became more and more "magnificent," more and more prodigal of numbers and "effects." Certainly no one responded to public favour with heartier reciprocity than he, or with a keener ambition to merit the support with which he was honoured. The more freely the public gave their money the more untiring were M. Jullien's efforts to ensure his patrons a good bargain. Thus his concerts annually gained ground, until, encouraged by his successes and the increasing confidence attached to his undertakings, he resolved to found a national English Opera, and, leasing Drury-lane Theatre for a series of years, at once set his project on foot. Few who were present can have forgotten the first night's performance —Dec 6, 1847. The opera was an English version of Donizetti's Lucia, and, among other memorable incidents, brought forward one who has since gained the championship of English singing—Mr. Sims Reeves. The sort of establishment M. Jullien contemplated, and in a great measure had realized, was superior to anything recognised before in the shape of English opera, and has certainly not been equalled by any subsequent attempt. All departments were managed on the most lavish scale—orchestra, chorus, principal singers, officers before and behind the curtain, vying one with another in efficiency and also in expensiveness. The result might have been anticipated. The speculation was a failure, and M. Jullien in the end a bankrupt. With what untarnished reputation he left the court, however—how he not only abandoned everything, but shackled himself with future responsibilities, which the majority under such circumstances would have regarded as unnecessary—is very generally known. The next winter (1848) saw him once again, with undiminished energies, at the head of his concerts in Drury-lane Theatre, which has now passed from his hands as lessee into those of Mr. Gye. The public flocked to him as usual; and even in 1849-50, when a formidable opposition was instituted by a party of distinguished amateurs at Her Majesty's Theatre, and the greater number of his most famous instrumentalists were lured away from him, M. Jullien, nothing daunted, formed a new band, which, under his control, soon showed itself in all respects equal, if not, indeed, superior, to the other. In short he vanquished his opponents in a season. In the autumn of 1850 M. Jullien went to the United States with some of the principal members of his orchestra, and wound up his exploits in Trans-Atlantic regions, after visiting every town and city of importance in the New World, by that gigantic meeting in conjunction with the speculative Mr. Barnum, which drew 40,000 persons to the New York Crystal Palace. In 1851 he was again in London, and the comparative dreariness of the preceding year (when some desolate entertainments at St. Martin's-hall had done more than could have been effected by the absence of all to remind the public of M. Jullien's value) was compensated by performances as brilliant as any he had ever directed. Thus he continued until he found himself involved in another unfortunate enterprise—the new Music-hall in the Surrey-gardens, the result of which must be fresh in the memory of our readers. Drury-lane Theatre having passed from the hands of Mr. Gye, M. Jullien's concerts were again transferred to the late Royal Italian Opera, the destruction of which magnificent edifice by fire entailed a loss from the results of which he never actually recovered—viz.: the whole of his music, engraved and in manuscript, his own compositions and those which had formed the staple of his "Classical Nights," including even the parts and score of his opera of Pietro il Grande, which had been produced with great splendour under Mr. Gye's management in the year 1852—a proud and memorable epoch in M. Jullien's career. Thus the accumulation of many years, at an enormous expense, was swept away in one unlucky night; and M. Jullien became a sharer in the misfortunes, as he had been hitherto in the fortunes, of Mr. Gye. Compelled to seek a new home, or to suspend his public avocations until a new Covent-garden should rise from the ashes of the old, M. Jullien choose the former course, and entered into an arrangement with Mr. Lumley to give his concerts at Her Majesty's Theatre, where they took place in 1857 and 1858. The year following, Her Majesty's Theatre being inaccessible—for reasons unnecessary to enumerate—M. Jullien was consigned to the Lyceum, where he was by no means in his element, want of space being a disadvantage against which it was not in his idiosyncracy to contend. This season, the incident of which was the introduction of M. Wienawski to the English public, was M. Jullien's "Song of the Swan." Beset with difficulties, he retired to Paris, spent four months in Clichy, appealed—being still a Frenchman—to the Bankruptcy Court, received his certificate, immediately laid plans for a new series of concertsin various parts of the continent, to begin with the French capital, and had already made considerable progress, when the unwonted excitement consequent on this renewal of physical and mental activity brought on the malady which so speedily terminated in his death at the age of 50.

When it is remembered that M. Jullien, previous to his arrival in England, had gone through a career of no small activity and continually shifting fortunes, it must be owned that he played his part in the world with a vigour not easily repulsed. What he seriously did for the art of music in this country—how by his frequent performances of the music of Mozart, Beethoven, Mendelssohn, and other great masters, and by the constant engagement of the most eminent performers, he elicited at first the unconscious attention and then the enthusiastic appreciation of the vast multitudes that besieged his concerts, accomplishing this not merely in London, but during his winter and summer tours all over the provinces of Great Britain—will probably tend to preserve his memory among us even more than his unrivalled energy and talent, his unprecedented zeal and liberality as a public entertainer. To M. Jullien, moreover, is attributable in a large measure the immense improvement which our orchestras have made during the last twenty years, he having been the means not only of bringing over some of the greatest foreign instrumentalists, but of discovering and nurturing the promise of many English performers, who through the publicity he placed at their disposal, no less than through their own industry and ability, have since attained acknowledged eminence. What he was himself, as a conductor, a composer, and an administrator (entrepreneur !)—together with that peculiar idiosyncracy, physical as well as moral, which gave him so marked an ascendancy, and enabled him to stand quite alone in his particular sphere—will, in all likelihood, be forgotten when the present generation has passed away; but as one who essentially promoted the advance of a beautiful, refined, and civilizing art, M. Jullien is entitled to a niche in the Temple of Fame which the most hypercritical would be cautious to refuse him.

Apart altogether from his public capacity, the unanimous testimony of those who knew him speaks highly and unreservedly in M. Jullien's favour, citing in his person those best qualities of heart and intelligence that endear a man to his fellows, and, outweighing all petty faults and foibles, win for him a sympathy that lies deeper than mere popular esteem, and is of more genuine value than the loudest praises of the crowd. Now that he has gone—and we are not likely to see another like him soon—a keener sense of his long services, of his patience under adversity, and unswerving fidelity to the public will arise; and few, we think, will refrain from joining in the hope that the appeal but recently made on M. Jullien's behalf while he was living and there were hopes of his ultimate recovery may be yet productive of some benefit to the disconsolate wife and near relatives whom he has left behind—that the "Jullien Fund," in short, may not be relinquished because the one for whose benefit it was originally instituted is no longer able to derive any advantage from its success.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

UNCONSCIOUS PLAGIARISM.

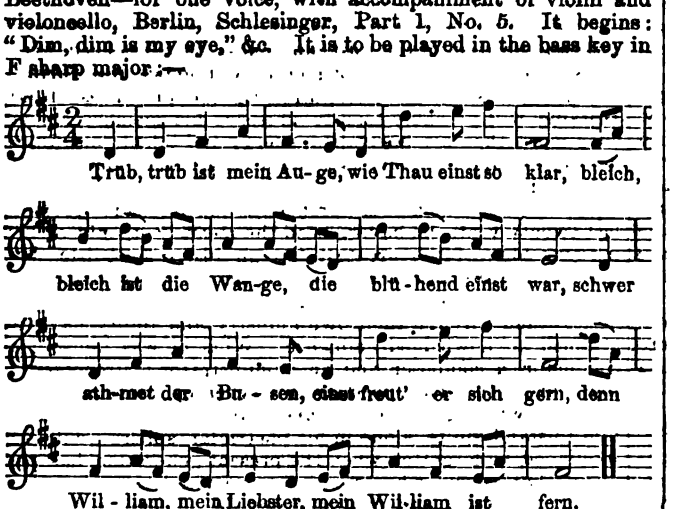
SIR,—Having seen your notice of my song, "Never, my child, forget to pray," I beg to say, in answer to the charge of plagiarism, that I, although a pupil of Dr. Sterndale Bennett, had never seen, heard, or even knew of the existence of the impromptu referred to, until I saw to-day's Musical World, when I procured the impromptu, and immediately found the section alluded to. This being the case, I can but feel highly flattered at your remarks on my song, and remain, Sir,

Very respectfully yours,

F. SCOTSON CLARK.

THE OLDEST (INDIAN, CHINESE) FIVE-TONE SYSTEM.

THIS system, which, according to the scale, is most clearly represented, as we know by the two and three upper keys (Obertasten) of the piano, is strangely enough, and as already mentioned in my notice in No. 32 of the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung, of last year, to be found in some of the national songs of Scotland (the Hebrides). In the number of the paper to which I allude, there were merely a Chinese hymn, and an "Air Chinois," from Rousseau's Dictionnaire de Musique. On which theme, by the way, C. M. Von Weber wrote an overture to Schiller's Turandot—I now append a Scotch song, contained in the arrangement of Scotch songs by Beethoven—for one voice, with accompaniment of violin and violoncello, Berlin, Schlesinger, Part 1, No. 5. It begins: "Dim, dim is my eye," &c. It is to be played in the bass key in F sharp major:—



Trüb, trüb ist mein Au-ge, wie Thau einst so klar, bleich, bleich ist die Wan-ge, die blü-hend einst war, schwer sth-met der Bu-sen, einst freut' er sich gern, denn
Wil-liam, mein Liebster, mein Wil-liam ist fern.

This system, although, when compared with our system of the present day, it appears defective and incomplete, affords, at any rate, quite sufficient scope for the foregoing beautiful national melody*. Most probably this oldest tone-system was completed in the later Greek, that is to say, church modes.

LOUIS KINDSCHER.

Cöthen.

EDINBURGH, 21*st March*—(From our own Correspondent).—This is now the fourth week of our Italian Opera season, and it is time that I should give you some account of the company, which is entirely new to Britain, having been brought direct from Venice, where the opera-house was closed on account of political disturbances. The performers are best adapted for light and florid music, accordingly comic opera has been in the ascendant. The soprano is Madame Lorini (wife of the tenor of that name) who is possessed of a sweet fresh voice of pleasing quality, not very large in volume, but the tone telling, especially in the high notes, while her execution is very clear and brilliant. She has established herself as a great favourite. The contralto is Madame Vietti, of whom it is difficult to speak too highly. With the exception of Alboni, she is the best operatic contralto I ever heard. Her voice is rich and deep, and yet soft and flexible in a remarkable degree. Her style is pure and finished, and her acting of a high order, so that it is no wonder she has achieved an immense success. Her characters have been Isabella, in L'Italiana in Algeri, Rosina, in Il Barbiere, Orsini, in Lucrezia Borgia, and Azucena, in Il Trovatore. As an interpreter of Rossini's florid music (i.e., in the original keys) she has few equals. The tenor is Signor Galvani, who has a sweet but not very powerful voice, with a flexibility which is quite unusual in a male singer. This enables him to do justice to the very florid music in Rossini's operas in a way few tenors can. His management of the breath, mode of joining the registers, &c., bespeak the finished artiste. Perhaps the great feature of the company, however, is Signor Ciampi, the basso buffo, who is a singer and actor of the highest talent and originality. His voice is powerful and of good quality, which, joined to a most distinct enunciation, and an absence of all effort, renders his singing very satisfactory. His acting, however is most worthy of notice, being characterised by genuine humour, unflagging spirit, most admirable by-play, and a careful attention to the minutest details connected with the various parts he has to fill. He has appeared as Taddeo, Dr. Bartolo, and Don Pasquale, the latter being a most clever and original impersonation. Dulcamara is to be his next character. When it is mentioned that Signor Ciampi is apparently not above 24 or 25 years of age, it will be seen that he has the prospect of a great career. I should think he will soon be "wanted" in London. The basso profondo is Signor Taste; the seconda donna, Mdlle. Martini; and the minor artists are Signor and Madame Aglondi, &c., all efficient in their respective capacities, and assisting to render the company most complete. The chorus and orchestra are capable of much improvement, but, at the prices, better cannot be expected. Among the operas in rehearsal is Cimarosa's Matrimonio Segreto, which is exciting a lively interest by anticipation. The conductor is Signor Orsini, who resides here. Those who are accustomed to cry down Edinburgh in the matter of music, will at least admit that it does much for Italian opera, having for several seasons imported companies for itself, all of great talent.

[Our worthy correspondent is slightly in error, when he says that the present Italian company in Edinburgh is "entirely new to Britain." Mad. Lorini and her husband formed part of the Company engaged by Mr. Willert Beale, when that enterprising gentleman gave Italian opera at the Surrey Theatre. Mad. Vietti has been heard at Her Majesty's Theatre. Signor Galvani was employed during a whole season at the Royal Italian Opera, and one of his parts was Nemorino in L'Elisir d'Amore.—ED.]

* There is, also, a pianoforte Etude (by Döhler?) in which the right hand plays exclusively the five upper keys.

JULLIEN FUND.

THE illness of M. Jullien having, with fatal rapidity, terminated in death, it has been resolved that the donations to the JULLIEN FUND shall be applied in the manner which would have been most in accordance with the wishes of the deceased, had it been permitted him to express them, viz., to the relief of his widow and family, who, by his loss, are left totally unprovided for.

Committee for the distribution of the Jullien Fund.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. R. W. Sams; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Duncan Davison; Mr. Robert K. Bowley; Mr. Jules Benedict.

Honorary Treasurers.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Sams.

Bankers.

Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Heywood, Kennards, and Co., Lombard-street; London and County Bank, Hanover-square;—who, as well as the Honorary Treasurers, have kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

Subscriptions already received.

	£	s.	d.
F. Gye, Esq.	20	0	0
T. Chappell, Esq.	10	10	0
A. Chappell, Esq.	10	10	0
A. W. Hammond, Esq.	10	10	0
Mowbray Morris, Esq.	5	5	0
E. T. Smith, Esq.	5	5	0
Sims Reeves, Esq.	5	5	0
A Friend	5	5	0
Miss Arabella Goddard	5	5	0
W. R. Sams, Esq.	5	5	0
H. L. Bischoffsheim, Esq.	5	5	0
F. Vilmet, Esq.	5	5	0
R. Bowley, Esq.	5	5	0
Messrs. Leader and Cock	2	2	0
Albert Smith, Esq.	2	2	0
Arthur Smith, Esq.	2	2	0
M. Pozno, Esq.	2	2	0
Charles Coote, Esq.	1	1	0
Louis Ries, Esq.	1	1	0
C. Doyle, Esq.	1	1	0
W. Winterbottom, Esq.	1	1	0
G. Metzler, Esq.	1	1	0
John Loeoh, Esq.	1	1	0
J. H. Dillon, Esq.	1	1	0
Samuel Lucas, Esq.	1	1	0
Carl Keller, Esq.	1	1	0
A. Ferry	1	1	0
Edmund Yates	1	1	0
G. Luigi	1	1	0
H. E. Tathana	1	1	0
Warington Taylor	1	0	0
W. H. Weiss, Esq.	1	1	0
T. H. H.	1	1	0
A. E. D. (Pentonville)	0	3	6
Robert Clarke, Esq.	1	1	0
Mdlle. Coulon	1	1	0
E. Coulon, Esq.	1	1	0
Del Vecchio	1	1	0
Charles Halle	2	2	0
Charles Dickens	2	2	0
Lady Goldsmid	5	5	0
John Mitchell, Esq.	5	5	0
Steward Hodgson	5	5	0
Mrs. R. C. Barnett	1	1	0
Sir Francis Goldsmid	5	0	0
Sir Charles Decemar, Crosley	5	5	0
Rd. du Cane, Esq.	1	0	0
Mr. Pinches	5	5	0
E. Buckley, Esq., Jun.	1	1	0
E. W. Garland	2	2	0
E. W. Martin, Esq. (Dublin)	1	1	0
Brinley Richards, Esq.	1	1	0
Horace Mayhew	1	1	0
Henry Greg	1	1	0
Henry Evett	1	1	0
F. Freeman, Esq.	1	1	0
W. T. Doyne, Esq.	1	1	0
John Stone, Esq.	1	1	0
Evan Lopes, Esq.	1	1	0
W. Godfrey (Coldstream Gds.)	1	1	0
W. Watkins, Esq.	0	10	6
G. Grove, Esq. (Crystal Palace)	2	2	0
Phillip Salamans, Esq.	2	2	0
G. Dillon, Esq.	1	1	0
T. L.	0	10	0
Four Clerks (Austin Friars)	1	0	0
Thanks for Cheap Music	0	10	0
A. W. B.	0	10	0
J. Banks, Esq.	1	1	0
Samuel Bevington, Esq.	1	1	0
A Hater of Lawyers	5	0	0
E. C. M.	1	1	0
W. Francis, Esq.	1	1	0
John Brunnard, Esq.	1	1	0
Messrs. Cramer and Co.	2	2	0
Messrs. Addison and Co.	2	2	0
Messrs. Beesey and Sons	2	2	0
John Ella, Esq.	1	1	0
C. Grantham, Esq.	1	1	0
Messrs. Parkins and Gotto	2	2	0
H. W. Goodban, Esq.	1	1	0
Miss Tod	1	1	0

 A second Subscription List will be advertised forthwith.

DEATH.

On the 19th inst., at his residence, 67, Oakley-square, N.W., William Lovell Phillips, Esq., R.A.M., aged 43, deeply regretted by his widow, family, and large circle of friends.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

In consequence of the unusual pressure on our columns this week, the notice of the Second New Philharmonic Concert, and other interesting matters, is unavoidably postponed to our next.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words) ... ... 2*s.* 6*d.*

Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0*s.* 6*d.*

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 24TH, 1860.

OUR readers will be pleased to know (and to see by the advertisement on this page) that the Jullien Fund is progressing favourably, and that the Committee for its distribution—all men of the highest respectability and personal weight—have very properly resolved to bestow it for the benefit of the deceased musician's wife and family. Before the fact of M. Jullien's death was known, a letter appeared in the columns of a contemporary, which, together with the editor's note, we have much pleasure in reproducing:—

"M. JULLIEN.

"To the Editor of the Sunday Times.

"SIR,—It is with feelings of deep regret that many of our countrymen hear of the serious mental affliction and pecuniary difficulties poor Jullien is now suffering from in Paris. I think I may with certainty say, that the majority of those who visited his 'Promenade Concerts' are indebted to him for the particular class of music he introduced into this country. Now, sir, as your paper is, perhaps, the principal channel through which an appeal of the kind I am about to suggest will find publicity, let me propose, for the many hours of pleasant recreation Jullien afforded us, we should return him, in his day of tribulation, a donation raised by a 'shilling' subscription, to be received by some respectable music-seller (say Messrs. Chappell and Co., of Regent-street), where Jullien first commenced his labours in this country. Those gentlemen, I feel confident, would aid in any way to further this object, and I am sure Jullien would appreciate the motive that actuates us in this cause. Whatever his feelings towards our countrymen (especially lawyers) may be, he will find he has staunch supporters, in his hour of pain and trouble, amongst "THE SHILLING PROMENADERS.

"[We have great pleasure in laying the above communication before our readers, and shall be happy to be the medium of conveying any contribution to the fulfilment of the object advocated, which may be entrusted to our care.—ED. S. T.]"

Since the above appeared the idea has been acted upon by the Committee, and we hope shortly to be able to lay before our readers a general plan by which every lover of music, whatever his means, throughout the length and breadth of the country, may, by subscribing to the "JULLIEN SHILLING FUND," be enabled to express a sense of M. Jullien's exertions during a period of twenty years, and to evince regret for the loss of so valuable and zealous a public servant. No one ever gave the English public such a substantial shilling's worth as Jullien; and to bestow one additional shilling, without the prospect of an evening's entertainment in return, but with the sole object of providing a decent maintenance for Jullien's widow and family, would be doing that which Jullien would have enthusiastically urged his British patrons to do in a parallel case. All then, who believe with us, that to pay one shilling in to the "JULLIEN SHILLING FUND" is next door to an obligation on the part of those whom he loved to amuse just as much as they loved to be amused by him, will subscribe at once. The sum is small; but it is the moment and the cause that give signification to the deed; and here is an occasion when a trifling sacrifice may involve a graceful act—an act of simple gratitude.

Having, with no small labour effected a metrical translation of the first elegy of Propertius, Panurge was so mightily taken with his work, that he walked up and down the room, repeating it from beginning to end at the very top of his voice:—

"Never did I love, till my Cynthia's eyes
Woke within my heart a flame unknown,
Cupid, whom so long I had dared despise,
Proudly trampled on me, overthrown;
Teaching me to shun maids of good repute,
And to feel my precious time away:
Though the gods with scorn listen to my suit,
Passion for a year has held its sway,
When Milanion bore ev'ry toil for love
Atalanta's heart he touched at last,
Through Parthenian caves madly he would rove,
And his days mid rugged monsters past;

By the heavy club of Hylæus struck,
He bewailed his wounds in Arcadie;
Thus to win the swift maid he had the luck;—
Pray'rs and toils rewarded once could be!
As for me in love I'm a sorry loon,
New or old, my plans are sure to fail;
Wizards, who by spells conjure down the moon,
Or by aid of magic fire prevail,
Touch my Cynthia's heart—grant this simple boon—
Let her cheek e'en more than mine be pale.
Then will I believe you can change the track
Of the stars and rivers with your lay.
You, my gentle friends, who would win me back,
Please to heal me find a ready way,
Steel I'll stoutly bear, fire I'll proudly brave,
Only give my anger leave to speak,
Bear me far away o'er the foaming wave,
Vainly for the path let woman seek.
You who to your love gods indulgent find,
Stay at home, with calm contentment blest;
While a mad desire agitates my mind,
So that neither night nor day I rest;
Yes, be warned by me; happy in your fate,
Never let your passion change its place;
If to my advice you attend too late
Oft you'll think of my unhappy case."

"Bravo!" said Epistemon, walking into the room.

"So you overheard me?" said Panurge.

"Overheard thee! Why all the Dials have been rocked to and fro with thy bawling." Now the Seven Dials, called for brevity's sake the "Dials," was the name given to the lovely spot where Pantagruel's palace was situated.

"I presume," said Panurge, with a smile, "I presume from the exclamation with which thou hast entered the room, that thou art pleased with my work?"

"I confess" said Epistemon, "that it hath surpassed my expectations; but I attribute that circumstance rather to the smallness of the expectations than to the worth of the performance. I give thee credit for some slight ingenuity in devising a metre that—imperfectly enough, heaven knows—may in some sort shadow forth the effect of the ancient distich, though by a strange inconsistency, that pause in the middle, which belongeth of right to the pentameter and constituteth its very essence, is transferred by thee to the longer line, corresponding to the hexameter, a metre whose life and soul is its continuity. There is also something very wooden and unmusical in the mould of thy numbers, so that I would liken them less to the sweep of the lyre, than to the noise of a policeman's rattle, somewhat carefully sprung."

"Anything more?" said Panurge, resignedly.

"Had any one else been the writer," continued Epistemon, in a tone of great wisdom, "I should have remarked on the expressions 'had the luck,' 'sorry loon,' &c., and indicating an affectation of a familiar tone, which is extremely vulgar, without being in the slightest degree humorous. But seeing that thou art the poet, I refrain from the objection, satisfied that there is no affectation in the case, but that thou hast merely followed the dictates of thine own abject nature. In the same spirit do I lose sight of Propertius altogether, and fancy thou thyself art hymning some faded nymph of a vile corps de ballet; and that the wizards who conjure down the moon, are simply the dirty scene-shifters who manage the imitation of that luminary in some miserable gaff."

"Anything else," asked Panurge, with decreasing anxiety for a reply.

"As for that interpolation, 'Grant this simple boon,' not only is it unwarranted by the original, therefore entitling thee to the contempt and abhorrence which is bestowed on one who fraudulently inserteth an additional cipher in a cheque; but it is diametrically antagonistic to the whole spirit of the elegy. Look you, the poet, all for the sake of his Cynthia, has resolutely gone to the bad; he regardeth with envy that obscure blockhead Milanion, because he earned the love of his mistress by way of compensation for a smart tap on the head administered by a centaur—he is ready to endure any amount of surgery, cupping included, and to take any journey, however inconvenient, if he can only get rid of his pain; and in the face of all these striking facts, thou makest him regard the sympathy of Cynthia as a—(save the mark!—'simple boon'!"

"Thy comment is ended?" asked Panurge, meekly.

"Then how clumsily dost thou flounder in the last eight lines of thy work. Thou art bothered by the words 'Vos remanete,' and 'neque assueto mutet amore locum,' and canst not avoid a sneaking suspicion that the poet is telling his friends to stop at home, while he, like Lord Bateman, shippeth hisself a'board of a ship, some foreign country for to see. Know, thou wretched varlet, that the poet is not thinking in the least about change of place, but is recommending constancy to those who are fortunate in their love. Mend those last eight lines."

"Mend them thyself!" said Panurge, sturdily, and he thrust a pen into the hand of Epistemon.

"Rather," bawled Epistemon, "will I see thee"—

"Cease your senseless wranglings, you couple of pothouse brawlers," cried Pantagruel, stalking into the room with a French newspaper under his arm, and knocking together the heads of Epistemon and Panurge with considerable violence, "and hear of this last atrocity committed in our native France. In the pleasant town of Amiens, Mdlle. Gautrot, a jeune première, was hissed by the audience, whereupon she curtsied and retired from the stage."

"Thereby showing her wisdom," said Epistemon.

"Likewise her sensibility," whispered Panurge.

"Thy sentiments are correct," observed Pantagruel, "but don't be so cursedly fond of interrupting. For quitting the boards in the manner I have described, Mdlle. Gautrot has been condemned not only to pay a fine, but has been locked for a whole day in a vile prison."

"Oh, Picardy!" exclaimed Panurge, folding his arms, as if in despair,—"oh, Picardy! land with which I have nothing to do, and in which I do not take the slightest interest—oh, Picardy! art thou come to this? Doth the Picard require that youth and beauty should stand respectfully in his presence to receive his revilings? Is the Picard an avatar of Moloch, requiring the sacrifice of the young and the lovely? Would the Picard mourn to find that Iphigenia was saved at Tauris, instead of remaining at Aulis, to have her throat comfortably cut? What are the attributes of the Picard?"

"Gentle, but wise on this subject, is the editor of the Revue et Gazette des Théâtres," said Pantagruel, and he read as follows:—'Les spectateurs qui, par leurs démonstrations hostiles, ont pu pousser une artiste à l'oubli du respect, qu'elle devait au public, ont obtenu là un triste triomphe, et qu'ils doivent être les premiers à regretter, nous en sommes certains.' There, thou seest he bewaileth the event, without reviling the Picard."

"But what is this Picard," said Panurge, "that he does not care a brass farthing for a young girl's feelings, and yet is so mighty touchy with respect to his own? Of a truth, I will study ethnology, that I may be able to understand the nature of the Picard."

IN town and in the country, in art and in nature, the season of song is commencing. Look at the masons and plasterers at work under the Opera Colonnade, listen to the birds at half-past five o'clock in the morning, or at six if you happen not to be an early riser or to be an unusually late goer-to-bed. Nor will those songsters, of whom nothing is heard just now, sing the less loudly, or the less sweetly, when their time comes. Mr. Gye, with the politeness of the French at Fontenoy, has allowed Mr. E. T. Smith to tirer le premier, but even before these lines meet the public eye, he may have replied to him in his own excellent fashion. Some of the first foreign singing-birds have not yet arrived in this country, and it is so difficult to catch the rarer specimens and bring them over, that to announce their appearance before they have actually crossed the Channel, is something like counting chickens before they are out of the egg. Our skilful birdcatchers have been at work with their nets and their lures, and, above all, with their bits of shining metal —so especially attractive to larks and to human singing-birds of all kinds—in every capital of Europe; and the public may rest assured that with one choice though numerous flock in the groves of the Garden, and another equally multitudinous in the grove of the Market, the public, we say, may rest assured that when the season is opened, and the birds begin to sing, then the vocalisation will be quite fine enough to set before Her Majesty the Queen and all the Royal Family.

It was only the other day we were complaining that the musical months of the year were about to begin. We grieved, however, for this reason only, that the sooner they began the sooner also they must end. We were like Tiel Ulenspiegel, who, travelling along a mountainous road, was happy when he was climbing a steep hill, because he thought how pleasant it would be to walk down on the other side, and unhappy when he was walking down because he could not help reflecting how soon he would have to ascend again. To us the agreeable slope is the London season, that is to say, the Italian season; but it is scarcely in sight when we already begin to regret that in four short months it will be at an end. Have we not said that the birds are its natural harbingers and precursors? Did we not even publish, last week, a notice of a grand preliminary concert given by the vocalists of the air for the benefit of mankind? Several entertainments of the same description have since taken place, and, but for occasional bad weather, during which our aerial artists (who keep no carriages) are unable to appear, they would have been even more frequent. Allowing for the direct effect of storms and showers upon our rural singers, we are still of opinion that they disappoint the public less often than those of the town. In spite of their constant exposure to the atmosphere, they seem never to be troubled with sore throats and that formidable illness (especially formidable to managers,) the maladie de larynx is unknown among them. A few of these little vocalists, however, who have become domesticated and have acquired the manners of the theatre, are occasionally indisposed, when nothing is found to cure them so effectually as a certain yellow substance—not gold, but saffron.

A rural concert, at which we were present last Thursday, took place in a vast amphitheatre of wood, admirably constructed as regards sonority. The entertainment commenced at daybreak; and as soon, in fact, as the performers, who all sing at sight, were able to see. The opening chorus was most effective, and as fine a thing of the kind as could possibly be heard. The theme was simple and grand, though far from novel, while the rich harmony, in spite of its undeniable antiquity, possessed a certain sublime originality which compensated for any lack of science and elaboration that might have struck the skilled musician. The subject was first given by the linnets and soprani, and afterwards taken up by the thrushes and baritones, who were finally supported by the blackbirds and basses, the united choristers vieing with one another in their endeavours to do justice to this remarkable composition, which has something of the character of an anthem. This introduction of the motive pianissimo for a few voices, and its repetition crescendo by a constantly increasing number of executants, until, at last, a magnificent fortissimo is attained, is imitated neither from Rossini, nor, still less, from Meyerbeer, nor, least of all, from Verdi; it stands by itself, and cannot be traced to any known procédé.

As on the previous occasion, we heard several fine solo performances, and noticed a linnet who sang with as much fluency and grace as Madame Miolan-Carvalho. We were informed that the nightingale was expected every day, but that she would not make her appearance in public until the tenth of next month. By the way, as Philomela is so fond of performing at night, it is just possible that she would make an excellent Sonnambula.

Unfortunately, there are a few members of the immense troupe occupying the amphitheatre at Turnham Green whose voices are not beautiful at all, but we must do them the justice to say that, as a rule, they never attempt to sing. The swallows have no vocal expression, but they are good at fugues, and have wonderful agility. The sparrows are utterly bad, but some of them, by the mere force of ambition, may one day reach the top of the tree.

We regret to say that while some of the best of our aerial vocalists are not quite appreciated, a few of the more common birds, and even some who are not musical fowls at all, occasionally gain loud applause from the vulgar. Thus, while the linnets were singing most exquisitely, we observed a quadrupedal connoisseur, at no great distance from the amphitheatre, staring about him in his stall, and evidently paying no attention to the performance. A few minutes afterwards a cock crew, when a long-eared amateur at once uttered a bray of the most decided approbation.

ROYAL ENGLISH OPERA.

THE regular season was brought to a termination on Saturday, the performances being for the benefit of Mr. Harrison. The theatre was densely crowded, and people were sent away from every part of the house. The opera was Lurline, preceded by Henry Leslie's operetta of Romance.

The theatre did not close on Saturday, notwithstanding. Nine extra nights were announced, to finish with Miss Louisa Pyne's benefit, on Wednesday next. Lurline increases in attraction. We visited the theatre twice during the week, before seven o'clock, and found every seat occupied, or disposed of. It is a pity Miss Pyne and Mr. Harrison did not produce Mr. Wallace's opera earlier. No doubt they did not anticipate such success, or they would not have delayed its production.

The fly-leaf of the programme contained the following valedictory address from the managers:—

"March 17, 1860.

"Ladies and Gentlemen—The close of our third English Opera Season presents us an opportunity of again thanking you for the liberal support with which you have hitherto met our endeavours to please you—a support which it ever shall be our pride to merit, and constant endeavour to maintain.

"Allow us to place before you a few of the statistics of our past proceedings, and to request you to accept them as a guarantee for our future ones. In three seasons we have produced four English operas and one operetta by native composers, namely—The Rose of Castille and Satanella, by Mr. Balfe; Victorine, by Mr. Alfred Mellon; Romance, by Mr. Henry Leslie; and Lurline, by Mr. Vincent Wallace. Also Martha and Dinorah, and a répertoire to whose merits the public approbation has been the best test.

"Again we request English composers, who have works complete, or in a state of preparation, to acquaint us with the same, in order that we may make our arrangements accordingly.

"We have been the means of introducing to the English operatic stage the following English artists:—Miss Parepa, Miss Corelli, Miss Pilling, Miss Thirlwall, Miss Fanny Cruise, Mr. Santley, Mr. Ferdinand Glover (an artist whose loss we much deplore), Mr. Patey, Mr. Grattan Kelly, Mr. Wallworth, Mr. Honey, &c., &c. During the three seasons we have expended, for artists, authors, rent, &c., the sum of £79,788.

"This being of a private nature, would not have been intruded by us on you, our generous patrons, but that you may know we spare no expense to please you and to deserve your kindness.

"We are delighted that through us a great boon has been re-opened to our sister and brother artists, namely, the Covent Garden Fund, which has been closed to all applications since the year 1842.

"It is with feelings of gratitude and pride we take the opportunity of acknowledging the high patronage we have received from her most gracious Majesty the Queen, his Royal Highness the Prince Consort, the Court, nobility and public, adding a double incentive to our motives, and honour and brilliancy to our undertaking, an undertaking which (if you will continue to aid us therein) it shall be the study of our lives to support—that of establishing in England a legitimate Royal English Opera.

"Trusting to find in you next season the same reciprocity to meet our endeavours that has been so liberally manifested towards us this, and with sincere thanks to all who have assisted us, without and within the theatre, we bid you respectfully and gratefully (until next October)—adieu.

"(Signed) LOUISA PYNE, WILLIAM HARRISON, } Managers."

The performances cannot be prolongued beyond Wednesday, as Mr. Gye will require the theatre for the purpose of re-adjusting it, as the Royal Italian Opera is announced to open on Tuesday, April 10th.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

THIS Society gave its Fourth Concert of the season on Monday evening last, in the Hanover-square Rooms, and the selection was as follows:—

PART I.

Symphony, in C (Jupiter)	Mozart.
Recit. and Air, "Oh! joyous, happy day" (Rose of Castille)	Balfe.
Barcarole and Finale, 4th Concerto in F minor ...	W. S. Bennett.

PART II.

Overture (La Syren)	Auber.
Glee, "The Bee"	Elliott.
Ballad, "Poor silly heart (Romance, Dick Turpin)	Henry Leslie.
Polka de Concert	V. Wallace.
Glee, "Crabbed age and youth"	Stevens.
Overture (Der Freischütz)	Weber.

Conductor—Mr. Henry Leslie.

The orchestra deserves the greatest credit for the admirable manner in which the symphony was performed. It was one of the best things the Society has ever done. The two movements (why was not the first given?), of Professor Bennett's Concerts, were exceedingly well played by Miss Fanny Howell, who, when she has overcome the timidity natural to early public appearances, will undoubtedly prove herself worthy of the name she bears.

The overtures, each highly characteristic of its composer, went well, and the Concert was agreeably varied by the singing of the Quartet of the Union (yet another Union!) who were encored in the glee of Elliott.

Miss Rose sang the two ballads.

Among the novelties to be produced at the next Concert, which will be given on Monday, April 2nd, is the finale to Mr. Frederick Clay's opera, Out of Sight, of the private performances of which so much has been said in London musical circles. Miss Augusta Thompson is also to appear.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.

THE following was the programme of the second performance of this great Society, which, under the head of "Vocal and Instrumental Concerts," was given on Wednesday evening at St. James's Hall:—

PART I.—SACRED.

Anthem, "O sing unto the Lord" soli and chorus—Henry Purcell (1658-1695).

Song, "'Gainst Thee, O Lord"—Beethoven (1770-1827).

Prelude and Fugue in E flat, organ—John Sebastian Bach (1685-1750).

Motet, "O Lord, Thou hast searched"—F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy (1807-1847).

Preghiera, "Non mi lagno di morir"—Lindpaintner.

Motet, Double Choir, "In exitu Israel"—Samuel Wesley (1766-1837).

PART II.—SECULAR.

Nonet (M.S.) in F minor (first time)—E. Silas.

Recit. and Air, "Why didst thou ever leave me"—Charles Salaman.

Madrigal, "Marrily wakes music's measure" (Fair Rosamond)—John Barnett.

Romance, "The Last Farewell"—Frank Mori.

Trio, "The Carnival"—Henry Smart.

Solo de Concert, Violin—Sainton.

Canone, "Placido Zefiretto" (first time)—Cherubini.

Hunting Song (Chorus)—F. Mendelssohn-Bartholdy.

Conductor—Mr. Henry Smart.
Organ Accompanist—Mr. C. G. Verrinder.
Pianoforte Accompanist—Mr. Walter Macfarren.

Purcell's anthem was sung by Miss Eliza Hughes, Messrs. Foster, Wilbye Cooper, and Weiss; Mendelssohn's motet by Miss Messent, Miss Eliza Hughes, Madame Weiss, Miss Leffler, and chorus of female voices; and Wesley's motet by all the principals and chorus. The last was encored. Mr. Silas's nonet is written for violin, viola, violoncello, contrabasso, flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and horn, and was executed by Messrs. Sainton, Webb, Lidel, White, Pratten, Barret, Lazarus, Chisholm, and C. Harper.

Mr. Best played the prelude and fugue of Bach magnificently. The capital madrigal from Fair Rosamond was well sung. Mendelssohn's fine hunting-song deserved a better place. M. Sainton's solo was a first-rate display of bravura playing. The hall was full, but by no means crowded, exhibiting a marked difference when compared with its appearance at the first concert.

ST. MARTIN'S HALL.—Judas Maccabæus was given on Wednesday evening, under Mr. Hullah's direction. It was an excellent performance throughout, Mr. Hullah's First Upper Singing School distinguishing themselves more than ever by their force, precision, and energy. We hardly remember having heard them go through an oratorio so uniformly well. Even the grand chorus "We never will bow down," seldom satisfactory before, was all but irreproachable; while "Fall'n is the foe," left nothing whatsoever for criticism. The principal singers were Miss Banks, Miss Martin, Miss Mina Poole, Miss Palmer, Mr. W. H. Cummings, and Mr. Thomas. The most striking solo performances were "From Mighty Kings," by Miss Banks, and the two bass airs "Arm, arm, ye brave," and "The Lord worketh wonders," by Mr. Thomas, both artists being entitled to unqualified praise. Miss Palmer sang the contralto music with great power and expression, and Misses Martin and Mina Poole did good service as second sopranos. Mr. W. H. Cummings had not power enough for the part of Judas, and, moreover, was evidently nervous, having undertaken to sing the music at a short notice. The Hall was full, and the audience most liberal of their applause.

On Thursday evening a new choral class, numbering nearly three hundred voices, made their first appeal, and in public. This class was established last summer for the practice of choral music, and have been studying hard since, under the direction of Mr. John Henken, who had been for more than ten years Honorary Instructor to the London Mechanics' Institution. The members, we should suppose, are gleaned from the northern suburbs, seeing that their place of meeting is the Lecture Hall, Spa Fields. Suburban, or metropolitan, however, the choral class is entitled to consideration, not only as constituting a nucleus, out of which a grand and complete choir may be formed, but as indicating special capabilities in themselves, and showing what may be accomplished in a short time by careful and sedulous training. The choral class is far from perfect; but we can call to mind no first public exhibition of a body of amateur choristers which was so successful as the trial of Thursday night. Generally speaking, the trebles and basses are too powerful for the altos and tenors, and the proper balance of tone is consequently not obtained. Of course this can be easily remedied. We have rarely heard fresher and more brilliant voices than the sopranos, and the basses are of a fine quality. The performance was divided into two parts, one sacred and the other secular. In the former the class sang the two grand choruses from Judas Maccabaus, "We never will bow down," and "O Father, whose Almighty power;" "Sing unto God" from Himmel's "Koerner's prayer during the battle;" and two Anthems—"Awake up my Glory," by Broderip; and "The Dying Christian," by Harwood. Himmel's Prayer was encored and repeated. The secular part embraced in the selections: three part songs by Martin; Webbe's glee, "Swiftly from the Mountain's Brow," and the chorus from Masaniello, "Hear, Holy Power." The choral performances were relieved by solos, sacred and secular, sung by Miss Banks, Miss Fanny Huddart, and Mr. Wilbye Cooper. Mr. John Henken is an energetic and rather demonstrative conductor, but the singers appear thoroughly to understand and appreciate the indications of his bâton. Mr. Henken, we understand, tenders his services gratuitously in training the class—a sketch of generosity seldom equalled, and which, no doubt, finds its best reward in the good result achieved. If the force under Mr. Henken's tuition have accomplished so much in nine months, what may not be anticipated from them in two or three years? Perhaps the establishment of a new Sacred Harmonic Society in the N. W. Suburbs.

BERLIN, March 8th—(From a Correspondent).—So surely as ignorance is accompanied by impudence, so surely is a truly genial mind, well stored and well disciplined, adorned by modesty and unassumption. The history of almost every true genius fully demonstrates the assertion. Luther, Shakspere, Newton, Beethoven, may serve as shining examples. But, apart from these greatest of the great, there are many truly genial men, whose accomplishments are not so universally known, but who ought by no means to be allowed to "Waste their sweetness on the desert air,"

Such a one is Herr Laub, the greatest violin virtuoso of Berlin and one of the greatest in the world, according to my judgment. This is founded on extensive experience, and a tolerable knowledge of those capabilities which form, not only a mere virtuoso (in the accepted signification of that word), but in very deed an artist. In my opinion, Joseph Joachim stands at the head of this class. If Herr Laub's taste is somewhat less severe, it is not less varied. The first of his concerts this season (and perhaps the last) took place lately in the Sing-Akademie, which was filled to overflowing.

Herr Laub gave us, first, Beethoven's violin concerto, with a cadence of his own composition. His performance showed him to be a perfect master of his instrument, while the cadence demonstrated that he was something more than a mere finger-artist. That the cadence is, to a certain extent, in the modern style, need hardly be said; nevertheless, it was finely characteristic of the whole, and well developed, from Beethoven's own motives; a Polonaise, for violin and orchestra, which followed, only served to strengthen my opinion of Herr Laub's talents. To my thinking, however, he has here studied modern effects to the disadvantage of the more classical style. Two really salon pieces were well adapted to send the audience away full of admiration at his technical skill. One was an air hongrois, by Ernst; and the other a rondo, by Bazzini. In the former, one was enabled to judge of Herr Laub's masterly manipulation, and in the latter of his freedom of style and his admirably bowing. I never had the good fortune to hear Spohr play; but, to judge from Mr. Blagrove, his school of bowing must be the one followed by Herr Laub. The programme was interspersed with a couple of songs and a piano solo. Fraulein Hebbe (a Swedish cantatrice) failed to do justice to the songs, and Herr Dreyschock gave a splendid performance of the G minor concerto of Mendelssohn. The press has been unanimous in his praise, and the court has not been backward in paying its tribute of admiration, the Prince Regent having conferred upon him the order of the "Red Eagle." If we are rightly informed a similar honour has been shown to the pianist Dr. T. Kullak.* It is to be hoped such facts as these will not pass unnoticed at head quarters elsewhere.

At the last symphony concert of the Royal band, the music to Gluck's Orpheus was performed. Notwithstanding the favourable manner in which it was received, I cannot call the choice judicious. Gluck's music is always beautiful, but th scenic effects are absolutely necessary. Those who had often heard the work within the same walls in its entirety, could not feel perfectly satisfied with the result. The whole opera would, I presume, have been given, were Mdlle. Johanna Wagner not temporarily incapacitated from taking her rôle. The other pieces were Mendelssohn's magnificent overture to Ruy Blas, and Bethoven's second symphony. It need scarcely be added that everything was superbly executed. With such a band, and Taubert at its head, it could not well be otherwise. The pleasure one derives from these rare concerts would be increased, if the directors would not lose sight of the truism, variatio delectat. The finest music may become monotonous by too much repetition; so it is here. Why can the powers that be not take a hint from our Philharmonic, and introduce a vocal piece or two?

Our Princess was present with her Royal Consort, and kept her seat till the last note was played—an example which many less august personages did not follow.

A Mademoiselle Moesner has been giving several concerts at the Sing-Akademie, which, in a pecuniary sense, have been decided failures; but the contrary in an artistic sense. Her instrument is the harp, upon which she produces effects which must be heard to be believed. It must have been disheartening enough to her to have had such scanty audiences; but with her personal attractions and her talent, which is undeniable, she may feel sure of ultimate success. She starts hence on a tour through Germany.

The Dom-Chor has been giving three extra soirées, which have only served to strengthen my opinion as to the incomparable excellence of this renowned body of choristers. The chief director (Neithardt) is suffering from severe indisposition, and the choir may flatter itself that its second director (Herr von Herzberg) is no unworthy substitute. The following was the programme of the last concert:—

1.	Gloria	Palestrina.
2.	Crucifixus	Palestrina.
3.	Agnus Dei	Caldara.
4.	Sonata, Op. 29, G major	Beethoven.
5.	Requiem Æternam	Nic. Jomelli.
6.	Motet	J. S. Bach.
7.	Chorale	Melchior Frank.
8.	Motet	Schicht.
9.	Sonata, Op. 70 (Le Retour à Paris) ..	Dussek.
10.	Ave Verum	Mozart.

A young composer had just been introduced to the public, whose future career, if rumour is to be credited, will be worth looking to. He is called Heinrich Bellerman, son of the professor of that name. He directed a number of his own compositions in the Sing-Akademie, the chief of which was a setting of Goethe's Mahomed.

---

*Your Parisian correspondent is in error in calling Theodore Kullak, pianist to the King.

More important for the musical world, however, than Bellerman's production, is Herr Blumner's new oratorio, Abraham, which was performed, for the first time, on Thursday last, and which is to be repeated this evening. A detailed account of the performance we must postpone till our next, and will dismiss it now by saying, that it has been unusually well received; in fact the critics are unanimous in its praise.

At the Royal Opera nothing new. Graf Redern's Christine was, however, given on Sunday, for the third time, with the substitution of Madame Köster for Mddle. Wagner as the heroine. The change has given great satisfaction; and will in all probability save the opera from a doom we most sincerely believe it does not deserve. At the Victoria Theatre, Mdlle. Artot continues to attract full houses. Il Barbiere has given place to Rigoletto, in which Signor Carrion is very effective. There is a sad want of good male singers at the opera, particularly of tenors and basses. In conclusion, it is painful to have to record two sad accidents which have happened at the opera. In the first case, a member of the ballet, being the outside of a semicircle which was swinging round, could not hold fast her partner's hand, and was consequently precipitated into the orchestra. She providentially fell clear of all the internal arrangements, and escaped with very slight injuries. The audience was much more alarmed than she was hurt. The second case has terminated more fatally. Just before the rise of the curtain a few nights ago, a slight commotion was heard to proceed from the stage. The audience, unaccustomed to such an event, for matters are marvellously quietly managed generally, seemed a little perplexed, which vanished when the curtain had once risen. In those few minutes which had elapsed, Fraulein Holcke, of the ballet, had met with a fearful death. It appears, in passing some lamp in the coulisses, her dress had caught fire, and, notwithstanding every effort to extinguish the flame, the poor girl was fearfully burned. She was at once conveyed to the hospital, where some hopes were entertained that she would survive. This inspired the intendant of the opera to publicly express a hope that she would soon be able to resume her duties. A change, however, for the worse took place on Sunday, and, after fearful suffering, she died on Monday of lock-jaw. The Princess of Prussia, and the public generally, have expressed their deepest sympathy for the unfortunate girl's relatives.

COUNT REDERN'S NEW OPERA CHRISTINE.

BERLIN (Communicated).—The event of the last few weeks has been the production of Redern's new opera, Christine, at the Royal Opera-house. It took place on the 17th ult., since which time it has been performed but once, and that for the last time, according to some very wise heads out here, who predict a thousand different things that never come to pass. Count R.'s work had so long been the subject of talk in the art circles, that we were not at all surprised to find a full house. It was no ordinary audience either, but as select and aristocratic as ever assembled within the walls of that world-renowned establishment. Nearly all the members of the Royal Family, of the "House of Lords," of the extensive nobility in general, and every one curious in the musical art, were to be found there in common. Doubtless, different motives had drawn many to the spot, some going because of the novelty of the thing; some to see the fine folks, without any reference to music whatever; some with no other object in view than that of grumbling, and finding fault, as the sequel will show. For our own part, we went with none of these ugly intentions, but solely and purely, in as unbiassed a state of mind as possible, to listen and profit by a new creation in art of no trifling pretensions. A little behind time, Herr Taubert entered the orchestra, and "went in" immediately for the overture. It was curious to observe the different effects produced upon it the audience. Impressions more agreeable than otherwise, it was plain to see, had been made on some, the unsavoury quality of which sat unmistakeably reflected on the soul's mirror. The majority were pleased, however, and a crash of applause followed, highly flattering to the composer. But silence! Taubert is tapping with the tip of his more useful than ornamental bâton at the prompter's box before him, and the curtain rises amidst breathless silence. The plot is so simple and comprehensible, that we prefer following its straightforward course, as it opens out to us in the progress of the piece.

The first scene, then, introduces us to the sea-shore "somewhere" in the north. All is life and animation. There you have sunburnt maidens making, repairing, and vending nets, and other articles of marine "furniture." There, on the left, a dozen "duffers" are engaged in unloading a fishing-smack, the weather-beaten crew of which join some of their fraternity in draining a barrel, which the forethought of the landlady of the little inn hard by has placed there. After the contents of the said barrel have had the desired effect, a jolly bacchanalian chorus bursts forth, which is well written, and in every respect effective. The landlady herself (Madame Tuczek) then steps forward, and in a sweet little recitative tells her kind supporters to sing and be cheery as much as they like, but not to forget the while to drink lustily. They express their agreement thereto in a racy little strophe, and then, with nothing like reluctance, act in accordance with Madame's wishes. During this time a young marine officer (Arvid, Herr Worworsky) strolls in, and treats us to a touching song about the pleasures of Vaterland and home. As might naturally be expected, he sings the praise also of her whose like the whole world, &c., &c., &c. His pathetic strains fail to create any serious effect on the jovial crew around him, short refrains from whom (on quite another subject) serve to heighten the effect of Arvid's song. Suddenly a scream for help is heard, and the landlady rushes in in breathless haste to announce the running down of a ship and peril of the passengers. The tables are now really turned. Mirth becomes earnestness, and the confusion which ensues has given the composer the opportunity of plying "storm effects," which he has done to good purpose. Arvid makes a Curtius sort of leap into the sea, and swims back to shore in a few minutes with an apparently lifeless female form in his arms. The excitement during the few minutes spoken of is something terrible to the audience, and apparently much more so to the people on shore, who give vent to all sorts of hopes, and prayers, and fears. On the safe return of Arvid, they demonstrate their gratitude by singing manfully a short, well-conceived, and characteristic chorus:—

"Preis Dir, o Gott, den Hülf' in Nöthen sendet!"

The exertions of the females to restore animation in the rescued passenger are at last successful. The first object she casts her eyes on is Arvid, to whom she whispers, "Hide me, and let no one know who I am." Now he has not the remotest notion who she is; her caution is quite superfluous. 'Tis, in fact, Christine, the Queen of Sweden herself (Madame Wagner). How she comes to be navigating the salt sea in this style, Herr Tempeltey (the poet) is much more likely to know than ourselves. Too much of a gentleman not to respect the feelings of a lady, Arvid consents to keep a secret he knows nothing of, and the landlady then takes Christine away under her care and protection. Arvid orders in a new barrel (what are bottles to a sailor!), and the merriment is resumed by the chorus singing to the praise of the fearless rescuer. There are certain crude changes in this chorus which mar the effect sadly; nevertheless, there is much clear writing in it, and, what says more, much music; this is followed by a ballet, in which something vastly like our sailors' hornpipe occurs. Ye god-like shades of Lydia Thompson obscure such a violation of your sacred rights from our bewildered vision! A new character, in the person of a nobleman of the Swedish realm, Count Löwenholm (Herr Fricke), makes his appearance during this ceremony. This same count is the foster-father of Arvid, with whose daughter, Ella (Frau Harriers-Wippern) he is betrothed. After a little recitative, in which the Count welcomes his quasi-son home, he tells him that through the influence of a deadly enemy he has been banished. A very expressive duet follows, in which both swear revenge for this cruel sentence. After various efforts, they learn that the Queen is this enemy. While further imparting certain information to him not very favourable to her Majesty's character, she makes her appearance in the garb of a young officer. Löwenholm, fearing that his maledictions have been thus overheard, is for killing him on the spot; but is prevented by his declaration of kindred feeling of hate and revenge against the Queen. This forms the burthen of a most charming trio, which, in point of vocal as well as instrumental beauty, will stand comparison with any modern music that we know of. It is the gem of the opera, to our taste, and was loudly applauded at its conclusion. A chorus follows, singing in praise of the ruler of the realm, &c., &c. This is just one of those pieces for which the whole opera has been condemned for want of connection. It stands indeed in no sort of relationship to what precedes it, and to our mind the opera would gain something by its expunction. At this point a body of soldiery enters, and commences a search for Löwenholm, who is on the point of being taken, when the Queen calls her captain, and, by the magic power of a ring she wears, releases Löwenholm from further molestation. The first act closes rather noisily by the chorus singing a masterly piece of choral writing in praise of union and peace, with which is cleverly interwoven a trio by the Queen, Löwenholm, and Arvid, expressive of each other's doubts what the effect of the unexpected intervention will be, and speculations concerning the rank, &c., of the supposed young officer. The ensemble is striking, if only on account of the noise made. It is a pity this close is so fully instrumented. The whole chorus—to the minutest progression—is laboriously worked out, and convinced us at least that Redern's pen can make some master-strokes at times. The curtain falls, as the last strains of the chorus die away, and as the soldiers depart in military order. This situation is very effective, and gives evidence of judgment and matured reflection.

The second act opens with a chorus of female voices. It is in praise of beauteous nature, and has a charmingly pastoral character. We are thus introduced to Ella, or rather she to us. In company with Arvid, she sings with him a duet, the refrain of which is his safe return and the prospect of future joys. To our thinking, the composer has been here least happy in his efforts. He appears not to have had sufficiently definite ideas of what he wanted to pourtray in tones. The remainder of the act is devoted to the concocting of a plot against the Queen and throne. The finest movement of the whole is the oath of the conspirators. It is a unisonic phrase of no great length, but great power and and effect. The whole arrangements are completed, and the conspirators are just about to proceed to active measures, when a body of armed soldiers burst into the room, and demand of them in the name of the Queen to lay aside their arms and vicious intentions. During this operation, performed, as may be supposed, with a very ill grace, the curtain falls on act the second.

The third and last act shows us the Queen in her royal capacity, surrounded by the usual number of well-got-up ladies in waiting, lords of the, &c., &c. After dismissing her attendants she unburdens her soul, and acknowledges two very startling circumstances, firstly, that she is tired of the "cramping crown;" and, secondly, that she is in love with Arvid. The ballad form has here been employed with the utmost success. The composer has been fortunate enough to create a beautifully plaintive melody, and to avoid damaging it by overloaded and far-fetched accompaniment.

Poor Ella, who comes to petition for her imprisoned lover, meets with a decidedly cool reception, in fact, it is only on the promise of renouncing him altogether that the Queen promises to spare his life. There is here plenty of opportunity for dramatic display, both for the composer and executant. The contrast is very striking; on the one side, the brutal outburst of triumph when the Queen has wrung the cruel resolution from her victim, and the heart-rending sobbings of the other over her cruel fate. It is a grand dramatic climax, in fact, and did not fail in its effect either on the part of the singer or the public. Ella's departure from the presence of the Queen with the words—is as beautifully conceived as carried out. Overjoyed at her success, the Queen scarce suffers Ella to be clear away, before she summons Arvid, and confesses her passion for him without reserve, adding, of course, the comforting remark, that Ella was unfaithful, &c., &c. Arvid stands aghast at this bewildering change o'er the spirit of his dream. However, he defeats the selfish ends of her Majesty by vows of eternal fidelity to Ella, and, finding herself defeated here, she sends for her counsel, Rinsfelk, and, in giving Ella to Arvid, pardons the conspirators, and abdicates the throne in favour of her cousin "Charles Gustave." The whole closes with a chorus and trio by Ella, Arvid, and Löwenholm, in praise of her Majesty's virtues, &c.

"O Herz, uns soll dein Schlagen"—

Such is an outline of Count Redern's new opera Christine. What remains to be said of the music can, fortunately, be said in a few words. It betrays throughout considerable melodic talent; judgment in the employment of the instruments; a thorough comprehension of the human voice, and its natural capabilities; and lastly, a more than meagre acquaintanceship with the intricate laws of polyphonic writing. It is the misfortune of the composer, however, to be of noble birth, and to this fact alone we attribute the fate which seems to have fallen to the lot of his maiden opera. Almost without exception the blindly biassed critics have "cut" it up. One thinks it vile presumption and abuse of power to have ever produced such "stuff" at all, etc. Another pities the singers who are compelled to learn "rubbish," etc., of this calibre; pities the public for having found any good point in the whole work, and closes his splenetic effusion by calling on heaven to forgive him for the three wasted hours, etc. Another hints that such composers are fit subjects for St. Luke's, etc. Such like criticisms as these are what these gigantic scribes call unprejudiced remarks! Only one (Rellstab) criticises in the spirit of a well-wishing artist and of a gentleman. He does not overlook the weak points, nor forget to say an encouraging word concerning the good ones. Here, however, just as mysteriously as in Richard the Third, we are told:—

Aunt Voss* of Berlin is not so bold,
For Rellstab, thy critic, is bought and sold!

And all these outpourings of bitter malice, simply because the composer of the new opera bears at the same time the title of nobility and that of the intendant of the king's chamber-musicians! In asserting that had the ink proceeded from the pen of a mere plebeian author, it never would have been produced where it was, etc., they have betrayed their selfish political opinions, and suffered them to gain the better of their judgment; and yet these very men cry loudest for a clear distinction to be kept between mean, worldly, political life, and the more holy, more ennobling pursuit of art. We have no striking partiality for the nobility as such, but far be it from us to forget the debt of gratitude artand artists owe to those whom fortune has been pleased so to smile upon. In conclusion, we would just say to the composer of Christine, pursue your artistic career without fear of such manifestly one-sided attacks as you have been lately subjected to, not forgetting, however, to profit by the well-meant, and gentlemanly counsel of the true art-critics. To the Berlin critics, and to the critics in general, we can only say, be wary in putting out altogether the fire of any artistic spirit. Leave but one spark, that animation may not be beyond the pale of possibility. After being once chicoked, the flame may burn the brighter; extinguish it, and it is dead for ever. Admonish as you will, but always as gentlemen, and rather endear the artist to you by your friendly counsel, than dishearten and disgust him.

MOZART—CHILD AND MAN.

(Continued from page 178, Vol. 38.)

77.

The Same to the Same.

A Country House near Bologna, August 11*th*, 1770.

We are living here in the house of the Marshal Pallavicini in a most princely manner; we have a valet and a footman always at our orders, the first sleeps in our ante-chamber, so as to be always within call; we have the coolest rooms next the Sala terrena. The young Count, who is exceedingly well brought up, and has much talent, is the best of friends with Wolfgang, who loves him tenderly. They never allow me to stand, they insist on my being seated on one chair, with my leg supported on another. Indeed, to-day, in the chapel, during mass, which is performed every day at noon, two chairs had been thus arranged for me. The young count, who is only the same age as Wolfgang, is already Chamberlain to the Emperor, and he assists in the mass, after which they say the chaplet, the litanies, the Salve Regina, and the De Profundis.

Wolfgang goes out in the carriage with the old countess and her son, I with the old count. We shall stay here until my leg is quite healed.

78.

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, August 21*st*, 1770.

We are still in the country, at the Croce del Biacco, which belongs to the Count Bolognetti, but which has been rented of him for several years by Count Pallavicini. The 30th they will celebrate in a magnificent manner the annual fête of the Philharmonic Society of Bologna; there will be high mass, vespers, &c.

P.S. from Wolfgang.—I am still living, and always gay; to-day I had a wish to ride on a donkey—it is the fashion in Italy, so consequently I thought I must try it. We have the honour of knowing a certain Dominican, who passes for a saint; as for me I don't believe a word of it, because I see him take, at breakfast, first a good cup of chocolate, and then on the top of that, a large glass of Spanish wine. I have had the honour of eating in the company of this saint, who, besides drinking freely during the repast, finished it up with a large glass of the strongest wine, two good slices of melon, peaches, pears, five cups of coffee, a plate of little cakes, and a lemon ice. Perhaps he did all this on a system of "mortification," but yet I should have some trouble to believe that; it would be too much at a time, and then, besides his dinner, he takes too good care of his supper.

* "Tante Voss," the popular name for the newspaper.

79

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, August 25th, 1770.

We are still in the country! We have a Dominican friar here, who is a German (from Bohemia), which has enabled us to perform our devotions in the parish church: we have confessed, taken the communion, and made a little pilgrimage to the cross together. At noon we were at mass in the chapel in the castle. You may certainly prepare two beautiful golden relic boxes for your husband and son, as we shall certainly be saints by the time we come back. My friends must forgive me for being such a poor correspondent. To give credit is not to cancel a debt—better late than never—are two proverbs that come as excuses for my idleness; and then, in travelling, one has a thousand things to occupy one's time. My books and my collections of music are most notably augmented. Everything is getting too small for Wolfgang, the silk rolled round his diamond ring has been unwound, only a little wax remains; his limbs have become larger and stronger; he no longer has any voice for singing, neither high notes or low ones, not even five pure notes. This vexes him, because he can no longer sing his own compositions, which he was very fond of doing.

80.

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, September 1st, 1770.

Still in the country! The 30th we heard the high mass and vespers of the Philharmonic Society, at which ten maestros had worked. The Kyrie and the Gloria were by one, the Credo by another, and so on, each composer superintended his own work; but to do that, one must be a member of the Academy.

81.

The Same to the Same.

Bologna, September 8th, 1770.

Do not forget to tell me about the ecclesiastical council who have arrived in Salzbourg; of whom this congress is composed, and where it is held. If you do not know, ask of one another.

We shall soon leave for Milan. As we have not been able to go to Leghorn, I shall make a little excursion from Milan to the Borromean Islands, which are quite worth visiting.

P.S. from Wolfgang.—I add a few words to accomplish my duty—tell me to what brotherhood I belong, and what are the prayers I have to say. I am reading at this moment the second volume of Telemachus.

(To be continued.)

RAPHAEL'S APOLLO AND MARSYAS.—The Marchese P. Selvatico, formerly Director of the Accademia di Belle Arti, at Venice, whom we find quoted as an authority in Sir C. Eastlake's annual reports, has emphatically declared the picture of Apollo and Marsyas belonging to Mr. Morris Moore, to be not only obviously by Raphael, but a singularly beautiful and well-preserved specimen of the incomparable master. He has also expressed his astonishment how such a work should leave England at a time when the Director of the English National Gallery is expending vast sums on inferior pictures, such as the Pisani Paul Veronese, "The Family of Darius," &c., &c.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

DONALD DUNCAN'S

PURE SCOTCH MALT WHISKIES,

ARE CHEAPER, MORE WHOLESOME, AND FAR SUPERIOR TO THE FINEST FRENCH BRANDY.

ROYAL BALMORAL, a very fine, mild, and mellow spirit .. 15s. per Gallon.
THE PRINCE'S USQUEBEAUGH, a much admired and delicious spirit .. .. 18s. Do.
DONALD DUNCAN'S Celebrated Registered DD. Whiskey of extraordinary quality and age .. .. 20s. Do.

Two gallons of either of the above sent to any part, or sample forwarded for 12 postage stamps. Terms cash. 4, Burleigh-street, Strand, W.C.

Just Published.

LARGHETTO CANTABILLE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIO, for the Pianoforte, dedicated to his esteemed friend W m. Sternale Bennett, Mus. Prof. Cantab., by George Forbes. Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW LIST.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS.

Complete for the Pianoforte, in cloth. Price 6s. Forming the 20th volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Operas.

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA and WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA.

Edited by J. W. Davison, with Critical and Biographical Introductions. In one volume. Price 4s.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

Complete in one volume. Edited by J. W. Davison, with Introduction and Portrait. Price 8s.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

Complete for Pianoforte. By Henry Smart. Price 3s.

DE BERIOT'S AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN,

Complete with all the Variations, Nos. 1 to 7, in one book. Price 1s.

 Pianoforte part (ad. lib.), price 3s. 6d.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN.

By Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky. Price 1s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' ARRANGEMENT

Of Balfe's "Rifleman, form," as a March for the Pianoforte. Price 3s. 6d.

 As performed by command of the Queen by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace.

KUHE'S TWO NEW FANTASIAS

On "Domino Noir" and "Zampa." Price 3s. each.

GLUCK'S IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS.

Now ready, the Three Principal Songs, with English words. Price 3s. each.
1. "Oh, Greece, how mourns thy hapless daughter."
2. "Ever linked from early childhood."
3. "Oh, thou that wert of life the source."

The complete Opera, in English and French. Price 3s.

DINORAH. PART I.

For Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words. Price 1s. To be completed in Eight Monthly Parts.

STANDARD OVERTURES,

FOR LARGE AND SMALL BAND. The first number of Boosey and Sons new series (The Crown Diamonds) will be ready by April. Price 3s. and 8s. To be continued every month.

SCHLESSER'S THREE GRAND DUETS,

On "Martha," "La Traviata," and "Dinorah." Price 5s. each. Published this day.

THE POPULAR SONGS OF THE SEASON.

Sung by Madame DOLBY, Madame LOUISA VINNING, WILBYE COOPER, and SIMS REEVES.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Janet's Choice, by Claribel ..	2	6	When you and I were young, by Allen	2	0
Don't come teasing me, Sir, by Hatton	2	6	O tender shadow, by Meyerbeer..	3	0
Sweetheart, by Balfe	2	0	Margaretta, by Balfe	3	0
Bird of Song, by Hatton	2	0	The maid I love hath many a grace, by Hatton	2	0
Thou sat so near, by Reichardt ..	3	0	You chide me for loving, by Berger	2	0
O live, or let me die, by Meyerbeer	2	0	The Quadroon girl, by Balfe ..	2	6
Sister Mary, by Meyerbeer ..	2	0	The song of love and death, by Balfe	2	0
It was fifty years ago, by Hatton	2	0	Sweet Katie, by Callcott	2	0
Why don't he tell me so? by Berger	2	0	Magenta, by Balfe	2	0
Swifter than the swallow's flight, by Berger	2	0

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

SEASON 1860.

THE LESSEE and DIRECTOR, having completed arrangements which enable him to make the announcement under peculiarly favourable circumstances, has the gratification to acquaint the nobility, gentry, and the public, that HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE will OPEN for the SEASON on Tuesday, the 10th of April next. Her Majesty's Theatre for more than a century has been recognised as the first Lyric Theatre in Europe. With this magnificent establishment are intimately associated all the splendour and prestige of Italian Opera; to it also belong the most brilliant reminiscences of the Ballet. The history of Her Majesty's Theatre is identified with the progress of music in this country, and its name made memorable by the special patronage of Royalty. Its spacious and noble area, its peculiarity of construction—which renders it the finest theatre in the world for sound—its perfect suitableness for the purposes of music, and, more than all, its locality in the most fashionable and easily-accessible part of the metropolis, point to it as the temple of high-art entertainment best adapte dto the taste and accommodation of the Court and the aristocracy. In short, no other opera-house in existence can boast of equal advantages in point of convenience of site, commodiousness of construction, and elegance of appearance. Considerable changes and improvements have been made in order to conduce to the comfort and satisfaction of the subscribers and the public. The theatre has undergone a thorough renovation in the interior and exterior, and several alterations have been effected throughout the building, which the Director thought were imperatively called for, and which he feels satisfied will meet with universal approbation. The crush room and entrances have been rendered commodious and elegant, a perfect system of ventilation has been adopted, and every care taken to ensure the accommodation of the audience. The Lessee is deeply impressed with the responsibilities of his new undertaking. He feels that he has made himself answerable to all his patrons for the production of every work at Her Majesty's Theatre in a style of completeness and excellence worthy of their support. As an assurance that due exertion will not be wanting to arrive at this result, he may refer to the accompanying list of artistes and arrangements for the forthcoming season :—

ENGAGEMENTS—Mdlle. Piccolomini (her farewell nights previous to her final retirement from the stage), Mdlle. Vaneri, Madame Laura Baxter, Mdlle. Maria Brunetti (from the Grand Opera Paris, her first appearance in this country). and Madame Alboni; Mdlle. Lotti della Santa (her first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre), Mdlle. Dell'Anese, Mdlle. Nardi, and Madame Maria Cabel (Prima Donna of the Opera Comique, Paris,) Madame Borghi Mamo (her first appearance in this country,) and Mdlle, Titiens, Signor Mongini, Signor Belart, Signor Corsi, Signor Mercuriali, Signor Soldi, Signor Giuglini, Signor Everardi (of the Imperial Italian Operas of Vienna and St. Petersburgh, his first appearance in this country), Signor Aldighieri, Signor Fellar, (his first appearance,) and Signor Sebastiano Ronconi, (of the Regio, Turin, La Pergola, Florence, &c.,) Signor Gossier, Signor Castelli, and Signor Violetti, Directors of the music, Composers and Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Signor Arditi. Principal Violins—Herr Molique, and Mr. Henry Blagrove. Leader of the Ballet—Signor Bollilli (Musical Director for the Theatre Bologna.) The Military Band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. D. Godfrey. Suggestiore—Signor Fontana. Regisseur—Signor Grua. The carefully selected and highly trained Chorus under the direction of Signor Vaschetti. The Corps de Ballet will include several additions from the continental theatres, under the direction of M. Petit. The engagements for the Ballet comprise: Mdlle. Salvioni, (of the San Carlos, Naples, her first appearance,) Mdlle. Morlacchi, Mdlle. Pocchini, Mdlle. Clavelle, Mdlle. Moncelet, Mdlle. Claudini Cucchi, (of the Imperial Opera, Vienna, her first appearance), Mdlle. Bioletti, Mdlle. Loquine, Mdlle. Ferraris, M. Merante, (of the Grand Opera, Paris, (his first appearance,) Signor Carlori, (of the Imperial Opera, Vienna, his first appearance,) and M. Durand. Maitre e compositeur de Ballet—Signor Borri (of the principal Theatre in Italy.)

With a repertoire so extensive and attractive as that of Her Majesty's Theatre, an assemblage of talent so remarkable, and with so magnificent a theatre, in every way peculiarly adapted to the various performances, theDirector confidently looks to the nobility and the public for support. To fulfil the conditions entailed, in carrying on so vast an establishment, requires more than common energies and common resources; and it is only by liberal assistance from the patrons of art, among the aristocracy and the public that any good result can follow; while no labour, effort, or expense will be spared to render the performances of the highest excellence. It is further the intention of the management to produce during the season the following:—Weber's grand romantic opera of Oberon, which has been for a long time in active preparation, and will be produced on a scale and with a completeness worthy of this great work. The minor as well as the principal parts will be effectively filled. The scenery and dresses are being prepared with great care, and will present features of special interest. The whole will be produced under the immediate superintendence of J. R. Planché, Esq., Author of the Libretto, by whom several changes and modifications have been made, while the whole of the original music has been carefully preserved. The recitatives expressly arranged by M. Benedict, pupil of the composer of this great work. Beethoven's Fidelio, Leonora, Mdlle. Titiens. A new and original opera by Maestro Campana, in which Mdlle. Piccolomini will appear. Rossini's opera of Otello.—In consequence of the enthusiastic reception accorded to Mme. Borghi Mamo, at the Italian Opera in Paris, the above opera will be produced early in the season, with the following cast:—Otello, Signor Mongini; Rodrigo, Signor Corso; Elmiro, Signor Vialetti; Iago, Signor Everardi; Desdemona, Mme. Borghi Mamo. And about the middle of May, Rossini's Semiramide, with the following powerful cast:—Semiramide, Mdlle. Titiens (her first appearance in that character); Arsace, Madame Alboni (her first appearance this season; Idreno, Signor Belart; Oreo, Signor Vialetti; and Assur, Signor Everardi. Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro, with an unprecedented cast. Also Weber's opera of Der Frieschütz, in which Signor Mongini and Mdlle. Titiens will sustain the principal characters. Mdlle. Brunetti will arrive at the end of April, and make her first appearance at the early part of May, in Verdi's opera of Rigoletto. Madame Alboni will make her first appearance about the middle of May, as Arsace in Semiramide. Mdlle. Titiens will appear on the opening night Tuesday, April 10, in conjunction with Signor Giuglini. Madame Borghi Mamo will make her first appearance in this country on Thursday, April 12, as Leonora, in La Favorite. Madame Marie Cabel (from the Imperial Opera Comique, Paris,) will appear during the season in several of her favourite characters. On the opening night also will be performed the ballet of Fleur des Champs, in which Mdlle. Pocchini will appear. The general favourite, Mdlle. Ferraris, will appear in Mazalier's highly successful ballet of Orfa (first time in this country). Mdlle. Claudina Cucchi will make her début in a new ballet. The season will commence on Tuesday, April 10, when will be performed (for the first time at this theatre) Flotow's admired opera of Martha. Lionello, Signor Giuglini (his first appearance this season); Plumkett, Signor Vialetti; Lord Tristano, Signor Sebastian Ronconi; Nancy, Mdlle. Vaneri; Lady Henrietta, Mdlle. Titiens (her first appearance this season). On Thursday, April 12th, La Favorita. Fernando, Signor Guiglini; Alfonso, Signor Everardo (his first appearance); Baldassare, Signor Vialetti; Leonora, Mdlle. Borghi Mamo (her first appearance). On Saturday, 14th April, will be performed Verdi's opera of Il Trovatore, Manrico, Signor Giuglini; Ferrando, Signor Vialetti; Comte di Luna, Signor Aldighieri; Azucena, Madame Borghi Mamo; Leonora, Mdlle. Titiens. The Box-office of the Theatre is open daily for subscribers form 10 to 5, under the direction of Mr. Nugent.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.

Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, March 24, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 13. SATURDAY, MARCH 31, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROQUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

13

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE SEVENTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 2nd, 1860.
THE INSTRUMENTAL PIECES BY MOZART.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

QUINTET, in A major, for Clarinet, Two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello .. .. Mozart.
Mr. Lazarus, M. Sainton, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Mr. Paque.
(By general desire.)

SONG, "Lascio ch' io pianga," .. .. Handel.
Miss Laura Baxter.

SONG, "Oh! beauteous daughter of the starry race," .. Beethoven.
Mr. Sims Reeves.

FANTASIA, in C minor, pianoforte .. .. Mozart.
Mr. Benedict.
(First time.)

PART II.

SONATA, for Violin and Pianoforte, in B flat .. .. Mozart.
M. Sainton and Mr. Benedict.
(By desire.)

SERENADE, "When the moon is brightly shining," .. Molique.
Mr. Sims Reeves.

SONG, "The Savoyard's Song," .. .. Mendelssohn.
Miss Laura Baxter.

QUINTET, in E flat, for Pianoforte and Wind Instruments .. .. Mozart.

CONDUCTOR—MR. BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradberry's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Wylde, Great Hall, Hungerford Market; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church, street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—MR. GYE has the honour to announce to the Nobility, Gentry, Subscribers, and the public, that the Opera Season of 1860 will commence on Tuesday, April 10, on which occasion will be performed, for the seventh time on the Italian Stage, Meyerbeer's New Grand Opera, DINORAH. Prospectuses with the terms of subscription, full particulars of the engagements, operas to be given, &c., &c., may be obtained at the box office, under the portico of the theatre; also of Mr. Mitchell; Messrs. Ebers; Mr. Hookham; Messrs. Chappell; Mr. Bubb, Bond-street; Mr. Sams, St. James's-street; Mr. Hammond, and Messrs. Cramer and Co., Regent-street; and of Messrs. Keith and Prowse, Cheapside.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT. Thursday next, April 5th, at 8 o'clock, Macfarren's Cantata, "May-day," "Il Clemenza di Tito"; Mozart, "Ave Maria"; Double-choir, Mendelssohn, MS. part songs for Double-choir. Filby will be rehearsed. 13, Berner's-street. F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

MISS LAURA BAXTER has the honour to announce that her Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert will take place at St. James's Hall, on the 15th of May. Under the immediate patronage of the Marquis of Lansdowne, The Right Honorable The Earl [illegible], The Countess Mount Edgcumbe, The Lady Brownlow, Viscount [illegible], Lady Katherine Valletort, &c. Communications respecting [illegible], &c., to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, [illegible] Regent's Park, N.W.

NEWSPAPER

MR. MELCHOR WINTER (Tenor), and Mr. Beujamin WELLS (flautist), beg to announce that they will give a GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT, at the Hanover-square Rooms, early in May. Full particulars will be shortly published.—17, St. James's-square, Notting hill, W.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER will sing at Miss CHIPPERFIELD'S CONCERT, at the Hanover Square Rooms, on Monday 26th instant; at Myddelton Hall, Islington, April 17th; and Hanover Square Rooms, April 26th.

MR. RAMSDEN respectfully announces that he will return to Town, for the Season, on the 2nd of April. Communications respecting Engagements, Pupils, &c., to be addressed to Messrs. Cramer, Beale, and Chappell, 201, Regent-street, W.

MR. MELCHOR WINTER, Tenor. All communications respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Italian or English opera, to be addressed to his private residence, 17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 63, Burton-crescent, New-road.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MISS EMMA BUSBY begs to announce her return to London for the season. All communications to be addressed to her residence, 42, Blandford-square, N.W.

MR. JOHN FRANCIS BARNETT, Pianist & Composer, will return to London from Germany for the season, early in April. All letters and communications respecting engagements and lessons, to be addressed to the care of Mr. Joseph Barnett, 3, Upper Craven-place, Kentish-town.

MISS AUERHAAN, (pupil of Mrs. Arthur Willmore) the juvenile pianist, who made a successful debût at St. Martin's Hall, will play the "Sonata Pathetique" at the Russell Institution on Tuesday next.

MR. WALLWORTH'S engagement with the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company being terminated, he is now at liberty for concerts, pupils, &c.—30, Edwardes-street, Portman-square, W.

MR. MEYER LUTZ has the honour to announce that he has returned to London for the season.—36, Richmond-terrace, Clapham-road, S.; or to Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, Regent-street.

MR. F. SCOTSON CLARK is in town for the season.—Letters respecting lessons or engagements for the pianoforte or harmonium to be addressed to him, care of Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

MISS EMILY GRESHAM, Soprano.—Letters respecting engagements for oratorios and concerts, to be addressed, 20, Alfred-terrace, Queen's-road, Bayswater, W.

MADAME CLARA NOVELLO'S FAREWELL.—MADAME CLARA NOVELLO respectfully acquaints her friends and the public that she will revisit England in the autumn to sing at a few Oratorios and Concerts in London and the provinces, being her last appearances in public. Communications from Musical Societies to be addressed to Cramer and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MEYERBEER'S NEW WORK—"ASPIRATION"—CANTIQUE. (Short Anthem.) The words from the original latin of Thomas a Kempis, "De imitatione Christi." Composed for SIX VOICES (three sopranos, two tenors, and bass), with Recitatives for a BASS SOLO, and Organ (or Harmonium) accompaniment ad libitum, by GIACOMO MEYERBEER. Price, in score, 4s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where Meyerbeer's setting of the Lord's Prayer, for four voices, 3s., and the Serenade, for eight voices, "This house to love is holy," 4s., may be obtained.

MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES AND NATIONAL AIRS, WORDS AND MUSIC. Now complete in one volume, small 4to. price 12s. cloth, gilt edges; or separately in 10 Numbers, price 1s. each,

MOORE'S NATIONAL AIRS and other SONGS, with Symphonies and Accompaniments for the Pianoforte. People's Edition, edited by C. W. Glover. Both Words and Music of this Work are Copyright.

Uniform with the above,

PEOPLE'S EDITION OF MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES, now complete, price 12s. cloth, gilt edges; or in Ten Numbers, separately, price 1s. each. "Longman and Co.'s People's Edition" should be specified in all orders. London: Longman, Green and Co. and Addison and Co. Manchester: Hime and Addison.

BEATRICE SCHOTTISCHE.—By J. T. STONE; as played by the Band of the Coldstream Guards, at St. James's Palace; also by Coote and Tinney's band at Willis's Rooms. Solo, 2s. 6d.; Duet, 3s.; Septett 3s. 6d.; Full Orchestra, 5s.

"Facile, playful, piquant; in brief just what dance music should be. The author's compositions are widely known, and as extensively admired."—Morning Advertiser, March 31, 1859.

London: D'Almaine and Co., 104, New Bond-street, W.

Just Published.

LARGHETTO CANTABILLE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIO, for the Pianoforte, dedicated to his esteemed friend Wm. Sternale Bennett, Mus. Prof. Cantab, by George Forbes. Leader and Cock, 62, New Bond-street.

Second Edition, Folio, pp. 40, stitched. Price, complete, 7s. 6d.

R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately, Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.

LURLINE.—The following are the favourite pieces in WALLACE'S new and successful Opera, LURLINE;—"Under a spreading coral," "Take this cup of sparkling wine," "Flow on, oh, silver Rhine," "When the night winds," "Sweet Spirit, hear my prayer," sung by Miss Pyne; "Gentle troubadour," sung by Miss Pilling; "Our barque in moonlight beaming," "Sweet form that on my dreamy gaze," "The chimes of home," sung by Mr. Harrison; "A Father's love," "Love, transient passion," sung by Mr. Santley.

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

LURLINE.—WALLACE'S NEW GRAND OPERA for the Pianoforte, as Solos and Duets, by W. H. Calcott; also Fantasias and Rondos from "Lurline" by Wallace, Favarger, Osborne, and other eminent composers, Valse and Quadrille from "Lurline."

Cramer, Beale, and Co., 201, Regent-street.

MUSICAL UNION.—Members' Tickets are all issued. Changes of residence, nominations of new members, and non-delivery of tickets to be notified to the Director. Extra copies of RECORD, with Portrait of Spohr, and account of Music in Paris, 1859, are just published, 2s. 6d. each. Letters to Cramer's, Chappell's, and Ollivier's, will receive prompt attention addressed to

J. ELLA, Director.

HARMONY AND COMPOSITION.—A course of Instruction, Science of Chords (and every item), on a clear and detailed plan, on moderate terms. Address, E. Eves, 6, Radnor-street, City-road, E.C.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to

THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons' military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

REVIEWS.

"'Chopin's Mazurkas,' in eleven books, complete, with a Biographical and Critical Introduction—edited by J. W. Davison (Boosey and Sons)." "Chopin for the many" will, perhaps, appear an anomaly to those who look upon the individual Chopin as a spirit, dwelling away from the mass of artistic workers, and devouring his own heart in defiance of the oracle of Pythagoras—"Cor non edite" (which will be disregarded by secret mourners, so long as the world lasts). Equally anomalous will it sound to all who have read (and can understand) the rhapsody published by Messrs. Wessel and Stapleton, some twenty years ago, under the name and title of An Essay on the Works of Frederic Chopin, in which Shelley's definition of Coleridge—

"He was a mighty poet,
And a subtle-souled psychologist"—

is placed to the account of Chopin himself, with a stretch of indulgence that not one of the three Anabaptists who figure, as customers at the Edinburgh Castle, together with the learned Epistemon (in our leading columns of to-day), would have accorded to Mr. Fitzball, whose recondite verse they severally endeavour to explain or contemn. But the real fact is, that what is intrinsically good and true, however at the outset confined to a narrow circle of appreciation, must in the end find its way to "the many," from whom it will receive the stamp of immortality. That which never can by any chance become popular is somewhere intrinsically wrong. "Popular" is one thing—"vulgar" is another; and we must beg our readers to admit a wide difference in the signification of the two epithets. The popularity of "The Ratcatcher's Daughter" is a very dissimilar matter from the popularity of Mendelssohn's Lieder ohne Worte, and springs from wholly dissimilar sources. The first finds its way speedily to the barrel-organ; the last must not aspire to such distinction, for it would never be likely, under any circumstances, to obtain it; and indeed it would be a pity if the contrary were true. The Mazurkas of Chopin stand much in the same predicament, notwithstanding that they proceed directly, in the majority of instances, from the fountain of National Tune, in which Chopin's country (Poland) is so individual and so rich. The poet-musician has endowed them with a new physiognomy, and in effecting this has separated them for ever from those vulgar sympathies with which art has nothing whatever in common. Probably among the numerous productions of Chopin, the Mazurkas are the most genial and characteristic. The natural offspring of his peculiar idiosyncracy, they breath his spirit, reflect his sentimentality, and are the truest media of communication between his inner self and the outside world, which he, like all men specially gifted—men of genius, in short—was born to delight. We verily believe that there is more of the genuine spirit of Chopin in one of these brief Mazurkas, than in the whole of his concertos, sonatas, and larger compositions put together. Whereas, in his elaborate compositions, he was stilted, mannered, and catachrestical, in his Mazurkas (and the minor effusions) he is nearly always spontaneous, natural, and, therefore, sympathetic. With this conviction, we can endorse, without reservation, the words with which the editor, whose labours are now before us, sums up the paragraph in which he briefly glances at the entire production of Chopin:—

"That Chopin, however, excelled less in works of 'longue haleine' than in those of smaller pretensions, will hardly be denied. His Etudes, his Preludes, his Valses, his Nocturnes, and above all his Mazurkas, are quite enough to save him from oblivion, whatever may eventually become of his concertos and sonatas. The variety with which in the Mazurkas he has said the same thing some fifty times over, will go further than anything else to prove that Chopin's genius, whatever its eccentricities and failings, was decidedly inventive. The best of the Mazurkas are without question those that smell the least strongly of the lamp, those which, harmonised in the least affected manner, are easiest to play, and bear the closest affinity to (in some cases are almost echoes of) the national dance tunes of his country. Some of them are gems, as faultless as they are attractive, from whatever point of view regarded: others, more evidently laboured, are less happy; but not one of them is wholly destitute of points that appeal to the feelings, surprise by their unexpectedness, fascinate by their plaintive character, or charm by their ingenuity."

The distinction between Chopin's more ambitious efforts and those which (like the Mazurkas) came most directly from his natural genius may be likened to the distinction between the formalities of high-bred society and those in the humbler spheres of life in Poland. The Polish gentleman preserves, in his vocabulary of polite intercourse a strong imprint of the hyperbolical features of oriental phraseology. The expressions, "Very powerful," and "Very enlightened, Sir," are still indispensable. That of "Benefactor" ("Dobrodzi") is frequently employed in conversation; while the customary salutation between gentlemen, or from gentlemen to ladies, is, "I throw myself at your feet" (Padam do Nog"). The people's salutation, on the other hand, is "Glory to God" ("Slawa Bohu"). The works of Chopin might, without any very great impropriety, be classed under the two heads of Padam do Nog (including concertos, &c.), and Slawa Bohu (including Mazurkas, &c).

Mr. Davison's general view of Chopin, as a man and as an artist, will, probably, be regarded by some as scarcely favourable, if not indeed somewhat prejudiced. It certainly differs in toto from that inculcated in the Essay—or "Yellow Book," as it was nick-named—on Chopin, which at the time of its appearance was (truly or erroneously), attributed to his pen. We have shown how he speaks of the Mazurkas in Messrs. Boosey's new edition; see how he raved about the same exquisite trifles in the "Yellow Book."

"Among the lesser compositions of Chopin, the mazurkas—those 'cabinet pictures,' as Liszt has happily designated them—those green spots in the desert—those quaint snatches of melancholy song—those outpourings of an unworldly and tristful soul—those musical floods of tears, and gushes of pure joyfulness—those exquisite embodiments of fugitive thoughts—those sweet complaints of unacknowledged genius—stand alone and unrivalled. These are wholly and individually creations of Chopin, which none have dared to imitate (for who, indeed, could aspire to imitate that which is inimitable?)—pourtraying, in vivid colours, the patriotism and home-feeling of the great Polish composer (we need hardly remind our readers that Poland boasts the honour of having given birth to Chopin), affording vent, in passionate eloquence, to the beautiful and secret thoughts of his guileless heart. Of these, there are eight sets,* all of the rarest loveliness—sparkling with genius—redolent with fragrant thought—very nosegays of sweet and balmy melody. If we have a preference, where all is beauty unsurpassed, it is for the first and sixth sets, which, for quaint and happy melody, rich and delicious harmony, ingenious and novel treatment, are unrivalled since music was an art."

We have not quoted more than a third of this rhapsody, at the end of which, on throwing down his pen, the writer might appropriately have addressed Chopin in the Polish formula, after the Grand Seigneur has entertained his guests with a magnificent feast—"Czym bohat, tym rad" (which, paraphrased in English, would be—"Deign to pardon what is unworthy of you, but it is all my poor wealth that

* The last three had not then been composed.

I place at your feet"); for surely such a banquet of literary adulation was never served up to king or hero, even by the historiographers who recounted the virtues and exploits of the Cæsars. However, "Let by-gones be by-gones;" the modern opinion is probably the sounder of the two, and we have no wish to quarrel with it.

Mr. Davison's preface, like that to Dussek's Plus Ultra (ante, page 183), contains almost as much of biographical and anecdotical as of critical and analytical matter; and, had we space, we could entertain our readers with no end of ana. We must, however, be satisfied with one or two extracts. Here is a paragraph about Chopin's early love:—

"Chopin never married; but he cherished, it is said, an attachment all his life. This Dr. Liszt informs us was for a young compatriot of his hero—'belle et douce jeune fille, comme une Madone de Luini, &c.' It appears that this 'belle et douce jeune fille' loved Chopin with an earnest love to the end, and really, in examining the scanty incidents of his life, it is difficult to assign any reason why he should not have married her. She was faithful to his memory after death, and wasted her maidenhood in constant care and solicitude for his surviving parents. She made a portrait of him, which Chopin's father would never allow to be replaced by any other; and in a thousand various ways exhibited her devotion."

The origin of the Chopin-Mazurka may be cited as a corollary to the foregoing:—

"But Chopin, who (like Steerforth) was very popular at school, became intimate with Prince Borys Czetwertynska and his brothers. At their house, where music was assiduously cultivated, he saw and knew the Princess-mother, 'belle encore,' and of an 'esprit sympathique,' whose saloons were the most brilliant and recherchés in Warsaw. The Princess-mother was, nevertheless, only a monad in the new sphere which now became Chopin's universe. 'At her house Chopin often met the most distinguished ladies of the capital; he became acquainted with those seductive beauties whose renown was European, at a time when Warsaw was celebrated for the éclat, the elegance and the grace of its society. Through the intervention of the Princess Czetwertynska he had the honour of being introduced to the Princess Lowicz, at whose house he became intimate with the Countess Zamoyska, the Princess Radziwill, and the Princess Jablonowska—enchantresses, surrounded by other beauties less illustrious.'

"The conception of the Mazurka, as Chopin understood it, here took place in his perplexed brain. Let this important period be described at length—with the apology that Dr. Liszt's French is not easy to reduce into English:—'Still very young, it fell to the lot of Chopin to govern their steps by the chords of his piano. In these reunions, which might be likened to assemblages of fairies, he was no doubt often enabled to discover, suddenly unveiled in the whirl of the dance, the secrets of those aspiring and tender hearts; he was able without difficulty to read in their souls, which leaned with friendly sympathy towards his adolescence, and saw of what a mixture of levain and pâte de rose (of —— and ——; but the original is inimitable) of saltpetre and angel's tears (!) was kneaded the poetic ideal of his country. When his fingers unconsciously ran over the keys, and drew from them a succession of touching harmonies, he was able to divine in what manner the secret tears of enamoured girls and young neglected wives were shed; how the eyes of men both given to love and jealous of glory became humid with emotion. How often must some lovely girl, petitioning for a simple prelude, have leaned her beautiful elbow on the instrument, to support her dreaming head, and allowed Chopin to guess from her look the strain her heart was singing; how often must a group of nymphes folâtres, in order to coax out of him a waltz of vertiginous rapidity, have besieged him with smiles that placed him in unison with their gaiety! There he saw unfolded in the Mazurka the chaste graces of his magnificent countrywomen,' &c., &c., &c.

"Chopin used to recount in his peculiar manner (he did everything in a 'peculiar manner') that here he 'understood for the first time what sentiments the melodies and rhythms of the National Dance were capable of expressing.' Here, too, he learned how to set high value on that noble and reserved deportment, united to vivacity of sentiment, 'qui préserve la délicatesse de l'affadissement, qui empêche la prévenance de rancir—' which Dr. Liszt may translate for himself. At all events, the Mazurka—Chopin's Mazurka—was the offspring of these reunions, which at the same time may account for the reason of his leaving the 'belle et douce jeune fille,' who sketched his portrait, to pine away in loneliness, while he wasted his manly vigour in the enervating saloons of enervated capitals."

And as corollary, No. 2 (the early love still figuring in the back-ground), a paragraph may be added, relating to Chopin's intimacy with the Baroness Dudevant (George Sand):—

"A professed hater of women-authors, Chopin had a great disinclination to make the acquaintance of Mad. Georges Sand, with whom he subsequently, however, formed an intimacy which for some years wholly absorbed him. In 1837, this celebrated lady accompanied Chopin to the island of Majorca, where he had been ordered by medical advice, and where he remained, tenderly nursed by the authoress of Lelie, during an alarming and protracted illness. 'The remembrance of the days passed in Majorca'—says Dr. Liszt—'was graven on the heart of Chopin like that of a rapture, an ecstasy which fate accords but once to the most favoured.' 'He was not' (it is probably Mad. Sand who speaks) 'on earth, he was in an empyrean of golden clouds and perfumes; his fine and exquisite imagination seemed drowned in a monologue with God himself, and if perchance, on the radiant prism where he forgot himself, some accident caused the little magic lantern of the world to pass, he would experience most frightful uneasiness, &c., &c.' (the rest to match). However, Chopin's residence in Majorca was beneficial in every respect, and his 'admirable nurse,' Mad. Sand ('herself a great artist'), embellished every incident of his sojourn.* Under these circumstances, what chance was there (it may be asked) for the 'belle et douce jeune fille,' pining in the land of Mazurkas?"

For an account of the incidents connected with Chopin's death, and with the friends immediately about him at the time; for a description of his funeral obsequies at the Madeleine (Paris); for an elaborate analysis of Chopin's talent, as pianist and composer, including observations on his social qualities and individual character as a man, together with comparisons between him and other musicians; we must refer our readers to Mr. Davison's preface, which leaves few points of any importance undiscussed. We can only find room for a passage or two concerning Charles Filtsch, whose early demise (at the age of fourteen) deprived the musical world of an undoubted genius. Speaking of Chopin's play, Mr. Davison thus alludes to the talent of his pupil:—

"It must, however, be admitted that the pupil, Charles Filtsch (who died at the early age of fourteen), surpassed the master, inasmuch as while preserving all the ethereal grace and delicacy of Chopin's play, all its variety of tone and passionate impulsiveness, Filtsch superadded a certain vigour and unity, which endowed it with a more consistent vitality—rare (almost unprecedented) instance of a copy excelling the original, and the more wonderful considering the extreme youth of the copyist."

Here is an instance of Filtsch's extraordinary memory:—

"Filtsch passed the season 1843 in London. How intimately he was versed in the music of his master, may be gathered from a fact which occurred under the notice of the writer. Engaged to perform Chopin's second concerto in public, the orchestral parts not being obtainable, Filtsch, nothing dismayed, wrote out the whole of them from memory."

Mendelssohn of course knew Chopin (whom did Mendelssohn not know?); and with a Mendelssohn paragraph we must be satisfied to close our budget:—

"Mendelssohn, in speaking of one of the Preludes of Chopin, expressed himself in terms of such unqualified admiration, as to elicit a query from an interlocutor, unable to understand the cause of the great master's enthusiasm. 'I love it,' replied Mendelssohn, with unusual warmth—'I cannot tell you how much, or why; except, perhaps, that it is something which I could never at all have written.' On the other hand, questioned about the finale of one of the sonatas, Mendelssohn said, briefly and bitterly—'Oh! I abhor it'. When Chopin was first in Paris he took lessons on the pianoforte of the late Kalkbrenner,

* Chopin lived, however, to be separated from the accomplished novelist, which separation he often declared was equivalent to his death-knell.

whose reputation as a professor then stood very high. This fact, for some unfathomable reason, used to be kept a secret by Chopin, and was openly denied by some of his friends, indisposed to believe that such a wayward and fitful genius could receive any benefit whatever from the tutelage of a musical drill-sergeant. It is, nevertheless, true; and equally so that Mendelssohn, with whom at the time Chopin had contracted a friendly intimacy, expressed his astonishment, on being told by Chopin himself that he had come to Paris expressly to study under Kalkbrenner. 'Why,' said Mendelssohn—always quick to appreciate talent in others—'you play better than Kalkbrenner.'"

And so he did—as all can testify who ever heard him, even when sickness weighed him down, and he was scarcely more than a shadow. Chopin's play, indeed, was so original and individual, that his music, performed by almost any of the great pianists, his contemporaries (Filtsch alone excepted), seemed to want something, which though undefinable, was indispensable to its perfect interpretation.

NEW PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

AT the second concert, on Monday week, there was even a better programme than at the first :—

PART I.—Overture, "Isles of Fingal"—Mendelssohn. Aria, "O del mio dolce ardor"—Stradella. Concerto in E flat, pianoforte—Mozart. Aria, "Pensa alla patria"—Rossini. Pastoral Symphony—Beethoven.

PART II.—Overture, "Masaniello"—Auber. Chorus, "Away, the morning freshly breaking"—Auber. Song, "The first violet"—Mendelssohn. Fantasia, violin, "Hongrois"—Ernst. Aria, "Robert, toi que j'aime"—Meyerbeer. Hungarian March—Berlioz.

Mendelssohn's grandly picturesque overture and the Pastoral Symphony, to the lovers of grand orchestral music, were treats of a high order, and thoroughly enjoyed. The pianoforte concerto was entitled to unqualified praise. We have rarely indeed listened to a more splendid performance. That such a work should be seldom introduced in public is unaccountable, seeing that good pianoforte concertos are not too plentiful, and that this one in particular, for symmetry of design, beauty of details and novelty of ideas, has never been surpassed. The concerto in E flat, in short, may be reckoned among the finest, not only of Mozart, but of any composer. Miss Arabella Goddard's performance was faultless from end to end, and her execution of the cadenzas introduced in the first and last movements (Hummel's) a triumph of mechanical skill, united to consummate grace. Her success was triumphant. Herr Becker played Ernst's very difficult piece with surprising skill and taste, and brilliantly inaugurated his first appearance at the New Philharmonic Concerts. In the overture to Masaniello, the vigour and energy of the band were remarkable.

The vocal music was allotted to Madame Sainton-Dolby and Miss Augusta Thomson. Stradella's air was sung admirably by the first-named lady, and (need we add?) Mendelssohn's "First Violet" to perfection. The air from the Italiana in Algeri is hardly suited to Miss Augusta Thomson, whose style is better adapted to the French than the Italian school. The air from Robert was quite another affair.

The audience was numerous and fashionable, and, as a manifestation of the progress of music, it may be stated that Dr. Wylde's subscription this year is larger than ever.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE instrumental pieces last Monday were from Beethoven, and the songs from Mr. W. Chappell's Popular Music of the Olden Time. A better programme has been seldom presented :—

PART I.—Grand Septet, in E flat major, Op. 20—Beethoven. Song, "Sally in our alley," 1620. Song, "Oh! the oak and the ash," 1650. Sonata, in E major. Op. 109, for Pianoforte Solo (First time)—Beethoven.

PART II.—Romance. in G major, Op. 40. Violin Solo (First time)—Beethoven. Song, "At her cottage door," 17th Century. Song, "Kitty, dear Kitty," 1605. Grand Sonata, in A, Op. 47, for Pianoforte and Violin—Beethoven.—Conductor, Mr. Benedict.

The septet was repeated by general desire, the impression it created at the fourteenth concert having been very great, in spite of its being the last piece in the programme. The superb sonata in E major (Op. 109) was the interesting novelty of the concert. Even the most enthusiastic admirers of Beethoven were doubtful about the reception which would be accorded to this, one of the most profound of his latest compositions. They were not long in suspense, however. The audience were enchained from the commencement, and a more genuine triumph was never achieved. That much of this was due to Miss Arabella Goddard's magnificent playing can hardly be denied; but the feeling created by each movement, more especially by the variations, Andante molto Cantabile, was not to be mistaken. The applause at the end was genuine, and Miss Goddard was unanimously recalled to the platform. It is now established beyond further question that the later sonatas of Beethoven are no more "caviare" to the multitude than the so-called "Posthumous Quartets," and the directors of the Monday Popular Concerts have entitled themselves to the gratitude of lovers of real music for settling the matter, through the medium of Miss Goddard's admirable talent, at rest. Every great violonist has his peculiar mode of playing the Kreutzer Sonata. Herr Becker's style no more resembles that of Herr Wieniawski, than Herr Wieniawski's that of Herr Joseph Joachim. The execution of this incomparable work, however, won new laurels for Herr Becker, and, with Miss Arabella Goddard at the piano, the excellence of the performance may be easily estimated. It was another triumph for the work, and out of the large audience assembled, only three or four ladies rose to depart before the last note of the last movement had been heard. The lovely romance, played to perfection by Herr Becker, was encored with acclamations, and the one in F major (Op. 50) substituted in its place. Herr Becker seems to know all the good music extant.

The vocal music was shared between Miss Fanny Rowland and Mr. Tennant, the gentleman singing "Sally in our alley," and "Kitty, dear Kitty," and Miss Rowland the other ballads. Both lady and gentleman did themselves infinite credit. These fine old specimens of English melody gave great satisfaction, and should lead to other contributions from the same source on another occasion.

CONCERTS.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—On Friday, the 23rd, Haydn's Seasons was given. The performance had, to some extent, the attraction of novelty to recommend it; hence the crowded audience which thronged the building in every part, despite the rain, which steadily descended in torrents for some hours. Of the general execution, we are bound to speak in highly laudatory terms, band, chorus, and principals, all exerting themselves with the best possible effect. There being but one female solo part, Miss Parepa had undivided possession of the soprano music, and confirmed the favourable impression previously recorded in our notice of her first appearance at Exeter Hall, in Judas Maccabæus, although the majority of her pieces being concerted, she had less opportunity for display than was afforded her upon that occasion. Mr. Sims Reeves again distinguished himself, particularly in the airs, "Distressful Nature," and "Now o'er the dreary waste," both being perfect master-pieces of singing, and drawing down enthusiastic applause. Mr. Wilbye Cooper sang with all his usual care and correctness. Mr. Weiss sustained the whole of the bass music, and showed himself as thoroughly at home in Haydn as he invariably does in Handel. The vigour and energy imparted to the air, "With joy the impatient husbandman," had the effect of causing the audience to forget all about the stereotyped veto, and applaud most heartily. In our last notice of the Sacred Harmonic Society we took occasion to observe that at the performance in question (Judas Maccabæus), the ordinary injunction had been withdrawn. We now find (as usual), at the foot of the programme that, "In consideration of the sacred nature of the performance, the audience is requested to allow it to proceed without interruption from applause or encores." We are much inclined to doubt whether the Seasons can be considered as a "sacred" work at all. Generally speaking, it partakes of a pastoral character, the "sporting" element being by no means wanting. Is the air, "When sluggish Phœbus," or the chorus, "Hark the merry-toned horn" (encored by the way), or "Again the merry horn resounds, huzza," or "Shout boys, shout," or "Pass round the wine," or the unmistakeable dance music, to be regarded as sacred? If so, Acis and Galatea, Alexander's Feast, and The May Queen, might as well claim to be sacred. The chorus at the end of Spring, "Marvellous, Lord, are thy works;" and the final chorus, "Hosannas to Thy Name," are the only ones that can strictly pretend to anything of a sacred character; but these being exceptional and so disproportionately in the minority, cannot give colour to the entire work any more than an occasional pious explanation in a three-volume production can entitle it to be considered as a religious book.

On Wednesday next, the customary Passion Week performance of the Messiah will be given.

MR. AGUILAR'S SECOND PERFORMANCE OF CLASSICAL PIANOFORTE MUSIC came off at his residence, Westbourne-square, on Saturday evening last. The part of the programme dedicated to the pianforte comprised Beethoven's sonata in G major, op. 29, No 1; Mendelssohn's "Volkalied" and Caprice in E, op. 33, No. 2; the same composer's Lied ohne Worte, No. 1, book 2; Weber's Rondo Brillante; variations in A, by Mozart; the Kreutzer sonata of Beethoven. The last, as may be imagined, was the feature of the evening, and Mr. Aguilar had the good fortune to find an excellent coadjutor in Mr. Henry Holmes, whose violin playing pleased immensely. Next to the incomparable sonata for pianoforte and violin, Mozart's variations appeared to afford most gratification; although every piece found its admirers, and all were masterpieces of their kind. In addition to his share in the Kreutzer sonata, Mr. Henry Holmes played the Adagio from Tartini's violin sonata, No. 2, Op. 1, and the Giga and Allegro from Corelli's sonata, No. 10, op. 5. Mr. Holmes is a performer of considerable merit. His play is characterised by great purity and sound taste; his tone is full and sonorous, and his execution finished and easy. He might, certainly, have found pieces more conformable to the taste of the audience than the sonatas of the two old masters—the audience, be it remembered, consisting mostly of lady amateurs of the pianoforte; or, if he really intended to conciliate such connoisseurs of fiddle playing as might have been present, he should have given an entire sonata, not fragments of two. Mr. Holmes, nevertheless, created a great sensation, and impressed everybody with his talent. Miss Lindo relieved the instrumental performance with some voice pieces. These were the beautiful contralto song "Fac ut portem," from Rossini's Stabat Mater; Beethoven's "Herz, mein herz;" and Schubert's "Nachstück." All three were carefully and nicely sung, the last in particular engaging the attention of the company and eliciting expressions of satisfaction. The rooms were crowded. The last performance is announced to take place on Saturday, the 14th of April.

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.—The third Subscription Concert came off on Wednesday. The programme presented many features of interest, and the choir, who had more than their average work to accomplish, sang well from first to last. The choral performances comprised Hauptman's motet, "Salvum fac regem;" Orlando Gibbons's madrigal, "The Silver Swan;" Luca Marenzio's madrigals, "Lady, see on every side," and "Fair May Queen;" Mr. Benedict's serenade "Blessed be the home" (first time); Her Otto Goldschmidt's part-song, "Come when the dawn;" the prayer from Masaniello, "Hear holy saints;" Sir Henry Bishop's glee, "Where art thou, beam of light?" Mr. Benedict's cradle song, "Sweet repose is reigning now;" Kucken's Suabian melody "Come, Dorothy, come;" Mendelssohn's part-song, "Remembrance;" and Franz Abt's part-song, "Gaily o'er the ocean." Mr. Benedict's cradle song, sung by twelve ladies of the Vocal Association, was encored, a compliment richly merited. M. Sainton performed two violin solos of his own composition—the Traviata fantasia and the Valse de Concert—in his usual brilliant manner; and Miss Eleanor Ward, a promising young pianist, was encored in Her Kuhe's fantasia on "Martha." The vocal music was divided between Miss Fanny Rowland and Mad. Sainton Dolby, and comprised, for the former lady, Mozart's aria "Or che il cielo" and Mr. Macfarren's ballad "The beating of my own heart," for the latter the air from Handel's Admetus, "Cangio d' aspetto," and Mr. Balfe's song, "The green trees whispered low." In the case of both artists, the English song was more successful than the Italian, the ballads of Messrs. Macfarren and Balfe being both redemanded and repeated. Mr. Benedict conducted with his accustomed musician-like ability.

MR. CHARLES SALAMAN gave a concert on Thursday evening which attracted a very large audience to the Hanover-square rooms. Even the orchestra was crowded. In the plenitude of his good nature, Mr. Salaman made himself a veritable cornucopia of music, and poured out his entertainment in too liberal a stream. The programme divided into two would have been of average length, and none have felt wearied at the end. Mr. Salaman, indeed, must have fancied himself a Titan—in point of endurance, we mean—to set down for himself such a programme as the following:—

Sonata in E flat (Steibelt); air with variations in D minor (Handel); Sonata in A minor (Philip Emanuel Bach); Romance in F (J. B. Cramer); Rondo del tempo della Giga (Salaman); Capriccio in E flat on a melody, by Cherubini (Salaman); Andante and Presto Agitato, in B minor (Mendelssohn); and with Messrs. H. Blagrove, R. Blagrove, Lidel, Ferdinand Ries's Quartet in E flat, op. 17, for pianoforte, violin, tenor and violoncello.

The pieces which received most applause, were Ferdinand Ries's quartet—which in addition to its being admirably executed, was attractive on its own account, the rondo especially—and Steibelt's sonata (dedicated to Madame Bonaparte), a very showy composition. Of Mr. Salaman's own pieces the Rondo pleased us most. Mad. Catharine Hayes sang Mozart's "Non tema," Mr. H. Blagrove played the violin obbligato, and an air by Galuppi, "In lasciar si caro amante; Mdlle. Parepa was encored in a song by Mr. Salaman, "Why didst thou ever leave me?" and gave also the "Laughing Song," from Manon Lescaut; Miss Stabbach introduced a new ballad by Mr. Salaman, "Good Bye! A Long Good Bye!" and joined Mr. Wilbye Cooper in Mendelssohn's duet, "Zuleika." Mr. Wilbye Cooper gave another new song from the same pen, "The Modest Suitor." Herr Eibenschütz, a bass from "Fatherland," recommended himself in Mendelssohn's "Jagdlied" (Hunter's Song), and an air by Adolphe Gollmick. Herr Molique executed a romance on the violin, the composition of M. Lafont; and Mr. Benedict accompanied all the vocal music, excepting Mr. Salaman's songs, in which the composer played the pianoforte part.

MR. HENRY LESLIE'S CHOIR.—The third concert was one of the best ever given by the choir. The programme (the first part of which was unusually interesting) is worth citing:—

PART I.—The Forty-third Psalm, "Judge me, O Lord." For an Eight-Part Choir. No. 2, Op. 78—Mendelssohn. Motet for Quartet and Chorus, "Source of all light"—Hauptmann. Sonata for Pianoforte, in D minor, No. 2, Op. 29—Beethoven. Motet, "Pater noster"—Meyerbeer.

PART II.—Madrigal, "Sweet flowers"—T. A. Walmisley. Vocal Duet, "When birds are singing"—Henry Smart. Part-Song, "Welcome, Spring"—Henry Leslie. Air, "O Nanny, wilt thou gang with me?"—harmonised by Harrison. Part-Song, "Home"—Benedict. Countryman's Song—Dr. Rimbault. Fantasia, Pianoforte, on Airs from "Maritana"—W. V. Wallace. Part-Song for Male Voices—J. L. Hatton. Madrigal, "In the merry spring"—Ravenscroft. Part-Song, "Oh! who will o'er the downs"—R. L. Pearsall. Conductor—Mr. Henry Leslie.

Hauptmann's "motet"—clever and well written as it is—was placed at great disadvantage in coming immediately after Mendelssohn's Psalm, an incomparable masterpiece, and executed in the most finished style imaginable. Meyerbeer's impressive setting of the Lord's Prayer, a sacred composition in the strictest application of the term, was not so well sung, the voices dropping more than a tone before the conclusion, and the intonation not being always perfect. It was, nevertheless, encored with acclamations. The part-song from Mr. Henry Leslie's Romance, one of the most popular things the composer has written, was also redemanded and repeated. In Hauptmann's piece, the solo parts were sustained by Miss Fosbroke, Mrs. Dixon, Mr. Regaldi, and Mr. Hodson; in "O Nanny, wilt thou gang with me," by Miss Clara Hemming, Miss Sheppard, Mr. Richard Seymour, and Mrs. Gadsby. Mrs. Percy and Miss Leffler gave Mr. Smart's beautiful duet. Miss Freeth was equally successful in the fantasia and the sonata. Both were well executed, but the undue acceleration of the tempo in the first and last movements of the former was hardly an improvement. The galleries were crowded, and the body of the hall was well filled.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—The last two concerts—Saturday the 17th and Saturday the 24th instant—did not present any novel points of interest. At the former the instrumental pieces comprised Haydn's symphony in B flat, and the overtures to Melusina (Mendelssohn) and the Flauto Magico (Mozart). Madame Sainton-Dolby and Miss Parepa were the vocalists, and M. Sainton played two solos of his own composition on the violin. The ladies were encored severally in Mr. Balfe's ballad, "The green trees whispered low," and the cavatina from Victorine, "Oh, bright were my visions;" and M. Sainton was loudly applauded in both his performances, chiefly in his Lucrezia Borgia. There was a good attendance.

At the concert, last Saturday, Mr. Augustus Manns, not satisfied, let us suppose, with the reception accorded at the concert on the 10th instant, to Robert Schumann's symphony in B flat, introduced it a second time, and announced in the programme its repetition as by "special desire." This, no doubt, referred to a few individuals, lovers of the music of Robert Schumann, who, with great philanthropy, would convert all to their own way of thinking. The symphony did not much improve on closer acquaintance. The overture to Fidelio was the only other piece for the band, who, it must be confessed, aided Mr. Manns to the best of their power to ensure a favourable reception for Schumann's work. Herr Becker, who appeared for the first time at the Crystal Palace, created a highly favourable sensation in Paganini's "Nel cor piu," and Ernst's "Airs Hongrois." The vocal music was entrusted to Madame Catharine Hayes and the Orpheus Glee Union. The lady gave Mozart's "Non temer" (violin obbligato, Herr Becker); Lachner's song, "The sea has its pearls," and "The Irish mother's lament." The Irish ballad was given with so much expression as to elicit a general call for its repetition. Madame Hayes, however, substituted "Comin' thro' the rye," which, though more comic, was less effective. The Orpheus Glee Union sang Webbe's "Discord, dire sister," and Muller's "Maying" with precision if not much power. The attendance was larger than on the previous Saturday.

WILLIS'S ROOMS.—Master Horton C. Allison, pupil of the eminent pianoforte professor, Mr. W. H. Holmes, gave a concert in the lower room at Willis's, on Tuesday morning. This young gentleman, though not yet thirteen, has already made some noise in the musical world. His first appearance in public, we believe, was in 1858, when he gave a concert in Willis's Rooms. Last year Master Allison performed, at Mr. Holmes's Annual Concert of his Pupils, in the Hanover-square Rooms, and specially distinguished himself. The pieces he selected on Tuesday were Fugue (No. 2 of the Book of 48 Fugues), Bach; Allegro, in F major, from the Suite de Pièces, Handel; Fantasia and Fugue, Mozart; Andante and Rondo Cappriccioso, Mendelssohn; Sonata, No. 2 (dedicated to Haydn), Beethoven; Chopin's Seconde Ballade; Herz's Fantasia on the March from Otello, and, with Mr. Henry Blagrove, and Mr. Aylward, Haydn's trio (No. 1), in E flat, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello. Master Allison has great power and great dexterity, but his power is not invariably well regulated, and he is too fond of exhibiting his power at the expense of other qualities no less indispensable in pianoforte playing, and which we have little doubt he possesses. All his performances were interesting, but Haydn's trio was perhaps the best. Such a talent as Master Allison possesses is well worth cultivating, and he is lucky in having the counsel and tuition of so accomplished a master as Mr. Holmes. The programme was varied by songs, and a solo on the concertina by Mr. Richard Blagrove. Miss Fanny Rowland gave Macfarren's "Beating of my own heart," with exquisite feeling, besides an aria by Donizetti. Mr. Allan Irving sang "The White Squall" and an air by Donizetti, displaying both method and style. The room was tolerably full, but the applause faint, the majority of the company belonging to that sex whose approval is rather indicated than expressed.

SACRED HARMONIC SOCIETY.—A grand vocal rehearsal by the London Division of the Handel Commemoration Festival Choir, numbering above 1,600 voices, took place last night at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Mr. Costa.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

VOCAL ASSOCIATION.

Sir,—We have too many choral societies already, and without applying this remark to the one in question particularly, I may cite the programme of Wednesday last as a proof that choral music in London is overdone. There is no band at the Vocal Association's concerts this year, and the selections are therefore limited to madrigals, glees, and other unaccompanied part-music. This brings the body into rivalry with Mr. Henry Leslie's Choir, a dangerous position for any society to be in. The music on Wednesday last was very uninteresting, the part-song "Remembrance" (Mendelssohn) and one or two English madrigals, and these of the most hackneyed, being the only works of merit on the list. It is certain that some alteration must be made; either the band must be restored, and large works performed, or war to the knife with the more finished and cultivated rival above alluded to must be declared. Where is the "Orchestral Association?" By this time a goodly array of amateur instrumentalists should be ready, and the two "Associations" might work together for their mutual advantage.

Here again, what are the solo vocalists about? Why don't they let others choose for them? Madame Sainton-Dolby generally knows what she is about. On Wednesday night she sang two of the best known pieces in her extensive répertoire—"Cangio d' aspetto" (Admetus), Handel; and "The green trees," by Balfe. Miss Fanny Rowland, on the contrary, was unwise in selecting "Or che in cielo" of Mozart. It is too thin for her style of vocalisation, which inclines to the robust. M. Sainton played "Fantasia on La Traviata," and a Valse de Concert, both from his own pen. Miss Eleanor Ward, a young lady of prepossessing exterior, made her first appearance. She exhibited some executive talent, particularly a clear and well-defined trill and repetition touch, in a fantasia on Marta by Herr Wilhelm Kühe. I am not much impressed with the advisability of writing fantasias on operatic airs; and a few bars of the sparkling Flotow watered down to about twenty pages by Herr Kühe, is as unsatisfactory an achievement as the latter's worst enemies, if he have any, could desire.

I remain, Sir, yours, &c.,
NON-CONTENT.

LEICESTER.—Messrs. Henry and Alfred Nicholson gave a performance of Mendelssohn's Elijah, at their annual concert, on Monday, 26th inst. The principal vocalists were Madame Weiss, Miss Palmer, Mr. Sims Reeves, and Mr. Weiss. The secondary parts in the quartets and terzetts, &c., being filled up by Misses Deacon, C. Weston, and Groscock, Messrs. Sansome, Branston, and Christian. The orchestra consisted of the local instrumentalists, strengthened by assistance from London, Birmingham, Manchester, and Nottingham; the chorus was that of the Leicester New Philharmonic Society, and numbered some 200 performers. Mr. Alfred Nicholson was the conductor. The performance gave great satisfaction.

LEEDS.—The last concert but one of the season was given on Saturday last, by the Town Hall Concert Society, when the following were the performers:—Miss Clarke, Miss Watson (both débutantes in Leeds), Mr. Inkersall and Mr. Henry Phillips. The programme was made up of old English ballads, varied by two organ solos, cleverly played by Mr. Spark, the conductor of the concert.

ORGANIST FOR THE LEEDS TOWN HALL.—At a special meeting of the Leeds Town Council, to be held this day (Saturday), the following resolution is to be proposed:—"That the Town Hall Committee be authorised to make arrangements for the election of an organist, at the salary of £200 per annum."

JULLIEN FUND.

THE illness of M. Jullien having, with fatal rapidity, terminated in death, it has been resolved that the donations to the JULLIEN FUND shall be applied in the manner which would have been most in accordance with the wishes of the deceased, had it been permitted him to express them, viz, to the relief of his widow and family, who, by his loss, are left totally unprovided for.

Committee for the distribution of the Jullien Fund.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. R. W. Sams; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Duncan Davison; Mr. Robert K. Bowley; Mr. Jules Benedict.

Honorary Treasurers.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Sams.

Bankers,

Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Heywood, Kennards, and Co., Lombard-street; London and County Bank, Hanover-square;—who, as well as the Honorary Treasurers, have kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

Subscriptions already advertised, £277 7s.

	£	s.	d.
F. Gye, Esq.	20	0	0
T. Chappell, Esq.	10	10	0
A. Chappell, Esq.	10	10	0
A. W. Hammond, Esq.	10	10	0
Mowbray Morris, Esq.	5	5	0
E. T. Smith, Esq.	5	5	0
Sims Reeves, Esq.	5	5	0
A Friend	5	5	0
Miss Arabella Goddard	5	5	0
W. R Sams, Esq.	5	5	0
H. L. Bischoffsheim, Esq.	5	5	0
F. Vilmet, Esq.	5	5	0
R. Bowley, Esq.	5	5	0
Messrs. Leader and Cock	2	2	0
Albert Smith, Esq.	2	2	0
Arthur Smith, Esq.	2	2	0
M. Posno, Esq.	2	2	0
Charles Coote, Esq.	1	1	0
Louis Ries, Esq.	1	1	0
C. Doyle, Esq.	1	1	0
W. Winterbottom, Esq.	1	1	0
G. Metzler, Esq.	1	1	0
John Leech, Esq.	1	1	0
J. H. Dillon, Esq.	1	1	0
Samuel Lucas, Esq.	1	1	0
Carl Keller, Esq.	1	1	0
A. Ferry	1	1	0
Edmund Yates	1	1	0
G. Luigi	1	1	0
H. R. Tatham	1	1	0
Warington Taylor	1	0	0
W. H. Weiss, Esq.	1	1	0
T. H. H.	1	1	0
A. E. D. (Pentonville)	0	8	6
Robert Clarke, Esq.	1	1	0
Mdlle. Coulon	1	1	0
E. Coulon, Esq.	1	1	0
Del Vecchio	1	1	0
Charles Halle	2	2	0
Charles Dickens	2	2	0
Lady G. Idsmid	3	3	0
John Mitchell, Esq.	5	5	0
Steward Hodgson	5	5	0
Mrs. R. C. Barnett	1	1	0
Sir Francis Goldsmid	5	0	0
Sir Charles Decemar, Crosley	5	5	0
Rd. du Cane, Esq.	1	0	0
Dr. Pinches	5	5	0
E. Buckley, Esq., Jun.	1	1	0
E. W. Garland	2	2	0
E. W. Martin, Esq. (Dublin)	1	1	0
Brinley Richards, Esq.	1	1	0
Horace Mayhew	1	1	0
Henry Greg	1	1	0
Henry Evell	1	1	0
F. Freeman, Esq.	1	1	0
W. T. Doyne, Esq.	1	1	0
John Stone, Esq.	1	1	0
Evan Jones, Esq.	1	1	0
W. Godfrey (Coldstream Gds.)	1	1	0
W. Watkins, Esq.	0	10	6
G. Grove, Esq. (Crystal Palace)	2	2	0
Philip Salamans, Esq.	2	2	0
G. Dillon, Esq.	1	1	0
T. L.	0	10	0
Four Clerks (Austin Friars)	1	0	0
Thanks for Cheap Music	0	10	0
A. W. B.	0	10	0
J. Banks, Esq.	1	1	0
Samuel Bevington, Esq.	1	1	0
A Hater of Lawyers	5	0	0
E. C. M.	1	1	0
W. Francis, Esq.	1	1	0
John Brunyard, Esq.	1	1	0
Messrs. Cramer and Co.	2	2	0
Messrs. Addison and Co.	2	2	0
Messrs Boosey and Sons	2	2	0
John Ella, Esq.	1	1	0
C. Grunebsen, Esq.	1	1	0
Messrs. Parkins and Gotto	2	2	0
H. W. Goodban, Esq.	1	1	0
Miss Tod	1	1	0
Jules Benedict	5	5	0
George Baxter	2	2	0
Thomas Blake, Esq.	1	1	0
G. Jesse Penny, Esq.	1	1	0
Capt. H. W. Burgess	1	1	0
John Paak, Esq.	1	1	0
Sir J. M.	1	0	0
J. W. Johnson, Esq., Lincoln	0	10	6
M. T. H.	0	10	0
Robert Stedall, Esq.	0	10	0
A Friend	0	10	0
George Buck, Esq.	0	10	0
C. B.	0	5	0
W. T. H.	0	5	0
J. B.	0	5	0
H. W.	0	5	0
A. R., junior	0	3	0
T. B. T.	0	3	0
J. T. E.	0	2	6
G. T. R.	0	2	0
W—p—r	0	2	0
Shilling subscriptions received by Messrs. Parkins & Gotto.
A few friends, goods department, Reny's.	0	12	0
Mr. Austin, St. James's Hall	0	15	0
Sunday Times Office
Messrs. Cramer, Beale, & Co.
Mr. Hammond	0	13	0
Messrs. Keith, Prowse, & Co.
Mr. Duncan Davison	0	13	0
Mr. Paak	1	0	0
R. J. Spiers, Esq.	3	3	0
R. G. Marner, Esq.	1	1	0
H. S. Douglas, Esq.	1	1	0
20 Commercial Knapps, Hotel, B'ham	1	0	0
J. B.	1	1	0
P. V. W.	1	0	0
The Cat	1	0	0
D. S. A.	1	0	0
Mrs. J. Holman Andrews	1	1	0
Morrall	0	15	0
H. H. B.	0	10	0
A. B. C.	0	10	0
Henry Buckland, Esq.	0	3	0
Collins, Esq.	0	3	0
S. N. H.	0	2	6
Mrs. S. N. H.	0	2	6
Mr. W. H.	0	2	6
Gardener, Esq.	0	2	6
J. G. Callcott, Esq.	0	2	6
C. H. L.	0	2	6
W. H. Lennox, Esq.	0	2	6
J. A. Y.	0	2	6
Emily Gresham	0	2	6
E. R.	0	2	6
Capt. W. Reid	0	2	0
J. Mocatti, Esq.	0	2	0
Shilling subscriptions received by Cramer and Co.	1	10	0
By Sunday Times	1	15	0
By Bailey Brothers	0	11	0
By Mr. Sams	0	1	0
By Keith and Co.	1	2	0
Sir Wm. Fraser	5	0	0
W. C. Sleigh, Esq.	1	1	6
F. F. Courtney, Esq.	5	0	0
G. C.	1	0	0
R. C. S. S.	0	5	0
J. F.	0	1	6
J. T. H.	0	5	0
J. P.	0	2	0
E. S. W.	0	2	6
J. R. M.	0	2	0
C. Y. M.	0	3	0
C. S.	0	2	6

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

The performance at the Royal Italian Opera, in aid of the funds of the Dramatic College, and the third concert of the London Quintet Union, will be noticed next week.

R. W.—Next week.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words) ... ... 2s. 6d.

Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MARCH 31ST, 1860.

THE new lessee of Her Majesty's Theatre has issued his prospectus, which will be found at length in our advertising columns. All we can undertake in this place is to point out some few of its more important features.

The engagement of Mad. Alboni is one of the most satisfactory annnouncements which the document contains. This incomparable artist is to appear about the middle of May, as Arsace in Semiramide, with Mdlle. Titiens as the Babylonian Queen. Arsace is not only one of Mad. Alboni's greatest parts, but doubly interesting as the one in which she made her first appearance before the English public, when old Covent Garden Theatre, enlarged and remodelled for the occasion, was first opened as the Royal Italian Opera, under the management of Messrs. Persiani, Galetti, and Beale, on the 6th April, 1847. Since then Madame Alboni has become famous and rich; Madame Grisi has taken her "farewell" (1854), and come back again, to take another in 1860; the theatre has been burned down, and a new one has risen from its ashes! Rossini's fine and recently too-much-neglected opera will be further supported by Signor Everardi as Assur, Signor Belart as Idreno (who, we trust, will be induced to restore the tenor air, almost invariably omitted), and Signor Vialetti, as Oroe. We may further expect to see Madame Alboni in La Cenerentola, the Barbiere, and perhaps, La Donna del Lago—all of which are operas at once worth producing on their own account, and as vehicles for the favourable display of the lady's magnificent talent.

Madame Borghi-Mamo — the quasi-rival of Madame Alboni, in the Parisian world, if nowhere else—is also engaged. Madame Borghi-Mamo will fill the place vacated by Mademoiselle Guarducci (not yet, we hope, forgotten by Mr. E. T. Smith's patrons), and make her first appearance before an English audience as Leonora, in La Favorita. Subsequently Madame Borghi-Mamo will appear as Azucena in the Trovatore, and Desdemona in Otello; the first a part in which she has already reached eminence; the second, in which she will find more difficulty in attaining it—at least on this side the Channel.

Mademoiselle Lotti, who made so favourable an impression last season at the Royal Italian Opera, is next on the list of engagements. This promising lady will find her best place in the operas of Verdi, whose music suits her peculiar talent better than that of other masters; but whether Rigoletto or Ernani will be her new point de départ, we are unable at this time to predict.

Madame Marie Cabel—the celebrated Belgian, who occupies the post of première chanteuse at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, and was the original Dinorah in Meyerbeer's Pardon de Ploërmel—is also one of the company. Whether Mad. Cabel, who made such a deep impression on John Bull at the St. James's theatre, in several operas of Auber, Adam, &c., will be equally successful on the Italian stage, which she has never yet tried, remains to be seen. Report says she is to appear in a new Italian version of Dinorah, but report is not always a truth-teller; and Manager Smith has not been explicit on this head. Here, by the way, would be a good chance for the often-asked-for Domino Noir—or, as it, has long threatened to become, Domino Nero.

Last, not least, the universally popular Mdlle. Titiens will not only reappear as Valentine, Norma, Lucrezia, &c., but with other operas, in which, though famous abroad, she is unknown here—such for instance as Fidelio, Der Freischütz, and Oberon. Weber's Oberon, which though of English birth, has been little cared for in England, will, in all probability, constitute the "special novelty" of the season; and upon its production, we hope, as we are given to understand, no pains or expense will be spared. Mr. Benedict (Weber's favourite pupil) is composing recitatives for the Italian version, and his name is a guarantee for the fidelity and talent with which this difficult task will be accomplished.

Last, and least (in proportions), Mdlle. Piccolomini has accepted an engagement, and, in six farewell performances of six of her most popular parts, will take her final leave (unless her aristocratic future husband should change his mind) of the English public, and—it is said (on dit)—public life. The muses will weep and put on sackcloth.

About the other lady-singers we say nothing beyond stating that Mdlle. Brunetti is reported (reported) a talented vocalist of the Persiani school. A pupil of M. Duprez, Mdlle. Brunetti made her début some time since at the Grand-Opéra of Paris—the reason of her abandoning which great lyric temple, where now they sacrifice to Poniatowski, has not transpired.

The list of tenors includes Signors Giuglini, Mongini and Belart, besides some of lesser—or, speaking in the Palace of Truth—no note. Signor Giuglini intends confining his exertions to his old répertoire, while Signor Mongini will make a first attempt at several characters, the most important of which are Otello, Florestan (Fidelio), and Sir Huon (Oberon). God speed him! These are up-hill parts for a quondam Elvino.

No new name of consequence appears among the barytones and basses except that of Signor Everardi, who now enjoys, at Vienna and St. Petersburg, and formerly in Paris, at the Italian Opera, a high reputation as a singer of Rossini's music, which commodity, with such artists as we have enumerated, will, it is likely, be more generally in request than has been the case of recent years. M. Gassier, too—an adept in the same line, as English amateurs well know—is also not merely on the books, but prepared once more to challenge public opinion.

The list of the band has appeared, and in stating that, to officiate at the head of the first violins, are appointed Herr Molique and Mr. H. Blagrove, and at the head of the second violins, M. Tolbecque, we cannot refrain from adding a strong hope, that all the rest may be as efficient in proportion. Mr. Benedict is not a likely man to undervalue the immense importance of a thoroughly good orchestra, both in numbers and in talent, and will doubtless be on the alert. Meanwhile, all we know about the chorus is, that a new chorus-master, Signor Vaschetti, has been summoned from Bologna (where Rossini fed pigs, ate sausages, and turned fishmonger), and that he will obey the summons.

The ballet arrangements, even for her Majesty's Theatre, look unusually powerful and complete, and in perspective bring us back to the days of the Pas de Quatre and the triumphs of Esmeralda-Carlotta, when Terpsichore was worshipped, danseuses were deified, and even danseurs (thanks to the inimitable little Perrot) admired by one sex (the "beau"); and tolerated by the other (the "laid"). We may point emphatically to Marietta Pocchini, one of the most accomplished of living danseuses; to Amalia Ferraris, idol of the French and Russian capitals; and to Claudina Cucchi, who has jilted her Parisian adorers to turn the heads of the Viennese. These make a splendid trio to begin with. The promised new ballets, and the period for the expected rising of each "particular star," may be ascertained by a reference to our advertising columns; we cannot enumerate them here. Enough to add that M. Pettit is at the head of the ballet department, a pledge for its efficiency.

The theatre has undergone thorough renovation within and without. The old frequenters will hardly recognise the interior. The pit-vestibule, the lobbies on the grand tier, and the crush-rooms, are lined with mirrors. The walls have been papered, the ceilings painted, the floors and stairs carpeted, the chandelier glossed and burnished, the stalls newly arranged, &c., &c. A conservatory is, we understand, projected, on the balcony overlooking the Haymarket, which, being on a line with the grand tier, will cause no inconvenience to promenaders. The Concert-room, too, is to be "freshened," and converted into a lounge-room. In fact, Her Majesty's Theatre, in point of anything excepting its outward and inward conformation, its "power of sound," and its amber curtains (Lumleyan legacy), will be a new edifice. Much more might be said of what is in progress, but enough has been adduced to show that the new manager emphatically intends "business."

What would Her Majesty's Theatre before the curtain be without Mr. Nugent? N'importe—Mr. Nugent is once again before the curtain, or, more properly, behind the mahogany desk in the Box-office, whence he will dispense boxes, stalls, and good humour, with his accustomed placidity and gentlemanly bearing.

JOHN, the waiter of the Edinburgh Castle, never very florid, was ten times paler than usual at the hubbub made by the three Anabaptists, who had rushed from the Royal English Opera, each armed with a book of Lurline, and who, occupying the choicest seats, and giving no orders whatever, were making the coffee-room ring with their noisy æsthetics.

"Ye thick-headed children of Belial!" bellowed Knipperdolling, "the sense is as clear as the sun at noon-day, or the light of the blessed John of Leyden. 'Offended skies are demons lashing,' that is to say, demons are lashing the offended skies,—offended either on account of things in general, or because the demons are lashing them."

"Shut up thine heretical mouth, accursed Manichee!" roared Matthias, "or rather worse than Manichee, for thou makest the powers of darkness triumphantly smite the powers celestial. The natural order of the words, too, should teach thee,—apart from theological considerations—that the skies lash the demons,—not the demons the skies."

"Both utterly false and utterly perverse," growled the third Anabaptist. "Our poet doth not merely state a fact of the moment but inculcateth an irrefragable dogma. 'Offended skies are demons lashing,'—that is to say the skies, or the celestial powers, are themselves lashing demons—evil having no independent origin, but merely representing the worth of the good principle."

Now these three opinions were all knocked and jostled and banged together, to the infinite annoyance of everybody, and the special horror of John, whose face at last beamed with hope, when he saw Epistemon walking up the passage, looking infinitely placid and benignant.

"Oh, sir," said John, "pray make them stop their noise, and persuade them to order something."

"I will do my best," replied the sage. "Thanks to the power of your lungs, gentlemen," he continued, turning to the Anabaptists, "I heard all your views, while I was taking the air in Clare-market; and I think I can, as it were, tie them together in a knot of concord. The sentence is curiously composed, as it is doubtful which of the two, the skies, or the demons, are in the nominative case, or whether indeed both may not be in the nominative, according to the hypothesis of Mr.—Monsieur—Herr—

"I have no name," murmured the third Anabaptist.

"Then," said Epistemon,. "Thou shalt be called Nixmydolly, which is a name, moreover, that harmoniseth, to some extent, with that of thy friend Knipperdolling. But to revert to our theme: May we not suppose that our poet had a deep purpose in this seeming ambiguity? Oracles, ye know, were obscure, and I trust we all agree that our Fitzball is an oracle."

"Else had we not quarrelled about his meaning," chorused the three Anabaptists in unison.

"And perhaps might have ordered something," suggested John, but his hint was disregarded.

"I, for my part," proceeded Epistemon, "should give the line what I may call a reciprocal force, by making a nominative, first of the "skies," afterwards of the "demons;" so that the skies lash the demons, while the demons lash the skies—thus indicating that state of doubt and suspense in which things remain at the end of the first act."

The three Anabaptists all folded their arms, and with solemn faces chewed the cud of this subtle interpretation.

"Let us avail ourselves of the present opportunity," said Epistemon, getting upon the table, "of descanting on the merits of this last work of our inspired Edward. It aboundeth with beauties that escape the vulgar eye, but amply reward the search of the curious and refined. How exquisitely beautiful, for instance, is the exclamation of Rudolph, when he first receiveth the ring from Lurline.

"'Behold! a magic band—
This ruby ring of her a part.'

Now if he were speaking of a mortal, the expression would be incorrect. We should not call a ring a part of a woman, any more than we should call that white choker a part of John; but such is the nature of spiritual beings, that their individuality extends even to their outward ornaments."

"Then a part of himself were John of Leyden's breeches," observed Knipperdolling.

"Perhaps, thou subtle expounder!" said Matthias with a meekness he had never felt before in his abominable life, "perhaps thou canst explain the force of Rudolph's expression in the third act:

'A jealous rival's art
Tore the solemn gift apart.'"

"Thy question is shrewd," said Epistemon, blandly; "as the lady called Ghiva simply took the ring off, there is something odd and even round about in the statement that she tore it apart. Let us believe that the poet here sports with the recondite, to show his aptitude for dealing with the world of spirits. I may say that this word 'apart,' placed as an equivalent for 'off,' hath on me the effect of a spirit-rapping. We know not exactly what the rapping means, but it indicateth the approach of another nature."

"Be apart!" said John sternly, to some one on the other side of the door."

"What say'st thou, John the Blond," said Epistemon.

"Only telling a beggar-boy to be off," said John, with considerable dignity.

"Dost thou put the same spiritual interpretation on the distich

'The billow swell
Rings out thy knell.'

sung by the spirits in the finale to the first act?" asked the third Anabaptist, with marvellous solemnity. "The bell-ringer of Notre Dame, whom they called by the popish, and therefore repulsive name Quasimodo, was an odd sort of personage, but methinks the swell of the sea placed in a similar office would be more extraordinary."

"What," said Epistemon, "dost thou really think that by the billow-swell is meant that rise of the waters that so much troubleth weak stomachs on the way to Ostend?—not at all; the 'billow swell' is the gnome, played by Mr. Corri, who, profusely adorned with all sorts of supernatural trinkets, is a 'swell' in the most modern sense of the term—blessings on his long hair! and a billow-swell because he abideth among the billows. Our poet could not always be recondite, else would he destroy that sympathy between the actual and the spiritual world which is necessary for the enjoyment of his work. The incredulous can no longer marvel that a mortal falls in love with a naiad, when a smart gnome is called a 'swell' by his fellow-spirits. Truly the passage has puzzled thee by its excessive clearness, as the sun dazzles by too much light. Thou wilt therefore the more readily applaud those verses in which our poet is manifestly inspired by the Delphic Apollo. Thus, when Lurline singeth

"'My wild chords pierce the gale,
And distract the mariner's sail,' one begins to marvel at the sensitiveness of the canvas that was so much annoyed by an unprepared fourth.

"When again she saith:

"'My fairy spell shall breathe thy call,' the mind seemeth to be brought before the veiled figure of Isis, and indulgeth in fantastic permutations. Would the spell that breatheth a call be very different from the call that breatheth a spell, or the spell that calleth a breath, or the breath that spelleth a call. Thus sporteth the mind, I say, till it becometh faint and weary from its own gambols. Moreover, observe"—

Here Panurge sprang into the room, playing a hurdy-gurdy, and singing the following song, while he danced about like a wild Indian:

"Oh, nothing shall from memory blot
My childhood's home, that pleasant cot
More happy than a fairy's grot;
For tied to mem'ry by a knot
Is that incomparable spot.
Whether a store of gold I've got,
Or miserably go to pot,

I do not care a single jot,
So long as 'tis my wretched lot
To miss creation's fairest dot.
Oh, if but homewards I could trot,
I would encounter—I know what."

Having finished this wild lay, Panurge danced out at the door, furiously playing his hurdy-gurdy, and followed by Epistemon and the three Anabaptists, who disported themselves as if they had been bit by a tarantula. When he had arrived at Bow-street, Panurge gave himself and his followers into the charge of the nearest policeman, who safely locked them up in the station-house for the rest of the night.

Not one of them had laid out a brass farthing; and when John the waiter went to bed, he reflected that he had never heard so much wisdom, or taken so little money, in the course of his life.

WILLIAM LOVELL PHILLIPS.

IN our obituary last week we briefly recorded the death of this lamented and highly respected musician, whose loss is as sincerely regretted by the profession of which he was so long a member, as it is deeply deplored by his family and friends.

Mr. Lovell Phillips was born at Bristol, December 26th, 1816, and at an early age entered the Cathedral choir of that city, subsequently proceeding to London, where he occasionally sung as Master Phillips, the beauty of his voice being greatly admired, and particularly attracting the approbation of Miss Stephens, afterwards Countess of Essex. He became a student at the Royal Academy of Music, where he was a pupil of Cipriani Potter and class-fellow of Sterndale Bennett, both youths distinguishing themselves by the highest promise, and eventually becoming professors of that Academy from which they had derived their instruction. For some time Master Phillips took lessons on the violoncello from Robert Linley, who looked upon him as one of the most talented and promising of his pupils, and gave him his portrait with an inscription to that effect. He soon became a member of the leading orchestras in London, the Philharmonic, Ancient Concerts, Her Majesty's, and afterwards the Royal Italian Opera, the Sacred Harmonic, &c., &c., besides being regularly engaged at the Festivals of three Choirs, Birmingham, Norwich, Bradford, and for many years holding the appointment of organist at St. Katherine Church, Regent's-park. At different times Mr. Phillips was musical director at the Olympic and Princess's Theatres, composing the music to Gwynneth Vaughan and a variety of pieces; and at one time conducting a series of concerts at St. Martin's Hall. His songs, &c., are very well known, and it is not long since we had occasion to commend one of his latest productions in that way, "The Christmas Rose." An opera founded on a Rosicrucian story, and a cantata on a Welsh subject, had, for some time prior to his illness, engaged his attention, and, from his thorough musical knowledge, would no doubt have achieved a success, had he lived to complete them. Among the earlier compositions of Mr. Phillips was a grand orchestral symphony in F minor, which was performed with great success at the concerts of the Royal Academy and of the Society of British Musicians. He also attained great proficiency on the pianoforte, and played more than once at the concerts of the Royal Academy, his last public performance being the fifth concerto of Moscheles, in C major.

Always ready in the cause of charity, for many years past Mr. Phillips had given his services at the General Theatrical Fund Dinner, organising and conducting the musical portion of the entertainment, and had made all the necessary arrangements for the forthcoming dinner, to be held next week. So anxious indeed was he on the subject, that, even during the last few days of his illness, he gave directions for all the correspondence and necessary preparations, hoping to be sufficiently recovered to attend personally; but the hand of death frustrated these expectations. His last moments were eminently calm and peaceful; and he retained full possession of his faculties until his latest breath. Surrounded by his family, he passed away with a placid smile on his countenance, and a conscience guiltless of wrong. The immediate cause of his death was disease of the heart, from which he had long been suffering.

Few men in the profession were better known than Lovell Phillips, none more beloved. His genial, good-tempered manner and kind heart endeared him to all with whom he was brought in contact. The loss to his widow and two children is irreparable, for his domestic qualities were as endearing as his professional talents were remarkable. His mortal remains were interred at the Highgate Cemetery on Saturday last, some of his oldest and most attached friends following to pay him the last sad tribute of respect.

THE JULLIEN FUND, as will be seen by the advertisement, is progressing steadily; and the shilling subscription, as we anticipated, has proved signally successful. We may here state that the publishers of this journal (Messrs. Boosey and Sons) have opened a book to the JULLIEN SHILLING FUND, at 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square, and that, for the convenience of those residing in the country, and who may be anxious to contribute, will be happy to receive the amount in postage stamps, and give an acknowledgment in the columns of the Musical World.

MDLLE. PICCOLOMINI.—We understand from the best authority, that this popular artist will take her final leave of the stage on the boards of Her Majesty's Theatre on the 30th of April, and on the following day be united in matrimony to a noble compatriot.

MR. AND MRS. HOWARD PAUL, on Monday next, resume their entertainment, with new songs and characters, at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, for a brief farewell season.

JULLIEN.

(Translated expressly for the Musical World, from the Paris Figaro, of the 22nd inst.)

JULLIEN, the celebrated Jullien, died last week. He was one of the most extraordinary men it is possible to imagine. Born in a little town in the Basses-Alpes, and the son of a poor musician, at the age of sixteen he reached Paris, unable to read, but with such a marvellous musical organisation that he played almost every instrument.

Jullien subsequently had lessons from Raimondi, and became a truly talented instrumentalist, conductor, and composer.

Jullien possessed a real genius for the puff and the casard, or English "shave." At Paris, thanks to his talent, and thanks to the art with which he excited public curiosity, he was named the Napoleon of Music. At the Jardin Turc, at the balls of the Opéra, and at the Casino Paganini, in the Rue de la Chaussée d'Antin, he discovered the secret of attracting and captivating the masses. He invented a great many things; he invented pyrotechnical music; he invented also, a style of street-posters but slightly respectful towards the constituted authorities.

M. Delessert, the Prefect of Police, having insisted that the Casino Paganini should be closed, Jullien conceived the notion of giving a grand monster festival, which he announced by advertisements and bills. By means of an ingenious combination of large capitals, six inches in height, with type of a microscopic size, he managed to make the posters express something very different from what expressed ostensibly. When near them, you read the announcement of the concert; but, at a distance, the small type disappeared, and only the large capital letters were visible. These large letters apostrophised the authorities with a word which may have been sublime, from the energy, on the hostile field of Waterloo, but which was grossly impertinent in a Parisian poster.

To avoid the consequences of being condemned in a criminal court, Jullien left France and settled in London. In England he invented things far more extraordinary than those of which he had dreamt in France. Thanks to his promenade-concerts, his provincial tours, and his really great talent as a composer of dance-music, as well as of serious compositions, and to his skill as a performer on the flageolet, he made and lost a fortune two or three times. By the word fortune, too, I do not mean a composer's fortune, but a banker's fortune—a fortune of sixteen or twenty thousand pounds.

The London concerts are interminable. I have at this moment before my eyes a programme containing, for a single concert, five trios, twelve airs, six ballads, three melodies, three fantasias, a caprice, four duets, and five concerted pieces. The first thing by which Jullien brought himself into notice was the composition of his programmes.

By the way, no one can be more fantastic than an English amateur. A short time after his arrival in England Jullien was engaged to play the flageolet at the mansion of one of the principal members of the English peerage. His Lordship, supposing that Jullien did not understand English, approached the accompanyist and said in a low voice:

"Tell the gentleman not to play anything too long. I do not like long pieces."

The accompanyist did not know what to do, but Jullien said to him with a smile:

"Stop when I stop, and close the book."

Every one was silent, and listened. Jullien played twenty bars and stopped. The accompanyist did the same, The audience were in raptures. His Lordship, running up and pressing the artist's hand, said:

"Ah! Monsieur, the piece you have played is admirable. But it is too short, you must give us another."

"With pleasure, my Lord, but you must pay me double."

His lordship consented enthusiastically. Quietly opening the music-again, Jullien went on from the passage where he had left off, and concluded the piece amidst thunders of applause.

The influence exercised by Jullien over the London amateurs was something immense. The following is an instance of this. It is impossible to convey an idea of the excesses of monomania to which an English lover of music will go. There are, in London, musical amateurs who possess admirable instruments which they zealously guard, day and night, like so many dragons, for fear an artist should get at them. Thus Mr. Plawden has, in his collection, two Stradivarii, and three Guarnerii worth an empire; Mr. Livingston owns one-and-twenty Stradivarii; and Mr. Goding, a brewer, boasts of four Joseph Guarnerii, one And. Guanerius, four Stradivarii, three Bergonzi, one Amati, and violoncellos of Stradivarius, Bergonzi, and Gaspare de Salo, besides a magnificent harpsichord, which belonged to Louis XIV. Every morning the worthy brewer takes a violin out of its case, extracts from it two or three chords, which make the passers-by shudder, and then puts it back again. When he has thus tasted all the instruments, one after the other, as if they samples of ale or porter, he rubs his hands, and breakfasts with an Englishman's appetite.

Jullien conceived the idea of giving a concert in which all the instruments belonging to Messrs. Plowden, Livingston Goding, Sir John Lambton, Sir Arthur Cook, and many others should play their parts! These ferocious amateurs who would not haveallowed Bériot, Vieuxtemps, or even Paganini himself to try their instruments, actually consented to trust them to Jullien, who distributed them among the members of his band. The concert created a great sensation. The place where it was held was crowded to suffocation, and the price of admission was four guineas.

In 1851 a formidable rival seemed likely to deprive Jullien of his monopoly of winter music. Mr. Balfe, the composer and conductor at Her Majesty's Theatre, got up a series of magnificent concerts. He engaged all the soloists on whom Jullien relied to carry out his usual enterprise. It was impossible to maintain the contest with the ordinary resources. It is true that Jullien might have crossed over to the Continent, and engaged soloists as skilful as those who had been snatched from him. But this would not have been doing more than his rival, and the chances would have been equal. Jullien was too well acquainted with the musical taste of the English not to know what would suit them best. He sent over to Paris for thirty drummers of the National Guard, with a magnificent drum-major. On their very first appearance at Jullien's Concert, the fate of Mr. Balfe's concerts was sealed. How was it possible for anyone to stand his ground with the symphonies of Beethoven and Mozart against thirty drummers of the National Guard? Then, too, the evolutions of the drum-major invariably excited the enthusiasm of this eminently musical people. The town was in a delirium, a perfect fury. Everyone must hear and see them. The rub-a-dubs of these virtuosi on asses' skins turned everyone's brain, and London was nearly going mad with pleasure and admiration.

When he had well worked out the Metropolis, Jullien took all his band to the principal towns of the United Kingdom. Ah! what splendid bills he composed for his concerts. The following is a fragment of one of them.

"M. JULLIEN'S*

"GREAT EXHIBITION QUADRILLE

"Will be performed.

"The band will execute M. Jullien's Great Exhibition Quadrille, allowed to be the best quadrille ever written by the composer, and performed thirty nights running with unprecedented success. To add to all that has been announced above, and to contribute to the better execution of the quadrille, M. Jullien has obtained from Gen. PERROT, PRINCE LOUIS NAPOLEON, PRESIDENT DE FRANCE (sic), as well as from the Minister of the Interior, leave of absence for

"THE FRENCH DRUMMERS

"of the 12th Legion of the National Guard of Paris, who will appear in grand uniform, and be conducted by

"M. BARBIER,

"their Drum-Major."

Is not this the ideal of its kind, and what are our modest advertisements, our innocent bills, compared to the noble and pompous style employed by the nation whom Voltaire styled a people of thinkers, because they possessed a constitution? What would he now say of us, who have since had so many?

Jullien had a passion for fine shirts. He had some which cost him forty, sixty and eighty pounds. On one occasion, when he was going to give a concert at New Orleans, the bill contained the following paragraph:

"The shirt M. Jullien will wear, while conducting his orchestra, will represent the Falls of Niagara."

At New York, after a concert at which forty-two thousand persons were present, he was offered the title of an American citizen.

"In spite of his eccentricities, Jullien was a man of great merit and talent. He was very fond and proud of his art. He was conductor at Her Majesty's, Drury Lane, Covent Garden, and the Lyceum. He was also conductor of the Court Balls. The Queen and Prince Albert liked him very much.

One day, Prince Albert said to him:—

"Well, M. Jullien, are you getting on in your business?"

"Your Royal Highness," replied Jullien, "I am not in business; I am in music."

While in London, Jullien composed a large quantity of dance-music, as well as symphonies, maritime symphonies, Le Corsaire Noir, Rosita, Les Nuits de Rome, &c., &c. He composed, also, a grand five-act opera, Pietro il Grande, the subject of which is the same as that of L'Etoile du Nord. The great reputation of Tamberlik dates partly from the performance of the former opera.

Jullien had been all over the world, and everywhere made theatres and concert-rooms his study. He conceived, and had the plan, of a hall formed to seat ten thousand spectators comfortably, and enable them to hear a quatuor by Beethoven as easily as if they were in a drawing-room. He erected a building, the Royal Surrey Gardens' Hall, which combined these conditions of space and acoustic excellence. Unfortunately, this ruined him. He returned to Paris, where, despite his failure in London, he wanted to erect an immense hall, which, according to his plan should be equally adapted for summer or for winter; in which chandeliers should be done away with, and the light be supplied through a ceiling composed of opaque crystal, mellowing the rays of the four thousand gas-burners. The plans of this hall were executed by himself and M. Galvani, a young Italian architect, grandson of the inventor of galvanism.

Shortly after his arrival in Paris, Jullien was arrested and confined in Clichy, on a bill of exchange given to Mr. Patey Chappell, and paid in to the account of Mr. John de Lapierre, both Englishmen. These gentlemen took proceedings against Jullien as a foreigner, on the plea that he was a naturalised Englishman. He was consequently treated as a foreigner, rendered incapable of being declared a bankrupt, and imprisoned at Clichy. Five months afterwards, on his appealing against the first decision, the Court, enlightened by the proofs he had procured from London, decided that Jullien was a Frenchman, that he was not a naturalised British subject, and that he had simply obtained the authorisation to take up his residence in London, an authorisation which conferred on him, in London, the same commercial privileges as a native, but in no way affected the fact of his being a French subject. In consequence of this decision, he declared himself a bankrupt, and was released from Clichy.

* As we have not the original, we give a version of the French translation.—ED. M.W.

But the mischief was done. He had been deeply affected by his arrest, and his mental faculties were seriously shaken. On several occasions, his friends fancied they observed in him fits—although passing ones—of insanity. These fits consisted of sudden overflows of high spirits, followed by prostration and dejection without any cause. In his attacks of melancholy, he used to speak of his death as very near. One day, he returned home armed with a large knife. He found there his niece, a young lady of fifteen, whom he had adopted, a pupil of Duprez, and who bids fair to turn out a great singer.

"Come here," he said to her. "I am going to let you hear the most marvellous of all music; the grand concert of the angels; I am going to kill you."

With these words he was about to carry out his threat, when the young lady, with rare presence of mind, observed:

"With all my heart! only, before sending me to Heaven, just play me an air once more on your piccolo, so that I may compare your music with that of the angels."

The idea struck him as admirable. He kissed his niece, and went to get his instrument. Meanwhile, the young lady made her escape, and the poor madman, having been secured, was taken to a maison de santé at Neuilly, where he died a few days afterwards.

It was Jullien's wish to devote himself to serious music, as the programme of his monster festival proves. He feared nothing so much as to be considered merely a conductor of public balls, or a composer of polkas.

Mad. Jullien and his adopted daughter survive him. He has left them nothing. It has been proposed that a grand concert, at which all artists of eminence would gladly lend their assistance, should be got up for the benefit of these two interesting objects of sympathy.

PAUL D'IVOI.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, March 28th.

NOTWITHSTANDING the late gales, the rain and the cold, the theatres have been as full as ever—fuller, indeed, so that the old proverb, "it is an ill wind that blows nobody good," has been verified, for it would seem as if the public would willingly forget the inclemency out of doors in the ideal regions of Thalia and Melpomene. The Grand-Opéra continues to be one of the greatest points of attraction, and the success of Pierre de Médicis —La Pierre de Médicis, as some of its now-admirers call it—has gone on increasing. M. Bonnehée, who filled the part of Julien de Médicis, is about to take a holiday of two months duration, on account of the state of his voice, and will be succeeded by M. Dumestre. The Sémiramis, of Rossini, is to be given in September, not in June, as was first said. The two sisters Marchisio will make their début in this opera, and M. Obin, I believe, will play the part of Assur. Next year the Tannhauser of Richard Wagner will be given. As Richard Wagner is the musician of the "future," it is not to be wondered at that this opera is spoken of so long ere it will be given. The Galathée, of Victor Massé, still keeps good her ground at the Opéra-Comique, and though the part of Pygmalion seems to me utterly unsuited to the voice of Mdlle. Wertheimber, Mad. Cabel is such a favourite that the little opera always goes off triumphantly, with a never-failing encore for Mad. Cabel in the drinking song, "Verse encore ce vin généreux." Before M. and Mad. Faure leave the Opéra-Comique, M. Faure-Lefèvre is to play the principal part (Rita) in an unedited work of Rossini's, the libretto of which is written by M. Gustave Vaëzy. Afterwards M. Faure is engaged to sing at Covent Garden with Madame Miolan-Carvalho in the Pardon de Ploërmel. Madame Faure, they say, is going to St. Petersburgh; meanwhile several revivals are projected at this Opéra, amongst others, Le Jugement de Midas, by Grétry, and Masaniello of Carafa. At the Théâtre-Lyrique, Madame Carvalho, who was most warmly received on her re-appearance in Philémon et Baucis, will enjoy a little rest if they bring out, as they talk of doing, the Fidelio of Beethoven, Mad. Viardot performing the principal part. The Crociato, of Meyerbeer, was given last night at the Opéra, but I must give an account of it next week.

M. Octave Feuillet's last work, if it has not created any wonderful sensation, has by no means detracted from the well-earned honours of the writer. Lafont surpassed himself in his part, and greatly contributed to the success of the piece. The piece is somewhat in M. Feuillet's usual style, and paints, with that delicate touch which he knows so well how to employ, some of the clouds of married life, ending, of course, in the happy reunion of husband and wife. Amongst the beau monde which the opening night drew to the theatre, were the Emperor and Empress, who warmly applauded one of the favourite writers of the day. At the Bouffes-Parisiens, last night, a new operetta, called Daphnis et Chloé, was brought out with much success. And the Gymnase has also given lately a vaudeville in two acts, called the Paratonnerre.

When I think of all the concerts given lately, I hold my pen poised in the air with despair—where and with whom to begin, and where shall I end or what select. So that to mention two or three is all one can do: I will begin with the one given at the Tuilleries. The first of these concerts d'artistes was composed of the artists from the Opéra-Comique, the second of those from the Italian Opera, and the third of the artists of the Grand-Opéra; the selections of pieces were from Pierre de Médicis, Guillaume Tell, Les Huguenots, Vêpres, Trouvère, and Herculanum; the pianist was M. Hans Bulow, and Franchomme, on the violoncello, was clever as he always is. Meanwhile the Emperor's private concerts go on wonderfully, and some two or three "bright particular stars" attract considerable admiration and attention. Haydn's Seasons was the principal performance in the programme of the concert given on Sunday by the Conservatoire. The performance, both instrumental and vocal, was in every way worthy the work, though Roger, who had come from Belgium expressly to sing at it, was already beginning to feel the effects of the influenza, that has since prevented his singing at a concert at Amiens, which has been put off in consequence. At Brussels, Roger was received in the warmest manner; and one representation, got up entirely in honour of him, brought in a sum of 6,000 frs.

The second concert for the performance of modern music for piano and voice was given last Wednesday, in the Salle Beethoven. The rooms were crowded. The programme was exclusively (as regards instrumental music) reserved to the modern classical style—that is to say, modern music written in the style of the ancient masters. Fifteen pieces on the piano were given, and the three last, performed by M. Louis Drenier, were as warmly applauded as if the young virtuoso had given them at the commencement of the evening. M. Padilke, in the andante of the fourth concerto of Herz, and Fissot, in the prière of Stephen Heller, deserve especial mention, also the vocal part of the programme was ably interpreted by Mdlle. Remaury, M. Richer Cremont, and M. Bieval. Mdlle. Pleyel gave her second concert on Monday, and her playing of the Serenade of Mendelssohn, the Fleuve of Litolff, the Truite of Stephen Heller, and the Etudes of Jules Cohen, was admirable. Tagliafico's singing and Sighicelli on the violoncello completed the programme.

The decree which augments the "rights of authors," for the Académie Impériale de l'Opéra, is to appear, so they say here, in the Moniteur, in a day or two. This decree would maintain for all the representations of a work the rights limited at present to forty performances. After that number, the remuneration was lowered by two-fifths: thus the right fixed at 500 frs. for a grand opera, was reduced, after these forty representations, to 300 frs.

The Moniteur announces the little theatre of the Bouffes-Parisiens (Champs Elysées) is to be pulled down, and to be reconstructed on a new plan more appropriate to the comfort of the public and the embellishment of the Champs Elysées.

Last week a sale took place of which I must not forget to tell you. It was the valuable collection of the late Mr. Pierard of Valenciennes, and took place in the Salle Drouet. It is a long time since amateurs have been at such a fête, and there are few such collections perhaps in France. During twenty-five years M. Pierard had dedicated a part of his income to the acquisition of the gems of art, and the price his pictures fetched is very great even in France, the sale itself fetched 400,000 frs. Amongst the pictures the "Portrait of Gerard Dow," painted by himself, sold for 37,000 frs.; "La Kermeuse," by D. Teniers, 22,000 frs.; "Le halte des Cavaliers," by Ph. Wouverman, 25,700 frs., and nine other pictures by Vandevelde, Rubens, Ruysdael, Van Ostade, Huysum, Hobbema, Vander Neer, fetched equally high prices. A few days before there had been a sale of the articles de virtù of M. Norry, which were also very remarkable. The Emperor bought some very splendid things, amongst others two Bacchantes by Clodion, for which latter he gave 12,600 frs. The Empress also bought some things there. There was, amongst other things, a head of Greuze, that sold for 35,000 frs.

M. Gudin has painted two very remarkable naval pictures for the Emperor, they are executed in a most masterly manner. The Emperor, on visiting the studio to see them, expressed a wish to have another, the subject of which should be the landing of the troops at Genoa.

Amongst other improvements that have taken place here, the Ecole de Beaux Arts has been enlarged and extends now as far as the Quai Malaquais, before the spot occupied erewhile by the hotel Juiqué; Mr. Dubau, the architect to whom Paris owes the restoration of the Portique d'Anet and Galérie d'Apollon, drew the plans, and this new building is rising with that fairy-like rapidity one only sees in Paris. This new part is especially destined to the Concours de l'Ecole, and the exposition of works of art sent from Rome. The first saloon on the res de chaussée is for the works of sculpture of the pupils of the Villa Medicis; the other saloon on the premier is for the works of painters, engravers, and architects.

The steeple-chase at la Marche, which took place on Sunday, was a very gay affair, and "no end" of brilliant toilettes and gay carriages to enliven the scene. The only tragedian of the day (with exception of Mrs. Kean), Madame Ristori, is now at Brussels, and began her performances, in the Théâtre des Galéries, by Phèdre. The death of poor Jullien has caused, of course, much sensation here, and his brain-fever is attributed to the immense and unceasing efforts he made to bring out the "monster concerts."

W. A. MOZART.

BY OTTO JAHN.—(FOURTH PART.)

(From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.)

(Continued from page 108.)

IV.

SECTION nineteen gives an account of the arrangements undertaken by Mozart, at Van Swieten's suggestion, of some of Handel's oratorios. These are Acis and Galatea, the Messiah—which was the one in which he allowed himself the greatest freedom—the Ode on St. Cecilia's Day, and Alexander's Feast. It was Joseph Starzer, and not Mozart, who arranged Judas Maccabæus.

At the conclusion of this section, we find the following exceedingly seasonable words concerning a certain fashionable partiality for old music (p. 466):—

"We must not leave out of consideration the fact that the historical feeling which would see a work of art appreciated, and rendered only in the form the master gave it, was wanting to that period. By far the greater number of compositions owed their origin and definite shape to accidental circumstances, which even the greatest masters acknowledged as determining conditions; while they endeavoured to satisfy the present, they created for the future. Hence, they used, with the utmost freedom, their previous labours, either wholly or partially, for new tasks, borrowing and employing whatever struck them as serviceable, and, at successive performances, adapting their work, by additions, omissions, and alterations, to the circumstances of each occasion. It was an easy thing to extend this freedom to the productions of foreign masters, especially of former times, and composers considered themselves justified in presenting them to the public dressed up in the mode in which the latter could most easily and most conveniently enjoy them. If we only call to mind what was thought allowable, at that period, in this particular,* we shall respect the artistic feeling with which Mozart performed his task.† The philologically historical way of looking at things which so pervades the civilisation of our times, that we view our literature and art most essentially in this light, requires the enjoyment of a work of art to be founded on historical knowledge and appreciation, and the work of art itself to be presented exactly as the artist created it. That, in the reproduction of musical works of art, this condition, though right in principle, undergoes many restrictions practically necessary, is as equally certain as that it is doubtful how far the great public, who must conform to the demands of the educated, are capable of this kind of enjoyment; at any rate, it is much to be desired that the learned should not set the example.

Section 20 treats of Mozart's professional visit to Berlin; section 21, of the opera, Cosi fan Tutte; Section 22, of a professional journey to Frankfort-on-the-Maine, and the coronation opera, La Clemenza di Tito; and Section 23, of Die Zauberflöte.

Concerning Cosi fan Tutte, the author remarks that the defects of the libretto (by De Ponte), would not allow the musical portion of the work to be fully developed, and that the opera, from many influences Mozart was unable to avoid, approaches more nearly than any of the others to the last operas of Italian masters. But, even though this be the case, it never belies the peculiar traits of Mozart's nature, and especially our wonder is excited by

"The rich inventive faculty of the master, who, with an easy hand, strewed about a host of charming and attractive melodies more abundantly than almost anywhere else; melodies which always delighted the ear without becoming flat and insignificant. Not less wonderful, and, in many respects, even more palpable than elsewhere, does his technical mastery here appear to us. The plan of the several pieces, the connection of the different parts, the grouping of the voices in the concerted pieces, so that the requirements of the dramatic situation and those of the musical form are simultaneously satisfied, are so well defined and transparently clear, with the greatest richness of treatment, that we easily follow even the most complicated movements. Immediately connected with all this are the wonderful freedom and flexibility of the vocal parts, when the composer would combine different characteristic melodies, and the playful dexterity in the application of contrapuntal forms, which excite the interest of the hearer, and keep it actively employed, without his feeling any exertion. But we are more especially astonished in this opera by the delicate feeling for harmony, and the certainty with which the latter is, under all circumstances, achieved. Although this dexterity and skill cannot be separated from the inventive faculty and the talent for organisation, they are not always found co-operating to such a degree; here more especially we perceive exhibited in a most uncommon manner the power of actively employing in unclouded harmony all those component elements which must co-operate in order that full justice may be done to the material expression of musical beauty. This is plainly manifested in the management of the orchestra. Although the latter is not treated with the same delicacy of details as in Figaro, and Don Giovanni, but lightly, simply, and so as to allow full scope to the vocal parts, it is, in another point of view, fuller and more brilliant, and especially richer in certain particular instrumental effects. The wind instruments are brought more forward, in richer and particularly more varied combination, and with a more delicate distinction of light and shade in the various kinds of sound. It is interesting to perceive how much more

* Thus Hiller has not only scored Pergolese's Stabat Mater, but also partially arranged it for a chorus of four voices, while J. A. Schulze has turned six instrumental adagios, by J. Haydn, into a cantata, Der Versöhnungstod, for chorus and orchestra. And what has not been made out of Mozart's sacred music! (I. pp. 668, et seq.)

† Gerber proposed, quite seriously to produce the choruses of the Messiah, according to Mozart's arrangement, but with all the airs composed afresh by well tried composers. (A. M. Z., pp. 832, et seq.)

the clarinets are brought into the foreground, and what a characteristic difference is established, according as it is the clarinets or the oboes, which are, for character of the sound, subjected to various gradations by its mixture with the other wind instruments. The trumpets, too, are employed in a peculiar manner; they are not seldom used without kettle-drums, and like trumpets, in the ordinary sense of the word, but instead of the horns (and not combined with them), mostly in the lower passages, for the purpose of imparting to the tone a peculiar strength, freshness, and brilliancy. Such remarks might be pursued still further, in order to prove clearly, in each separate instance, with what delicate feeling, and correct calculation, the orchestral resources, as well as all the rest, are employed to effect the most charming harmony.

"Although it is not to be denied that the opera Cosi fan Tutte, regarded as a whole, and with especial reference to depth, significance, and detail of character, does not equal Figaro and Don Giovanni, it must, at the same time be acknowledged, that separate pieces, and especially the far greater majority of the principal parts, manifest all Mozart's genius, and all his mastery; that peculiarities of his artistic nature, which in other operas, either do not appear at all, or less prominently, are manifested in the most brilliant fashion; and that, in many directions, we have gained an advance, an extension of the realms of art."

We are presented with an interesting account (Supplement XXV.) how a mass in C major, which was in the collection of C. Zulhener, of Mayence, and marked under Mozart's name as the Coronation Mass, agrees in all its movements, with the exception of the "Credo." with whole movements or smaller pieces from Cosi fan Tutte, save that the key and instrumentation are changed, and a part sometimes added or omitted (pp. 767—769). The "Dona Nobis," for instance, is nearly the same as the final concerted piece of the opera.

Zulehner was of opinion that the mass was written by Mozart previously to the opera, and plundered for the benefit of the latter. From such twaddle as this, thinks Jahn, may have arisen censure like Thibaut's (Reinheit der Tonkunst, p. 11). That the mass was patched up from the opera by some boggling church musician, Jahn concludes from the passages not borrowed from the opera, and from the way in which the borrowed material is employed; and all musicians to whom he has shown the mass agree with him. He states, also, that old musicians have informed him that, in their youth, perfectly similar masses were common, from Figaro and Don Giovanni. To this we add, that such cases still occur, now-a-days, in the French provinces; from Meyerbeer's operas, not only is the march from the Prophète (together with scenes from Bellini's Norma) quite an ordinary thing on the organ—we actually heard it in a Parisian church—but also, the conjuration of the nuns from Robert le Diable, with a sacred Latin text! Military bands, too, with and without the obbligato serpent, which frequently alone represents both organ and orchestra in country churches, perform the most frivolous operatic pieces in the midst of the service.

In the spring of 1791, Emanuel Schikaneder applied to Mozart, whom he besought to save him, by the composition of a magic opera, from the desperate state into which his unfortunate theatrical speculation and his own giddiness had plunged him. He brought Mozart the book of Die Zauberflöte, which, however, only gradually assumed its present shape. In July, Mozart was able to enter the opera in his list as finished (that is to say, in all the essential points, though the scoring was not completed).

(To be continued.)

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW LIST.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS.

Complete for the Pianoforte, in cloth. Price 6s. Forming the 20th volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Operas.

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA and WOELFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA.

Edited by J. W. Davison, with Critical and Biographical Introductions. In one volume. Price 4s.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

Complete in one volume. Edited by J. W. Davison, with Introduction and Portrait. Price 8s.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

Complete for Pianoforte. By Henry Smart. Price 3s.

DE BERIOT'S AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN,

Complete with all the Variations, Nos. 1 to 7, in one book. Price 1s.

 Pianoforte part (ad. lib.), price 3s. 6d.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN.

By Strauss, Lanner, and Labitsky. Price 1s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' ARRANGEMENT

Of Balfe's "Riflemen, form," as a March for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. 6d.

 As performed by command of the Queen by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace.

KUHE'S TWO NEW FANTASIAS

On "Domino Noir" and "Zampa." Price 3s. each.

GLUCK'S IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS.

Now ready, the Three Principal Songs, with English words. Price 2s. each.
1. "Oh, Greece, how mourns thy hapless daughter."
2. "Ever linked from early childhood."
3. "Oh, thou that wert of life the source."

The complete Opera, in English and French. Price 8s.

DINORAH, PARTS I, AND II.

For Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words. Price 1s. each. To be completed in Eight Monthly Parts.

STANDARD OVERTURES,

FOR LARGE AND SMALL BAND. The first number of Boosey and Sons new series (The Crown Diamonds) will be ready by April. Price 5s. and 8s. To be continued every month.

SCHLŒSSER'S THREE GRAND DUETS,

On "Martha," "La Traviata," and "Dinorah." Price 5s. each. Published this day.

THE POPULAR SONGS OF THE SEASON.

Sung by Madame DOLBY, Madame LOUISA VINNING, WILBYE COOPER, and SIMS REEVES.

	s.	d.
Janet's Choice, by Claribel ..	2	6
Don't come teasing me, Sir, by Hatton	2	6
Sweetheart, by Balfe	2	0
Bird of Song, by Hatton	2	0
Thou art so near, by Reichardt ..	3	0
O live, or let me die, by Meyerbeer	2	0
Sister Mary, by Meyerbeer ..	2	0
It was fifty years ago, by Hatton	2	0
Why don't he tell me so? by Berger	2	0
Swifter than the swallow's flight, by Berger	2	0
When you and I were young, by Allen	2	0
O tender shadow, by Meyerbeer..	3	0
Margaretta, by Balfe	3	0
The maid I love hath many a grace, by Hatton	2	0
You chide me for loving, by Berger	2	0
The Quadroon girl, by Balfe ..	2	6
The song of love and death, by Balfe	2	0
Sweet Katie, by Callcott	2	0
Magenta, by Balfe	2	0

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

SEASON 1860.

THE LESSEE and DIRECTOR, having completed arrangements which enable him to make the announcement under peculiarly favourable circumstances, has the gratification to acquaint the nobility, gentry, and the public, that HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE will OPEN for the SEASON on Tuesday, the 10th of April next. Her Majesty's Theatre for more than a century has been recognized as the first Lyric Theatre in Europe. With this magnificent establishment are intimately associated all the splendour and prestige of Italian Opera; to it also belong the most brilliant reminiscences of the Ballet. The history of Her Majesty's Theatre is identified with the progress of music in this country, and its name made memorable by the special patronage of Royalty. Its spacious and noble area, its peculiarity of construction—which renders it the finest theatre in the world for sound—its perfect suitableness for the purposes of music, and, more than all, its locality in the most fashionable and easily-accessible part of the metropolis, point to it as the temple of high-art entertainment best adapte dto the taste and accommodation of the Court and the aristocracy. In short, no other opera-house in existence can boast of equal advantages in point of convenience of site, commodiousness of construction, and elegance of appearance. Considerable changes and improvements have been made in order to conduce to the comfort and satisfaction of the subscribers and the public. The theatre has undergone a thorough renovation in the interior and exterior, and several alterations have been effected throughout the building, which the Director thought were imperatively called for, and which he feels satisfied will meet with universal approbation. The crush room and entrances have been rendered commodious and elegant, a perfect system of ventilation has been adopted, and every care taken to ensure the accommodation of the audience. The Lessee is deeply impressed with the responsibilities of his new undertaking. He feels that he has made himself answerable to all his patrons for the production of every work at Her Majesty's Theatre in a style of completeness and excellence worthy of their support. As an assurance that due exertion will not be wanting to arrive at this result, he may refer to the accompanying list of artistes and arrangements for the forthcoming season:—

ENGAGEMENTS—Mdlle. Piccolomini (her farewell nights previous to her final retirement from the stage), Mdlle. Vaneri, Madame Laura Baxter, Mdlle. Maria Brunetti (from the Grand Opera Paris, her first appearance in this country), and Madame Alboni; Mdlle. Lotti della Santa (her first appearance at Her Majesty's Theatre), Mdlle. Dell'Anese, Mdlle. Nardi, and Madame Maria Cabel (Prima Donna of the Opera Comique, Paris,) Madame Borghi Mamo (her first appearance in this country,) and Mdlle. Titiens, Signor Mongini, Signor Belart, Signor Corsi, Signor Mercuriali, Signor Soldi, Signor Giuglini, Signor Everardi (of the Imperial Italian Operas of Vienna and St. Petersburgh, his first appearance in this country), Signor Aldighieri, Signor Fellar, (his first appearance,) and Signor Sebastiano Ronconi, (of the Regio, Turin, La Pergola, Florence, &c.,) Signor Gossier, Signor Castelli, and Signor Violetti, Directors of the music, Composers and Conductors—Mr. Benedict and Signor Arditi. Principal Violins—Herr Molique, and Mr. Henry Blagrove. Leader of the Ballet—Signor Bollilli (Musical Director for the Theatre Bologna.) The Military Band of the Grenadier Guards, under the direction of Mr. D. Godfrey. Suggestiore—Signor Fontana. Regisseur—Signor Grua. The carefully selected and highly trained Chorus under the direction of Signor Vaschetti. The Corps de Ballet will include several additions from the continental theatres, under the direction of M. Petit. The engagements for the Ballet comprise: Mdlle. Salvioni, (of the San Carlos, Naples, her first appearance,) Mdlle. Morlacchi, Mdlle. Pocchini, Mdlle. Clavelle, Mdlle. Moncelet, Mdlle. Claudini Cucchi, (of the Imperial Opera, Vienna, her first appearance), Mdlle. Bioletti, Mdlle. Loquine, Mdlle. Ferraris, M. Merante, (of the Grand Opera, Paris, (his first appearance,) Signor Carlori, (of the Imperial Opera, Vienna, his first appearance,) and M. Durand. Maitre e compositeur de Ballet—Signor Borri (of the principal Theatre in Italy.)

With a repertoire so extensive and attractive as that of Her Majesty's Theatre, an assemblage of talent so remarkable, and with so magnificent a theatre, in every way peculiarly adapted to the various performances, the Director confidently looks to the nobility and the public for support. To fulfil the conditions entailed, in carrying on so vast an establishment, requires more than common energies and common resources; and it is only by liberal assistance from the patrons of art, among the aristocracy and the public that any good result can follow; while no labour, effort, or expense will be spared to render the performances of the highest excellence. It is further the intention of the management to produce during the season the following:—Weber's grand romantic opera of Oberon, which has been for a long time in active preparation, and will be produced on a scale and with a completeness worthy of this great work. The minor as well as the principal parts will be effectively filled. The scenery and dresses are being prepared with great care, and will present features of special interest. The whole will be produced under the immediate superintendence of J. R. Planché, Esq., Author of the Libretto, by whom several changes and modifications have been made, while the whole of the original music has been carefully preserved. The recitatives expressly arranged by M. Benedict, pupil of the composer of this great work. Beethoven's Fidelio, Leonora, Mdlle. Titiens. A new and original opera by Maestro Campana, in which Mdlle. Piccolomini will appear. Rossini's opera of Otello.—In consequence of the enthusiastic reception accorded to Mme. Borghi Mamo, at the Italian Opera in Paris, the above opera will be produced early in the season, with the following cast:—Otello, Signor Mongini; Rodrigo, Signor Corso; Elmiro, Signor Vialetti; Iago, Signor Everardi; Desdemona, Mme. Borghi Mamo. And about the middle of May, Rossini's Semiramide, with the following powerful cast:—Semiramide, Mdlle. Titiens (her first appearance in that character); Arsace, Madame Alboni (her first appearance this season; Idreno, Signor Belart; Oreo, Signor Vialetti; and Assur, Signor Everardi. Mozart's Le Nozze di Figaro, with an unprecedented cast. Also Weber's opera of Der Frieschütz, in which Signor Mongini and Mdlle. Titiens will sustain the principal characters. Mdlle. Brunetti will arrive at the end of April, and make her first appearance at the early part of May, in Verdi's opera of Rigoletto. Madame Alboni will make her first appearance about the middle of May, as Arsace in Semiramide. Mdlle. Titiens will appear on the opening night Tuesday, April 10, in conjunction with Signor Giuglini. Madame Borghi Mamo will make her first appearance in this country on Thursday, April 12, as Leonora, in La Favorite. Madame Marie Cabel (from the Imperial Opera Comique, Paris,) will appear during the season in several of her favourite characters. On the opening night also will be performed the ballet of Fleur des Champs, in which Mdlle. Pocchini will appear. The general favourite, Mdlle. Ferraris, will appear in Mazalier's highly successful ballet of Orfa (first time in this country). Mdlle. Claudina Cucchi will make her début in a new ballet. The season will commence on Tuesday, April 10, when will be performed (for the first time at this theatre) Flotow's admired opera of Martha. Lionello, Signor Giuglini (his first appearance this season); Plumkett, Signor Vialetti; Lord Tristano, Signor Sebastian Ronconi; Nancy, Mdlle. Vaneri; Lady Henrietta, Mdlle. Titiens (her first appearance this season). On Thursday, April 12th, La Favorita. Fernando, Signor Guiglini; Alfonso, Signor Everardo (his first appearance); Baldassare, Signor Vialetti; Leonora, Mdlle. Borghi Mamo (her first appearance). On Saturday, 14th April, will be performed Verdi's opera of Il Trovatore, Manrico, Signor Giuglini; Ferrando, Signor Vialetti; Comte di Luna, Signor Aldighieri; Azucena, Madame Borghi Mamo; Leonora, Mdlle. Titiens. The Box-office of the Theatre is open daily for subscribers from 10 to 5, under the direction of Mr. Nugent.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, March 31, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 14. SATURDAY, APRIL 7, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d.

U. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1842, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	DR. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE EIGHTEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 9th, 1860.

ENGLISH NIGHT.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

QUARTET, two Violins, Viola, and Violoncello .. .. Alfred Mellon.
M. Sainton, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.
SONG, 'Sad was the hour," .. .. Henry Smart.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SONG, "The Dew-drop and the Rose" .. .. .. G. A. Osborne.
Miss Eyles.
SONG, "Rough wind that moanest loud," .. .. J. W. Davison.
Mr. Santley.
MADRIGAL, "Maidens never go a wooing," (Charles II.) .. .. Macfarren.
SONG, "I wandered by my dear one's door each night." J. L. Hatton.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SKETCHES, "The Lake, Millstream, and Fountain," Pianoforte, ... S. Bennett.
Mr. Lindsay Sloper.

PART II.

SONATA, Violin and Pianoforte .. .. Pinto.
Mr. Lindsay Sloper and M. Sainton.
GLEE, "By Celia's Arbour" .. .. Horsley.
Loudon Glee and Madrigal Union.
SONG, "Lovely maiden, keep thy heart for me" .. M. W. Balfe.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SONG, "The Bell-Ringer" .. .. Wallace.
Mr. Santley.
SONG, "Near Woodstock Town" (Old English Ditty) .. W. Chappell.
Miss Eyles.
GLEE, "Blow, gentle gales" .. .. Bishop.
London Glee and Madrigal Union.
TRIO, Pianoforte, Violin, and Violoncello .. .. .. Macfarren.
Mr. Lindsay Sloper, M. Sainton, and Signor Piatti.

CONDUCTOR—MR BENEDICT.

Sofa Stalls, 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradberry's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Wylde, Great Hall, Hungerford Market; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St, Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church, street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—MR. MELCHIOR WINTER (tenor) and Mr. BENJAMIN WELLS (flautist), beg to announce that their GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT, will take place at the above rooms on the 28th of May, (Whit Monday.) Full particulars will shortly be published.—17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MISS LAURA BAXTER has the honour to announce that her Grand Vocal and Instrumental Concert will take place, at St. James's Hall, on the 15th of May. Under the immediate patronage of The Marquis of Lansdowne, The Right Honorable The Earl Mount Edgcumbe, The Countess Mount Edgcumbe, The Lady Brownlow, Viscount Valletort, M.P., The Lady Katherine Valletort, &c. Communications respecting the Concert, Lessons, &c., to be addressed to Miss Laura Baxter's residence, 155, Albany-street, Regent's Park, N.W.

MR. F. SCOTSON CLARK is in town for the season.—Letters respecting lessons or engagements for the pianoforte or harmonium to be addressed to him, care of Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE LONDON CONCERT SEASON.—Mr. C. M. SEER respectfully informs Musical Professors that he continues to undertake the arrangement of Concerts, Soirees, Matinees, as well as Programmes and Books of Words, at very moderate charges. Address, 105, Wardour-street, Oxford-street.

MR. AGUILAR'S THIRD AND LAST SOIREE will take place at 17, Westbourne-square, W., on Saturday, April 14, at Half-past Eight, when he will be assisted by Miss Lindo, Herr Eibenschütz, Herr Jansa, and Herr Lidel.—Programme.—Sonata (Op. 2, No. 5), piano and violin, Mozart; Song, Mendelssohn; Sonata, in B flat, (Op. 22), Beethoven; Song, Schubert; Trio in C minor, Mendelssohn; Vocal Duets, Figaro, Mozart; Polacca brillante, Weber. Tickets, 5s.; Triple admission, 10s. 6d.

MR. MELCHIOR WINTER will sing at Myddelton Hall, Islington, on the 17th instant; Chatham, 23rd; Hanover-square Rooms, 26th; Romford, May 3rd; Hanover-square Rooms, 28th. Address, 17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MR. BEZETH, in answer to many inquiries, begs to announce, that he has resigned his engagement in the Orchestra of the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden.
17, Prince's-street, Cavendish-square.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 63, Burton-crescent, New-road.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MISS AUERHAAN, (pupil of Mrs. Arthur Willmore) the juvenile pianist, who made a successful debût at St. Martin's Hall, will play the "Sonata Pathetique" at the Russell Institution on Tuesday next.

MR. WALLWORTH'S engagement with the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company being terminated, he is now at liberty for concerts, pupils, &c.—30, Edwardes-street, Portman-square, W.

W. MEYER LUTZ has the honour to announce that he has returned to London for the season.—86, Richmond-terrace, Clapham-road, S.; or to Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, Regent-street.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

MR. HOWARD GLOVER respectfully announces that he continues to train Students for the Concert-room, or Operatic Stage; and to prepare Artists in Operas, Oratorios, &c. 28, Alfred-place, Bedford-square.

MR. PATEY begs to announce that he has returned to Town, and will be open to accept engagements for Oratorios or Concerts on and after the 16th inst. All communications to be addressed to 9, Cambridge-street, Hyde-park.

MRS. ROBERT PAGET (Contralto) will sing "Rock'd in the Cradle of the Deep" (Knight), "Gentle Troubadour" (Lurline), &c., at Mr. H. Carvil's Grand Annual Concert at Myddelton Hall, on Wednesday evening next. Communications as to Concerts, Oratorios, or Pupils, to be addressed to Mrs. R. Paget, 60, Pentonville-road, N.

MISS SELINA PYKE (Pupil of Mr. Charles Salaman), continues to give lessons on the PIANOFORTE. Miss P. attends schools and her pupils westward, twice a week. 52, Great Prescott-street, E.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 18, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.—MR. ALFRED MELLON begs to announce that he will return to London about the middle of June, when he will be open to any engagements for the Band of the Orchestral Union, which he has reconstructed. Principal Artistes—M M. Sainton, H. Hill, W. Watson, H. Payton, Doyle, Trust, G. Collins, Aylward, Howell senr, White, P. S. Pratten, Barret, Lazarus, T. Owen, Hausser, C. Harper, Standen, T. Harper, Stanton, Jones, W. Winterbottom, Cioffi, and F. C. Horton. Applications respecting engagements to be made to Mr. George Dolby, 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Easter Term commences on Monday, April 23rd instant.

Candidates for admission must attend for examination at the Institution, on Saturday, the 21st instant, at One o'clock.

By Order of the Committee of Management,
J. GIMSON, Secretary.

Royal Academy of Music,
Tenterden-street, Hanover-square,
April 3rd, 1860.

MEYERBEER'S NEW WORK.—"ASPIRATION"—CANTIQUE. (Short Anthem.) The words from the original latin of Thomas a Kempis, "De imitatione Christi." Composed for SIX VOICES (three sopranos, two tenors, and bass), with Recitatives for a BASS SOLO, and Organ (or Harmonium) accompaniment ad libitum, by GIACOMO MEYERBEER. Price, in score, 4s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where Meyerbeer's setting of the Lord's Prayer, for four voices, 3s., and the Serenade, for eight voices, "This house to love is holy," 4s., may be obtained.

MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES AND NATIONAL AIRS, WORDS AND MUSIC. Now complete in one volume, small 4to. price 12s. cloth, gilt edges; or separately in 10 Numbers, price 1s. each,

MOORE'S NATIONAL AIRS and other SONGS, with Symphonies and Accompaniments for the Pianoforte. People's Edition, edited by C. W. Glover. Both Words and Music of this Work are Copyright.

Uniform with the above,

PEOPLE'S EDITION OF MOORE'S IRISH MELODIES, now complete, price 12s. cloth, gilt edges; or in Ten Numbers, separately, price 1s. each. "Longman and Co.'s People's Edition" should be specified in all orders. London: Longman, Green and Co. and Addison and Co. Manchester: Hime and Addison.

Just Published.

LARGHETTO CANTABILLE and ALLEGRO CAPRICCIO, for the Pianoforte, dedicated to his esteemed friend Wm. Sternale Bennett, Mus. Prof. Cantab., by George Forbes. Leader and Cock, 63, New Bond-street.

NEW SONG FOR THE VOLUNTEERS.—"The Good Old Days," Patriotic song, composed by J. L. Hatton, price 2s. 6d. Published this day by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

CHEAP EDITION OF MOZART'S TWELFTH MASS and ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER, arranged in the most effective manner for the Pianofore, by Henry Smart, price 3s. each, complete, or handsomely bound, 5s. each. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

TO INVESTORS.—CONSOLS CAPITAL STOCK is a medium for employing and improving Large or Small Sums of Money, in connection with Government Securities. The Stock is issued by the Consols Insurance Association, 429, Strand, London. Incorporated pursuant to Act of Parliament. Investments bear Five per Cent. per Annum Interest, receivable Monthly, if desired.

Full particulars may be obtained on application at the Chief Offices, 429, Strand, London, to

THOMAS H. BAYLIS, Managing Director.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons' military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REVIEWS.

"'Mozart's Twelfth Mass,' arranged for the pianoforte,"—by Henry Smart (Boosey and Sons). For those who wish to study all that Mozart has written, and are not able to read music from full score (how many are able?) adaptations, or reductions, for pianoforte alone, by so accomplished a musician as Mr. Henry Smart, will offer advantages difficult to over-estimate. While not a single point of any importance is avoided, or "botched," in his arrangement of the Twelfth Mass, it at the same time presents no obstacles at which even players of moderate attainments need stand aghast. Mr. Smart has indeed done his work to perfection, and as an example of the masterly skill that has enabled him to present so much of the original with such limited means at disposal, we may point to the fugue, "Cum Sancto Spiritu" (page 14)—premising, however, that all the rest is to match.

"'Rossini's Stabat Mater,' arranged for the pianoforte"—by Henry Smart (Boosey and Sons). The "Stabat" of Rossini was even a more laborious task than the Mass of Mozart, but Mr. Smart has arranged it with equal felicity. The much-criticised fugue, fugato, or fugued movement (whichever the reader pleases), to which Rossini, in a temporary access of contrapuntal enthusiasm unusual with his Melodic Majesty, has set the "Amen," may be quoted by the side of Mozart's "Cum Sancto Spiritu," as a specimen of Mr. Smart's consummate fitness for the labour he has undertaken. It is a great thing to say; but it is not the less a fact, that this pianoforte arrangement for two hands really gives an excellent idea of "Rossini's Stabat Mater.

"'Larghetto Cantabile, and Allegro Capriccioso,' for the pianoforte"—dedicated to William Sterndale Bennett, Mus. Prof. Cantab., by George Forbes (Leader and Cock). Although in this ably-written piece of music no trace of direct plagiarism can be cited, it sounds, nevertheless, so familiar that we seem to have heard it all somewhere else before. We are haunted, from first to last, in the allegro, by reminiscences of the once-familiar duet of Moscheles in A major; of Sterndale Bennett's Study in B flat (Six Studies in the form of Capriccios)—at the top of page 19, when a certain passage of triplets occurs; by Mendelssohn's Rondo Capriccioso (in the same key)—where the second subject is accompanied by arpeggios allotted to the right hand; by the same composer's Lied, No. 6 (in A), from Book 5 of the Lieder ohne Worte—in the second subject itself, which Mr. Forbes gives in common-time, while Mendelssohn has it in 6-8; and by a faint echo of Hummel throughout. In spite of all this, we are both pleased and interested by the composition, which not only is clever, but straightforward, sensible and musicianly. The only fault is a certain diffuseness, which, now and then, leads to vapidity—or, as some would write, vapidness, which is all the same.

"The Rifle Recruiting Call, 'Arm, brothers, arm'"—song with chorus, ad. lib.—words by Alexander Maclagan, music by Maurice Cobham (Wessel and Co.). We learn, from the title-page, which is, moreover, embellished with a boldly-executed lithograph, from the stone of Mr. A. Laby, that this spirited and well-written song was "performed by the band of the gallant 78th Highlanders, at the Grand Military Bazaar, Edinburgh."

"'The Humming Top,' Folie Musicale, for the pianoforte, dedicated to Lady Cecil de la Feld"—by Bellenden K. Atkins (J. H. Jewell)—may be recommended as an excellent study for young players, affording useful practice for the thumb and index of either hand, while the extreme digits, also of either hand, are employed on a sustained melody and bass. Unpretending as it otherwise is, "The Humming Top" is by no means without merit, although the episode, commencing at the foot of page 3, is rather tame until the progression begins (page 4), which conducts to the coda, and, like the coda, is decidedly good. May we, without offence, suggest to Miss Bellenden K. Atkins the propriety of adding a flat to the A in the bar at page 4, line 1, bar 3?

"'An Evening with Balfe,' mélange of the most favourite airs of that popular composer"—arranged for the pianoforte, by Rudolf Nordmann (Boosey and Sons). The airs comprise "Nelly Gray;" the Longfellow serenade, "Good night! good night! beloved;" "Daybreak" (a popular setting of another poem by Longfellow); the opening chorus from Satanella ("Donor of this lordly fête"); "Fortune and her wheel," the most admired of the four settings of the songs from Tennyson's Legends of the King; the barcarole, "Oh, boatman haste;" the simple but taking ballad of "Margaretta;" and last, not least, the universally-known "Come into the garden, Maud." The bouquet is made up of the choicest flowers from Mr. Balfe's most recently trimmed melodious garden, and is made up with infinite taste by Herr Nordmann.

"'There's nothing like a fresh Evening Breeze'; song"—composed expressly for Mr. Thomas, by Alberto Randegger (Boosey and Sons). There is nothing like a good song in its way; and here we have what in every way is a good song. It has life and vigour; it is perfectly well written; it is original (though flavoured with a smack of the old English character); and it is decidedly effective. We hope some day to hear it sung by Mr. Thomas, for whose fine bass voice and healthy energetic style it is eminently fitted.

"'Don't come teasing me, Sir'—song"—words by Herbert Fry, music by J. L. Hatton (Boosey and Sons)—is another song with a taste of the old English melody in it. Mr. Fry has addressed a smart homily to a male coquet (the most unpardonable species of human humbug), and Mr. Hatton has "music'd" Mr. Fry's disdainful epigram in his smartest and most epigrammatic manner. The neatness with which this little song is written, the raciness of its melody, and its admirably appropriate expression, should win for it a popularity at least equal to that obtained by any previous emanation from the genial and unaffected pen of its composer.

"'The maid I love hath many a grace'—song"—words by Augustus Greville, music by J. L. Hatton (Boosey and Sons).—Here we find Mr. Augustus Greville, in an effusion no less smart than the homily of Mr. Fry, apostrophising the perfections of a maid on whose physical graces and endowments he dwells with poetical pertinacity, eulogising them under the thin disguise of interrogatories addressed alternately to a mariner, a knight, and a herd. Listen to the amorous bachelor:—

"The maid I love hath many a grace;
How fair her form,—how sweet her face!
And cans't thou tell me, mariner, fast sailing o'er the sea,
If ship, or sail, or ev'ning star, were half so fair to thee?
The maid I love hath many a grace;
How fair her form,—how sweet her face!

And cans't thou tell me, cavalier, whose arms are gleaming bright,
If steed or arms be half so dear as her fond eyes of light?
The maid I love hath many a grace;
How fair her form,—how sweet her face!
And can'st thou tell me, shepherd boy, watching thy flock with care,
If herds, or sunlit valleys green, or skies be half so fair?"

More of the old English flavour, both in words and music, which, we may add, are all the more welcome on that account.

"Meyerbeer's 'Dinorah,' complete edition, for voice and pianoforte, with English and Italian Words, the English version by H. F. Chorley, to be published in Eight Parts" (Boosey and Sons). The whole of the voice and pianoforte score of one of Meyerbeer's master-pieces for eight shillings! What next? At first one would have expected to see careless engraving, bad paper, and worse printing. Nothing of the kind. The publication is as correct and as nicely got up as the matter is valuable; so that we have Meyerbeer's Dinorah "for the million" in a shape that would not disgrace the exclusive drawing-rooms of "the few." All that the publishers have to fear is that "the few" will too eagerly avail themselves of what is intended for "the many," and purchase the cheap edition to the detriment of its more costly predecessor.

"De Beriot's Seven Airs, Nos. 1 to 7, with variations for the violin" (Boosey and Sons). Here is another handsome shilling's worth, at which, or we are greatly mistaken, all amateur violinists will jump. What sound practice is to be got out of De Beriot's Airs Variés need hardly be said.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

THE PNEUMATIC LEVER.

SIR,—Some time ago I troubled you with a few remarks on the Pneumatic Lever, in the hopes of drawing from some of your correspondents an account of their experiences in the working of this well-known mechanism; however, excepting a well-written article from the pen of your own organ contributor, I received no reply; and although many had verbally complained, no organist or organ-builder seemed to think the matter worth writing about. This seemed strange, when it is remembered that the pneumatic action has in a manner revolutionised the whole of organ-building: nevertheless, such is the truth. I see in the World of last week (17th inst.) a letter from Mr. McKorkell; in which, when speaking of the Leeds organ (one of the finest instruments of the day), he uses this expression: "The delightful elasticity of the old action (well made) is wanting," &c., in reference to the pneumatic valves. May I ask, then, "Is the Levier Pneumatique necessarily deficient in elasticity and rapidity of utterance?" I have found it so, and many have told me that their experience of it was to the same purpose.

FLUTE HARMONIQUE.

A DELICATE POINT.

SIR,—Much has been said at times respecting the rights of authors and composers; those rights are now sufficiently protected, but I would ask whether, in framing the laws to give that protection, it was ever meditated that commercial interests, other than those involved in the rights which an author or composer can justly claim—and they may make too much of their privileges—should seek to be able to place themselves under the same protection? I am not going to contend that an author or composer should not have the privilege of disposing of his rights to either publisher or director of any public entertainment; but I do consider it unfair and unjust for a work to be sold to two contending interests, made so by circumstances, as in the case of the opera of Lurline, where the exclusive right of performance has been secured to one party, and the publishing of the work disposed of to another, who sells it to the public. If an artist buys a copy, he cannot perform it in public without permission so to do from the party who has secured the exclusive right of performance. Here is a clashing of interests, and an injustice is done; a clashing of interests, for we all know that the greater the publicity of the work, the greater the chance of sale, but where is the publicity of a work if its performance is restricted? An injustice is done, because an artist has not the right, at least not a legal one, of singing or performing in public a piece of music he has bought and paid for at the market value. If this right of performance be withheld, then I maintain that the music ought not to be published and sold, particularly as no intimation of such restriction of performance is conveyed to the buyer either on the music or otherwise—a work once published and paid for by the public who buy it should become public property. I am, sir, your obedient servant, 28*th March*, 1860. R. M.

THE JULLIEN SHILLING FUND.

SIR,—The idea of starting a shilling subscription for the family of one who was the first to give the British public an opportunity of hearing for that sum the same class of music, by the same executants, and equally well performed, as had been hitherto the exclusive privilege of the wealthy, was an excellent one, and deserves universal support. Everyone said that they would willingly contribute, but a great many, I find, have omitted to do so, not from apathy or disinclination, but simply because they have not happened to pass anywhere in the neighbourhood (mostly the West-end) where subscriptions are received. I would suggest therefore that those who have this good cause at heart (and who has not?) should follow the example of the writer, and take every opportunity of personally canvassing their friends and acquaintances, by which means a considerable addition may be made to the fund.

I have since Monday last collected £1 12*s.* in single shillings, some from comparative strangers, whom I have only met upon business matters; but in no instance has the shilling been refused. I hope to add to this next week, and shall hand the amount over to be acknowledged in the Musical World.

Yours, &c., W. W. CLEMOW.

5*th April*, 1860.

THE LATE M. JULLIEN.

(Extract from a Letter addressed by a Medical Man to a Friend in London).

I WENT to Jullien's funeral yesterday with S——. He was buried in the most simple manner. It was distressing to see a man like him, after having entertained and enchanted thousands and thousands of people by his talents, to be followed to the grave by about ten persons. It is true, if it had been more generally known, I have no doubt more would have been there. Respecting the information you require, the following is what I have gleaned:—

Louis George Antoine Jules Jullien, born at Sisteron, Bas-Alpes, France, died on the 14th of March, aged forty-eight in April. He was a man of great intellectual capacity, and the power of his imagination equalled that of his herculean strength. No doubt the unavoidable reverses of fortune, particularly his incarceration in Paris, preyed deeply on his mind, as he feared that it would deprive him of the means of providing for his widow if anything happened to him. This circumstance he mentioned to me several times, and it seemed to pre-occupy his mind. His general health has been much better lately. At times he was rather exalted in his ideas, which were always of a philosophic turn. I had often cautioned him against applying himself too closely to his profession, for he would compose sometimes not only all day, but continue through the night, so late as three or four in the morning. With the exception of this, his habits were exceedingly regular, scarcely ever tasting wine, smoking, &c., &c.

When Jullien first came to Paris I attended him for a slight indisposition from which he quite recovered, and subsequently attended him. The first decided symptoms of the disease that terminated so fatally occurred about three weeks since, with eccentricities, then incoherence in his ideas. Still it was impossible to remove one of the causes of all this mischief, namely, composing and attending the rehearsals for a concert which was to take place shortly. From this state he became more and more extravagant in his ideas, until he grew into a dangerous lunatic.

After a conversation with Dr. Blanche (a very celebrated man for those complaints), he ordered his immediate removal to a lunatic asylum. But, to spare the feelings of his poor widow, I suggested waiting another day. He had slept during the night, but in the evening he was much worse, in fact raving mad. I had him then removed to an asylum, where he had the care of another medical man, Dr. Pinel, who is likewise celebrated for all cases of insanity. He remained in the same excited state about a fortnight. I saw him several times; he knew me, but was very incoherent. During the last few hours, he seemed to have a few lucid moments. Every care and attention that was possible, he had. He received the sacrament the last half-hour, and died quite composed. He is buried at Neuilly. He was a good, honest man, notwithstanding his ruinous speculations, and very few such kind generous hearts are to be found to equal his. The fact of his giving the two last napoleons he had to a poor woman and her two children, who, she said, were starving, is sufficient to prove it.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

The concerts of this Society are undoubtedly progressing, and the committee are to be commended for the energy they display in endeavouring to impart freshness to the programmes, which have been much varied of late, and no longer exhibit that air of monotony which for some time characterised them. Let us hope their policy will be persisted in, and that the stereotyped order of Symphony, Overture, and March, may be modified by the introduction of pieces adapted to create excitement amongst the listening members. The Fifth Concert took place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday evening, when the following capital selection was made :—

Part I.

Symphony, No. 4, in B flat	Beethoven.
Recit. et Romance, "Guillaume Tell"	Rossini.
Duo Concertante, for Pianoforte and Violin, "Les Huguenots"	Thalberg & de Beriot.
Overture, "The Templar"	Henry Leslie.

Part II.

Air—Cornet-à-pistons, "Stabat Mater"	Rossini.
Finale to MS. Operetta, "Out of Sight"	Fred. Clay.
March of the Israelites, "Eli"	Costa.
Bolero, "Vêpres Siciliennes"	Verdi.
Overture, "Il Barbiere"	Rossini.

Conductor—Mr. Henry Leslie.

The symphony was played very creditably, though we must not too curiously criticise the finale, which is a little beyond the capacity of our vigorous amateurs. Mr. Leslie's clever and dramatic overture has been several times performed by the Society, and on this occasion met with every attention from the orchestra. Mr. Costa's March, and a somewhat eccentric version of the overture to Il Barbiere, were both well executed. Mr. Mitford was unavoidably absent, and could not perform his solo on the cornet-à-piston. Mr. Val. Morris, in a brief and appropriate speech, stated that the band would play the overture to Le Cheval de Bronze, which gave general satisfaction. M. and Madame d'Egville deserve honourable mention; and, at the end of the Duo Concertante, were applauded enthusiastically.

The vocal music was as good as could have been desired. Miss Augusta Thomson created a marked impression, and was encored in the romance from Guillaume Tell (accompanied on the pianoforte by Mr. J. G. Callcott). Her voice is a high soprano, and the upper notes are of beautiful quality, but is scarcely equal to the Bolero from Verdi's French opera. We fully believe that Miss Thomson will, when she has overcome the nervousness natural to comparative inexperience, prove a valuable acquisition to the concert room.

A word of hearty commendation for Mr. Frederick Clay, whose finale was very well sung (by Messrs. Gordon Cleather, Charles Freemantle, Quinten Twiss, C. Stephenson, and W. H. Simpson), and loudly redemanded. We have heard a great deal of his drawing-room operetta Out of Sight, and can readily credit all that has been said in its favour, the finale exhibiting constructive ability, good voice-writing, and well-sustained melody. Mr. Clay must work hard, and take care not to be spoiled by praise. He has undoubtedly a "future."

The room was crowded, and amongst the company we noticed the Duke and Duchess of Wellington, the Duchess of Montrose, Lady Theresa Lewis, Lady Elizabeth Bulteel, and a host of fashionables.

At the next concert, which is to be given on April 16th, we read with satisfaction that Miss Cazaly is to perform Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto in D minor.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

The instrumental pieces on Monday evening—when St. James's Hall was again crowded—came from what a morning contemporary aptly styles, "the inexhaustible repertory of Mozart." Subjoined is the programme:—

Part I.

Quintet in A major, for clarinet, two violins, viola, and violoncello	Mozart.
Song, "Lascio ch' io pianga"	Handel.
Song, "Oh! beauteous daughter of the starry race"	Beethoven.
Fantasia in C minor, pianoforte solo	Mozart.

Part II.

Sonata, for violin and pianoforte, in B flat ..	Mozart.
Serenade, "When the morn is brightly shining"	Molique.
Song, "The Savoyard's Song"	Mendelssohn.
Quintet, in E flat, for pianoforte and wind instruments	Mozart.

Conductor—Mr. Benedict.

The quintet in A major was repeated by general desire, and afforded even greater satisfaction than at its first or second introduction. Of the merits of this work, so well known to amateurs, we need not say a word. The performance was again admirable, the executants this time being Messrs. Lazarus, Sainton, Ries, Doyle, and Paque. The fantasia in C minor and the quintet in E flat were both played for the first time at the Monday Popular Concerts. The entire collection of Mozart's instrumental compositions for the chamber contains nothing more exquisitely beautiful, nor more masterly, than the quintet, which created so powerful a sensation on Monday night, that the directors would be warranted in introducing it on another Mozart night. The performers were Messrs. Benedict (pianoforte), Lazarus (clarinet), Nicholson (oboe), Chisholm (bassoon), and C. Harper (horn), who, we need hardly say, played à merveille. Mr. Benedict executed the delicious fantasia with admirable expression, and was overwhelmed with applause on leaving the platform. The sonata for violin and pianoforte, like the quintet in A major, was given for the third time, and the slow movement encored as on a former occasion, when played by the same eminent professors—M. Sainton and Mr. Benedict.

The vocal music was entrusted to Miss Laura Baxter and Mr. Sims Reeves. The last sang Handel's song, "Lascio ch'io pianga," and Mendelssohn's "Savoyard's Song," both with genuine feeling—the latter, nevertheless, somewhat too slowly—and with a voice not easily to be surpassed for quality. Mr. Sims Reeves, who is singing better this year than ever, was encored in both his pieces, Beethoven's "Oh! beauteous daughter of the starry race," and Molique's serenade, "When the moon is brightly shining," the former of which he gave with superb devotional energy, the latter with equal taste and feeling. Mr. Reeves had, however, a greater triumph in store than either. In consequence of the non-arrival of one of the performers in the quintet in E flat, the audience, kept waiting an unusual time, did not refrain from expressing their dissatisfaction aloud, when Mr. Benedict came forward, and, announcing the cause of the delay, stated that Mr. Sims Reeves had volunteered to fill up the time by singing "Adelaida." This announcement was received with thunders of applause, which, when Mr. Reeves appeared, were redoubled. Mr. Reeves sang and Mr. Benedict played the accompaniment of Beethoven's divine song from memory, and the delight of the audience was beyond measure. Meanwhile the "late" performer, whose delay could be satisfactorily accounted for, arrived, and the quintet was given with undiminished success.

The concert on Monday is to be devoted exclusively to the music of English composers.

CONCERTS.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Professor Bennett's cantata (or pastoral), The May Queen, was executed on Saturday, with a band and chorus of one hundred and fifty performers, under the direction of Mr. Augustus Manns. The principal singers were Madame Catherine Hayes, Miss Palmer, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Santley. The execution on the whole was good, and the audience, a numerous one, appeared thoroughly to appreciate the beauties of the work. In addition to the cantata, there was a miscellaneous selection in which the band played Spontini's overture to Olympia; Mr. Wilbye Cooper sang Hatton's ballad, "Under the greenwood tree;" Mr. Santley gave Rossini's scena and aria, "Alle voci della gloria;" Miss Palmer, the air from the Prophète, "Ah! mon fils;" and Madame Catherine Hayes, Mr. Lover's song, "The two Castles" (composed expressly for her), and "The Irish Mother's Lament," the last "by desire." All were successful performances, and "The Irish Mother's Lament" was again encored.

On Monday, the series of twelve concerts for Mdlle. Piccolomini was inaugurated most inauspiciously in consequence of the unfavourable state of the weather. It rained all day with few intermissions, and the Metropolis was visited by a hailstorm in the forenoon. No wonder the concert-room of the Crystal Palace was not more than three-parts full—the wonder, indeed, was, that so many attended. Mdlle. Piccolomini, however, sang with as much zeal as though she were exhibiting before her accustomed thousands, and was enthusiastically encored in both her songs, "Ah, fors' è lui," from La Traviata, and "I dreamt that I dwelt in marble halls," which we never heard her sing with greater expression. The concerts during the week require no further record beyond the fact that Mdlle. Piccolomini has given two songs daily, and that Mr. Patey was the other vocalist. Yesterday, the programme was devoted to sacred music.

BEAUMONT INSTITUTION.—The last concert of the season came off on Thursday evening week, and was one of the best and most varied entertainments of the series. The singers were, Miss Clari Fraser, Mdlle. Vaneri, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Allan Irving. We need only mention a few of the most successful performances in the programme, which extended to nearly thirty pieces. Miss Clari Fraser, Mdlle. Vaneri, and Mad. Sainton-Dolby were encored in the trio, "My Lady, the Countess," from the Matrimonio Segreto. Mad. Sainton-Dolby repeated Balfe's song, "The green trees whispered," which she sang delightfully. Miss Clari Fraser received a similar compliment in an old ditty of the seventeenth century, taken, we believe, from Mr. William Chappell's work, Popular Music of the Olden Time, called "As down in the meadow I chanced for to pass," which pleased amazingly, not merely because it is a beautiful song, but because it was beautifully sung. Miss Fraser, however, acknowledged the compliment by bowing only. The same lady, to our thinking, was still happier in the old air, "When ye gang awa, Jamie," a model of Scotch ballad singing. Mdlle. Vaneri, although hardly in her best voice, gave Mr. F. Mori's charming ballad, "The May time is coming," with irreproachable expression and taste. Herr Ries executed on the violin Vieuxtemps' fantasia on I Lombardi, and Artot's Souvenir de Bellini. The concert terminated with Martini's laughing glee (trio), "Come, merry hearts, be free" ("Vadasi via di qua,") sung by Miss Clari Fraser, Mdlle. Vaneri, Mr. Morgan, and Mr. Allan Irving. Mr. Frank Mori accompanied all the vocal music.

BELFAST.—Mr. J. C. Marks, of the Armagh Cathedral Choir, has just been appointed organist and choir-master of Cork Cathedral, in the place of Mr. Stevenson, lately deceased. This is one of the best appointments in Ireland, and its attainment must be very gratifying both to Mr. Marks, who is still a very young man, and to his master Mr. Robert Turtle.

PROVINCIAL.

EDINBURGH.—Last night Cimarosa's favourite opera, Il Matrimonio Segreto, was performed for the first time in Edinburgh. The cast was as follows:—Carolina, Madame Lorini; Elisetta, Madame Maritini; Fidalma, Madame Vietti; Paolino, Signor Galvani; Count Robinson, Signor Baraldi; and Geronimo, Signor Ciampi. Signor Galvani, in the aria "Pria che spunte," sustained a well-merited encore. Signor Baraldi made a very creditable Count, and sang his music, as he always does, carefully and correctly. In Geronimo, Signor Ciampi has achieved another great success. It was a subtle and masterly conception, carried out with the highest artistic skill. The other morceaux of the opera which may be mentioned for special commendation were the sestetto "Che tristo silenzio" at the close of the first act, and the famous duet "Se fiato in corpo avete." Altogether the performance was highly satisfactory, considering that it was the first representation and that the music is exacting. The attendance in the boxes was very large; the other parts of the house, however, showed little improvement. At the close of both acts the performers were called before the curtain to receive the plaudits of the audience.—Abridged from the Scotsman.

YORK MINSTER ORGAN.—This organ, the progress towards the completion of which we noticed a few weeks since, has now passed out of the hands of Messrs. Hill and Son, the builders; and, with the exception of some little tuning, which it is now undergoing, the instrument may be looked upon as completed. In the external appearance of the organ, however, there is a want of finish, from the side cases not being nearly filled with pipes; but this space we have no doubt will eventually be filled up, and the sides made more consistent with other parts of the organ. Three of the hydraulic engines, which are intended to work the blowers, have been fixed and used, and they have been found to work most satisfactorily. Another engine, however, remains to be put down. As this is the first instance in which hydraulic power has been applied to a musical instrument, in a public place of worship, in this city, a brief description of the engines may be of interest to our readers. The hydraulic engines were invented and patented by Mr. David Joy, of Leeds, who has, by labour and ingenuity, succeeded in adapting them to organ-blowing, and other purposes. Those in the Minster will each work a set of feeders, by no other means than the pressure of the water, by a six-inch main, from the New Water Company's works. They can all, or any of them, be started at a moment's notice, at the will of the organist, and require no further care or attention, as they are perfectly self-regulating, and, by a careful adjustment, are made to blow quickly or slowly, according to the consumption of wind required. The parts working in the water are also of such materials relatively, as not only to prevent rust, but also to promote self-lubrication of these parts by the water itself. Great numbers of these engines have now been at work, since the date of the first patent in 1857, with perfect efficiency, several of the first having been erected in the above year, in London, by Messrs. Hill and Son, the builders of the York organ, who are also erecting others extensively in various parts of the kingdom. We understand that Mr. Jones, hitherto a tuner in the employ of Messrs. Hill and Son, has been engaged to remain permanently in this city, as tuner to the Minster organ.—York Herald.

LEEDS.—(From a Correspondent).—At a special meeting of the Leeds Town Council on Saturday last, the Town Hall committee were empowered to take steps for appointing an organist at a salary of £200 per annum. During the discussion on the subject, it was stated that out of the performances on the organ given last summer by Mr. Spark, Mr. Broughton and others, a profit of £50 was made—the admission price being only 3*d*. One of the reasons given why it was considered necessary to appoint a permanent organist, was the jealous and envious feeling of certain musical people, who declared the organ to be a failure, when they ought rather to have blamed their own want of efficiency in playing upon it. It was stated by Alderman Wilson, on good authority, that Leeds possessed one of the finest, if not the finest, organs in the world, and at a very cheap price. Competent authorities have long urged the advisability of appointing a permanent organist, who shall have full control over the instrument, instead of letting any inexperienced person tamper with such a wonderful piece of workmanship. The appointed organist will be required to give one hundred performances during the year.

The last concert of the Leeds Town Hall Concert for the season was given last Saturday evening, and was conducted by Mr. Spark. The season, on the whole, has not been quite successful either in a pecuniary or a musical point of view; and so long as the executive committee is composed of men notoriously ignorant in musical matters, no other result can accrue.

Birmingham.—A musical event of some importance took place on Sunday, March 25th. This was the re-opening of the organ at St. Philip's Church, after a thorough repair and cleaning. The organ, which is the finest in Birmingham, and one of the finest in the kingdom, was built, in the year 1805, by George Pike England, the son of the celebrated Geo. England, and the predecessor of the equally celebrated Mr. Hill of our own day. It was originally divided into two key-boards, swell and great, and consisted of the following stops:—In the great organ, open diapason; ditto (front); stopped diapason, principal; twelfth-fifteenth; sesquialtera mixture; trumpet, and solo trumpet (the last an inimitable stop). The swell contained open diapason; stopped ditto, principal; fifteenth mixture; bassoon; hautbois; trumpet, and cornet. The pedal organ had one stop of very fine open pipes, made of oak. In the year 1845, the instrument was altered and re-constructed by Mr. Hill. The old swell was made into a choir organ, and a new swell added, consisting of the following stops:—double diapason; open diapason; stopped ditto, principal; cornopean, and hautboy. The trumpet, in the original swell, was replaced by a cremona, and a wald flute was added, as was also a fine pedal-stop of 16 feet. The re-opening of this noble instrument was celebrated with a performance of sacred music, from Handel, Haydn, Beethoven, and Mendelssohn. The services were, Dr. Boyce in C, and Ebdon in C. The anthem in the morning was, "We will rejoice in thy salvation," by Dr. Croft; that in the evening, "Oh praise God in his holiness," by Dr. Clarke. The choir, which was full and complete, was selected from the leading choral ladies of the town, and Miss Poyser, a local artist of some celebrity, was principal soprano. Mr. Simons, the organist of the church, presided with the ability and excellent taste which have so long distinguished him, and drew forth, in his voluntaries, tones from that noble instrument that delighted the numerous congregation, who, till this day, scarcely believed that it was capable of producing such wondrous effects. A collection was made after each service to defray the necessary outlay incurred by the repairs.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

March 28, 1860.

If the problem of perpetual motion could be solved, it would be in this gay city. There seems a constant succession of excitement going on. Hardly has all one's power of admiration been called into play by some wondrous work of art—some lyrical gem, or some great architectural wonder—than some fresh object rapidly succeeds, with all the ever-changing brilliancy of a kaleidoscopic view, to efface the remembrance of its predecessor. For once, however, there is a slight repose. Pierre de Medicis, the great subject of conversation with the dilettanti of the day, has had its various merits so discussed, that of course every one eager to judge for themselves will flock to the Opera. The 130,000 francs expended in decorations are made too much of, as they will be well repaid ere the end of the season. But it is the wonderful C sharp of Tamberlik—the force, the passion with which he sends out this note—which electrifies the public at the Italian Opera. Under the aspect of the terrible Moor he has once more made his appearance amongst us. And with the Borghi-Mamo as Desdemona, the success could not fail to be great. But in the Trovatore his voice comes out as pure and sweet as the notes of a flute. One can hardly imagine the wonderful tones to which, as the opera goes on, the voice will rise. Last night he was called on after the air of "Di quella pira," three times; he sang it twice. An accident which occurred in this Act threatened to bring the opera to an untimely end. Just as Tamberlik draws his sword to rush off and save his mother, whom he sees from the window they are preparing to burn on the pyre, Mad. Penco, who plays the part of Leonora, frantically implores him to stay. In approaching the foot-lights in one of her movements, the long tulle wedding veil she has on took fire. Mad. Penco did not perceive it, but fortunately two of the chorus-soldiers threw themselves on their knees, gathering her dress round, and extinguished the flames. It was a moment of breathless excitement in the house; and poor Madame Penco was so overcome by terror and emotion, that before the curtain drew up for the last act, the stage-manager came on, and begged for a few moments' indulgence for her. As it was, she cut out the air "D' amor sul all' rosa." It was most fortunate for Madame Penco that the dress she had on was a silk moire trimmed with ermine; for, had she worn a tulle dress, it would have been impossible to save her. There was some unknown person who performed the part of the gipsy mother; but it would be better to touch lightly on so painful a subject. Where were Madame Alboni and Borghi-Mamo? The revival of Galathée at the Opéra-Comique has brought nightly receipts of 5000 francs, so it is likely to be continued. Jocomte, with M. Faure as the hero, has also been revived with entire success. Madame Miolan-Carvalho will appear in Philémon et Baucis: the loss of her mother obliged her to suspend for a short time her performances after the Gil Blas of M. Lemet has been brought out, and she will go to London for the season. A very pretty little piece in one act and in prose, has been brought out at the Théâtre-Français; it is from the pen of M. Théodore Barrière, and is entitled the Feu au Convent. Of course, from the title, one would expect to hear a good deal about a convent: nothing of the sort. It is merely this: a young girl, Adrienne de Tavenay, has been obliged to be sent home, as the convent she was in took fire, and, of course, all the young ladies and nuns were obliged to disperse till some new abode should be arranged. Adrienne arrives at home, and finds her father, who has been all night at a ball, asleep on the sofa: ere he wakes, her fairy fingers change the aspect of the room, that was rather disorderly and bachelor-looking, into that home-like appearance that only the fingers of a woman can give a room. Her father wakes, and is equally astonished and delighted at the beauty and grace of his child, whom he had not seen for years; for, left a widower at five-and-twenty, he had sent Miss Adrienne to a convent, and led the life of a single man since. As he sits listening to his child's prattle with delight, while she unfolds her project that he is to marry a teacher, Mdlle. Hélène, who has been like a mother to her, the recollection of a duel he is to fight this morning flashes over him, and destroys all his pleasure. He had sought a quarrel with a Brazilian, as he had made a bet at his club that before the end of the year he would fight six duels: the year will expire the next day, and the duels must be fought that morning. On leaving his child, he confides her to M. de Meriel, a young philosopher of twenty, and in case of his death, constitutes him her guardian. They are left alone, while the father goes away. Adrienne has a presentiment of danger, from her father's manner, and in seeking to calm her, M. de Meriel begins to love—at last, as her despair for her father is at its height, the door opens, and he enters safe and well. The great practical joker of the club, M. Fortemin, had resolved M. de Tavenay should lose his bet, and had challenged and fought the Brazilian in his place, receiving a slight wound; of course all ends happily, de Meriel and Adrienne are to be married—the father says he will marry the friend of his daughter, Mad. Hélène. The subject may not be much, but the acting is all: Bressant is touching and charming as the father; and Mdlle. Emma Fleury as the naïve and witty little schoolgirl, goes through her part with the greatest éclat. It is what may be called a "refreshing" piece, after the tirade of nonsense—of absurdities and immorality—with which the French stage is too often overwhelmed. A new piece, Daniel Lambert, will be brought out in a few days at the Odéon: it is from the pen of M. Charles de Courcy; and also a new piece will succeed the Compère Guillery, at the Ambigu: it is entitled La Sirène de Paris, and is written by MM. Grangé and Montépin.

The concerts are going on with unabated vigour. Last Thursday a Concert d'Artiste was given at the Tuilleries. MM. Tamberlik and Graziani; Mesdmes. Penco and Alboni. The Princess Clotilde presented Mdme. Alboni with a magnificent fan to replace a paper one she had made herself on account of the great heat. Alard played on the violin; Prudent, on the piano. The Concerts d'Amateurs at the Palace are still kept up, and equally successful. The Comte de Morny and the Préfect de la Seine are also giving concerts. Mad. Pleyel will give some more of her charming concerts. The Société de Jeunes Artistes gave, the other day, another of their concerts under the direction of M. Pas-de-Loup: it gave great satisfaction. The symphony by Charles Gounod, that in C major by Beethoven, and the overture to Semiramis were remarkably well performed. Faure sang the solo in the benediction scene of the flags in the Siége de Corinthe. Last Thursday the Salle Beethoven was the spot chosen for an excellent concert, in which MM. Brimer and Paldilke greatly distinguished themselves. There is a great deal of talk about building a new Italian Opera, and not before it is wanted; anything more uncomfortable than some of the boxes it is impossible to conceive, and amidst all the wonderful improvements taking place, it would be impossible to leave this alone unregarded. The aspect of Paris is rapidly changing; for to a person who has not visited for some few months one quarter of Paris, they gaze astonished, and ask whether the magic lamp of Aladdin has been discovered and brought into use, for from ground or wretched spots where hovels stood, rows of palaces almost are rising, but more durable than the palace of the Chinese prince, they will last for ages to come. Some excellent pictures of living artists have been exhibiting on the Boulevards. I have not yet been able to spare a minute to see them, but next week will say something more about them. From all accounts, London is destined to have a brilliant season; and already the talk is about the doings that will take place there.

WEIMAR.—An after-celebration of Mozart's birthday has taken place, when the performance began with a festival composition, with music and tableaux vivants, entitled Die Tonkunst und vier Deutsche Meister, by Dr. Julius Pabste. Then came Don Juan. The house was crammed, and the poem, as well as the suggestive and admirably arranged tableaux, was tumultuously applauded. When, at the last, the four stars, in which shone the names of Gluck, Beethoven, Mozart, and Weber, were visible on the horizon, when, in poetical juxtaposition, the figures out of Iphigenie, Fidelio, Don Juan, and Preciosa, appeared beneath the sky, and the godlike, ever-youthful music of the Past was heard, we wondered whether, in another hundred years, the masters of the Future, now so often named, would be greeted and worshipped with equal enthusiasm.

LEIPSIC.—C. Reinecke is named as the probable successor of J. Rietz, appointed Hof-Capelmeister at Dresden. Nothing has yet been heard from Breslau on the subject.

MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—On Wednesday evening, at the Marylebone Institution, there was a trial of chamber instrumental pieces, in the presence of some members of the Council and a sprinkling of the Fellows. The pieces tried were a string quartet by Mr. Beaumer, a pianoforte trio by Herr Adolphe Schloesser, and a string quartet by Mr. Deane. Mr. Blagrove was the first violin and Herr Schloesser, assisted by Mr. Blagrove and M. Daubert, played the trio. There should be more of these "trials" of new works, which are eminently calculated to advance the objects for which the Musical Society of London was professedly instituted. We should have stated that a sestet for pianoforte and wind instruments by Mr. Aguilar was to have been rehearsed; but it was impossible to get together the necessary complement of "wind." With whom the fault lies we are unable to say.

JULLIEN FUND.

THE illness of M. Jullien having, with fatal rapidity, terminated in death, it has been resolved that the donations to the JULLIEN FUND shall be applied in the manner which would have been most in accordance with the wishes of the deceased, had it been permitted him to express them, viz., to the relief of his widow and family, who, by his loss, are left totally unprovided for.

Committee for the distribution of the Jullien Fund.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. R. W. Sams; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Duncan Davison; Mr. Robert K. Bowley; Mr. Jules Benedict.

Honorary Treasurers.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Sams.

Bankers,

Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Heywood, Kennards, and Co., Lombard-street; London and County Bank, Hanover-square;—who, as well as the Honorary Treasurers, have kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

Subscriptions already advertised, £880 14s. 6d.

	£	s.	d.
F. Gye, Esq.	20	0	0
T. Chappell, Esq.	10	10	0
A. Chappell, Esq.	10	10	0
A. W. Hammond, Esq.	10	10	0
Mowbray Morris, Esq.	5	5	0
E. T. Smith, Esq.	5	5	0
Sims Reeves, Esq.	5	5	0
A Friend	5	5	0
Miss Arabella Goddard	5	5	0
W. R Sams, Esq.	5	5	0
H. L. Bischoffsheim, Esq.	5	5	0
F. Vilmet, Esq.	5	5	0
R. Bowley, Esq.	5	5	0
Messrs. Leader and Cock	2	2	0
Albert Smith, Esq.	2	2	0
Arthur Smith, Esq.	2	2	0
M. Posno, Esq.	2	2	0
Charles Coote, Esq.	1	1	0
Louis Ries, Esq.	1	1	0
C. Doyle, Esq.	1	1	0
W. Winterbottom, Esq.	1	1	0
G. Metzler, Esq.	1	1	0
John Leech, Esq.	1	1	0
J. H. Dillon, Esq.	1	1	0
Samuel Lucas, Esq.	1	1	0
Carl Keller, Esq.	1	1	0
A. Ferry	1	1	0
Edmund Yates	1	1	0
G. Luigi	1	1	0
H. B. Tatham	1	1	0
Warington Taylor	1	0	0
W. H. Weiss, Esq.	1	1	0
T. H. H.	1	1	0
A. E. D. (Pentonville)	0	8	6
Robert Clarke, Esq.	1	1	0
Mdlle. Coulon	1	1	0
E. Coulon, Esq.	1	1	0
Del Vecchio	1	1	0
Charles Halle	2	2	0
Charles Dickens	2	2	0
Lady G. Idsmid	3	3	0
John Mitchell, Esq.	5	5	0
Steward Hodgson	5	5	0
Mrs. R. C. Barnett	1	1	0
Sir Francis Goldsmid	5	0	0
Sir Charles Deesmar, Crosley	5	5	0
Rd. du Cane, Esq.	1	0	0
Dr. Pinches	5	5	0
R. Buckley, Esq., Jun.	1	1	0
E. W. Garland	2	2	0
E. W. Martin, Esq. (Dublin)	1	1	0
Brinley Richards, Esq.	1	1	0
Horace Mayhew	1	1	0
Henry Greg	1	1	0
Henry Evell	1	1	0
F. Freeman, Esq.	1	1	0
W. T. Doyne, Esq.	1	1	0
John Stone, Esq.	1	1	0
Evan Jones, Esq.	1	1	0
W. Godfrey (Coldstream Gds.)	1	1	0
W. Watkins, Esq.	0	10	6
G. Grove, Esq. (Crystal Palace)	2	2	0
Philip Salamans, Esq.	2	2	0
G. Dillon, Esq.	1	1	0
T. L.	0	10	0
Four Clerks (Austin Friars)	1	0	0
Thanks for Cheap Music	0	10	0
A. W. B.	0	10	0
J. Banks, Esq.	1	1	0
Samuel Bevington, Esq.	1	1	0
A Hater of Lawyers	5	0	0
E. C. M.	1	1	0
W. Francis, Esq.	1	1	0
John Brandard, Esq.	1	1	0
Messrs. Cramer and Co.	2	2	0
Messrs. Addison and Co.	2	2	0
Messrs. Boosey and Sons	2	2	0
John Ella, Esq.	1	1	0
C. Grunebsen, Esq.	1	1	0
Messrs. Parkins and Gotto	2	2	0
H. W. Goodban, Esq.	1	1
Miss Tod	1	1
Jules Benedict	5	5	0
George Baxter	2	2	0
Thomas Blake, Esq.	1	1	0
G. Jesse Penny, Esq.	1	1	0
Capt. H. W Burgess	1	1	0
John Pask, Esq.	1	1	0
Sir J. M.	1	0	0
J. W. Johnson, Esq., Lincoln	0	10	6
M. T. H.	0	10	0
Robert Stedall, Esq.	0	10	0
A Friend	0	10	0
George Buck, Esq.	0	10	0
C. B.	0	5	0
W. T. H.	0	5	0
J. B.	0	5	0
H. W.	0	5	0
A. R., junior	0	5	0
T. B. T.	0	2	0
J. T. E.	0	2	6
G. T. R.	0	2	0
W—p—r	0	2	0
Shilling subscriptions received by Messrs. Parkins & Gotto.
A few friends, goods department, Reny's.	0	12	0
Mr. Austin, St. James's Hall	0	15	0
Sunday Times Office
Messrs. Cramer, Beale, & Co.
Mr. Hammond	0	13	0
Messrs. Keith, Prowse, & Co.
Mr. Duncan Davison	0	13	0
Mr. Pask	1	0	0
R. J. Spiers, Esq.	2	2	0
R. G. Marner, Esq.	1	1	0
H. S. Douglas, Esq.	1	1	0
20 Commercial Knapps, Hotel, Wham	1	0	0
J. B.	1	1	0
P. V. W.	1	0	0
The Cat	1	0	0
D. S. A.	1	0	0
Mrs. J. Holman Andrews	1	1	0
Morrall	0	15	0
H. H. B.	0	10	0
A. R. C.	0	10	0
Henry Buckland, Esq.	0	3	0
Collins, Esq.	0	3	0
S. N. H.	0	2	6
Mrs. S. N. H.	0	2	6
Mr. W. H.	0	2	6
Gardener, Esq.	0	2	6
J. G. Callcott, Esq.	0	2	6
C. H. L.	0	2	6
W. H. Lennox, Esq.	0	2	6
J. A. Y.	0	2	6
Emily Gresham	0	2	6
E. R.	0	2	6
Capt. W. Reid	0	2	0
J. Mocatti, Esq.	0	2	0
Shilling subscriptions received by Cramer and Co.	1	10	0
By Sunday Times	1	15	0
By Bailey Brothers	0	11	0
By Mr. Sams	0	1	0
By Keith and Co.	1	2	0
Sir Wm. Fraser	5	0	0
W. C. Sleigh, Esq.	1	1	6
F. F. Courtney, Esq.	5	0	0
G. C.	1	0	0
R. C. S. S.	0	5	0
J. F.	0	1	6
J. T. H.	0	5	0
J. P.	0	2	0
E. S. W.	0	2	6
J. R. M.	0	2	0
C. Y. M.	0	1	0
C. S.	0	2	6
F. Jarrett, Esq.	5	0	0

Dr. Marks, and his Little Men	5	5	0	J. Standell, Esq.	0	10	0
London University College School	2	18	0	H. T. Reeling, Esq.	0	10	0
General Post Office (a few friends)	2	2	0	W. T. Mocatta, Esq.	0	10	0
Messrs. Cave and Lever (Manchester)	2	2	0	J. B.	0	9	0
Messr. Hale & Sons, Cheltenham (Musical Record) ..	2	2	0	The Boys	0	6	0
Warehousemen and Clerks, Coster and Co.	1	18	6	H. Sill	0	5	0
J. W. J. From Friends at Coffee-room, Albion-hotel, Manchester	1	7	6	Anonymous	0	5	0
J. G. Stainton, Esq.	1	1	0	D., per Bailey, Brothers ..	0	5	0
H. Hawkins, Esq., Q.C. ..	1	1	0	Additional Subscriptions, of small amounts under 5s., received by Mr. Austin, St. James Hall	0	11	0
Lindsay Sloper, Esq.	1	1	0	Police, Vine-street, A, reserved	0	17	10
T. F. Kendall, Esq.	1	1	0	Chappell and Co.	0	8	6
— Rougier, Esq.	1	1	0	Mr. Hammond	4	8	0
— Morris, Esq.	1	1	0	Messrs. Cramer and Co. ..	1	7	0
C. J. M.	1	0	0	Mr. Mitchell	0	3	0
Ralph Bates, Esq., Stalybridge	1	0	0	*Deposit Bank, Leicester-sq.	3	6	6
George Montgomery, Esq. ..	1	0	0	Mr. Duncan Davison	0	16	0
				*Messrs. Pask and Co. ..	0	3	6
				Messrs. Bailey, Brothers ..	0	9	0
				Messrs. Keith, Prowse, & Co.	1	3	6
				Sunday Times Office	0	13	0

* These Gentlemen wish their names mentioned in the Times as receiving Subscriptions.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—The Nobility, Gentry, Subscribers, and the public are most respectfully informed that the Season of 1860 will commence on Tuesday next, April 10, on which occasion will be performed, Meyerbeer's New Romantic Opera, entitled DINORAH; or, Il Pellegrinaggio de Ploërmel. Dinorah, Madame Miolan-Carvalho (her seventh appearance in England); Una Capraia, Mdlle. Rapazzini (her first appearance in England); Un Capraio, Mdlle. Giudita Sylvia (her first appearance in England); Corentino, Signor Gardoni; Un Cacciatore, Signor Tagliafico; Un Mietitore, Signor Neri Baraldi; and Hoel, M. Faure (for whom the part was originally composed: his first appearance in England).

Conductor—MR. COSTA.

The Opera will commence at half-past eight o'clock. Pit tickets, 10s. 6d.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 7s. and 5s; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

Prospectuses, with full particulars of the arrangements, may be had at the Box Office, under the portico of the theatre, and at the principal music-sellers and librarians.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvender.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)... ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 7TH, 1860.

THE prospectus of the Royal Italian Opera, besides announcing the re-engagement of most of the old favourites, promises two new singers of eminence, two operatic revivals of great importance, and one or two works that have not been heard before. Mdlle. Lotti della Santa, and Mdlle. Marai, no longer appear in the list of artists; but Mdlle. Rosa Csillag, if report does not err, will more than atone for the loss of the former; while, if Mad. Miolan-Carvalho fills the part of Marguerite de Valois, in the Huguenots, and Mdlle. Rosa Csillag that of Elvira in Don Giovanni, formerly sustained by Mdlle. Marai, there will be nothing to complain of. Other contemplated changes will be equally for the better—as, for instance, Madame Penco, vice Mdlle. Lotti, in Ninetta (Gazza Ladra), and M. Faure, from the Opéra-Comique, vice Signor Graziani, as Hoel (Dinorah), and (if the Italian language and Italian music are familiar to him), vice Signor De Bassini, in Fernando (La Gazza Ladra). Mdlle. Csillag and M. Faure are both unknown to the English public. The lady, it is true, appeared at one of the Philharmonic Society's performances last season, with very considerable success; but little can be predicted of her talent as a dramatic singer from this solitary exhibition in the concert-room. Mdlle. Csillag comes from the Imperial Opera of Vienna, where she holds a distinguished post. She will make her first appearance in Fidelio. If M. Faure creates as favourable an impression at the Royal Italian Opera as at the Opéra-Comique, he can hardly fail to become a valuable acquisition to Mr. Gye's company.

Among the ladies we find two unfamiliar names, viz.: Mdlle. Rapazzini and Mdlle. Giudita Sylvia. Of these, knowing nothing of their antecedents, we can say no more than that the latter, a contralto, is to make her first essay with Madame Nantier-Didiée's part in Dinorah, on the opening night, and that the former is entrusted with one of the subordinate characters in the same opera.

While on the subject of new comers, we may cite Signors Patriossi, Vairo, and Rossi, as barytones, or basses, about whom no rumours have travelled to cis-Alpine regions—unless, by the way, Signor Rossi should happen to be the gentleman who played Don Pasquale and other buffo parts at Her Majesty's Theatre in 1857 and 1858.

Madame Grisi "is engaged for twelve nights;" which may be interpreted, that she is at length definitively to take leave of the stage. Why the prospectus does not speak more explicitely on this head, we are unable to say. Perhaps the remembrance of 1854 may have something to do with it. Before the Norma of Normas, the Lucrezia of Lucrezias, the Semiramide of Semiramides, the Anna Bolena of ——— (but space warns us to desist) abandons us for ever, we should like to be assured of a competent successor. The prospectus further relates that "she will appear in those parts which have chiefly contributed to her great popularity, during her long-continued and brilliant career." Nevertheless, we find no mention of Ninetta (La Gazza Ladra), Elvira (I Puritani), Norina (Don Pasquale), Semiramide and Anna Bolena—to one and all of which, it will scarcely be denied, some of those laurels are due. Mad. Miolan-Carvalho is evidently intended to fill up the dreary vacuum created by the loss of Angiolina Bosio. Besides Dinorah, she is to appear as Rosina (Barbiere), and Zerlina (Fra Diavolo)—two of Madame Bosio's most renowned impersonations—in addition to Amina (La Sonnambula), and Marguerite de Valois (Les Huguenots). That Madame Carvalho will make an admirable Zerlina, and an admirable Marguerite, we cannot for a moment doubt, and only hope that her essays in Italian opera proper will be to match. Madame Penco, is not only put down for Ninetta (La Gazza Ladra), but for Lady Henrietta (Martha), Gilda (Rigoletto), and one of the two sisters in Cimarosa's Matrimonio Segreto. Madame Nantier-Didiée,—although (for reasons unexplained) she does not (at present at least) reassume her favourite part of the Goat-herd in Dinorah, for which Meyerbeer graciously composed the new air, "Fanciulle che il core"—retains her post as principal contralto. The name of Madame Tagliafico, too, re-appears as comprimaria.

The tenors are precisely the same as in 1859—Signors Mario, Tamberlik, Gardoni, Neri-Baraldi, Luchesi—a strong and gallant company. The basses and barytones we have still to name are—Signors Graziani, Polonini, and Tagliafico, M. Zelger, and last, not least, Signor Ronconi.

The répertoire for the season embraces twenty-four operas, of which two are novelties and four revivals. The novelties are M. Flotow's Stradella, and M. Victor Massée's one-act operetta, Les Noces de Jeannette, under the Italian title of Le Nozze di Giannetta. In the former, Signor Mario will sustain the principal part, while the latter is to be produced especially for Madame Miolan-Carvalho—the original Jeannette at the Théâtre-Lyrique—and Signor Ronconi. The "revivals" include Beethoven's Fidelio, for Mdlle. Csillag and Signor Tamberlik; Meyerbeer's Prophète, with Mdlle. Csillag as Fides, Signor Tamberlik as Jean of Leyden, and ("peraunter") Madame Miolan-Carvalho as Bertha; and Cimarosa's Matrimonio Segreto. There is a report that M. Félicien David's Herculaneum will be given; but respecting this we can state nothing definitively beyond the fact that M. David has arrived in London. Upon the revival of the Prophète the management is determined to expend all the means at its disposal. If, as is probable, the magnificence of former days is revived, Meyerbeer's grand lyric drama will be the most brilliant feature of the season. The cast of the Matrimonio Segreto includes Mesdames Miolan-Carvalho, Penco, and Nantier-Didiée, Signors Ronconi, Gardoni, and Graziani. The ladies are well placed, and from Sig. Ronconi's Geronimo, great things may be expected.

Four grand concerts are announced—one, "at least," to take place in the New Floral Hall. At the second concert, Glück's Orfeo will be performed, with costumes, scenery, and decorations.

About the ballet nothing is stated, beyond the fact that Mdlle. Zina Richard, the deserved favourite of the last two seasons, is engaged as principal danseuse.

"The full orchestra and chorus of the Royal Italian Opera," and Mr. Costa, as "director of the music, composer, and conductor"—these are items which speak for themselves.

Mr. Augustus Harris is again stage-manager, and Messrs. Grieve and Telbin, the bonâ fide scene-painters of the Royal Italian Opera, are associated with Mr. William Beverley, who is also scenic artist at Her Majesty's Theatre. Mr. Smithson is chorus-master; Sig. Maggioni, poet; Mr. Godfrey, leader of the military band; M. Nadaud, leader of the ballet; and M. Desplaces, maître-de-ballet.

One important consideration arising from an examination of the programmes of both operas, is the decline of the vocal art in Italy. How else account for the fact that in both houses the chief parts are filled by foreign singers. At Her Majesty's Theatre, the prima donna assoluta, Mdlle. Titiens, is a German; while two others—Madame Marie Cabel and Mdlle. Brunetti (Brunet)—are French. At the Royal Italian Opera, Mdlle. Csillag is a German, while Mesdames Miolan-Carvalho and Nantier-Didiée are French. At Her Majesty's Theatre, Signor Everardi (M. Everard), Signor Vialetti (M. Vialette) and M. Gassier, are French. At the Royal Italian Opera, M. Faure and Signor Tagliafico are French, while M. Zelger is a Belgian. Furthermore, one theatre opens with a Russian, and the other with a French opera. While Art rejoices over the disruption of a monopoly which threatened to arrest her progress, Italy weeps that her lyric temple should be invaded by the foreigner.

GETTING up early last Tuesday morning, and walking into the room, which, because it was equally destitute of books and writing materials, was called his study, Pantagruel was not a little amazed to find both Panurge and Epistemon deeply immersed in thought. The former was gravely turning over a battered terrestrial globe, which with two chairs and a table constituted the sole furniture of the carpetless apartment; the latter was holding straight before him a sheet of written paper, at which he was staring with all his might and main, with the aspect rather of the connoisseur who is examining a picture, than of the student who is reading.

"May I be eternally ——," began Pantagruel, in his usual strong manner, when he was checked by a solemn "Hush!" uttered by both the philosophers.

"Odi profanum vulgus, et arceo," said Panurge.

"Favete linguis," continued Epistemon.

"Out upon ye, for a couple of accursed rebels!" bellowed Pantagruel, though he was well-nigh choked with rage. "How dare ye apply to me the term 'profanum vulgus?' Think you I am the company of the —— theatre, all rolled into a one person, like the forty enchantresses of whom I read in Mr. Dickens's admirable periodical. It is not with my tongue, but with my foot I will discourse, if I am thus contumaciously treated!"

"Why, look ye, Master mine," said Panurge, "I meant not to offend thee. In fact my mind was so absorbed that I took thee for the Field Lane Ragged School—"

[At this juncture, Epistemon, thinking that the ensuing dialogue might disturb his meditations, took out the brass pin that fastened together the front of his shirt, pinned his paper against the wall, and clapping a hand on each ear so as to impede the entrance of sound, stared at the writing in such ridiculous fashion that Pantagruel, in spite of his choler, burst out into a roar of laughter, so loud, that all the singing-birds in St. Andrew's-street quaked with terror in their little green cages.]

"Look ye, Master," said Panurge, "A manager of great wisdom and experience hath been likening his theatre to a ship."

"A very good simile too," replied Pantagruel, still chuckling at the appearance of Epistemon; "Horace did the same with respect to the Roman State:

"O navis, referent in mare te novi Fluctus? O quid agis? Fortiter occupa Portum."

"Nay, Master," cried Panurge, "the manager in question says he is in port already."

——"Nonne vides ut Nudum remigio latus," proceeded Pantagruel, with beautiful complacency, mightily delighted with his own power of quotation.

"Totally inapplicable," shouted Panurge, "there's a very fair crew,—why, there's Miss Louise Keeley, and Mrs. Young, and Mrs. Weston, and Mr. George Melville, and Mr. Saker, and Mr. Frank Matthews,—and they all pull very well together."

But Pantagruel would go on:—

"Et malus celeri saucius Africo."

"Nothing at all to do with it!" shrieked Panurge, almost crying at the immensity of the boredom. "Thou thinkest thou art talking of some manager who has engaged an Ethiopian company,—not being the Christy's,—there has been nothing of the sort at the Princess's."

But there was no stopping Pantagruel. He proceeded thus:—

——"Non tibi sunt integra lintea."

"Now, that is worse than all," snivelled Panurge, dancing with impatience. "The scenes at the Princess's are in admirable condition. There is the gorgeous stock left by Charles Kean—the model of managers and tragedians,—and some beautiful new scenes have been added by Mr. Harris, whose pantomime was unquestionably the best in London."

But Pantagruel went on:—

"Non di, quos iterum pressa voces malo."

"I tell you the pantomime was the best in London, and the gods were delighted!" screamed Panurge, whose loyalty had become as small as the audience of the Strand Theatre prior to the reign of Miss Swanborough.

But with the most idiotic of smiles, Pantagruel proceeded:—

"Quamvis Pontica pinus."

"By all the devils!" shouted Panurge, "Horace is now taking you to the Royal English Opera, to which I make no reference! Hold your tongue, and be —— to you."

This treasonable exclamation brought Pantagruel to a sudden stop, but his countenance was so awful that the Polish refugee, who lived over the way, and saw him through the window, took him for the ghost of the wicked king Popiel, who, as we all know, was devoured by mice, like Archbishop Hatto. However, Panurge, glad to attain a pause at any price, said with wondrous fortitude:—

"The manager, who likened his theatre to a ship, said that he had taken it into the speculative waters of the Theatrical Ocean. Now I'm looking at this globe to find where those waters are situated, perfectly satisfied that the ocean in question is not the Pacific."

But Pantagruel, who had been bottling up his wrath, now went off like Vesuvius or ginger-beer, and poured the whole force of his colossal lungs into the single monosyllable "THERE!" accompanied by a blow of his right fist on the globe, which made a big hole just about the middle of the Atlantic. Into this hole did he with his left hand cram the paralysed Panurge, and immediately afterwards kicked the globe through the window. Over many streets and neighbourhoods did it pass, while little boys below saluted it on its journey with cries of "Ah-bah-loon!" till at last it fell into the garden of the Royal Grecian, where Mr. George Conquest, who not only writes the pieces for the establishment, but is an exceedingly clever gymnast, instantly performed upon it a feat well known in amphitheatrical circles.

Panurge having been thus satisfactorily removed, Pantagruel strode up to Epistemon's paper, which was pinned against the wall, and to his own infinite disgust read as follows:—

"Although many works on this subject have been already presented to the public, it has not yet been treated in a manner so as at once to satisfy the general reader and the earnest student. To supply a deficiency so utterly unaccountable, the present work was undertaken, and will, it is hoped, thoroughly answer the purpose of everybody. While the universal intellect has been thus sedulously, and, it is hoped, conscientiously consulted, pains have been taken to please the universal eye by a typography, which, it is hoped, will be found unexceptionable. Moreover, it is hoped——"

"It is hoped, it is hoped, it is hoped," said Pantagruel, forcibly removing Epistemon's hands from his ears, and thus compelling him to hear. "What hopeful stuff is this that is involved in such a wilderness of platitudes? Truly it would be a pleasure to enter Dante's Hell, where no hope is allowed to enter, when hope finds such dreary modes of expression. Campbell, besides writing the Lochiel, which Miss Amy Sedgwick reads with such surpassing eloquence at the Haymarket Theatre, likewise composed a poem called the 'Pleasures of Hope.' Now this essay, or letter, or oration, or whatever in the Devil's name thou stylest it, should be named the 'Pains of Hope.' And pray what is the all-important subject which the blockhead is about to treat?"

"The blockhead, who is myself," said Epistemon, "has not the slightest notion. Only having heard the directress of the Lyceum Theatre declare that her past season was the preface of a book not yet commenced, I drew up that document that I might learn what such a preface was like."

Pantagruel was about to reply, when the musical snuff-box, which he carried in his pocket, and into which he had slipped the fourth "Carmen" of Catullus, warbled forth thus:

The skiff, my friends, which here you see,
Says—Once the fleetest craft was she;
To pass her all the rest would fail,
Whether they moved by oar or sail;
The dang'rous Adriatic shore,
She swears she knew in days of yore,
The Cyclades, the noble Rhodes,
And Thrace, that land of wild abodes;
Oft she has seen, too, the Propontis,
The angry Euxine too, whereon, 'tis
Said, she a leafy forest stood,
Before she ventured on the flood,
Perch'd on the tall Cytorus, whence
Her rustling leaves with eloquence
Whisper'd; these facts she says are known
To you, Amastris, and her own
Cytorus, on whose box-grown tip
She grew, her oars about to dip
In frantic waves; likewise to carry
Her lord, however winds might vary,
In perfect safety; ne'er she paid
A vow in raging tempests made;
For safe her voyages would be,
When coming from the furthest sea.
But all these glories now are past,
The skiff compell'd to rest at last,
Devotes herself, releas'd from bother,
To Castor and to Castor's brother.

As Pantagruel was very touchy on the subject of his box Epistemon, who was very sharp with his criticism, contrived to slip out of the room before the above was finished, and descending into the street, paused before the window of a neighbouring bird-fancier, when he read with intense interest the announcement of a rat-hunt that was about to take place at Westminster.

DID not a Greek sage say that no one was to be accounted happy until the manner of his death was known? Heaven knows that poor Jullien was not happy either towards the close of his life or in his last illness, which was terrible indeed, and since his decease his memory has received one of the greatest slights that could possibly have been offered to it. He has not been vilified and calumniated in any direct manner by a declared enemy, because no one could have accused Jullien of a dishonest or dishonourable action. This is what has happened to him; he has been sneered at by a journalist. However, he is no longer of this world, and nil nisi malum is what the perpetrator of the sneer might be expected to say of the dead. "Jullien," we are told, "was an adventurer," which he decidedly was not, because an adventurer is always changing his occupation, whereas Jullien was never anything but a musician. "He began life, unless we are mistaken, at sea." The sneerer is again mistaken; he did not begin life at sea, but as a musician in a military band. "Thence," says the writer—no, let us be exact, he says "from thence"—"by what steps we know not, but obviously not those of a sound musical education, he stumbled into the place of a dance-conductor." Jullien was for years a pupil of Halévy. "He made himself famous here, not so much by his dance-tunes," &c.: why, his "Bridal" and "Olga" waltzes were the most successful pieces of dance-music ever produced in England.

The next charge is still more extraordinary. Jullien is accused of having had "dim and romantic notions of art," and of having, at his Promenade Concerts, "sprinkled the tawdry performances necessary to attract the million with selections from the classical composers." In other words, he undertook the management of promenade concerts, when such entertainments were usually composed of the most frivolous and worthless music, and entirely changed their character, by devoting one-half of each evening to the works of the great masters. This, we are told, was "charlatanry"—in which case we can only say that we wish there was more charlatanry (or charlatanism, as we usually call it) in the world, and especially in the world of music.

What can be the meaning of these aspersions on the character of one who was a good, charitable man, and an honourable, conscientious artist? We are assured by the same critic, that when Jullien founded his English Opera, having engaged such a company as was never gathered together before on the English stage, he gave "princely commissions—to be executed in years to come." This passage causes us to reflect, and reminds us of something we read a few days since in Thackeray's admirable novel, now in course of publication in the Cornhill Magazine. You have remarked, says the wise man, that when one man hates another, the real reason is never assigned. "You say, 'The conduct of such a man to his grandmother, his behaviour in selling that horse to Benson, his manner of brushing his hair down the middle'—or what you will—'makes him so offensive to me that I cannot endure him.' His verses, therefore, are mediocre; his speeches in Parliament are utter failures; his practice at the Bar is dwindling every year, his powers (always small) are utterly leaving him, and he is repeating his confounded jokes until they quite nauseate." Or, if he be a musician (and dead), he was a charlatan—never received a musical education—and was, if the truth is to be told, not a musician at all but a—sailor.

And all this because Jullien gave "princely commissions," and was not able to "execute" them ("act up to them" would be better, because it is the person receiving the commission who is expected to execute it)! Merely because he had undertaken to produce a certain version of ——, and was unable, from the force of circumstances, to bring it out.

IN the report of a concert given by Alex. Dreyschock, at Berlin, the Preussische Zeitung gives vent to its enthusiasm in the following magniloquent sentences:—

"If the trio in C minor is one of the first written by Beethoven at the age of sixteen (?), how many first and last ones of his successors are such first ones? Look at the andante: with what gentle sorrow it gushes forth; and the master's joy, his first boon, his son whom the coy, sacred love of his soul, beautiful melancholy, gave him, and whom he, with a father's holy love, cradled in his arms. Look at the scherzo! how does the father's pensiveness, and the tearful gaze, wet with woe, of the mother, smile from out its eye! Wonderfully were both entwined, moving in the sounds of the three players, especially in those of the pianist, whose magic tones melted away again, yet possessing a gentle decision and stamp of their own, even in the smallest detail, so that the chains of trills (? ?) rolled over the keys, like dew-drops over the leaves of flowers; but like dew-drops which appeared to confirm the notion of the ancients, concerning the origin of pearls, namely, that sucked in by the mussels, they formed the costly gems! Under Dreyschock's fingers, the tones, breathed out, as it were, possessed such a purity and plastic roundness of sound, that anyone would have fancied he was working the keys into the well-known microtechnical wonders of ivory; a Calliorates of the ear, who, as the other enabled the eye to distinguish, by the aid of a glass, polished ivory balls of the size of a pea fashioned to represent the four-horsed car of the sun-god, charmed similar piano-sounds of amazing perfection out of the keys, whose apparent smoothness resolved itself for the ear into the most astonishing musical toreutics. Then, again, the hammering hand struck mighty sources of harmony out of the depth of the instrument, which flew out and disappeared in a hazy cloud of the finest tone-diamonds. The piano appeared to have stormed into an organ, which, roaring in surging chorals, melted away into the gently lisping flute-work of the 'Saltarello' arpeggios, which sounded as though ripped out of rocks with Neptune's trident, died off into a piano, as sweet as the fragrance of night violets. Then we had extemporaneous variations on 'Heil dir im Siegerkranz' played with the left hand, but hammered out with an iron touch, like that with which Qötz was accustomed to hammer out his iron Victoria-wreaths, and that upon the skull for which they were intended."

Can the official press in Berlin find no saner musical reporter?

If the foregoing be a fair example of Teutonic criticism, the Berlin Punch deserves rating for flagrant neglect of duty. A more efficient system of literary police must be instituted, or the reputation long formed, and still loudly claimed, by the Germans as art-judges, will speedily merge into a theory of the past, or—in more familiar language—"go to pot."

MARRIAGE OF MADEMOISELLE VICTOIRE BALFE.—This favourite vocalist has just been united, at St. Petersburgh, to Sir John Fiennes T. Crampton, Bart., K.C.B., Her Majesty's Minister at the court of Russia. Sir John, who succeeded as second baronet on the death of his father, the late Sir Philip Crampton, Bart., Surgeon-general to the forces in Ireland, in 1858, was formerly Minister Plenipotentiary to the United States, and is now in his fifty-third year, having been born in 1807.

ENGLISH OPERA, DRURY LANE.—The English Opera, under the direction of Dr. James Pech, which was to have appeared at the Princess's, has, we see, been transferred to the boards of Drury Lane, which opens on Monday, and for which, we understand, a good working company has been secured.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—At a meeting of directors, members, and associates, on Tuesday morning, in the Hanover-square Rooms, the following new compositions were tried:—

Symphony, Perry; Symphony, Beaumar; Overture (Recollections of the Past), Stephens; Overture, Banister; Overture, Graves; and Overture (Don Quixote), Silas.

Each composer directed the performance of his own work, Professor Bennett, the Society's conductor, being in the orchestra as president of the meeting. A symphony in E flat, by Herr Kapellmeister Rietz (of Leipsic—Mendelssohn's pupil), was also to have been tried; but as the overtures of Mynheer Silas, Mr. C. E. Stephens, and Mr. Banister were played through twice, and many parts of the symphony of Mr. Beaumar (a very young and adventuresome composer), gone through more than once, there was no time left for the German work. The occasion was one of high interest, and will win many friends for the Philharmonic Society.

M. FELICIEN DAVID, the well-known French composer, has arrived in London.

ROYAL ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The first concert this season for the exhibition of the students took place on Saturday, in the rooms of the Institution, Tenterden-street. The programme was made up of sacred music, with the exception of the instrumental pieces, as is customary in Lent, and the first part was devoted to Mozart's Requiem, evidently in memory of the departed Lord Westmoreland, the late President of the Academy.

The choruses were uniformly well sung. A less noisy accompaniment to the soli parts, and a little more confidence on the part of the principal singers, was all that was requisite to render the execution satisfactory. The Recordare was well sung by Miss Henderson, Miss Ibbetson, Mr. J. F. Goodban, and Mr. Tovey. The other pupils who took prominent parts were Miss Rowcroft, Miss Flewitt, and Mr. Bassett. The second part of the concert opened with the first movement of a MS. symphony by Miss Condron. Miss Bramley sang "But thou didst not leave" fairly, and Miss Henderson gave a careful and earnest version of "Hear ye, Israel." This young lady has an excellent voice, and achieved a success. Miss Rowcroft, in "Gratias agimus," gave great satisfaction. The clarinet obbligato was beautifully played by Mr. A. Williams, a son of the well known clarionetist. Mr. Tovey sang a MS. song by G. H. Thomas, "Bow down thine ear," a composition possessing good points; and Mr. Bassett was allotted "Honour and arms." A MS. duet, by Baumer, "Like as the hart," was given by Miss Rowcroft and Mr. Goodban, and well received. Miss Agnes Zimmerman essayed Beethoven's concerto in G. The execution was careful, but wanting in spirit. There was a large company present, and complaints were rife that the concerts are not given in a larger room. For an orchestra and chorus to be packed into rooms not so capacious as a private suite at the west-end is really preposterous, and we feel quite sure that it is against the interests of the Academy for any such arrangement to be continued.

DUBLIN.—(From the "Evening Mail").—It would appear that Italian Opera in Ireland takes a different phase from its wont elsewhere. We suppose this is as it should be, as there is much difficulty in keeping quiet those who visit the upper portion of the theatre. Lately, on the second representation of Marta, Madame Rudersdorff introduced "St. Patrick's Day" in the third act, leaving out the original song to make place for it. This so delighted the galleries, that we suggest that each singer should give an Irish melody at the next performance of that opera. Flotow has afforded a precedent in "The last rose of summer." Mdlle. Piccolomini could sing "Lesbia hath a beaming eye," and insinuate that the ladies were all "Norah Creinas," and "Oh, haste and leave this sacred isle," which might contain a sly hint that it was time for heretics to think of leaving "The Island of Saints," ere they were driven into the sea by the true sons of Mother Church. It would be too severe for her to venture on "When first I met thee warm and young," after the chilliness of her late reception, so we won't suggest that. Signor Belart might introduce "To ladies' eyes around, boys," Signor Aldighieri "Wreathe the bowl with flowers of soul," and Mr. Patey "Oh, that sight entrancing," a compliment to the dress circle. Then we would suggest to Signor Arditi to arrange in chorus, "Oh, the shamrock, the green immortal shamrock," and "Let Erin remember the days of old;' the latter of which would resuscitate glorious memories of the past. Thus might we have an Hibernian-Italian Opera, which would turn the yellings and interruptions of the Celtic occupants of the top gallery into sincere and hearty enthusiasm; and we do not for a moment think that the portions of the audience who pay the most would be so anti-national as not to join in the furore. We throw out this suggestion to Mr. Beale, as it might be worth something when he next brings an operatic party to Dublin.

PUBLIC EXHIBITION OF THE "APOLLO AND MARSYAS" WITH THE "SPOSALIZIO" IN THE BRERA AT MILAN.—Count Borommeo, director of the Brera Museum, on hearing of Mr. Morris Moore's arrival at Milan, at once invited him to exhibit there Raphael's "Apollo and Marsyas" in order that the capital of Lombardy might enjoy the advantage of seeing this famous master-piece. It is now on exhibition with the "Sposalizio." Several of the first connoisseurs of Milan who have already visited it have warmly ratified the decision of Paris, Munich, Dresden, Vienna and Venice, where, as it is well known, it created the greatest sensation among the artists and lovers of art, and have confessed their expectations to have been outstripped by the reality. The Cavaliere Giuseppe Molteni, Conservator of the Brera Gallery, and Sir C. Eastlake's chief adviser here, to whom, as we read in the annual reports on the National Gallery, our national pictures are from time to time entrusted for repair, has announced the "Apollo and Marsyas" to be a Raphael recognisable at a glance, a magnificent one, a stupendous work, a real wonder, opera stupenda una vera meraviglia, while, as well as others, he acknowledges the accurracy of Mr. Morris Moore's judgment with regard to its date, namely, 1505-6; that is after the "Sposalizio" and after the Borghese "Entombment." The Cavaliere Molteni considers the exhibition of the "Apollo and Marsyas" in the Brera Gallery as of paramount interest on account of its obvious relationship to the "Sposalizio." He declares that Milan ought to be its home, and that he would be the first to vote for retaining it here. Another significant circumstance is that the Brera Gallery possesses authentic and good specimens of both the Montagnas, as well as of Andrea Montagna, of both the Francias, and of Timoteo della Vite, names that ignorance, malignity, and self-interest have alternately to the detriment of the public service, so long endeavoured to fasten upon Raphael's exquisite creation of "Apollo and Marsyas." Sir C. Eastlake's friend and adviser, the Cavaliere Molteni, treats these efforts of Mr. Merris Moore's enemies with supreme ridicule and contempt.

W. A. MOZART.

BY OTTO JAHN.—(FOURTH PART.)

(From the Niederrheinische Musik-Zeitung.)

(Continued from page 211.)

IV.

Mozart now received the mysterious commission to write a requiem. The secret is at present solved; the person who gave the order was Leutgeb, the steward of Count Wallsegg, of Stuppach. This person, a passionate musician, was vain enough to wish to pass for a composer. His wife had died in January, 1791, and it was in memory of her that the requiem was ordered. The secresy observed in ordering and afterwards fetching it away was solely part of Leutgeb's plan of copying out, publishing and producing the same as his own composition, as was subsequently really the case.

Before Mozart could seriously think about the work he received a commission from the States of Bohemia to compose an opera for Leopold II.'s coronation in Prague. He set off, sketched his work in his carriage, carried out his sketch in his inn of an evening, and completed the whole in Prague. Thus was the opera La Clemenza di Tito written within eighteen days. Mozart had taken with him a pupil of his, a young musician, named Süssmayer. The latter is said to have written the recitativo secco, a fact borne out by its not being found in Mozart's original score. During the whole period Mozart was unwell, and returned in an ailing condition to Vienna about the middle of September.

On the 30th September, 1791, the first representation of Die Zauberflöte took place. The success was not at first as great as had been expected, though Mozart was called on at the conclusion. Very soon, however, Die Zauberflöte drew more than any opera ever known. In October it had been played twenty-four times, while the hundredth representation was given on the 23rd November, 1792, and the two hundredth on the 22nd October, 1795.

Although Herr Jahn adds nothing new concerning this opera,*

* Ulibischeff was, in this instance, from the detailed analysis of the overture to the end, an excellent predecessor. At page 614, in the remarks concerning the three chords in the overture and the second act, Jahn says—"By this means, (namely, by the masonically symbolic significance of the rhythm), is the doubt, so frequently raised, whether the second and third chords ought not to be legato, divided." He cites, among other works the Niederrheinische Musik Zeitung, 1856, p. 68 and p. 89; but the question with regard to the "doubt," applies to p. 68 only; in p. 89, et seq, the undoubted propriety of not taking the chords legato is established at length. With respect to what is said at page 619, concerning the peculiar sound of the finale to the first act, the reader is requested to compare the remarks in the first annual series of the Niederrheinische Musik Zeitung, p. 235, on the character of a sustained tone, in our second article on the performance of Beethoven's symphonies, especially the symphony in A major.

In justice to our observations on the duet "La ci darem," and other pieces in Don Juan, in No. 4, p. 26 and p. 27, we direct the reader's attention to the statement, at p. 645, that in the entrance air of the "Queen of Night," the first, and evidently slower movement, as Jahn himself says, "has no tempo marked in the original."

we are particularly delighted with those passages in which the author dwells on and explains the peculiarly German character of the music. As a specimen, we select the following:—

"The part of Sarastro was, in a different way, a new creation, like that of Osmin. If the latter possessed a model in the buffo of Italian opera, the part of Sarastro is without any predecessor properly so called, for the dignified parts" (Anstandsrollen) "which fell to the lot of the basses in the Italian operas, are as little to be compared with it, as barytone parts, like those of Almaviva and Don Giovanni. Directly opposed to the passionate character of such parts is the manly dignity and grave calm of the sage and the ruler, as represented in Sarastro, and which would be much less thankful in musical representation had not Mozart, who here manifests his genuine German nature, fallen back upon their source in the heart. Most unmistakeably is the strongly marked kindliness of nature, which, in many respects, is capable of injuring a high degree of idealism, a peculiar manifestation of the German character, and one which is not essentially changed even by the foreign-like symbolism. For the simple, heartfelt expression of this passionless but warm appreciation of benevolence and confidence, such as is cherished in the mind of a man matured by the seriousness of life, Mozart developed a musical organ in the strong, sonorous bass voice, and gained a new and essential element of dramatico-musical characterisation.

"A pair of lovers like Pamina and Tamino, so ideal and so enthusiastic, cannot disguise their German origin and character. We shall find nothing like them in Mozart's Italian operas, and even Belmont and Constanze, although essentially of similar nature, display more humad passion. It is true that Mozart has found for them another mode of expression, not alone in the greater freedom of the forms but, principally, by hitting upon that tone which, simply and truly, renders German feeling, with all its still, calm fervour and warmth—which expresses the idealistic element of that same feeling without false sentimentality or mawkishness.

"Papageno is, it is true, only a jester, far removed from delicate wit and genuine humour, but his jokes, despite their great simplicity, are healthy and natural, and unmistakeably connected with one aspect of German feeling and sentiment, which, in its limited sphere is exceedingly powerful, and explains how it is that Papageno became, and still is, the favourite of a great part of the public. Although Schikaneder, who made the part exactly to fit himself, and subsequently represented himself as Papageno, on the front of the new theatre in the Wieden, a theatre he erected with the money he made by Die Zauberflöte, had some share in this success, the principal merit even here falls to Mozart, who succeeded in imparting to the good humoured jollity peculiar to our nation, such a happy musical expression in an artistically developed form, that what he had learnt by studying the people was readily welcomed back by them.

"If there is a personage in Die Zauberflöte who displays German character it is Papageno. Despite his feather-dress, this child of nature is, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, a German. The essential difference between him and the comic personage of the Opera buffa, especially Leporello, who, outwardly considered, appears to come nearest to him, is good nature and feeling, which, under all circumstances, bursts out frankly and naïvely. The musical characterisation which produced, in Papageno, a completely new creation, altogether removed him from that subordinate region in which the Casperles used to move, by falling back exclusively on the heart, and by presenting us, in all their cordial simplicity, with the involuntary, immediate manifestations of a natural, if not a noble, feeling, just as the situation called them forth; thus the musical expression came to be, in the best sense of the word, a popular one, because not founded upon accidental and detailed traits, at least, not on such as conceal the true nature of the character, but upon what is genuine and true in the heart and disposition of the people, and which, through the soul and by the hand of the artist, has now been born again, and is a living thing. The German stamp already mentioned on the musical form is, therefore, most palpably manifest in Papageno; in no other part is the relationship, already alluded to between the formation of the melodies and that which most obtains to Mozart's instrumental compositions, so strikingly plain. In addition to this, with the exception of the character of Songiness" (des Lied haften) "necessitated by the nature of the subject, we nowhere discover any need of obtaining material means of characterisation by dragging in definite forms, such, for instance, as the generally favourite waltz or other dances, or sharply marked turns of national vocal melodies. Everything that calls to mind old forms, developed by Italian opera, is avoided, and every foreign influence cut off, and then, completely out of German feeling, the form is freely developed, according to the standard of the universal laws affecting musical shape, and the requirements of the situation in each case.

"This genuine German nature of the mental and musical conception, as well as the consequent freedom in the treatment of the form, the result of which, by the way, is the closest adherence to the dramatic movement, has struck us, even when considering most of the principal characters, the Queen of Night alone being a partial exception, and, finally, appears to be that which constitutes the peculiar character of Die Zauberflöte as a genuine German opera.

"Mozart did not seek content alone in Freemasonry, the universal and profound interest in which was a characteristic sign of the period and its movement, and German feeling and German heart are plainly displayed in the manner in which Freemasonry was conceived, developed and applied. Here, also, then, Mozart stood upon national ground; it is precisely what, in intention, is noblest and best, and, in artistic delineation, highest and most significant, which is conceived in a truly German way; and the more profoundly the artist was moved in the recesses of his heart, the more strongly and the more directly has he stamped the musical impression with a German character. It is not, therefore, merely by accident that, in order to pourtray a moment of the most solemn gravity, he selected an old German choral melody, and made up his mind to treat it in a way which, also, was peculiar to Germany. It is a fortunate thing that musical delineation, from its nature, was obliged to leave on one side the characteristic element—which produces so chilling an effect in allegory—and derives its impulses from the deeply-moved and solemnly excited feelings alone. Here is clearly the foundation of musical creation! hence proceeds a higher spirit through the whole, a spirit which imparts even to what is in itself unimportant, to what is naïve and merry, an expression that causes us to feel that these elements, also, are part and parcel of the whole.

"Whenever the mystic element is brought prominently forward, the orchestra assumes a totally different character. Not only are unusual expedients, such as trombones and basset-horns, employed, but, by means of various combinations, a strange description of sound is produced, which, in conjunction with the richest light and shade, and the most delicate gradations from heavy sorrow to dazzling brilliancy, always preserves its fundamental tone of solemnity and elevation, so that the hearer fancies himself transported to some sphere removed from the every-day world. Not only are unsuspected capabilities of the orchestra brought into play, but justice was first done, on a large scale, to the power possessed by the orchestra to characterise by colouring; and Die Zauberflöte is the starting-point for everything which our music—so inventive in this particular—has since done. We must not forget, however, that, with Mozart, instrumental colouring is merely one means in conjunction with others, to do full justice to the artistic idea, and never by itself pretends to repress the latter, far less to replace it."

"The fact that Die Zauberflöte, in its whole musical conception, is truly German as to tone, treatment and form, and that, on it, German opera first employed, in the domain most peculiar to it, all the resources of developed art with freedom and mastery, gives it a most particular importance and position even among the operas of Mozart. If, in his Italian operas, he has assumed the inheritance of a long tradition, and, by peculiar development, brought it, in a certain degree, to a conclusion, with Die Zauberflöte he steps on the threshold of the future, and unlocks the sanctuary of national art to his countrymen. The latter understood him, for Die Zauberflöte forced its way, immediately and universally, among the people, as no musical work of art had ever done before, and it still maintains its place even at the present day. What an influence Die Zauberflöte has excited upon the progress of German music is something which can escape no one who has an eye for the development of art."

ST. MARTIN'S HALL—Messrs. Griffiths and Perkins gave a concert on Thursday night. The conductor was Mr. H. Matthews, late director of the Islington Choral Society; and the chorus was composed of members of the Handel Festival Choir. Miss Charlotte Tasker played a fantasia on English and Irish melodies, and Beethoven's "duet concertante," for flute and pianoforte, in D, the flute being taken by Mr. J. Sander. Miss Banks sang an air by Balfe, and was encored in the "Bailiff's Daughter of Islington" (from Chappell's collection of English airs), which she had given with much expression, but which she did not repeat, substituting for it the "Merry Zingara."

ADVERTISEMENTS.

JUVENILE PIANOFORTE MUSIC,

Price One Shilling each piece.

OPERATIC AIRS.

Power of Love	Satanella.
Slaves' Chorus	Do.
Our hearts are not	Do.
Oh, would she but	Do.
The Shadow Air	Dinorah.
Santa Maria	Do.
Fanciulle (canzonet)	Do.
Hunting Song	Do.
M' appari tutt' amor	Martha.
Drinking Song	Do.
Servants' Chorus	Do.
Finale to First Act	Do.
La donna e mobile..	Rigoletto.
Fra poco a me	Lucia.
O luce di quest' anima	Donizetti.
A te o cara	Puritani.
Suona la tromba	Do.
Son Vergin (Polacca)	Do.
As I view	Sonambula.
Maid, those bright eyes	Do.
Do not mingle	Do.
While this heart	Do.
Stillso gently o'er me	Do.
Com' è gentil	Don Pasquale.
Il Segreto	Lucrezia Borgia.

SONGS.

Beautiful Star and Ring de Banjo.
Good News from Home.
We are coming Sister Mary; and Wait for the Waggon.
Nelly Gray.
Hard Times.
I'm off to Charlestown.
Ma Brunette (Arnaud)
Summer Bloom is past (Miss Hay.)
Annie Laurie (Scotch Air.)
La Sirène de Sorrente (Arnaud.)
Partant pour la Syrie.
Cradle Song (Mendelssohn.)
When the Swallows (Abt.)
Old Folks at Home (American.)
Red, White, and Blue (National.)
Bonnie Dundee (Scotch Air.)
Home, Sweet Home (Swiss Air.)
Les yeux bleues (French Song.)
In the Greenwood Free (Richards.)
Bright Things can never Die (Rimbault.)
Consiglio a Nice (Guglielmo.)
Trab, Trab (Kücken.)
Io te voglio bene assaje (Neapolitan Air.)

RONDOS, PIECES, &c.

Alexis	Himmel.
Une belle fleur	Hunten.
La pensée	Neuland.
Air Favori (A flat)	De Beriot.
Ghost Melody	Corsican Brothers.
Nuns' Prayer	Oberthur.
La Florentine	Burgmüller.
Rheinweinlied	Accou.
Greek Pirates' Chorus	Alvars.
Camille	Ravina.

DANCE MUSIC.

Maud Valse.
Konigsberg Polka.
Satanella Quadrille (complete.)
Pantomime Galop.

Alice Waltz	Browne.
Violet Mazurka	Duchesne.
Merry Gipsy Polka	Wenzell.
Fête de Lilas Quadrille	Lamotte.
Crown Polka	Köhler.
Vilikins Valse	Laurent.
Electric Galop	Gollmick.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

BOOSEY AND SONS' NEW LIST.

THE CROWN DIAMONDS.

Complete for the Pianoforte, in cloth. Price 6s. Forming the 20th volume of Boosey and Sons' Series of Operas.

DUSSEK'S PLUS ULTRA and WOHLFFL'S NE PLUS ULTRA.

Edited by J. W. Davison, with Critical and Biographical Introductions. In one volume. Price 4s.

CHOPIN'S MAZURKAS,

Complete in one volume. Edited by J. W. Davison, with Introduction and Portrait. Price 8s.

ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER,

Complete for Pianoforte. By Henry Smart. Price 3s.

DE BERIOT'S AIRS FOR THE VIOLIN,

Complete with all the Variations, Nos. 1 to 7, in one book. Price 1s.

 Pianoforte part (ad. lib.), price 3s. 6d.

ONE HUNDRED GERMAN WALTZES FOR THE VIOLIN.

By Strauss, Lanner, and Labitzky. Price 1s.

BRINLEY RICHARDS' ARRANGEMENT

Of Balfe's "Riflemen, form," as a March for the Pianoforte. Price 2s. 6d.

 As performed by command of the Queen by the Band of the Royal Horse Guards at Buckingham Palace.

KUHE'S TWO NEW FANTASIAS

On "Domino Noir" and "Zampa." Price 3s. each.

GLUCK'S IPHIGENIA IN TAURIS.

Now ready, the Three Principal Songs, with English words. Price 2s. each.
1. "Oh, Greece, how mourns thy hapless daughter."
2. "Ever linked from early childhood."
3. "Oh, thou that wert of life the source."

The complete Opera, in English and French. Price 6s.

DINORAH, PARTS I, AND II.

For Voice and Pianoforte, with English and Italian words. Price 1s. each. To be completed in Eight Monthly Parts.

STANDARD OVERTURES,

FOR LARGE AND SMALL BAND. The first number of Boosey and Sons new series (The Crown Diamonds) will be ready by April. Price 5s. and 3s. To be continued every month.

SCHLESSER'S THREE GRAND DUETS,

On "Martha," "La Traviata," and "Dinorah." Price 5s. each. Published this day.

THE POPULAR SONGS OF THE SEASON.

Sung by Madame DOLBY, Madame LOUISA VINNING, WILBYE COOPER, and SIMS REEVES.

	s.	d.		s.	d.
Janet's Choice, by Claribel ..	2	6	When you and I were young, by Allen	2	0
Don't come teasing me, Sir, by Hatton	2	6	O tender shadow, by Meyerbeer..	3	0
Sweetheart, by Balfe	2	0	Margaretta, by Balfe	3	0
Bird of Song, by Hatton	2	0	The maid I love hath many a grace, by Hatton	2	0
Thou art so near, by Reichardt ..	3	0	You chide me for loving, by Berger	2	0
O live, or let me die, by Meyerbeer	2	0	The Quadroon girl, by Balfe ..	2	6
Sister Mary, by Meyerbeer ..	2	0	The song of love and death, by Balfe	2	0
It was fifty years ago, by Hatton	2	0	Sweet Katie, by Calcott	2	0
Why don't he tell me so? by Berger	2	0	Magenta, by Balfe	2	0
Swifter than the swallow's flight, by Berger	2	0

London: Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

THE CLASSICAL ORGANIST,

A SELECTION OF CELEBRATED COMPOSITIONS

FROM THE WORKS OF

HANDEL, MOZART, BEETHOVEN, MENDELSSOHN, MEYERBEER, &c.

ARRANGED FROM THE ORCHESTRAL SCORES FOR THE ORGAN,

WITH PEDAL OBBLIGATO,

BY

J. T. STONE.

In Three Vols., oblong folio, 15s. each; or in Eighteen Numbers, 3s. each.

MESSRS. D'ALMAINE & Co. in announcing to the professors and accomplished amateurs of the Organ, the publication of the above important Work, beg to state that they have been induced to publish the same, in order to supply the requirements of the Modern School of Organ-playing.

The CC scale being now universally recognised as the only true and legitimate compass for the Manuals and Pedal-clavier of an Organ, it is evident, that most of the former arrangements of classical compositions for the GG instrument —with its incomplete and defective Pedal-board—are inadequate to the capabilities of the CC organ. For instance, in previous arrangements for the GG scale, not only the position of the different instruments, but also the vocal parts, have often been reversed, in order to facilitate the execution of certain passages; thereby violating established theoretical rules, and producing a totally different effect to that intended by the composer.

The Editor, having arranged the celebrated compositions contained in the present work from the full scores, has endeavoured to represent, as far as practicable, the orchestral effects capable of being produced upon the grandest and most majestic of all musical instruments.

CONTENTS OF VOL. 1.

1. Wedding March (Midsummer Night's Dream) ... MENDELSSOHN.
   Benedizione de' Pugnali (Gli Ugonotti) ... ... MEYERBEER.
2. Hallelujah Chorus (Messiah) ... ... HANDEL.
   Benedictus (1st Mass) ... ... MOZART.
3. The Heavens are telling (Creation) ... ... HAYDN.
4. Hallelujah (Mount of Olives) ... ... BEETHOVEN.
5. Zadok the Priest (Coronation Anthem ... ... HANDEL.
   Sanctus Dominus (Requiem) ... ... MOZART.
6. Allegro Vivace (Jupiter Sinfonia) .. .. MOZART.
   March (Fidelio) ... ... BEETHOVEN.

CONTENTS OF VOL. 2.

7. He gave them hailstones (Israel in Egypt) ... HANDEL.
   Lasst uns singen von der Gnade (St. Paul) ... MENDELSSOHN.
   Sanctus Dominus (Mass in C) ... ... BEETHOVEN.
1. Wie lieblich sind die Boten (St. Paul) ... ... MENDELSSOHN.
   Trema, trema, scellerato! (Il Don Giovanni) ... MOZART.
9. Cum Sancto Spiritu (3rd Mass) ... ... CHERUBINI.
   With verdure clad (Creation) ... ... HAYDN.
10. From the Censer (Solomon) ... ... HANDEL.
    Wachet auf! ruft uns die Stimme (St. Paul) ... MENDELSSOHN.
11. Marcia Funebre sulla morte d' un Eroe ... ... BEETHOVEN.
    Andante (Quintett in C minor) ... ... MOZART.
12. Sia gloria eterna e onor (Gli Ugonotti) ... ... MEYERBEER.
    Adagio (Sestett, Op. 81) ... ... BEETHOVEN.
    We never will bow down (Judas Maccabeus) ... HANDEL.

CONTENTS OF VOL. 3.

13. Quoniam tu solus (Mass in C) ... ... BEETHOVEN.
    Sey getreu bis in den Tod (St. Paul ... ... MENDELSSOHN.
14. Dona nobis pacem (4th Mass ... ... HAYDN.
    Ave Maria ... ... CHERUBINI.
15. Praise thou the Lord (Lobgesang), ... MENDELSSOHN.
    Let their celestial Concerts (Samson) ... ... HANDEL.
16. Marche du Sacre (Le Prophète) ... . MEYERBEER.
    Hallelujah (Saul) ... ... HANDEL.
17. Sound an alarm (Judas Maccabeus) ... ... HANDEL,
    In native worth (Creation) ... ... HAYDN.
18. Jerusalem (St. Paul) ... ... MENDELSSOHN.
    Pignus Futurse (Litany in B flat) ... ... MOZART.

This work is engraved in the first style, on large plates, oblong folio size, and printed on a thick superfine paper, which has been made expressly for the purpose. The publishers confidently state, that they have spared no expense in rendering the present work for the organ truly worthy of the "King of Instruments."

 The copyright of "The Classical Organist" is the sole and exclusive property of Messrs. D'Almaine and Co.

LONDON: D'ALMAINE & CO., 104, NEW BOND STREET, W.

A specimen copy may be had gratis and postage free on application to the publishers, or to Mr. J. T. Stone, 40, Berners-street, W.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castleber-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, April 7, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 15. SATURDAY, APRIL 14, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d

U. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons:
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.
And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes .. .. .. — Dr. MARK.

Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping .. .. — Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ .. .. — Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte .. .. — Herr SIEBERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin .. .. — Mons. ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola .. .. .. — Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet .. .. .. — Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments .. .. .. — Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English) .. .. .. — Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes .. .. — Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

15

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.

MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE NINETEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 23rd, 1860.

MR. SIMS REEVES' BENEFIT.

The Programme will be selected from the works of VARIOUS MASTERS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

POSTHUMOUS QUARTET, in F Major, No. 17 .. .. Beethoven.
M. Sainton, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.
SONG, "Night" .. .. Mendelssohn.
Madame Sainton Dolby.
SONG, "Deeper and deeper still" .. .. Handel.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SONG, "Frühlingslied" .. .. Mendelssohn.
Mrs. Sims Reeves.
SONG, "Adelaide" .. .. Beethoven.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SONATA, in F. Major .. .. Mozart.
Miss Arabella Goddard.

PART II.

SONATA, in G Major, Pianoforte and Violin .. .. Dussek.
Miss Arabella Goddard and M. Sainton.
SONG, "False friend, wilt thou smile or weep? (Cenci) J. W. Davison.
Madame Sainton Dolby.
SONG, "Dalla sua pace" .. .. Mozart.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
DUET, "Pray leave me but a moment" .. .. Spohr.
Mrs. Sims Reeves and Madame Sainton Dolby.
SONG, "The Stolen Kiss" .. .. Beethoven.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
QUARTET, in E flat, No. 4. .. .. Rossini.
M. Sainton, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.

CONDUCTOR—Mr. BENEDICT.

Stalls, 10s, 6d. and 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradberry's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.—MR. ALFRED MELLON begs to announce that he will return to London about the middle of June, when he will be open to any engagements for the Band of the Orchestral Union, which he has reconstructed. Principal Artists—M. M. Sainton, H. Hill, W. Watson, E. Payton, Doyle, Trust, G. Collins, Aylward, Howell senr, White, P. S. Pratten, Barret, Lazarus, T. Owen, Hausser, C. Harper, Standen, T. Harper, Stanton Jones, W. Winterbottom, Cioffi, Hughes, and F. C. Horton. Applications respecting engagements to be made to Mr. George Dolby, 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON.—[illegible] CONCERT, on Wednesday Evening, April 25th, at [illegible]. Programme—First Part:—Overture, the Isles of Fingal, Mendelssohn; Air, Jours de mon enfance (Pré aux Clercs), Miss Augusta Thompson; Symphony concertante, for two pianofortes and orchestra, [illegible] and Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Dussek; Scena, (MS.), Mr. Santley; [illegible] (Lurline), Wallace. Second Part:—Sinfonia Eroica, Beethoven; [illegible] citta sei tu (L'Etoile du Nord), Miss Augusta Thompson and [illegible]; Overture (Gustave), Auber. Conductor, Mr. Alfred Mellon.

CHARLES SALAMAN, [illegible]

ONE PENNY NEWSPAPER

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Friday, May 4th.—Tickets for THE GREAT FESTIVAL PERFORMANCE OF ELIJAH, on the occasion of the Inauguration of the Bronze Memorial Statue of Mendelssohn, are now on sale at the Crystal Palace; at No. 2, Exeter Hall; or, by order, of the usua Agents.

Admission tickets, 5s. (if purchased before 1st May); Reserved stalls in blocks,l as arr nged at the Handel Festival, in the area, 5s. extra; or in the corner galler es, 10s. 6d. extra.

T.e new Season Tickets will admit, subject to the usual regulations.

NOTICE.—Immediate application is requisite for Central Blocks. Post Office Orders or Cheques to be payable to George Grove.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—June 25th, 26th, and 28th, GREAT ORPHEONISTE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Vouchers for tickets for this great combination of the Franch Choral Societies, comprising deputations from nearly every Department of France, representing 170 distinct Choral Societies, and numbering between Three and Four thousand performers, who will visit England expressly to hold a Great Musical Festival at the Crystal Palace on the above days, are now on issue at the Crystal Palace; at No. 2, Exeter Hall; or by order of the usual agents.

The prices of admission will be as follows:—The set of Transferable tickets (one admission to each of the 3 days) 12s. 6d.; Reserved seats (for the 3 days) 12s. 6d. extra; or in the corner galleries, 25s. extra

The new Season Tickets will admit on the above occasion, subject to the usual regulations.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—MR. MELCHIOR WINTER (tenor), and Mr. BENJAMIN WELLS (flautist), beg to announce that their GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT, will take place at the above rooms on the 28th of May, (Whit Monday.) Full particulars will shortly be published.—17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MR. MELCHIOR WINTER will sing at Myddelton Hall, Islington, on the 17th instant; Chatham, 23rd; Hanover-square Rooms, 26th; Romford, May 3rd; Hanover-square Rooms, 28th. Address, 17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

MISS LOUISA VAN NOORDEN and Mr. P. E. Van NOORDEN'S ANNUAL CONCERT at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Thursday evening, April 26th, 1860, commence at 8 o'clock. Artists already engaged: Madlle. Parepa, Miss M. Van Noorden, Mr. Santley, Signor Luigi. Conductors: Messrs. Francesco Berger and P. E. Van Noorden. Stalls numbered, 10s. 6d.; reserved seats, 5s.; unreserved seats, 2s. To be had at Mr. Van Noorden's residence, 115, Great Russell-street, Bedford-square; of the principal west-end musicsellers, and of Messrs. Keith and Prowse, Cheapside, City.

MR. LANGTON WILLIAMS begs to inform his friends and the public, that his Annual Grand Concert will take place at St. Martin's Hall, on Wednesday Evening, April the 25th, when the most eminent artists will appear.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 63, Burton-crescent, New-road.

MR. TENNANT has returned to town. All communications respecting engagements for himself and Mrs. Tennant to be addressed to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or to their residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MRS. TENNANT (Sister of Mr. Sims Reeves), begs to acquaint her friends and the public that she continues giving lessons in singing. For terms, apply to Messrs. Boosey and Sons, 28, Holles-street, Cavendish-square; Messrs. Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street; or at her own residence, 307, Oxford-street, New Bond-street, W.

MR. WALLWORTH'S engagement with the Pyne and Harrison Opera Company being terminated, he is now at liberty for concerts, pupils, &c.—30, Edwardes-street, Portman-square, W.

MADAME BORCHARDT having returned to Town from her Operatic Tour with Madlle. Piccolomini, is at liberty to accept engagements for Concerts, &c., for the season. Address to the care of Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MR. PATEY begs to announce that he has returned to Town, and will be open to accept engagements for Orotorios or Concerts on and after the 16th inst. All communications to be addressed to 9, Cambridge-street, Hyde-park.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

MISS ELEONORA WILKINSON having removed from her late residence, her present address is 29, Blandford-square.

BOROUGH OF LEEDS.—The Council of the Borough of Leeds are prepared to appoint an ORGANIST for the Town Hall Organ, at the salary of £200 per annum. The appointment will be made subject to public competition. Printed conditions may be obtained by application at the Town Clerk's Office, on and after the 21st instant.

By Order,

Leeds, 11th April, 1860. JOHN A. IKIN, Town Clerk.

FOR THE ORGAN.—SANTA MARIA and MARCIA RELIGIOSO.—The celebrated Coro and Marcia in Meyerbeer's Opera DINORAH, arranged from the full score for the organ, with Pedal Obbligato by J. T. Stone, price 3s.

Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Second Edition, Folio, pp. 40, stitched. Price, complete, 7s. 6d.

R. ROSS'S Useful Morning and Evening Full Service in F, for four voices, with organ accompaniment. Separately, Te Deum and Jubilate, 3s.; Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis, 3s. London: J. A. Novello.

DR. CALLCOTT'S PIANOFORTE GRAMMAR.—Arranged for beginners and teachers in schools, by William Hutchins Callcott, cloth, 4s. "It is not possible to name a treatise so copious in information as this."—C. Londale's Musical Circulating Library, 26, Old Bond-street.

Just Published.

"GLÜCKLICHE STUNDEN," Song for Soprano or Tenor voice, with German and Italian words, composed by H. S. Oakeley, Esq. Also, (by the same), THREE FOUR-PART SONGS, (No. 1, Morgenlied; No. 2, Abendlied; No. 3, Nachtlied;) with German and English words. Ewer & Co., 87, Regent-street.

Just Published, price 3s. 6d.

"ROMANZA," for the Violoncello and Piano, composed and dedicated to Frederick Charles Pawle, Esq., by Edward Thurnam. Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London.

MEYERBEER'S NEW WORK—"ASPIRATION"—CANTIQUE. (Short Anthem.) The words from the original latin of Thomas a Kempis, "De imitatione Christi." Composed for SIX VOICES (three sopranos, two tenors, and bass), with Recitatives for a BASS SOLO, and Organ (or Harmonium) accompaniment ad libitum, by GIACOMO MEYERBEER. Price, in score, 4s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where Meyerbeer's setting of the Lord's Prayer, for four voices, 3s., and the Serenade, for eight voices, "This house to love is holy," 4s., may be obtained.

NEW SONG FOR THE VOLUNTEERS.—"The Good Old Days," Patriotic song, composed by J. L. Hatton, price 2s. 6d. Published this day by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

CHEAP EDITION OF MOZART'S TWELFTH MASS and ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER, arranged in the most effective manner for the Pianofore, by Henry Smart, price 3s. each, complete, or handsomely bound, 5s. each. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

ARTISTS' VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—(38th Middlesex), Viscount Bury, Captain Commandant. This corps, composed of Artists, Amateurs, and others interested in any branch of Art, drills at the Argyll Rooms, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at Five o'clock; Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at Half-past Six; and at Burlington House on Wednesday mornings at Eight. Officers appointed to First Company: Captain, Viscount Bury; Lieutenant, H. W. Phillips; Ensign, J. E. Millais, A.R.A. Third and Fourth Companies are now forming; gentlemen wishing to join the corps can be enrolled at the hours of drill, or on application to F. P. Cockerell, Esq., Honorary Secretary, 8, Regent-street.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons' military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

REVIEWS.

"Summer Gladness"—song, words by the Rev. Horatius Bonar, music by Mrs. Sampson (Cramer, Beale & Co.). The poetry, of a purely devotional character, is excellent, and if the music were as new as it is expressive (and well written, by the way), we should have to congratulate the fair composer at all points. In paying her this compliment, we are not disposed to quarrel with the sympathy she exhibits for Schubert, in the symphony, and for Spohr (Jessonda ?) in the melody and harmony of her really charming song.

"Grace"—by Handel Gear (J. A. Novello). Mr. Handel Gear sings grace with appropriate solemnity and at the same time in an artistic spirit. We append the form of his thanksgiving:—

"For these and all thy mercies given,
We bless and praise Thy name, O Lord;
May we receive them with thanksgiving,
Ever trusting in Thy word.
To Thee alone be honour, glory,
Now and henceforth for evermore. Amen."

The above words are set in very correct and effective four-part harmony—first for alto, two tenors and bass, next for soprano, alto, tenor and bass, the latter being merely a transposition of the former, from F to A.

"Les Naiades du Rhin', première fantaisie pour piano"—J. de Grenier (Robert Cocks & Chappell). As a "première fantaisie" the above piece may be recommended. It is neatly written (a point we are always inclined to insist upon as of the highest importance), and though somewhat monotonous, the first three pages of the moderato (3-4 time) are not inelegant. The episode, besides a nice feeling for harmony, shows a more earnest wish to avoid the beaten track. We do not like, however (for the same reason, probably, that some one objected to Dr. Fell), the subjoined progression:—

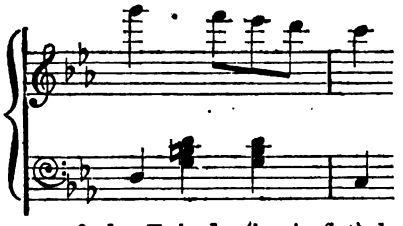
Still less (for a stronger reason than that which promoted the afore-cited objection to Dr. Fell) do we like it when it appears as follows:—

Elsewhere M. de Grenier (de Cassagnac?—no, he is not de Grenier but Granier de—) pitches his harmonic tent as below:—

—which, though a thought tame (and for a reason to the expounding of which Dr. Fell can in no way help us), we, nevertheless, prefer.

"Queen of Fresh Flowers"—duet, words by Bishop Heber, music by Mrs. Sampson (Cramer, Beale and Chappell). The words of Bishop Heber are beautiful, and had we space we should quote them, even though they proceed from a mitred poet. The music is hardly worthy of the authoress of "Summer Gladness," being both trivial and commonplace. In "Days past long ago"—words by James Onions, Esq., music by Mrs. Sampson (same publishers)—the fair composer triumphantly wins back her laurels. The words, though on a used-up theme, are of more than average merit, and were it not for the insertion of a superfluous "but" (which might advantageously be metamorphised into "and") would be irreproachable. The melody with which the music of Onions has inspired Mrs. Sampson is extremely graceful and expressive; nor is a word of hostile criticism called for by the accompaniment, which is in equal degree neat and appropriate.

"'Charms'—étude à la valse"—for pianoforte, by P. E. van Noorden (Van Noorden and Co.) Why this piece should be called étude is as difficult to explain as why it should be entitled "Charms." The principal theme consists chiefly of an ordinary distribution of the chords of the tonic and dominant into arpeggio, during a temporary departure from which Mr. Van Noorden plunges head and ears into consecutive octaves between extreme parts moving in the same direction:—



The first part of the Episode (in A flat), beginning at page 3, is graceful and less commonplace; but the second part—con fuoco (page 4),—is by no means as good. The variation on the first part, however, brings us back again to smooth water.

"Lassie, are you waking"—written and composed by George Linley (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell). The words, in the serenade fashion, are in Mr. Linley's simplest and happiest vein; and but for one or two questionable points the music would be no less unexceptionable. Here is one:—

Here another:—

Here another :—

And here another :—

The second part of the song, beginning on the words, "Come, come, the birds are singing," is both pretty and well harmonised.

"The last Rose of Summer"—for two voices—by Mrs. Holman Andrews (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell). If Mrs. Holman Andrews will reharmonise the following she will decidedly improve her otherwise unexceptionable arrangement of the beautiful melody which Gospadin Flotow did not write :—

The point deserves consideration.

"Night Watchers"—song, words by J. F. Waller, LL.D., music by Joseph Robinson (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell). The words of this song are conceived in a poetic spirit, and the music with which they are associated, in addition to the grace and expressiveness of its melody, is harmonised in a thoroughly musician-like style.

"I wish I were a child again"—song, words by Annie Bentley, music by G. A. Macfarren (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell)—but for its marked originality might be mistaken for one of those exquisite melodies (from Mr. W. Chappell's Music of the Olden Time), of which Mr. Macfarren has harmonised so many. Nothing can be more unobtrusive, pretty, and even tender than the melody, nothing more finished and unaffected than the accompaniment. Placed in the third act of an English opera, this little ballad would produce a "furore."

"The memory of thee"—ballad, sung by Miss Leffler, composed by John W. Morgan (Cramer, Beale, and Chappell). "The Warning of the Rose"—ballad, written and composed by M. Rophino Lacy (same publishers). "Round the corner waiting"—ballad, composed by William Walker (Robert Cocks and Co.) There is nothing remarkable to notice in any of these songs. The first is on the extremest verge of common-place. The second has more attempt in it, and is not without a certain grace. The third has an ordinary melody, and is generally well harmonised; but at page 3, line 4, bar 4, the chord of E comes in so awkwardly as to derange the cadence altogether. The whole page, by the way, wants revision, the signature at the beginning of every line (an engraver's error) having one sharp instead of three.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

A CHAMBER-ORGAN WITH THE GERMAN AND ENGLISH SCALES OF PEDALS.

An instrument on the following plan I am not aware has been built, and although the German scale of keys and pedals is well enough for fugues, choruses, &c., in solo playing on the swell, or soft stops in the choir, it is not so well suited, on account of the pedal-notes reaching so high, and the pedal-pipes being too loud for the fundamental bass, to a swell solo, with a soft left-hand accompaniment. To provide for both, I recommend the following arrangement, that if carried out would, I trust, satisfy the advocates for either the German or English G organ, as follows:—

Plan—Two Sets of Keys.

Upper Set, from CCC to A, six octaves and three-quarters.
Lower do., from CC to A, four octaves and a sixth.

Stops in the Upper Set—Swell.

Stop Diapason, from tenor C to the top of the key-board.
Dulciana, ditto to ditto.
Stopped Flute, ditto to ditto.
Hautboy (organ) ditto to F, continued with harmoniums.
Clarionet, ditto to the top (harmonium flute-notes).
Bassoon, from B below tenor C to CCC (harmonium.)

Stops in the Lower Set.

Stop Diapason (soft and sweet).	Chorus (three ranks).
Open Diapason (round and deep).	Trumpet down to fiddle G.
Clarabella.	Trombone, from the next note below to CC.
Principal.	Vox humana (Human voice) to Tenor C.
Dulciana.	Swell Coupler.
Open Flute to tenor C.
Fifteenth.
Twelfth.

German Pedals from CC to middle C.
English Pedals from GGG to A, a ninth above.

The English uppermost, the GGG in a line with the CC below, both to slide in and out.

To the English scale add five soft stop diapason notes, from BB to GGG, to speak on the lowest octave of the upper keys as a continuation of the stop diapason in the lower set.

N.B.—These pipes complete the ninth of pedal bass to a soft solo in the treble.

Composition Pedals.

To draw on the lower keys, the open diapason, principal, open flute, fifteenth, twelfth, and chorus: pedal to the right. Next pedal (close enough to enable the foot to press down both at one time) to draw the reeds in the lower set and the swell coupler.

A third pedal (to the left) to reverse the preceding.

The one that draws the reeds to open the swell-box to be closed when the third pedal is pressed down.

The lowest octave of German pedals to pull down the keys of the lowest octave in the upper set, on which must speak an octave of bourdon pipes attached to a draw-stop.

Having given a full description of the instrument, I will now turn to its utility, first apprising my readers it is intended for a concert or drawing-room, and its high scale in the swell is to afford players plenty of scope for light playing, in which they may treat the swell as a violin and display what the organ is capable of producing, by such as desire to advance and not tread the one old worn-out path as some prefer, till the school is fairly become stale and insipid to the advanced taste of musicians.

Suppose I want the proper combination for one of Bach's pedal fugues. I draw all the stops of the lower key-board, the German pedals and the bourdon. Here I have the German pedal organ; and if I desire more power, I can add the swell coupler without the bassoon, or it, to add brilliancy to the pedal notes.

If again, I want a proper accompaniment to a solo on the swell, I push in the German pedals and draw out the English with the five-stop diapason notes, by which I have a pedal scale of soft notes from GGG to A, the ninth above, with either a stop diapason or dulciana left-hand accompaniment, or, I can use the vox humana for the solo, and accompany it on the swell with a soft pedal bass. I am aware the chief novelty in this plan is the two sets of pedals, but I may be allowed to observe, an organ on the preceding arrangement would possess all that can be desired for a concert or drawing-room performance.

Haydn Wilson,
Professor of the Organ, Pianoforte, and Theory, London.

PASSAGES FROM SPOHR'S LIFE.

(Translated from Alexander Malibran's "Popular Biography.")

In January, 1821, Spohr performed for the first time at a public concert in Paris. He had prevailed upon the management of the Grand-Opéra to give an evening entertainment, the first part of which was to consist of a concert, and the second a ballet—an arrangement which was new in Paris, and saved him the troublesome task of getting up a concert himself. He gave his overture to Alruna, a new violin concerto, and the Pot-Pourri on Mozart's duet in Don Juan; between the pieces Mdlle. Cinti sang a cavatina, and Bordagni and Levasseur a duet by Rossini. The approbation of the public at his efforts was unmistakeably expressed in warm applause and cries of "Bravo." Not so favourable, however, were the criticisms of the majority of the newspaper critics, to whom Spohr had neglected to pay his court. It is true that all the papers mentioned the concert, and some with unqualified praise; most of them, however, did so with the addition of a "but," and all with self-complacent vanity. One writer said:—"Si M. Spohr reste quelque temps à Paris, il pourra perfectionner son goût, et retourner, en suite, former celui des bons Allemands!"

Spohr played frequently at private houses, and had the satisfaction of finding that his compositions and play were greeted with enthusiasm by professionals and amateurs. The quintet for piano, flute, clarinet, horn, and bassoon, a piece which he had written for his wife, who had given up the harp by the advice of her medical attendants, was especially popular. An offer was made to take all the business arrangements of a second concert quite off his hands, and to secure gratuitously for him the best orchestra in Paris, but he did not avail himself of the offer.

The following judgment pronounced by Spohr, on the relative merits of Baillot (1771—1842), Lafont (1781—1839), Kreutzer, jun.,* and Habeneck, will have, on account of the practical remarks it contains, an especial value for violin-players:—

"If you ask me which of these four violinists please me most, I answer, unhesitatingly, if we look merely at execution, Lafont. He combines, in his play, a beautiful tone, the greatest purity, strength and grace, and would be a perfect violinist, if, to these admirable qualities, he united deep feeling, and had not accustomed himself so much to the practice, quite peculiar to the French school, of dwelling on the last note of a phrase. He appears, however, to be deficient, like most Frenchmen, in feeling, without which a man can neither compose a good adagio, nor play one well, for, although he decks out his slow movements with many elegant and pretty ornaments, he is rather cold himself, and leaves his audience so. The adagio seems to be generally considered here, both by artists and the public, the most unimportant movement in a concerto, and is probably retained only because it is useful in separating the two quick movements from each other, and heightening their effect.

"It is to the indifference of the French for this, as well as, generally, to their unsusceptibility for everything that touches the feelings, that I ascribe the fact of my adagio, and the manner in which I render it, producing less effect here than the brilliant allegro passages. Being spoilt by the applause bestowed, especially on my execution of the andante, by Germans, Italians, Dutchmen, and Englishmen, I felt at first offended at finding so little attention paid it by the French. Since, however, I have observed how seldom their own artists give them an opportunity of hearing a serious adagio, and how little the taste for it is awakened in them, I have grown calm on the point. The practice of bringing out the last note of a period by increased pressure and a rapid upward motion of the bow, is more or less peculiar to all French violonists, and of no one is this more strikingly true than of Lafont. It is incomprehensible to me how such unnatural accentuation, which sounds exactly as if a speaker were to let out strongly the short final syllables, can have arisen. If players, when executing the cantabile, had always taken the human voice for a model (as, in my opinion, every instrumental performer ought to do), they would not have thus gone astray. The Parisians, however, are now so accustomed to this unnatural fault, that the play of a foreigner, who is not equally eccentric, strikes them as far too simple, or as Herr Sievers expresses it, far too straightforward.

"That Lafont's virtuosity is always confined to only a few pieces at a time, and that he practises the same concerto for years before he performs it in public, is well known. Since I have heard what perfect execution he attains by the plan, I will not blame this devotion of all his powers to one single end, but I feel myself incapable of imitating him; I cannot even understand how anyone can make up his mind to practise the same piece of music four or six hours every day, and, still less, how a man manages, when pursuing so mechanical a course, not to become totally insensible to all true art. Baillot is nearly as accomplished in the technical part of his play, while his diversity proves that he is so without being compelled to have recourse to such desperate means. In addition to his own compositions, he plays nearly all the works of ancient and modern times. On the evening in question, he treated us to a quintet by Boccherini, a quartet by Haydn, and three compositions of his own: a concerto, an 'air varié,' and a rondo. All these things he played with perfect correctness, and with the expression peculiar to his manner. This expression struck me, however, as being more artificial than natural, just as his style is marked by mannerism on account of the too great prominence of the means by which his expression is produced. His bowing is clever and rich in delicate touches, but not so free as that of Lafont; consequently his tone is not so fine, and the mechanical art of moving his bow upwards and downwards too audible. His compositions are distinguished from those of almost all other Parisian violinists by their correctness, and it cannot be denied that they possess a certain originality; but something artificial, antiquated, and marked with mannerism in the style, makes him exceedingly fond of playing the quintets of Boccherini very often. I was anxious to hear these quintets, of which I know about a dozen, played by him, in order to see whether, by-the-way he executed them, he could succeed in making me forget their emptiness. Highly successful, however, as was his performance of those he selected, the frequently childish character of the melodies and the poverty of the harmony, nearly always only three-part, struck me no less disagreeably than on every occasion that I had heard the same pieces before. It is hardly comprehensible how an educated artist like Baillot, acquainted with our treasures in the way of compositions of this kind, can make up his mind still to go on playing these quintets (the only merit of which is founded on the period and circumstances under which they were written)! The fact, however, that people listen to them here with as much satisfaction as to one by Mozart, is another proof that the Parisians cannot distinguish good from bad, and are, at least, fifty years behindhand in their artistic education. I heard Habeneck execute two 'airs variés' of his own composition. He is a brilliant violinist, who plays a great many notes with great rapidity and great ease. His tone and bowing, however, are somewhat coarse. The younger Kreutzer played me a new, very brilliant and graceful trio by his brother. His style of execution reminded one somewhat of the elder one's manner, and convinced me they are the most sterling of all the Parisian violinists. The younger Kreutzer lacks physical strength. He is sickly, and frequently not allowed to play for months together. His tone is, in consequence, somewhat dull; in other respects, his play is pure, fiery and full of expression."

* Jean Nicolas Auguste Kreutzer, brother of Rudolf Kreutzer, and his junior by fifteen years. He died in the summer of 1831, a few months after his brother, who had been ailing ever since 1826.

Remarkable, also, are Spohr's views with regard to the church music of the Royal Chapel, whose chapel-masters, Lesueur and Cherubini, assumed the direction in turn once every three months, that is to say, presided in court-dress at the head of the singers, while Plantade really conducted, and R. Kreutzer and Baillot led the first and second violins respectively. Spohr writes as follows:—

"Although I was prepared to hear music of a very different character to what we call sacred music in Germany, I was not a little astonished at the brilliant theatrical style of a mass by Plantade, which I heard on my first visit to the chapel, the 17th of last month. It contains not the slightest trace of strict style, and no attempt at a canonical treatment of the voices, far less at a fugue. Leaving these out of consideration, it contains some exceedingly pretty thoughts, and good instrumentation, which would be perfectly in their place in a comic opera. The concluding allegro, probably on the words 'Dona nobis pacem' (though I do not know for certain, as the French pronounce Latin in a manner unintelligible to a German ear), was so completely in the style of an opera-finale (and, like the latter, with the tempo increased two or three times), that, at the end, completely forgetting the place I was in, I expected the curtain would fall and the public applaud.

"On the 24th December, at twelve o'clock at night, we heard what is called Messe de Minuit, written, on this occasion, by Lesueur. Previously, however, we were compelled to endure a great trial of patience, having to listen, during two rather long hours, from ten to twelve, to nothing but psalms sung in the most monotonous manner, and interrupted, now and then, by some barbarous interlude on the organ. At length, at twelve o'clock, the mass began. It was written in the same frivolous theatrical style as Plantade's composition, only in the solemn midnight hour it was even more repulsive! What surprised one more than anything else, particularly of Lesueur, who enjoys here the reputation of being an admirable harmonist, and, if I am not mistaken, gives lessons in harmony at the Conservatory, was the fact that there was not even a four-part treatment of the voices! Though, perhaps, it may sometimes be effective in opera for music to be written in two parts, letting the soprano go in octaves with the tenor, and the alto with the basses, partly to render the execution easier to the theatrical choruses, which are generally bad, and partly to obtain more material power, it strikes me as perfectly barbarous to introduce such a practice into the Church, and I should very much like to know what M. Lesueur, who is certainly a thoughtful artist, means by doing so. Variations for harp, horn, and violoncello, by Nadermann, executed by the composer himself, Messrs. Dauprat and Baudish, were introduced, instead of the Offertorium. You know that, in Germany, even a serious symphony-movement struck me as too mundane in this position, and, therefore, you may easily imagine what a repulsive impression was produced upon me by the gay French variations for the harp at the hour of midnight; yet I saw those present engaged in devout prayer. How do they manage to command a single pious thought with such trivial music? Either the latter has no importance for them, or they can close their ears completely against it, otherwise they must, like myself, be inevitably reminded by it of the ballet at the Grand-Opéra, where these three instruments are similarly employed in the most voluptuous dances. The harp, although, in very ancient times, the favourite instrument of a pious king, ought to be banished from the church, if only because it is useless in a strict style, the only one suitable for the church.

"But will you believe me when I inform you that even the master, Cherubini, has allowed himself to be carried away by bad example, so that in his masses, also, the theatrical style is frequently predominant? It is true, that, in such cases, he makes up for his fault by admirable and effective music, but who can enjoy the latter if he is unable to forget entirely where he hears it? It would be less lamentable that Cherubini, like the others, departs from the true church style, did he not, in some few pieces, show how worthily he can write in that style. Many detached movements of his masses, especially the admirably treated fugues, and, above all, his 'Paternoster,' (up to the mundane conclusion), afford the most magnificent proof of this. If, however, you can get over your once annoyance at this style, which frequently launches out into the wildest extravagance, you may derive the highest artistic enjoyment from it. By the help of a rich fancy, of harmonic combinations, often quite strange, and a clever employment, guided by many years' experience, of the material means at his disposal, Cherubini produces such powerful effects, that you are involuntarily carried away, soon forgetting all his subtleties, and abandoning yourself wholly to your feelings and to enjoyment. What would this man have done, if he had always written for Germans instead of for Frenchmen?"

On his second visit to Paris, in 1844, Spohr, who since his first stay in London (in the year 1819) had achieved, in 1839, 1841, 1842, and 1843, extraordinary triumphs, both in France and England, was welcomed with great honours; among other things, Habeneck performed for him, with the band of the Conservatory, his symphony, Die Weihe der Töne, in such manner that Spohr asserted there were only two orchestras in the world that could play so well: that of the Conservatory in Paris, and that of the Conservatory in Prague.

PROVINCIAL.

MANCHESTER.—At the last miscellaneous concert of Mr. Charles Hallé's third season, the following was the programme:—

PART I.—Scotch Symphony in A minor—Mendelssohn; Grand Scena, "Wie nacht mir," Mdlle. Parepa (Freischütz)—Weber; Andante and Rondo, pianoforte, from Concerto in G (first time), Mr. Charles Hallé—Beethoven; Cavatina, "Victorine," Mdlle. Parepa—Mellon; Overture, "Precioса"—Weber.

PART II.—Overture, "Guillaume Tell"—Rossini; Song, "L'Alouette," Mdlle. Parepa—Clapisson; Nocturne and Wedding March, from "Midsummer Night's Dream"—Mendelssohn; Solo, pianoforte, Mr. Charles Hallé: "Nocturne," in F sharp, Chopin—"Lied ohne Wörte," in E, Mendelssohn—"Valse Caprice," Schubert and Lisst; The Laughing Song, "Manon Lescaut" (by desire), Mdlle. Parepa—Auber; Overture, "Zampa"—Hérold.

In noticing the last miscellaneous concert of the third season of Mr. Hallé's concerts, we are happy to have observed a progressive augmentation of the support they receive. The attendances, with scarcely one exception, have throughout the season been exceedingly large, and more than once or twice the hall has been crammed, and this, too, in face of an increase in the charges for admission.

"It is," remarks his Majesty the King of Hanover, "an unpardonable offence against the sublime and divine art of music to consider it as merely a pastime for leisure moments, and for tickling the ear; to imagine that it is destined solely to accompany the movements of the thoughtless dance; to attend and listen to its performances because such is the fashion; or to have recourse to music for no other purpose than to be able to pronounce in conversation a superficial opinion of artists and works of art; and not much rather to strive to acquire a correct comprehension of all that is most sublime, exquisite, impressive, in every musical composition; to study intensely the productions of the inspired hours of great composers; and so, with unprejudiced mind, and wide-open heart, to feel what they felt, and to seek and find what is really to be found in the exuberant riches of all that is excellent in music—the ennobling of our feelings, the refinement of our morality, the strengthening of our energies and our courage, consolation in affliction, invigoration for the mind, hope for the future, and a steadfast perseverance in faith and love."

The unexceptionable and high character of the music which Mr. Hallé has introduced at his concerts leads us to believe that he coincides with these sentiments, and we trust he will persevere in a course which is so honourable to himself and so calculated to advance his art.

Wednesday falling in Passion Week, Mr. Hallé selected Mendelssohn's Elijah for performance. Among the principals were Mrs. Sunderland, Mrs. Brooke, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Santley. This was the last concert of the series properly speaking; but Mr. Hallé announces an additional concert for his own benefit, when Glück's grand opera Iphigenia in Taurids will be given for the third time.

Peterborough—(From a Correspondent).—The Messiah was given at the Corn Exchange on Wednesday, the principal parts by Miss Stabbach and Miss Huddart, Mr. Perren, Mr. Wheeler, and Mr. Harley. The chorus was made up of the choristers and some of the lay-clerks of the cathedral, with about thirty other ladies and gentlemen, members of the vocal class of Mr. Barratt (the conductor). These latter were not at all up to their work, consequently the choruses were for the most part unsatisfactory. The band (which was small, though effective) was led by Mr. Griesbach, with whom we observed some few others from the musical circles of the metropolis; the solos were, therefore, well accompanied, and provided indeed the treat of the day. Unfortunately, Miss Stabbach was labouring under a severe cold, which marred some of her best efforts. She was, however, very successful in "But thou didst not leave" (which, by the way, was taken at a moderate allegro, instead of an andante larghetto), as also in "I know that my Redeemer liveth:" the florid "Rejoice greatly" was, however, too much of a tax upon her in her present position, though it was very creditably given, and, indeed, the lady is deserving of great praise for her strenuous exertions to accomplish her work, as it was evident that these exertions were at times quite painful to her. Miss Huddart was more fortunate; her fine contralto voice being heard to great advantage in "He shall feed his flock" (which was nicely accompanied), and in "He was despised" (which was not, the only exception amongst the solos). Her great taste and expression thrown into this, together with the beautiful and touching words, had a marked effect upon the audience. Mr. Perren took all the tenor solos: "Thy rebuke," and the following air, were very chastely sung, and the famous "Thou shalt break them" was given with great precision and vigour. The bass solos were divided between a local bass, Mr. Harley, and Mr. Wheeler of Oxford. The former sang "Why do the nations," which was his best effort: his style in "For behold darkness" was but very questionable. Mr. Wheeler gave "For He is like," and "The trumpet shall sound," very correctly, but with hardly sufficient power, and in the last was well accompanied on the trumpet.

Kidderminster—(From a Correspondent).—On Thursday evening, the 5th instant, the Choral Society held a special meeting for the purpose of presenting their conductor, J. Fitzgerald, Esq., with a testimonial of their respect and regard for his long and valuable services as their conductor, who, ever since the formation of the society, ten years ago, has been unremitting in his labours and gratuitous services, to promote its interests, as well as the cultivation of musical taste in the town and neighbourhood generally. The testimonial consisted of a very handsome massive silver snuff box, richly embossed and engraved, with ornamental musical devices, and manufactured expressly for the occasion by Messrs. Elkington and Mason of Birmingham. The treasurer of the society, Mr. Standen, presided, and who, after suitably addressing the meeting, called upon the honorary secretary, Mr. Tuck, to read the address, which was drawn up by Messrs. Cooksey and Tuck. After reading the address and briefly commenting thereon, Mr. Tuck presented the testimonial, which was accepted by Mr. Fitzgerald and acknowledged in the warmest terms. After several congratulatory remarks by various members, Mr. Fitzgerald spoke an address, and the meeting terminated.

Yorkshire Choral Union—(From a Correspondent)—Grand Easter Musical Festival.—Under the above designation a series of four concerts have been given at the Town Hall, Leeds, this week, jointly directed by Mr. Charles Hallé and Mr. R. S. Burton. On Monday morning, the programme included the two first parts (Spring and Summer) of Haydn's Seasons, and Beethoven's Mount of Olives. In the evening there was a Miscellaneous Selection, including Mendelssohn's Pianoforte Concerto in G Minor, performed by Mr. Hallé. On Tuesday morning, the Messiah, and in the evening Glück's Iphigenia in Tauris, directed by Mr. Hallé. Among the principal vocalists were Madame Catherine Hayes, Mrs. Sunderland, Madame Weiss, Miss Freeman, Messrs. Perren, Inkersall, Wharton, Weiss, &c. The band numbered about forty, chiefly of Leeds and its neighbourhood, with a few from Manchester, &c. In some departments, the orchestra was good, but the overpowering brass and paucity of "strings" was much felt throughout the performances. The "Bassi" were extremely weak. The chorus numbered about 150 (not 250 as stated in the bills), and were, on the whole, remarkably powerful and efficient. Their singing was excellent in all the performances except Iphigenia, where the minor intervals seemed to puzzle the united choirs amazingly, being rarely, if ever, in tune. In the Messiah, Mount of Olives, and in all passages requiring vigour and force, the chorus was fresh, powerful, and effective, and generally in good tune. The specialities of the solo singers need not be detailed here, for they must be well known to the readers of the Musical World. Of course Madame Hayes sang "The harp that once," &c., and of course carried off the usual honours. Of course Mrs. Sunderland gave Arne's antiquated "O bid your faithful Ariel," and of course the Leedsers would have it again. Of course Mr. and Mrs. Weiss sang "Il pianto," and of course Mr. Weiss was successful in all he undertook. At a "grand musical festival," however, it might be supposed that the vocal pieces would have had the advantage of a band, instead of a pianoforte accompaniment. The great feature was undoubtedly Mr. Charles Hallé's pianoforte performances, which were everything that could be desired, and awakened considerable enthusiasm. The attendances at the morning performances were very limited, but more numerous in the evenings. We believe the receipts will be considerably below the expenditure.

Artists' Volunteer Rifle Corps, Enrolled as "38th Middlesex."—Viscount Bury has been appointed Captain-Commandant. The other officers of the first company are Lieutenant H. W. Phillips, Ensign J. E. Millais, A.R.A., Sergeants F. Talfourd, A. J. Lewis, C. Perugini, H. Watkins, Corporals C. Earles, W. Gale, A. Nicholson. The members of the corps number upwards of one hundred and thirty, meet for drill every evening at the Argyll Rooms, and on Wednesday mornings at Burlington House. Two companies are already formed, and third and fourth companies in course of formation. Amongst the active members of the corps, representatives of various branches of art, painters, sculptors, musicians, actors, architects, &c., are the following:—Messrs. Millais, Hunt, Phillips, Watts, F. Talfourd, Leech, Luard, Monro, Hullah, T. Harper, Blagrove, Nicholson, Stirling, Leighton, Dickenson, Cockerell, Salvin, A. Wigan, D. Fisher, Gale, Richmond, O'Niel, Cooper, Thomas, Severn, C. Haag, Lewis, Cayley, Earl, Perugini, Woolner, Earles, Hayllar, Prinsep, Watkins, Martineau, Williams, &c., &c.

Good enough for Punch.—Query—in the estimation of modern barytones, should not M. Faure (Four) be called A One? (Dedicated to Augustus Mayhew, Horace Mayhew, and Sutherland Edwards, Esquires, authors of The Goose with the Golden Puns).

MARRIED.

On the 31st of March, at the British Legation at St. Petersburgh, by the Rev. Edward Lawe, D.D., Chaplain to the Legation, Sir John Fiennes Crampton, Bart., K.C.B., Her Majesty's Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary at the Court of St. Petersburgh, to Victoire, second daughter of M. W. Balfe, Esq., of Dublin.

JULLIEN FUND.

THE illness of M. Jullien having, with fatal rapidity, terminated in death, it has been resolved that the donations to the JULLIEN FUND shall be applied in the manner which would have been most in consonance with the wishes of the deceased, had it been permitted him to express them, viz., to the relief of his widow and family, who, by his loss, are left totally unprovided for.

Committee for the distribution of the Jullien Fund.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. W. R. Sams; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Duncan Davison; Mr. Julius Benedict; Mr. A. Blumenthal.

Honorary Treasurers.

Mr. John Mitchell, 33, Old Bond-street; Mr. Thomas Chappell, 50, New Bond-street; Mr. W. R. Sams, 1, St. James's-street.

Bankers,

Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Heywood, Kennards, and Co., Lombard-street; London and County Bank, Hanover-square;—who, as well as the Honorary Treasurers, have kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

Subscriptions already advertised .. .. £375 6s. 10d.

	£	s.	d.
Charles Waring, Esq. ..	5	5	0
H. Cazenove, Esq. ..	3	3	0
George Chater, Esq... ..	3	3	0
F. D. Mocatta, Esq.	1	1	0
J. Simpson, Esq.	1	1	0
Miss S. Lee	1	1	0
E. Land, Esq.	1	1	0
W. F. M.	1	0	0
Lord William Fitzgerald ..	1	0	0
Frederick Fitzgerald.. ..	1	0	0
H. H. Cannon, Esq... ..	1	0	0
Sir G. Smart	1	0	0
Mr. J. Meaton, Bill Poster, Gloster'	0	10	6
Mrs. J. and Miss Ellen Banks	0	10	6
Two Sisters	0	10	0

	£	s.	d.
Small sums received by Chappell and Co. ..	0	16	0
Messrs. Hayward and Co. ..	0	9	0
Messrs. Cramer and Co. ..	2	0	6
Deposit Bank, Leicester-sq.	0	16	0
Paak and Co.	0	16	6
Sunday Times..	0	12	0
Keith and Co....	1	0	6
Bailey, Brothers	0	16	6
Parkins and Gotto	1	14	0
Mr. Hammond	1	18	6
Duncan Davison, subscriptions per E. C. Clemow, Esq.	1	12	0
Messrs. Boosey and Sons ..	0	10	0

The return of country subscriptions has not yet been received, but will be shortly advertised.

ONE SHILLING SUBSCRIPTION.

Books to receive names are now placed at Mr. Hammond's (late Jullien's), 214, Regent-street; Messrs. Cramer's, 201, Regent-street; Messrs. Bally Brothers, Cornhill; Messrs Parkins and Gotto's, 24, Oxford-street; Mr. Paak's, Lowther-arcade; Messrs. Keith, Prowse, & Co's., 48, Cheapside; Mr. Bignell's, Argyll-rooms, Deposit Bank, Leicester-square; Sunday Times Office; Messrs. Boosey & Sons, Holles-street; Mr. Austin, St. James's-hall; Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street; and at the principal music shops throughout the country.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—On Tuesday next, April 17, will be performed, Meyerbeer's New Romantic Opera, entitled DINORAH; or, Il Pellegrinaggio de Ploërmel. Principal characters by Madame Miolan Carvalho, Mdlle. Giudita Sylvia, Signor Gardoni, Signor Tagliafico, Signor Neri Baraldi and M. Faure.

Conductor—MR. COSTA.

The doors open at eight, the Opera commences at half-past eight o'clock. Pit tickets, 7s.; Amphitheatre Stalls, 7s. and 5s.; Amphitheatre, 2s. 6d.

Boxes, Stalls, and Pit Tickets may be had at the Box Office, under the portico of the theatre, and at the principal music-sellers and librarians.

First appearance of Mdlle. Csillag. Thursday next, April 19, will be given as a Subscription Night in lieu of the last Tuesday of the season, on which occasion will be performed, for the first time these five years, Beethoven's celebrated opera, FIDELIO. Leonora, Mdlle. Csillag (her first appearance in England.

THEATRE ROYAL DRURY LANE.—GRAND ENGLISH OPERA.

The Management have much pleasure in announcing to the public that the OPERATIC PERFORMANCES having given general satisfaction, will be repeated every evening until further notice.

See the opinions of the public press.

Monday Evening, April 16th, will be presented Verdi's favourite Opera of IL TROVATORE. Maurico, Mr. Henry Haigh; Count de Luna, Mr. Charles Durand; Ferrando, Mr. Thompson; Ruiz, Mr. Salvie; Azucena, Miss Emma Heywood; and Leonora, Miss Dyer. Before the Opera, the Band, comprising upwards of sixty performers, will play the overture to Oberon.

Tuesday, April 17th, and during the week, will be performed a favorite English Opera, supported by the following eminent Artists:—Miss Dyer. Miss Emma Heywood, &c., &c. Messrs. Henry Haigh, Melchor Winter, Salvie, Borrani, Thompson, and Charles Durand, and a Band and Chorus of 100 performers. Conductor and Musical Director, Dr. JAMES PECH. In consequence of its great success, the performance will conclude each evening with a petite ballet comique by Flexmore, entitled THE SPANISH DANCERS; or, Two too many. In the course of the ballet, pas by Mdlle. Auriol and Mr. Flexmore, and the grand corps de ballet; Bolero, Mdlle. Auriol and Flexmore; Valse, by the Spanish Dancers; Zapateodo, by Mdlle. Auriol and Flexmore, and the corps de ballet of this Theatre. Stage Manager, Mr. James Martin; Ballet Master, Mr. Flexmore: Treasurer, Mr. Lewis.

Reduced Prices.—Stalls, 4s.; dress circle, 3s.; first circle, 2s. 6d.; pit, 2s.; upper boxes, 1s. 6d.; gallery, 1s.; upper gallery, 6d.; private boxes from 10s. 6d. upwards. The box office, under the direction of Mr. Nugent, open daily.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)... ... ... 2s. 6d.
Every additional line (ten words) ... 0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 14TH, 1860.

DOES legitimate Italian opera border on dissolution?—is a question which must have presented itself frequently of late to those who regard the subject as one of no little importance. If Italian opera goes, the art of singing, distinguished from that of vocal declamation, must go with it. There are some who maintain that such a catastrophe would in no way affect the interests of music in an intellectual sense, and that the great masters would retain their influence just the same if the vocal art, from the earlier Italian point of view, were irretrievably lost. We cannot agree either with their premiss or deduction.

It is notorious that those who have been nurtured in the Italian school of singing are also the best interpreters of the classic German models, and equally so that the voices of the Italians of the last and preceding generations were more enduring, and preserved their vigour and freshness far longer, than those of the present age. Not to travel, however, from our own time, compare Alboni's execution of the airs in Figaro and Don Giovanni with that of any singer whose youth and adolescence have been chiefly devoted to the operas of Signor Verdi. The one is even, flowing, well-balanced, natural, and expressive—artistically faultless, in a word; while the other, with here and there a fine point, springing from the successful embodiment of a happy impulse, is unequal, anti-rhythmical, strained, and convulsive. The existence of such manifest disparity between singers, perhaps equally endowed by nature, leads to a consideration of its origin. Why does Alboni sing "Batti, batti," "Voi che sapete," all the airs, in short, of Zerlina and Cherubino to absolute perfection, while Madame or Mademoiselle ———, with real genius, artistic fire, and a voice as beautiful in quality, and wealthy in tone, as it is extended in register, comparatively fails? The only inference to be drawn is, that one has learned to sing by the proper method, and has exercised herself in the proper music, while the other, with all her magnificent endowments, has done neither. The method was the Italian method, the music, the music of Rossini and his immediate predecessors. So that even those one-sided thinkers, who refuse to see the extraordinary musical merit of Rossini's purest Italian operas, must perforce admit that, as a means towards a most desirable end, they are indispensable.

Rossini's florid music has done the same thing for Italians as Handel's bravura songs (which have as frequently been condemned by prejudiced critics) did for our own greatest singers, from the time when Handel wrote Italian operas to that of our own Sims Reeves, a great part of whose unrivalled excellence is attributable to his constant practice in Handel's florid airs. But where did Handel obtain this particular secret of his art?—during his travels in Italy, of course, and from the Italian singers whom, from time to time, he brought over from Italy, to aid him in that enterprise which, though it resulted in his temporary commercial ruin, was a powerful auxiliary towards the attainment of that excellence which ultimately left him without a rival.

We must be careful, too, while rejecting altogether one side Rossini's art, not to fall into the error of Herr Wagner, whose Art-work of the Future supports the paradox that music cannot exist independently. If we are never to look for anything in vocal music but the natural expression of words (as in a great measure did Gluck), we clip off one of its wings. Music can be occasionally a minister, but never a slave; and it may be accepted as certain that one reason why Gluck set up his intolerant theory was a consciousness within him of not being sufficiently a master to invent such music as would delight on its own account, without reference to words or even to situations — music conceived and realised exclusively of all conditions but such as regulate its own plan, development, and symmetrical proportions as independent art-work.

Whether this privilege of creating absolute forms and varieties of forms for itself should be denied a composer for the voice, while it is unanimously (the dogma of Herr Wagner is an exception which the more firmly establishes the rule) granted to a composer for instruments, is worth an argument. We hold such a binding of the musician to his words to be as cruel and tyrannical as the fastening of Ixion to his wheel. It is also unnatural, inasmuch as it prevents the free play of the musician's fancy, and thus deprives the world of one-half the rich gifts he would have it in his power to bestow. There is a great difference between violating expression and multiplying its resources. Mozart might have set "Una voce poco fa" in a very different style from Rossini, and yet both have been truly natural and expressive. We will go even so far as to say that the florid mode of expression, when skilfully used, is just as legitimate as any other; and that Handel, when he set "Rejoice greatly," set it in the florid style, as most appropriate to the sentiment of the text he had to illustrate. And if the voice is to be deprived of this peculiar medium of display, why accord it to instruments? Why tolerate "passages" (so-called) in concertos and sonatas, for the violin or pianoforte? When Beethoven lays out an ordinary chord, in arpeggios, from one end of the keyboard to the other, it is quite true that what he has to say would be all expressed if the harmony were simply struck at once; but his aim was to convey it in a brilliant and peculiar manner, and this was only to be effected by the device to which he had recourse. Mozart, too, in many of his airs (for example those awarded to one of the supernatural personages in Die Zauberflöte—Astriaffamente, Queen of Night) resorts to the same appliance with similar consistency and the like success. Half the art of early Italian vocalists consisted in their florid exhibitions; and though often, we are aware, absurd, or employed illogically (and therefore ineffectively), they have as often revealed to us what the musician had to conveys by means of his art, far more completely than could have been accomplished through any other expedient. That the sentiment belonging to the verbal text of "Una voce" or "Di piacer" could have been more felicitously expressed than by Rossini we are wholly indisposed to admit. In their way these songs are just as perfect as those of Zerlina and Cherubino.

But if this one side of Rossini's art had only tended to educate singers (like Handel's florid music), and enabled them to continue singing, year after year, without disparagement to their voices, it would possess sufficient claims not merely to respect but to admiration. These things it has effected; and what is more (as we have hinted), by giving the singer a ready and invariable command of his resources, has made him a more thorough master of styles, from the florid bravura to the simply expressive, than he could otherwise possibly have been. With these strong convictions we are disposed to view with alarm the phase through which the Italian vocal art is passing (a phase of transition we may hope—but transition to what better state?) The art of singing is no longer taught in Italy; and now even in this vast city of London, where the Italian Opera has flourished for a century and a-half, it seems impossible to obtain a company of Italian singers, or to compose a repertory of Italian music. Look at our two great houses, this year. On the first night, at Her Majesty's Theatre, the opera was by a Russian composer, the prima donna was a German, the seconda donna a Belgian, and the primo basso (why do we employ the Italian idiom?) a Frenchman; at the Royal Italian Opera, on the same occasion, the opera was by a German, while the prima donna and primo basso-barytono were both French. What is threatened at Her Majesty's Theatre in a short time, is still more extraordinary—viz., Semiramide, the most essentially Italian opera seria by the most essentially Italian composer, with four out of the five principal characters sustained by non-Italians: Semiramide, by a German (Fraulein Titiens); Assur, by a Belgian (M. Evrard); Idreno, by a Spaniard (Senor Belart); and Oroe, by a Frenchman (Monsieur Viallette).

Nevertheless, though vita brevis, ars longa est, and, as Cardanus was not the first or the last to say, it "moves in a circle."

Panurge, whom we left inside a terrestrial globe, rolling about the gardens of the Royal Grecian, in the City-road, had not been heard of for several days, and Pantagruel was consequently in a state of great uneasiness. For, in spite of those accessions of violence that, on account of his enormous strength, were productive of great inconvenience to his friends, Pantagruel was really the tenderest-hearted creature in the world.

At about ten o'clock one evening, he was sitting in a box at the "Edinburgh Castle," with Epistemon; and the two exchanged their lamentations in such dismal sort, that John the waiter swore that he felt as melancholy as if he were witnessing the comic business of an ordinary Christmas pantomime.

"Why have I lost thee, dear dreg of humanity?" cried Panurge.

"Foul blot on the sphere of blotting-paper that men call earth! why art thou effaced?" wailed Epistemon.

"Vile fount of platitudes!" murmured Pantagruel.

"Base spoiler of Latinity!" groaned Epistemon.

"Worthless alike to thyself and to everyone else! why dost thou belie the proverb, which teaches us that 'nought is never in danger'?" sighed Pantagruel.

While they thus bitterly bewailed the loss of their friend, who should pop into the room but Panurge himself, looking marvellously fresh and well-favoured. Placing himself in the middle of the room, with both his arms a-kimbo, and his hat cocked a little on one side, he at once fired off the whole of an English version of the second elegy of Propertius:—

Why dost thou, dear life, thus adorn thy hair?
Why that flutt'ring Coan garment wear?

Why upon thy head pouring Syrian scent,
Sell thyself with foreign ornament?
Why with purchas'd charms thus thine own oppress,
Spoiling thus thy native loveliness?
Cupid—naked boy!—Cupid doth not love
Those who seek their beauty to improve.
See the ground, untill'd, varied hues disclose,
Mark the ivy without culture grows;
Loveliest is the shrub in the mountain-dell;
Streams o'er rugged paths can ripple well;
O'er the glitt'ring shore gems are freely flung;
Songs by birds untaught are sweetly sung.
Jove's great twins could sweet Hilaeira please,
And bright Phœbe, the Leucippides.
Young Marpessa's love glowing Phœbus sought,
And with burly Idas fiercely fought,
Near the river's bank, where her father died—
Think'st thou on their dress those maids relied?
Painted not was Hippodameia's face
When she lur'd her Pelops to the race,
Where he won a bride with victory
(In Apelles' girls the hue we see).
These sought not the love of a flatt'ring crowd,
Of modest beauty they were amply proud.
She, who pleases one, is adorned the best,
And I am not viler than the rest.
Thee Apollo crowns with the gift of song,
To thee Aonian music doth belong;
Sparkling gems of wit decorate thy speech,
Thou hast all that Pallas' self can teach,
Or Venus' self can grant: and so thou chainest me,
Spoil not all with needless luxury!

The above infliction having come to an end, much to the relief of Pantagruel and Epistemon, Panurge proceeded: "And now, how art thou, most worshipful of masters? and thou most detestable of companions?—also, John the Blond—in short, how are ye all, mes bons averlans? I have something to tell ye that will provoke more mirth than an Easter burlesque—which, by the way, is not saying much. Listen, attend, and be edified."

Hereupon Pantagruel and Epistemon assumed an attitude of the deepest attention, each placing his two fists so as to make a sort of tower on the table, resting his chin on the one that was above, and compressing his lips to the utmost. John, on the other hand, kept his mouth wide open, as though wisdom was rather imbibed by the gullet than by the ears—an hypothesis by no means untenable, when we consider the number of dull dogs, who become so many jets of wit and learning as soon as their intellects have been bathed and refreshed by distilled liquids.

Clearing his throat, with much pomp, Panurge began thus: "There is what they call leads"—

"Now, by the sausages of Bigorre, Longaulnay, la Bresse, and Ronargue, whereon my grandfather Grandgousier used largely to feed," said Pantagruel, "that is the vilest beginning of a discourse I ever heard."

"'There is what they call leads!'" ejaculated Epistemon, with disgust written on his face; "I' faith I hold thy verse in the greatest contempt, but it is a thing of surpassing beauty, a perfect chrysolite, when I compare it to thy prose. Thou makest a pretty hash of Propertius; body o' me! what would'st thou effect didst thou undertake the translation of Tully? Read the Theatrical Journal I say, man—read the Theatrical Journal, and improve thy style."

"But," argued Panurge, "if I said balcony I should be wrong"—

"Then abstain therefrom," said Pantagruel. "Who the devil wants thee to say balcony?"

"It is a word," remarked Epistemon, "that affordeth no particular joy to the ear."

"Seeing," persisted Panurge, "that it is not a balcony, but only a leads."

"A leads!" shouted Pantagruel and Epistemon in a common chord of indignation.

"Pardon, me, gentlemen," observed John the waiter, stepping forward with great humility, "but I think that 'a leads' is quite right. We often say in our business that a party has taken a wine-vaults; so I don't see why another party mayn't walk upon a leads."

"Thou hast high authority in thy favour, Master Panurge," said Pantagruel. "Proceed."

"Well," resumed Panurge, "I found myself this evening on the leads of a large house, where I could stroll at my ease, and peep through the windows of the first-floor."

"They call that eaves-dropping," observed Epistemon sternly.

"Do they? Then they call it wrong," pertly rejoined Panurge, "for there was no dropping and there were no eaves. Now, in one of the rooms, Amphitryon was giving a dinner to divers high and honourable persons. I should forewarn thee that there is not in the world a better or more good-natured fellow than this same Amphitryon, nor any one who more delighteth to scatter joy and contentment around him. Hence, though he is a man deservedly prosperous, his prosperity is a cause rather of rejoicing than of envy, which in this unloving world is saying a great deal."

"I know whom thou meanest," said Pantagruel, "and truly I wish him success in his new undertaking." With these words he raised his tumbler to his lips, in which action he was imitated by Epistemon.

"Well, there was Amphitryon at the head of the table," continued Panurge, and there were the three Anabaptists, and there was Septimius Acer, and there was the Mingrelian Ambassador, and there was Lud the son of Porrex."

"A goodly society in truth," said Pantagruel, with great admiration.

"And goodly viands were set before them," replied Panurge, licking his lips. "I verily believe I should have been tempted to burst through the window, and partake, uninvited, of the repast, had I not armed myself against the unruly solicitations of appetite, by filling my pockets with periwinkles."

"I have often thought," observed Epistemon, "that the periwinkle was given to us as a fortress against the intrusion of carnal affections. For, look ye, your periwinkle may not be irreverently and carelessly devoured. Held firmly between the thumb and forefinger of the left hand, it must be coaxed craftily yet resolutely from the recesses of its shell; for it is a retiring creature, and often, by its very coyness, eludeth the vigilance of the dainty. I have seen a student of the Green-coat school—a promising student, too—throw away two or even three periwinkle-shells on the supposition that they were empty, whereas, as I myself afterwards discovered, to my own infinite profit and enjoyment, the periwinkles had merely withdrawn themselves from the reach of his weapon. Nor, when thou hast removed that little particle of shell, that is so uninviting to the eye, and firmly lodged thy harpoon in the head of the fish, or as G. H. Lewes would call it, the mollusc, is thy reason for solicitude at an end. If, intoxicated with the pride of thy victory, thou drawest out the prize with a sudden jerk, ten to one but thou secureth the head only, which is a tough flavourless morsel, and leavest behind the tail which is a feast for Apicius."

"Ay," interposed John, approvingly, smacking his lips, and winking with the air of a profound connoisseur.

"As I said before," continued Epistemon, "the periwinkle must be coaxed craftily yet resolutely from its shell. Hence, when you learn that a man is a great eater of periwinkles, you may infer that he is also a man of purpose and circumspection. It is clear that the intricate process I have essayed to describe, demands that mental abstraction which renders extremely difficult the intrusion of irrelevant desires. Therefore, were I a painter—(which, thank heaven, I am not, for your great painter is the most obtuse of mortals)—and did I take for my subject the Temptation of Saint Antony, I would certainly represent that great ascetic extracting a periwinkle with a pin. Moreover"——

"Shut up thy d——d twaddle, and let him get on with his story!" thundered Pantagruel, with such vehemence that Epistemon shrank into the semblance of the mollusc whereon he had been discoursing.

"Well," proceeded Panurge, "before the party had got through the first course, poor Amphitryon felt so much indisposed that he quitted the room,——

[Here Pantagruel and Epistemon both groaned with sympathy.]

—— "leaving the party in a strange state of anarchy—for the Mingrelian Ambassador could only discourse in one of the Caucasian dialects—the three Anabaptists talked exclusively to one another, indulging in bursts of mirth, expressive of no hilarity but their own—and Lud, the son of Porrex, was neither versed in Caucasian lore, nor had he been initiated into Anabaptistic mysteries. Therefore you may conceive that the departure of Amphitryon was as the removal of the sun from the solar system—a removal that would not only cause darkness, but destroy that centripetal attraction which binds the system together. Truly I was affected almost to weeping, when I saw the Mingrelian Ambassador and Lud, the son of Porrex, sitting opposite to each other, full of high thoughts and sublime aspirations, and yet wholly unable to exchange them because they had neither community of speech nor philanthropic dragoman to hurl down the barrier by which they were separated."

"Aye," said Epistemon, "as Montaigne remarketh, 'Nous sommes mieulx en la compagnie d'un chien cogneu, qu'en celle d'un homme duquel le langage nous est incogneu.'"

"That is going too far," said Panurge; "for as I have said before, the food and the drink were of the best, in every way worthy of the known hospitality of Amphitryon, and he who could not talk might solace himself with his plate and his glass. But to proceed; one of the Anabaptists, prompted by ambition, seized for a while on the throne left vacant by the departure of Amphitryon, yet so little pleasure did he find in the task of government, that he also retired, though all were perfectly content with his sway, and there was not the remotest prospect of a revolution. Afterwards departed Lud, the son of Porrex, having discoursed with no living soul, but having remained immersed in his own meditations on the instability of human governments. Then departed the Mingrelian Ambassador, whereupon the two remaining Anabaptists, refreshing themselves anew with costly drinks and expensive cigars, discoursed at such amazing length about the Eleusinian mysteries and the deities of Samothrace, that Septimius Acer, who is of a smart and lively temperament, wished them at all the devils. While things were in this state, an orange flew out of an adjoining window and hit me so smartly upon the head that I fell from the leads into the street, whereby my power of observation was brought to an end, and I betook myself hitherto."

"Good," exclaimed Pantagruel, "thy very dull and pointless tale, which I thank the gods, has reached its conclusion, showeth how thou hast passed the present evening. But what hast thou done with thyself since the moment when I first, in my just indignation, hurled thee from the window, encased in a terrestrial globe?

"Ah! my master," said Panurge, with a heavy sigh, "thou referrest to a wonderful and sublime secret whereon there should be no light discourse. What I thought and what befell me while I was shut up in that strange sphere, and how I got out of it, shall be told in some secret place, to which the ears of the profane have no access. Truly thou hast not heard anything so pregnant with deep meaning, since the date of those incidents that were embodied by Augustus Mayhew and Sutherland Edwards in the Goose with the Golden Eggs."

We have not, for years, written an article on that once favourite subject the decline of the drama, and we have a great mind to write one now. The theories about the said decline are of course well known, but so are plenty of other things that are reproduced from time to time in the newspapers. A few authors who can always get their pieces accepted, a few actors who are never without an engagement, a few successful managers (there are not many) settle the question by saying that there has been no decline at all, and remind us that a large proportion of our dramatists have always gone to foreign sources for their plots; and that even in the days of Kean and Kemble spectacular pieces, and of a very absurd kind, drew more money than the finest tragedies of Shakspere. Then, the decline being admitted, there is the pleasant dispute as to whether we might not reasonably expect to have a higher class of dramatists if we had better actors, or rather better companies of actors; or whether it is not simply because we have no great dramatic authors that our players find it impossible to interest the public in the higher kind of drama. Moreover, there is the lateness of the modern dinner-hour to be considered, which, if it scarcely allows the subscribers to the Royal Italian Opera to get to their boxes by half-past eight without rendering them liable to an attack of indigestion, would not permit the same class of persons to reach the Haymarket Theatre at seven except on condition of going there with empty stomachs. Again, if we proposed to write an article on the present state of the drama in England, we should have to say something about the superior attractiveness of opera as compared with all other theatrical entertainments, and we should probably point out to the reader that the three largest playhouses in London are at the present moment devoted to operatic performances. Perhaps, too, we should reply, by anticipation, to a curious fiction invented a few years since about the revival of the British Stage at the large theatres of Whitechapel and Shoreditch, and the advent of theatrical stars from the East-end; and we should show that there, also, the drama has already found a formidable rival in Opera and that at the Pavilion and the Standard the works of English and even of Italian composers have been presented with remarkable success.

Having agreed with our readers as to the fact that opera finds more and the drama fewer patrons every year, we should inquire into the causes thereof; and one of these, which lies on the surface, we will now proceed in a straightforward way, and in as few words as possible, to indicate. It is simply this: At the Opera two tenors and two prima donnas, each and all of the highest preten-sions, and of genuine merit, consent without hesitation, and, as a matter of course, to appear in the same work; whereas at a dramatic theatre two tragic actors or two tragic actresses could not, under any circumstances, be induced to appear together in the same play. At the opera this truly artistic principle appears to be recognised—that in a masterpiece, such as Don Giovanni for instance, no part is great or small, but that all are admirable and worthy of being impersonated by singers of the highest genius. If actors would also understand this, anyone who was present at the performance given a fortnight since at Covent Garden for the benefit of the Dramatic College must feel that there would be no difficulty in arranging such perfect representatives of our finest plays that the trouble would be not to fill the theatre at which they took place, but simply to find places for the audience. Whatever may be the true cause or causes of the decline of the drama, we have to thank Messrs. Sams, Creswick and Jerwood, for proving very clearly, by the number of excellent performers they succeeded in bringing together within the walls of Covent Garden, that it at all events cannot be attributed to a sheer want of histronic talent.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The theatre re-opened on Tuesday evening, with a very different aspect from that which it presented during the temporary reign of English Opera. Indeed, two theatres could hardly offer more distinct appearances than Covent Garden under Mr. Gye, and Covent Garden under Miss Louisa Pyne and Mr. W. Harrison.

The opera was Meyerbeer's Dinorah, to use the English title; Le Pardon de Ploërmel, the French; or, Il Pellegrinaggio, the Italian. Last year, Dinorah brought the season to a triumphant conclusion, and having been given six times only was no doubt looked for by the subscribers and the public, more especially as Madame Miolan-Carvalho was again to be the heroine. The cast differed from that of last year in two important instances—M. Faure filling the part of Hoel (vice Signor Graziani), and Mdlle. Giudita Sylvia that of the male Goatherd (vice Madame Nantier-Didiée). M. Faure was an improvement; not so, Mdlle. Sylvia.

M. Faure, who succeeded M. Battaille at the Opéra-Comique in Paris, as Peters in Meyerbeer's Etoile du Nord, speedily won the favour of the public. So satisfied was Meyerbeer, that he wrote the part of Hoel expressly for M. Faure, who more than confirmed the impression made by his previous impersonation. Italian barytones being scarce, the director of the Royal Italian Opera was naturally anxious to secure the services of so admirable an actor and singer, to strengthen the cast of a work which was so eminently successful last season. Mr. Gye engaged M. Faure not merely for Hoel, but to undertake the repertory never officially represented since Tamburini abandoned the stage. That the French barytone is an accomplished artist there is no question. His voice, powerful and of unusual compass, is equally telling throughout its register. His expression is intense and varied, and his method undeniably good. He is, indeed, a greater master of his resources than most singers of his class; his shake is admirable, and his facility equal to all demands. If M. Faure's voice has not the sympathetic quality of Signor Graziani's, it is more than counterbalanced by superior acquirements as a singer and actor. A more striking performance than that of M. Faure, in Hoel, we have not witnessed a long time on the operatic stage. If we desired to be hypercritical, we might adduce an occasional tendency to exaggeration—as in the romance, "Sei vendicata assai"—which, after all, belongs to the school rather than to the singer individually.

Mad. Miolan-Carvalho is more admirable than ever in Dinorah; more vocally finished—the result of having made herself mistress of the acoustic properties of the house, and adapting her voice to its requirements, and as histrionically perfect—(she could not be more perfect). There is no need to describe Mad. Carvalho's performance in detail. Enough that all the old points were given with the same facility and the waltz movement of the "Shadow Song" (magnificently executed) was encored with acclamations.

The new contralto, Mdlle. Giudita Sylvia, was evidently too nervous to do herself justice. That she possesses a good voice, we believe; but beyond this we can say nothing. Her appearance is decidedly prepossessing.

Another new singer, Mdlle. Ruppazini, who was announced for the female Goat-herd—Mdlle. Marai's part last season—not having put in an appearance, the duet, "Sui prati tutt' in fiori," in the last act, was omitted, by no means an improvement; while the "Pater noster" was utterly ruined by the inefficiency of two chorus singers, to whom were allotted the parts sustained last season by Mdlle. Marai and Madame Nantier-Didiée. Signor Tagliafico was never at his ease in the hunter's song, while Signor Neri-Baraldi was less successful than formerly in that of the Mower. But these and worse drawbacks would have been more than atoned for by the excellence of the rest, not forgetting the absolute perfection of the orchestra, under Mr. Costa's direction.

Dinorah was repeated on Thursday, and will be given for the third time to-night; and on Thursday next Mdlle. Rosa Czillag makes her first appearance as Leonora in Fidelio.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The Haymarket opera re-opened on Friday evening, under the direction of Mr. E. T. Smith. Great changes and improvements have taken place in the old house. For six weeks more than fifty workmen have been employed in renovating and decorating it inside and out, a description of the result of whose labours will be found in another column.

The season was inaugurated with Marta and Fleur des Champs. The cast of the opera, with one exception (Madame Lemaire for Madame Borchardt), was the same as last year at Drury Lane—Mdlle. Titiens being Lady Henrietta; Signor Giuglini, Lionel; Signor Vialetti, Plumket; and Signor Castelli, Lord Tristan. The performance was greatly superior to that of last year, owing entirely to the improved quality of band and chorus, with Herr Molique and Mr. Blagrove heading the violins. Mdlle. Titiens sang magnificently, but Signor Giuglini was afflicted with sore throat and could with difficulty finish the part. Madame Lemaire gave the music of Nancy most carefully. The audience, somewhat frigid at the commencement, warmed towards the end, and when the curtain descended the singers were summoned, and a call was raised for Mr. Smith, who, however, did not obey the summons.

In the divertissement, the goddess was Mdlle. Pocchini, one of the most favoured daughters of Terpsichore—the last, not lost, Pleiad. With such a dancer there is a chance of resuscitating the ballet, but the new lessee does not seem inclined to turn his attention that way—or will not see that further "steps" be taken.

On Thursday, La Favorita was given, with Madame Borghi-Mamo as Leonora, and Signor Everardi as Alfonso—the first appearance of both in England—Signor Mongini being Fernando (vice Signor Giuglini, indisposed), and Signor Vialetti, Baldassare. At present it will be sufficient to state that the newcomers were eminently successful, the lady worthily supporting the high reputation she enjoys abroad, and the gentleman proving himself one of the most accomplished barytone basses who has been heard for years in this country. Signor Everardi's voice is of fine quality (pure Italian quality, be it understood, although he is, properly speaking, a Belgian), powerful and flexible—one of those Rossinian voices, in short, so rare of late. His style and method are in the best school, his taste and expression undeniable. Add to the foregoing a good stage face and figure, and it cannot be denied that Signor Everardi is likely to prove a valuable acquisition. Madame Borghi-Mamo's voice is a mezzo-soprano, of great compass, fine clear tone, and flexibility only surpassed by Madame Alboni. A thorough artist, and a genuine Italian singer, Madame Borghi-Mamo knows how to make the best of her means, exceptional as in many respects they are. Signor Mongini surprised everyone in Fernando, a part which many anticipated would not suit his vigorous style. He sang finely throughout and with exceeding judgment, never once indulging in those vociferous outbursts hitherto the bane of his performances, and which have often neutralized the effect so splendid a voice must otherwise inevitably produce. His most striking display on Thursday night was the romanza, "Spirto gentil," which was encored with enthusiasm. Signor Vialetti gave the music of Balthazar with power and judgment. The chorus was excellent, and the band, under the able direction of Mr. Benedict, thoroughly efficient, although some addition to the strength of the violins and other stringed instruments, to make head against the overwhelming power of the brass, was generally pronounced advisable.

The divertissement in the third act was graced by the presence of Mdlle. Pocchini, who executed a pas de deux with M. Durand, producing a sensation that we hardly believed it was in the power of any dancer now-a-days to create, and recalling to the "habitues" the grace, ease, finish and irresistible naturalness of Carlotta Grisi. One of her "steps" (pas ?)—the prettiest that could be imagined, and danced to perfection—was encored and repeated, although Mdlle. Pocchini abstained from accepting the compliment as long as she could gracefully persist.

To-night Il Trovatore will be performed with Mdlle. Titiens, Mdme. Borghi-Mamo, Signors Giuglini, Aldighieri and Vialetti.

ALTERATIONS AND IMPROVEMENTS IN HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

In the first place, commencing with the basement story, the walls in the vestibules and stone-hall are almost entirely covered with looking-glasses, which extend from floor to ceiling, and multiply objects all round, ad infinitum. The old desk, behind which for so many years sat Mr. Nugent, dispensing favour and courtesies, has been removed, and makes way for a monster mirror. The walls, where it was found impossible to place reflectors, are covered with paper of a crimson and gold pattern; and the pillars and pilasters are painted to resemble Scagliola marble. Over the entrance to the pit from the stone-hall (glass-hall, it should be called now), the Royal Arms are placed in gold, although it is not, therefore, to be imagined that Her Most Gracious Majesty has any idea of entering the theatre by that door. Magnificent carpets in velvet pile stretch over the floors in every direction, and cover the stone staircases. The balustrade is painted deep ultramarine blue, the ornaments picked out with gold, and the hand-rails are covered with crimson Utrecht velvet, deeply fringed and fastened on with gilt nails. Ascending from the stone-hall by the grand western staircase, the eye is arrested by a large vase filled with aquatic plants in flower, and surmounted by a figure of Autumn. From the centre of the vase a jet of water plays, and the figure holds in its hand a bunch of fruit with gas-lights shining through them. The greatest change of all has taken place in the crush rooms. On all sides, as below stairs, the huge looking-glasses prevail; but the spaces between them and the doors, where no mirrors could be fixed, are papered in pure white and gold—the pattern, a white ground with the fleur-de-lis in gold, between gold squares. In the centre-room—the round-room, or crush-room, par excellence—the ceiling is painted light-blue, interspersed with gold stars. In the other rooms the ceilings are plain, with wreaths of flowers painted on the borders. The chairs are gilt, covered with maroon velvet, and the carpets, as down stairs, of the richest pile velvet. The candelabra, by which the entrances and crush-rooms are lighted, are extremely brilliant and tasteful, and are so numerous as to create a perfect illumination in the interior, aided, to a great extent, by the mirrors which flash back every jet a hundred-fold, magnifying the lights no less than multiplying objects. The corridors, or lobbies, are laid out with equal elegance and splendour. The walls, as in the crush-rooms, are papered in white and gold, but being for the greater part lined with looking glass, the white and gold paper is principally observable on the exterior of the boxes. The lighting here proceeds from golden cupids standing on golden pedestals, placed equidistantly along the lobbies, which have also in the most convenient spaces couches covered in figured crimson satin. The boxes are newly lined with figured chintz, excepting that of Her Majesty, Lord Dudley and some of the subscribers, who have followed their individual tastes in the ornamentation and furniture. The royal box is lined with white silk with a large satin stripe in pale blue. The interior before the curtain—with the exception that everything has been cleansed and freshened up, the great chandelier, more particularly, undergoing a thorough purification—remains precisely as in the halcyon days of the Lumleyan management. Stay—we are wrong—there is a change, and a great change, effected. The stalls no longer rejoice in the old-fashioned leather-covered chairs, but give place to modern couches in crimson satin figured. Some optimists in colours object to the contrast between the crimson couches and amber curtains; while others insist that the contrast is a striking feature in the aspect of the house. All we can say about this affair is, that we do not deem it of the least importance, since, when the people are seated in the stalls, little or none of the crimson is seen. The outside of the theatre has been newly painted, and eleven huge lamps in gilt frames, surmounted with the crown, are suspended between the pillars in the Haymarket front, and quite illuminate the whole neighbourhood. The private entrance to the Queen's Box is magnificent. The walls are covered with the richest tapestried satin, the floor spread with a thick velvet pile carpet, and the whole way lighted with a series of brilliant candelabra.

Drury Lane.—A new English operatic company, under the direction of Dr. James Pech, commenced a series of performances on Monday evening, with Mr. Vincent Wallace's popular opera Maritana. The cast included Miss Dyer as the heroine; Miss Emma Heywood, Lazarillo; Mr. Henry Haigh, Don Cæsar de Bazan; Mr. Borrani, the King of Spain; and Mr. Charles Durand, Don José. The performance was received with uproarious applause by a crowded audience, and all the favourite morceaux—no less than five—were encored. The band is efficient, numbering about fifty players, and the chorus tolerably good. Miss Emma Heywood promises to become an acquisition. Miss Dyer has recommendations sufficient to entitle the public to demand why she is not often heard in public; and Mr. Henry Haigh may be left to his antecedents without any danger of his suffering therefrom. Should the speculation succeed, we may look forward to the production of some novelties, among which Halèvy's Three Musketeers.

Christy's Minstrels.—These popular "entertainers" continue their performances with unabated success. On Thursday evening a new song was introduced by Mr. J. W. Raynor, entitled, "Come back, Annie." The poetry and music, by Messrs. John Oxenford and J. L. Hatton, were written expressly for the Christy's Minstrels, and appear admirably adapted for their style of entertainment. "Come back, Annie," was redemanded tumultuously, and is announced for repetition every evening.

CONCERTS.

Monday Popular Concerts.—Easter Monday being essentially a "popular" and English holiday, the directors merely chose a selection from native composers for the gratification of those who resorted to St. James's Hall for their evening's amusement. The large room was crowded by an audience attentive and appreciative as ever, the only feature in which it differed from the ordinary audiences being the prevalence of encores, no less than seven being awarded in a short space of time. The pièces thus honoured were Mr. Henry Smart's charming song (charmingly sung by Mr. Sims Reeves) from Bertha, "In vain I would forget thee;" Mr. J. W. Davison's setting of Shelley's words, "Rough wind that moanest loud," admirably rendered by Mr. Santley; the madrigal from Macfarren's opera of King Charles the Second, "Maidens, would ye 'scape undoing" (Mr. Desmond Ryan's words); Horsley's glee, "By Celia's arbour" (both given to perfection by the London Glee and Madrigal Union, under the direction of Mr. Land); and Mr. Balfe's song, "Lovely maiden," belonging to the opera of the Rose of Castille, although generally omitted at the performance, sung by Mr. Reeves in his best style. Miss Eyles did ample justice to a beautiful song by G. A. Osborne, "The dew-drop and the rose," a composition likely to find favour equally in the drawing-room as the concert-hall. In addition to these were given—by Mr. Reeves, a new and graceful song of J. L. Hatton's, "I wander by my dear one's door each night"—Mr. Vincent Wallace's quaint and exquisite "Bellringer," capitally given by Mr. Santley (and also encored by the way)—a true "old English ditty," from Mr. Chappell's "inexhaustible selection," "Near Woodstock Town," admirably rendered by Miss Eyles (again also encored, by the way), and Bishop's well-known glee, "Blow, gentle gales." Quite a feast of English vocal music.

The instrumental programme included one exception to the native names—Dussek's Sonata in B flat for pianoforte and violin (No. 1 of The Monday Popular Concert Library)—which brought the first part to a brilliant conclusion, played as it was by Messrs. Sainton and Lindsay Sloper with the consummate talent for which they are remarkable. Alfred Mellon's Quartet in G major is too seldom heard, and the satisfaction it afforded on Monday, when performed so irreproachably by Messrs. Sainton, Ries, Doyle, and Piatti, will probably induce its clever composer to resume his pen, and afford us another "taste of his quality" in similar productions. Mr. Macfarren's fine Trio in E, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, drew forth marked applause, due no less to the beauty of the music than to the perfect manner in which it was played by Messrs. Lindsay Sloper, Sainton, and Piatti. The first-named gentleman also won more laurels by his performance of Sterndale Bennett's delicious sketches, "The Lake, the Millstream, and the Fountain," refreshing to hear after the fantasias and variations with which we were formerly regaled at concerts denominated "popular"—a term bearing a widely different interpretation when applied to these at St. James's Hall, which have now fairly assumed the importance so justly their due, and become as much an "institution" as the Philharmonic and Sacred Harmonic Societies themselves.

Monday, the 23rd inst., will be devoted to the benefit of Mr. Sims Reeves, who has contributed in no small degree to the success of the Monday Popular Concerts by the unvarying excellence of his singing. Mr. Reeves is never so much at home as in the thoroughly good music which characterises these performances. Mrs. Reeves, Mad. Sainton-Dolby, Miss Arabella Goddard, &c., contribute their valuable services.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—If the bad weather and the fast days last week precluded a great attendance at the Piccolomini Festivals, the public took their revenge on Good Friday. Upwards of thirty-seven thousand "shilling" visitors assembled at the Crystal Palace on that day, and, of course, not one in a hundred could hear the music. Fortunately there are innumerable attractions within and without the building, and no complaint was made. On Saturday, the half-crown day, there was close on six thousand. Large audiences also congregated on Monday and Tuesday, although on the Monday the weather was miserable. To-day Mdlle. Piccolomini will sing for the last time at the Crystal Palace, and no doubt attracts a large and brilliant attendance.

LONDON QUINTET UNION CONCERTS.—The series of four concerts by the practised musicians who form this Association was brought to a close on Wednesday last. The talent of the players was called into requisition four times, in the compositions respectively by Spohr, Beethoven, Sterndale Bennett, and Onslow. The work of Spohr was Op. 3,—ottet in E, for stringed quintets, clarinet, and two horns. A genuine specimen of one of the greatest masters of instrumentation we have ever had amongst us, the Union (assisted by Messrs. Charles Harper and Mann), played it evidently con amore. Beethoven was characteristically represented, at least in his early manner, by the trio in B flat, Op. 11, for pianoforte, clarinet, and violoncello; and the allegro from Onslow's quintet, Op. 25, in C, ended the concert. The evening's entertainment lay chiefly in the work of Dr. W. Sterndale Bennett. One of his early writings (Op. 8, sestet for stringed quintet and pianoforte), produced twenty-four years ago, it is neither an exhibition, work of precocity, nor merely of promise, but the achievement of one who having gathered quickly yet surely the experience of those who preceded him, placed before his auditors the composition at once of a brilliant and original genius, and of an accomplished and scholarly student. The pianist of the evening was Miss Arabella Goddard, who has so frequently and so admirably played Dr. Bennett's writtings in public, at home and abroad. The difficulties of the pianoforte part in the sestet are as nothing to this lady, who plays everything from the Op. 106 of Beethoven downwards, with perfect ease, grace, and brilliancy. In the trio of Beethoven she was equally successful, and in an equal degree elicited the enthusiastic sympathies of her audience. The vocal music was divided between Miss Banks, a lady with a voice of exquisite quality and great flexibility, and Miss Lascelles, who rejoices in an organ of considerable richness and power, but whose production of tone in the lower notes is occasionally somewhat infelicitous. The former sang "L'amor suo" (Roberto Devereux) and a "chanson" of Panseron ("Tyrol") with clarinet obbligato, which was given to admiration by Mr. Maycock, one of our most accomplished professors, and whose execution of the difficult part in the trio of Beethoven was no less irreproachable. Miss Lascelles exhibited "Il sogno" (Mercadante), and "The Reaper and the Flowers" (Balfe). The violoncello to the former song showed Mr. Pettit's power of cantabile in a favourable manner. Mr. Willy, whose violin playing has been the constant theme of admiration, deserves the highest credit for his management of this interesting series of concerts.

MANCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

(From the Manchester Courier.)

WE have before us a list of the stops of the new organ building for the Cathedral by Mr. Nicholson, of Worcester. The number of sounding stops, it will be seen, is forty-one, which will, of course, be voiced up so as to tell sufficiently in so large a building; but the comparatively small number of stops will place the instrument in a much lower rank than we should have liked the organ of our Cathedral to occupy. In our own city, which possesses so few specimens of first-class instruments, it will rank only third, those at St. Peter's Church and Holy Trinity both preceding it. To enable our readers to form a comparison for themselves between the two instruments, we subjoin the contents of the new organ side-by-side with those of the organ built by Messrs. Kirtland and Jardine, in St. Peter's Church. As some alterations have been made in the latter instrument since the opening, when we gave a full description of it, we have obtained a correct list of the stops already finished and now in the organ, omitting those which are intended to form the solo organ of four stops, comprising reeds and harmonic flutes, &c., on a high pressure of wind, as they have not yet been completed. The compass and number of the manuals and pedals is the same in both organs.

ST. PETER'S CHURCH.		THE CATHEDRAL.
GREAT ORGAN—CC TO G.
Double open diapason	16ft.	Double stopped diapason	16ft.
Flute harmonique	8ft.	Clarabella	8ft.
Open diapason	8ft.	Open diapason	8ft.
Viola d'amour	8ft.	Open diapason	8ft.
Gamba	8ft.	Gamba	1ft.
Stopped diapason	8ft.	Stopped diapason	8ft.
Quint	5½ft.
Principal	4ft.	Principal	4ft.
Flute harmonique	4ft.	Principal	4ft.
Clear flute	4ft.
Twelfth	2⅔ft.	Twelfth	2⅔ft.
Fifteenth	2ft.	Fifteenth	2ft.
Full mixture, 5 ranks		Tierce, larigot, mixture, 5 ranks
Sharp mixture, 4 ranks		Sharp mixture, 3 ranks
Double trumpet	16ft.
Trompette harmonique	8ft.	Trumpet	8ft.
Clarion	4ft.	Clarion	4ft.
SWELL ORGAN—CC TO G.
Bourdon	16ft.	{Bourdon (bass) / Dulciana (treble)}	16ft.
Open diapason	8ft.	Open diapason	8ft.
Hohl-flöte (throughout)	8ft.	Viol di gamba (to tenor C)	8ft.
Stopped diapason	8ft.	Stopped diapason	8ft.
Principal	4ft.	Octave	4ft.
Gedact-flöte	4ft.	Suabe flute	4ft.
Twelfth	2⅔ft.
Fifteenth	2ft.	Super octave	2ft.

Clear mixture, 5 ranks		Sesquialtera, 3 ranks
Trombone ...	... 16ft.
Cornopean ...	... 8ft.	Trumpet ...	... 8ft.
Hautboy ...	... 8ft.	Hautboy ...	... 8ft.
Cor anglais ...	... 8ft.
Clarion ...	... 4ft.	Clarion ...	... 4ft.
	CHOIR ORGAN—CC TO G.
Bourdon ...	... 16ft.	Clarabella (wood)	... 8ft.
Spitz-flöte (metal)	... 8ft.	Dulciana ...	... 8ft.
Dulciana ...	... 8ft.	Viol di gamba...	... 8ft.
Viol di gamba...	... 8ft.
Voix celestes ...	... 8ft.	Stopped diapason	... 8ft.
Geduct ...	... 8ft.	Gamba ...	... 4ft.
Gemshorn ...	... 4ft.	Stopped flute ...	... 4ft.
Flauto-traverso	... 4ft.
Rohr-flöte ...	... 4ft.	Piccolo ...	... 2ft.
Fifteenth ...	... 2ft.
Mixture, 4 ranks
Contra-fagotto and bassoon	16ft.	Krumhorn ...	... 8ft.
Clarionet ...	... 8ft.	Grand ophicleide (on high pressure) ...	... 8f.
	PEDAL OGAN—CC TO F.
Sub-bass ...	... 32ft.
Montre (metal)	... 16ft.	Principal (wood)	... 16ft.
Violon ...	... 16ft.	Violon ...	... 16ft.
Stopped diapason	... 16ft.	Bourdon ...	... 16ft.
Grosse quint ...	... 10⅔ft.
Principal ...	... 8ft.	Octave ...	... 8ft.
Violoncello ...	... 8ft.
Twelfth ...	... 5⅓ft.
Fifteenth ...	... 4ft.
Posaune ...	... 16ft.	Trombone ...	... 16ft.
Trumpet ...	... 8ft.

From the above lists we calculate the new organ at the Cathedral to contain 2,466 pipes, and St. Peter's 3,578 pipes. The number of pipes in itself, however, does not always afford a fair estimate of the value of an organ, as the smaller pipes can be easily multiplied at comparatively little cost, and at the same time without adding to the weight or dignity of the instrument. In the present instance St. Peter's organ has not only the superiority in point of numbers, but this numerical excess of 1,112 pipes is in fair proportion obtained by the larger, more important, and more expensive 32, 16, and 8 feet foundation stops.

MUSIC AND THEATRES IN PARIS.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

Paris, April 4th.

LAST week the Italian opera gave us a "revival," in the shape of Meyerbeer's opera, Il Crociato in Egitto. It is now thirty-seven years since it has been played here, and it is said that it is against Meyerbeer's advice that it is revived now. It was brought out when Rossini was manager of the Opera here, and Meyerbeer, who was then unknown, and of course nervous and doubtful, as to his success with the Parisian world, told Rossini it would be a failure. Rossini replied it would be a success, and bet him five hundred francs about it. Meyerbeer accepted the bet; and, as the piece proved successful, was no doubt only too happy to pay. This work, belonging quite to the youth of Meyerbeer, and framed almost mechanically on the Italian model, with pieces composed invariably of an adagio, then an allegro, cavatinas and airs d'obbligo, and rondos, with all the usual concomitants of fiorituras and cabalettas, so different to his present style, still gives a slight foretaste of the genius that was one day to give us the Huguenots; and there are also some very striking airs; the song of the "Crociato" is one, and the well-known trio for female voices, and in which the principal motif non fidarti o giosin cor recalls the music of Bellini, are among the rest. The finale of the first act is very fine, and in the last the death-song, sang by Merly and the chorus, are also remarkable. Mad. Borghi-Mamo performed the part of the Crociato, and Mad. Penco, Alboni, Signors Merly and Angelini filled the remaining principal parts; but, notwithstanding the excellence of the performance, the revival has not been met with any monstrous enthusiasm. At the Grand-Opéra, Pierre de Medicis has been alternated with a performance of the Huguenots, Mad. C. Bartot filling the part of Valentine, Gueymard and Obin Raoul and Marcel. The Opéra-Comique, finding old pieces answer so well, contentedly keeps to them. The Théâtre-Lyrique, however, has brought out a comic opera in five acts, a thing almost unheard of, Mozart being nearly the only one who had ever brought out one so long. The libretto is by MM. Jules Barbier and Michael Carré, the music by M. Theodore Semet, and the subject is taken from some of the numerous adventures of Gil Blas. Mad. Ugalde fills the part of the hero to the great delight of the public, for whatever charm may now and then be found wanting in her voice she supplies by her animated acting, and carries the piece through triumphantly. The music is gay, sparkling and original. The least successful parts are the choruses. The best airs in the opera are, Gil Blas' drinking song, "Bacchus est le vrai medicin," the grand duo buffo of the second act, the marriage chorus, "rondo pastoral," the finale of the fourth act; but nothing is equal to the song he sings before the door of the inn where the villagers are feasting, accompanying himself with a mandoline. He is expressing the hunger he feels, and when they will not listen to him he changes his tone to diabolical menaces. The air was rapturously encored. Mesdames Faure, Moreau, Vade, MM. Wartel, Lesage, Legrand, Votel, Serene, Leroy, Gabriel, Giradot, fill the other parts. There has been some talk for the last few days of a probable change in the management of the Théâtre-Lyrique; M. Carvalho retiring, and M. C. Retz, who has been, up to the present moment, Secretary-General of the Theatre, filling his place. However, nothing is decided yet. The Bouffes-Parisiens, though like the little frog in the fable, it tries occasionally to approach the dimensions of the ox, has yet good sense enough to know at what point to stop. Its last production is a sort of field-flower, in the shape of a patois-pastoral, entitled Daphnis and Chloé. A pretty little actress, Mdlle. Julitte Beau, débuted in it. The music is by the indefatigable M. Offenbach. In Paris some novelty must always be going on; people cannot rest on their oars here, and even now, before Fidelio is brought out at the theatre, they talk of an opera with much scenery by M. Charles Gounod, entitled La Reine Balkir. M. Gott, also—of the Théâtre-Français—has written an opera in four acts, the music by M. Memprie, under the title of Le Moine Rouge, though whether it is to be played or not I have not heard.

There is little new this week at the theatres. The concerts continue with unabated ardour, of which the best, the eighth and last concert of Jeunes Artistes, took place on the 1st. Fragments of Meyerbeer's Struensée were given. "La revolte des gardes," a polonaise, "La Bal," was very good, and the bacchanal chorus from Philémon et Baucis was encored. And thus with all these entertainments Lent is passing—indeed has almost passed away. It certainly this year has not been a season of fasting and mortification, and the ladies of the great world have rushed with equal ardour to their church in the morning and dressed in "gorgeous array" for their ball in the evening, thinking one neutralized the other, and thus reconciling the claims of religion and of the world to their consciences in that comfortable manner only French people can. Talking of the crowding of churches, there is one thing very necessary, and that is—more church-room for the people. There is not enough for the population of Paris, and the scenes, the pushing, the rudeness and quarrelling, that take place in a crowded church here, is more fit for the crush-room of a theatre than a spot dedicated to divine worship.

ADVERTISEMENTS.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

NEW ADDITIONS

TO

BOOSEY AND SONS' CATALOGUE.

COMPLETE OPERAS.

IL TROVATORE, with English and Italian Words, in cloth ... ... 12*s.*
LA TRAVIATA, with English and Italian Words, in cloth ... ... 12*s.*

 Forming the first Volumes of the New Series of the Standard Lyric Drama.

THE CORNET MISCELLANY

NEW NUMBER.

No. 25.	...	Selection from "Fille du Régiment,"	...	Cor. Spo.	...	Donizetti.
No. 26.	...	„ "The Bohemian Girl"	...	„	...	Balfe.
No. 27, 2nd	...	„ "Il Trovatore"	...	„	...	Verdi.
No. 28.	...	„ "Les Huguenots"	...	„	...	Meyerbeer.

NEW VIOLIN OPERA.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH complete (No. 23 of Boosey and Sons' series) ... ... 1*s.*

NEW VOLUMES

EDITED BY

J. W. DAVISON,

CHOPIN'S MARURKAS complete .. .. 8*s.*
DUSSEK'S and WOELFFL'S PLUS ULTRA and NE PLUS ULTRA SONATAS ... 4*s.*

NEW GUITAR BOOK.

MADAME PRATTEN'S Popular Instruction Book for the Guitar (43 pp.) ... ... 5*s.*

BOOSEY AND SONS, HOLLES STREET.

Published by JOHN BOOSEY, of Castlebar-hill, in the parish of Ealing, in the County of Middlesex, at 28, Holles-street.
Printed by WILLIAM SPENCER JOHNSON, "Nassau Steam Press," 60, St. Martin's-lane, in the Parish of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Saturday, April 14, 1860.

The Musical World.

"THE WORTH OF ART APPEARS MOST EMINENT IN MUSIC, SINCE IT REQUIRES NO MATERIAL, NO SUBJECT-MATTER, WHOSE EFFECT MUST BE DEDUCTED. IT IS WHOLLY FORM AND POWER, AND IT RAISES AND ENNOBLES WHATEVER IT EXPRESSES."—Göthe.

SUBSCRIPTION:—Stamped for Postage, 20s. per annum—Payable in advance, by Cash or Post Office Order, to BOOSEY & SONS, 28, Holles Street, Cavendish Square.

VOL. 38.—No. 16. SATURDAY, APRIL 21, 1860. PRICE 4d. STAMPED 5d

V. R.

UNDER THE MOST DISTINGUISHED PATRONAGE OF
HER MOST GRACIOUS MAJESTY THE QUEEN,
H.R.H. THE PRINCE CONSORT,
THEIR ROYAL HIGHNESSES THE PRINCESSES AND PRINCES OF THE ROYAL FAMILY,
The Most Worshipful the Grand Master of Ireland,
His Grace the DUKE of LEINSTER,
And Several other Distinguished Freemasons;
His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the
EARL of EGLINTON and WINTON,
The LORD BISHOP OF MANCHESTER,
The Right Worshipful the MAYOR OF MANCHESTER,
IVIE MACKIE, Esq.
His Worship the Mayor of Salford, W. HARVEY, Esq.
SIR FREDERICK GORE OUSELEY, Bart., Director of Music at the University of Oxford.

And many of the Nobility, Gentry, Clergy, and distinguished Families of the Empire.

DR. MARK'S
GREAT NATIONAL ENTERPRISE

Organised in 1848, and developed at THE ROYAL COLLEGE OF MUSIC BRIDGE STREET, MANCHESTER, established by him expressly as a Great National Institution to facilitate the Encouragement and Promotion of NATIVE MUSICAL TALENT, and the GENERAL ADVANCEMENT OF MUSIC AMONG THE RISING GENERATION, upon his new and effective system, also as a NORMAL SCHOOL for the training of masters to conduct CONSERVATOIRES OF MUSIC to be established throughout the United Kingdom, for LITTLE CHILDREN, the whole comprising an entirely new scheme of NATIONAL EDUCATION, by blending music with general instruction, so that the study of music shall become a branch of education in the humblest of schools of this country. To illustrate and to rouse an interest in every town and city for these institutions, Dr. Mark travels with a number of his pupils occasionally through the country—giving lectures, and introducing his highly approved and pleasing Musical Entertainment, entitled DR. MARK AND HIS LITTLE MEN, who number upwards of Thirty Instrumentalists, and a most Efficient Chorus, the whole forming a most unique and complete Juvenile Orchestra, composed of LITTLE ENGLISH, IRISH, SCOTCH AND WELCH BOYS, FROM FIVE TO SIXTEEN YEARS OF AGE, who play Operatic Selections, Solos, Marches, Quadrilles, Galops, &c., and sing Songs and Choruses in a most effective manner, and to whom Dr. Mark gives a gratuitous General and Musical Education.

APPOINTMENTS OF MASTERS AND ARRANGEMENTS OF CLASSES IN THE ABOVE INSTITUTION.

Principal of the Royal College of Music; Director, Composer, and Conductor; Lecturer to both Private and Public, Theoretical and Practical Instrumental and Vocal Classes	Dr. MARK.
Master of the General Educational Department: Writing, Reading, Arithmetic, Grammar, Dictation, History, Geography, Practical Geometry, and Book-keeping	Mr. POWELL and Two Assistant Teachers.

PRACTICAL ASSISTANT TEACHERS.

Organ	Mr. BAKER.
Pianoforte	Herr SIEMERS. Mr. ELDER.
Violin	Mons ROGUIER. Mr. BEARD.
Violoncello, Double Bass, and Viola	Mons. VIEUXTEMPS. Mr. T. DONOVAN.
Flute, Piccolo, Oboe, and Clarionet	Sig. CORTESI.
Cornet and other Brass Instruments	Mr. H. RUSSELL.
Concertina (German and English)	Mr. ELDER.
Vocal Classes	Messrs. POWELL and ELDER.

Dr. MARK has also made provision for the Orphans of the Musical Profession possessing musical talent, who will find the above institution a happy home, and receive a most effective general and musical education, board, and clothing, free of all expense.

Little Boys, from five to nine years of age, apprenticed for three, five, or seven years by paying a moderate entrance fee to cover the expenses of instrument and books.

Twelve appointments ready for Masters.

For Prospectuses, apply direct to the Royal College of Music, Bridge-street, Manchester.

Dr. MARK is also open to Engagements with his Little Men.

Dr. MARK begs to invite the Parents and Friends, and all those interested in his Enterprise and in the Education of the Youths of this country to visit his establishment. Visiting hours:—From Nine to Eleven, a.m., and Two and Four, p.m. Saturdays and Sundays excepted.

16

ST. JAMES'S HALL,
REGENT-STREET AND PICCADILLY.
MONDAY POPULAR CONCERTS.

THE NINETEENTH CONCERT OF THE SEASON,
MONDAY EVENING, APRIL 23rd, 1860.

MR. SIMS REEVES' BENEFIT.

The Programme will be selected from the works of VARIOUS MASTERS.

PROGRAMME.

PART I.

POSTHUMOUS QUARTET, in F Major, No. 17 .. .. Beethoven.
M. Sainton, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.
SONG, "Frühlingslied" .. .. Mendelssohn.
Mrs. Sims Reeves.
SONG, "Deeper and deeper still" .. .. Handel.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SONG, "Night" .. .. Mendelssohn.
Madame Sainton-Dolby.
SONG, "Adelaide" .. .. Beethoven.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
SONATA, in F. Major .. .. Mozart.
Miss Arabella Goddard.

PART II.

SONATA, in E flat, Major, Pianoforte and Violin .. Dussek.
Miss Arabella Goddard and M. Sainton.
SONG, "False friend, wilt thou smile or weep? (Cenci) J. W. Davison.
Madame Sainton-Dolby.
SONG, "Dalla sua pace" .. .. Mozart.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
DUET, "Pray leave me but a moment" .. .. Spohr.
Mrs. Sims Reeves and Madame Sainton-Dolby.
SONG, "The Stolen Kiss" .. .. Beethoven.
Mr. Sims Reeves.
QUARTET, in E flat, No. 4. .. .. Rossini.
M. Sainton, Herr Ries, Mr. Doyle, and Signor Piatti.

CONDUCTOR—MR. BENEDICT.

Stalls, 10s, 6d. and 5s.; Balcony, 3s.; Unreserved Seats, 1s.—Tickets to be had of Mr. Austin, at the Hall, 28, Piccadilly; Messrs. Cramer and Co., Hammond, Addison, and Co., Schott and Co., Ewer and Co., Simpson, Carter, and Oetzmann and Co., Regent-street; Brooks, 24, Old Cavendish-street; Bradberry's London Crystal Palace, Oxford-street; Duff and Co., 65, Oxford-street; Prowse, Hanway-street; Chidley, 195, High Holborn; Purday, 50, St. Paul's Church-yard; Keith, Prowse, and Co., 48, Cheapside; Turner, 19, Cornhill; Cook and Co., 6, Finsbury-place, south; Humfress, 4, Old Church street, Paddington-green; Mitchell, Leader and Co., Ollivier, Campbell, and Willis, Bond-street; and Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ORCHESTRAL UNION.—MR. ALFRED MELLON begs to announce that he will return to London about the middle of June, when he will be open to any engagements for the Band of the Orchestral Union, which he has reconstructed. Principal Artistes—M M. Sainton, H. Hill, W. Watson, E. Payton, Doyle, Trust, G. Collins, Aylward, Howell, senr, White, P. S. Pratten, Barret, Lazarus, T. Owen, Hausser, C. Harper, Standen, T. Harper, Stanton Jones, W. Winterbottom, Cioffi, Hughes, and F. C. Horton. Applications respecting engagements to be made to Mr. George Dolby, 2, Hinde-street, Manchester-square, W.

THE MUSICAL SOCIETY OF LONDON. [illegible] CONCERT, on Wednesday Evening, April 25th, [illegible]. Programme—First Part:—Overture, the Isles of Fingal, Mendelssohn; [illegible] Air, Jours de mon enfance (Pré aux Clercs), Miss Augusta Thompson; [illegible] Symphony concertante, for two pianofortes and orchestra, [illegible], and Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Dussek; Scena, (MS.), Mr. Santley; [illegible] (Lurline), Wallace. Second Part:—Sinfonia Eroica, Beethoven; [illegible] città sei tu (L'Etoile du Nord), Miss Augusta Thompson; [illegible] beer; Overture (Gustave), Auber. Conductor, Mr. Alfred [illegible]

CHARLES SALAMAN, Hon. Sec.

ONE PENNY NEWSPAPER

CRYSTAL PALACE.—Friday, May 4th.—Tickets for THE GREAT FESTIVAL PERFORMANCE OF ELIJAH, on the occasion of the Inauguration of the Bronze Memorial Statue of Mendelssohn, are now on sale at the Crystal Palace; at No. 2, Exeter Hall; or, by order, of the usual Agents.

Admission tickets, 5s. (if purchased before 1st May); Reserved stalls in blocks, as arranged at the Handel Festival, in the area, 5s. extra; or in the corner galleries, 10s. 6d. extra.

The new Season Tickets will admit, subject to the usual regulations.

NOTICE.—Immediate application is requisite for Central Blocks. Post Office Orders or Cheques to be payable to George Grove.

CRYSTAL PALACE.—June 25th, 26th, and 28th, GREAT ORPHEONISTE MUSICAL FESTIVAL.

Vouchers for tickets for this great combination of the French Choral Societies, comprising deputations from nearly every Department of France, representing 170 distinct Choral Societies, and numbering between Three and Four thousand performers, who will visit England expressly to hold a Great Musical Festival at the Crystal Palace on the above days, are now on issue at the Crystal Palace; at No. 2, Exeter Hall; or by order of the usual agents.

The prices of admission will be as follows:—The set of Transferable tickets (one admission to each of the 3 days) 12s. 6d.; Reserved seats (for the 3 days) 12s. 6d. extra; or in the corner galleries, 25s. extra.

The new Season Tickets will admit on the above occasion, subject to the usual regulations.

HANOVER-SQUARE ROOMS.—MR. MELCHIOR WINTER (tenorist), and Mr. BENJAMIN WELLS (flautist), beg to announce that their GRAND VOCAL AND INSTRUMENTAL CONCERT will take place at the above rooms on the 28th of May, (Whit Monday.) Full particulars will shortly be published.—17, St. James's-square, Notting-hill, W.

PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.—The Directors respectfully announce that the FIRST CONCERT will take place at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Monday Evening next, the 23rd of April. Programme:—Sinfonia, The Seasons, Spohr; Concerto violin, Herr Becker, Mendelssohn; Overture, Egmont, Beethoven; Sinfonia in C, Jupiter, Mozart; Overture, Zaira, Winter. Vocal performers:—Mdlle. Louise Michal and Signor Belletti. Conductor, Professor Sterndale Bennett, Mus. D. To begin at 8 o'clock. Subscription for the season, £3 3s.; single tickets, 15s. Subscriptions received and tickets issued by Messrs. Addison, Hollier, and Lucas, 210, Regent-street.

MR. LANGTON WILLIAMS begs to inform his friends and the public that his Annual Concert will take place at St. Martin's Hall, on Wednesday evening, April 25th, when the following distinguished artists will appear; Mdlle. Parepa, Madame Weiss, Miss Poole, Miss Stabbach, Miss Leffler, Miss Julia Bleaden, Miss Clara Hamilton, and Miss Lascelles; Mr. Weiss, Mr. Ramsden, Mr. R. Seymour, Mr. J. W. Morgan, and Mr. Sims Reeves. Harp, Miss Chatterton; Concertina, Miss M. Collins; Violin, Mr. Viotti Collins; Pianoforte, Mr. L. Williams, Herr Wilhelm Ganz, and Mr. J. L. Hatton. Tickets 1s., 2s. 3s., sofa stalls, 5s.

MISS ELEANOR ARMSTRONG begs to announce that her grand Evening Concert will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday the 16th May, at 8 o'clock, when the following eminent artists will appear: Vocalists, Miss Eleanor Armstrong, Madame Laura Baxter, Mr. William Cummings, and Herr Eibenschütz, of Pesth. Instrumentalists: Pianoforte, Mr. Charles Salaman, and Herr Adolphe Ries; Violin, Herr Louis Ries; Violoncello, Herr J. Lidel; Harp, Mr. Ellis Roberts, Harpist to H. R. H. the Prince of Wales. Conductor, Mr. Frank Mori. Tickets 7s., Reserved seats 10s. 6d., to be had of Miss Eleanor Armstrong, at her residence, 36, Osnaburgh-st., Regent's-park, Messrs. Keith, Prowse and Co., City, and of the principal music-sellers.

MLLE. ELVIRA BEHREN'S EVENING CONCERT, under the immediate patronage of Her Excellency the Countess Bernstorff, Her Excellency the Countess d'Apponyi, & Her Excellency the Countess Platen, will take place at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Wednesday, the 2nd May. Artistes, Madame Rieder, Mdlle. Elvira Behrens, Herr Eibenschütz, Herr Ernst Pauer, Herr Wilhelm Ganz, Herr Becker, Herr C. Oberthür, Herr Daubert. Reserved seats, 10s. 6d.; family tickets, admitting three, one guinea; unreserved seats, 5s.; to be had at Mdlle. Behren's residence, 14, Blenheim-road, St. John's-wood; and of the principal west-end musicsellers, and Messrs. Keith and Prowse, Cheapside, city.

MEYERBEER'S DINORAH AND STERNDALE BENNETT'S MAY QUEEN, are sung nightly at the CANTERBURY HALL CONCERTS. Comic vocalists—Messrs. George Hodson (the Irish comedian and mimic), W. J. Critchfield and E. W. Mackney. Several interesting pictures are added to the Fine Arts Gallery. The suite of Halls have been re-decorated and beautified, and constitute one of the most unique and brilliant sights of the metropolis.

MISS MARGARET McALPINE (Contralto), requests that letters respecting engagements for Oratorios, Concerts, and Pupils, be addressed to her residence, 63, Burton-crescent, New-road.

MADAME BORCHARDT having returned to Town from her Operatic Tour with Madlle. Piccolomini, is at liberty to accept engagements for Concerts, &c., for the season. Address to the care of Messrs. Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, W.

MISS ELLEN LYON, Vocalist (Soprano). Letters respecting all public and private engagements to be addressed 26, Charles-street, Berners-street, W.

MISS SELINA PYKE (Pupil of Mr. Charles Salaman), continues to give lessons on the PIANOFORTE. Miss P. attends schools and her pupils westward, twice a week. 52, Great Prescott-street, E.

M. BUZZIAN (Violonist), has just arrived from the Continent, and is open for engagements; apply at Mr. Mapleson's, 12, Haymarket.

MDLLE. PAREPA has removed to No. 17, Russell-place, Fitzroy-square, to which address she begs that all future communications respecting engagements may be forwarded.—April 11.

TO MUSIC PUBLISHERS, CLERGYMEN, COMPOSERS, AND OTHERS.

P. GRANT AND CO., Typographical Music and General Printers, Lithographers, and Engravers, Orange-street, and Red Lion-square, Holborn, respectfully inform the above that they are prepared to undertake works to any extent in Music Printing, upon the most reasonable terms, and with the greatest accuracy and dispatch.

MUSIC PRINTING FOR THE TRADE.

Estimates, and Specimens of Music Founts sent to any part of the United Kingdom.

"THE ARION" (Eight-Part-Choir).—The members of this Society will meet until further notice every Thursday evening, at 8 o'clock, at 13, Berners-street, Oxford-street. Conductor, Mr. ALFRED GILBERT.

F. F. REILLY, Hon. Sec.

Persons desirous of joining the choir are requested to address the Secretary.

BOROUGH OF LEEDS.—The Council of the Borough of Leeds are prepared to appoint an ORGANIST for the Town Hall Organ, at the salary of £200 per annum. The appointment will be made subject to public competition. Printed conditions may be obtained by application at the Town Clerk's Office, on and after the 21st instant.

By Order,

Leeds, 11th April, 1860. JOHN A. IKIN, Town Clerk.

ARTISTS' VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—(38th Middlesex), Viscount Bury, Captain Commandant. This corps, composed of Artists, Amateurs, and others interested in any branch of Art, drills at the Argyll Rooms, on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday, at Five o'clock; Tuesday, Thursday, and Saturday evenings at Half-past Six; and at Burlington House on Wednesday mornings at Eight. Officers appointed to First Company: Captain, Viscount Bury; Lieutenant, H. W. Phillips; Ensign, J. E. Millais, A. R. A. Third and Fourth Companies are now forming; gentlemen wishing to join the corps can be enrolled at the hours of drill, or on application to F. P. Cockerell, Esq., Honorary Secretary, 8, Regent-street.

TO VOLUNTEER RIFLE CORPS.—Boosey and Sons' military band instruments, reed and brass, as well as bugles, drums and fifes, have been used and approved of by almost every regiment in the service, at home and abroad. Those regiments that contemplate the formation of a band, are invited to apply to the firm, who will be happy to recommend them competent bandmasters, and render any further assistance that may be required.—Boosey and Sons, Holles-street, London.

EVANS'S ENGLISH HARMONIUMS.—Full particulars of these unrivalled instruments to be had of the manufacturers, Boosey and Sons, 24 and 28, Holles-street, London. Manufactories at Wells-street and Davies-street.

CASE'S PATENT CONCERTINAS, as used by Signor Regondi and Mr. George Case, are remarkable for their superior tone, and being less liable to get out of tune than any other English Concertinas. Prices from four to twelve guineas each. Manufactured by Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

Just Published, price 3s. 6d.

"ROMANZA," for the Violoncello and Piano, composed and dedicated to Frederick Charles Pawle, Esq., by Edward Thurnam. Robert Cocks and Co., New Burlington-street, London.

MEYERBEER'S NEW WORK—"ASPIRATION"—CANTIQUE. (Short Anthem.) The words from the original Latin of Thomas a Kempis, "De Imitatione Christi." Composed for SIX VOICES (three sopranos, two tenors, and bass), with Recitatives for a BASS SOLO, and Organ (or Harmonium) accompaniment ad libitum, by GIACOMO MEYERBEER. Price, in score, 4s. London: Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street, where Meyerbeer's setting of the Lord's Prayer, for four voices, 3s., and the Serenade, for eight voices, "This house to love is holy," 4s., may be obtained.

CHEAP EDITION OF MOZART'S TWELFTH MASS and ROSSINI'S STABAT MATER, arranged in the most effective manner for the Pianoforte, by Henry Smart, price 3s. each, complete, or handsomely bound, 5s. each. Boosey and Sons, Holles-street.

REVIEWS.

"'Thou art so near,' Reichardt's celebrated song, arranged for the pianoforte"—by Brinley Richards (Boosey and Sons). An adaptation—or, as our "lively," "volatile," "pugnacious," "capricious," "mercurial," "spiritual," and thoroughly amiable neighbours say, "transcription"—of Herr Reichardt's very popular melody, done with that neatness, elegance, and finish for which Mr. Brinley Richards is notorious, which imparts so genuine a charm to his smaller compositions for the drawing-room, and makes them invaluable as teaching pieces, both to master and pupil. A happier example of his taste and facility in this direction has not been issued from the press.

"'Marche à Grand Orchestre,' transcrite par l'auteur"—Frederick Scotson Clark (Augener and Co.). Mr. Frederick Scotson Clark, though an English- (Irish?—Scotch?—Welsh?—Manx?) -man, selects the French lingo for his title-page, and "transcribes"—"pour piano, harmonium, ou grand orgue d'église." We have attempted his present "transcription" on the first-named instrument. Mendelssohn composed a certain Wedding March, which begins thus:—

Mr. Clark (to avoid plagiarism of his illustrious predecessor?) sets out as below:—

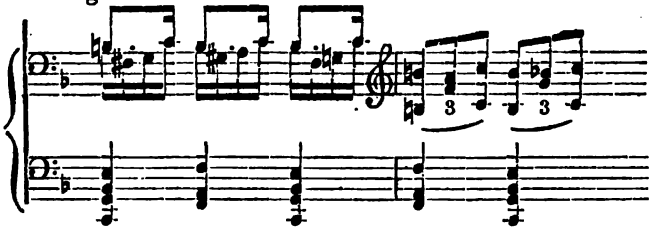
Mendelssohn's first theme commences as follows:—

Mr. Clark (to avoid &c.?) dashes off as subjoined:—

And the rest to match. We prefer Mendelssohn's march, which perhaps (as in the instance of Professor Sterndale Bennett's second Impromptu) Mr. Clark has never seen. Nevertheless (by "a curious coincidence"), his coda is inaugurated by a flat seventh on the dominant:—

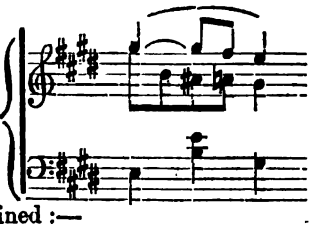
And so is Mendelssohn's. We had put a "curious coincidence" in parenthesis, but think we are now justified in dispensing with brackets, and adopting the plural number. These' then, are curious coincidences—very.

"Polka Mazurka, pour piano"—Anton Rubinstein (Ewer and Co.). This in some degree clever, occasionally graceful, as occasionally ungraceful, and never quite original (unless Chopin, out-Chopined in what is most eccentrically Chopinesque, can claim to be original) effusion, is dedicated to the Princess Sophie of Nassau, whose ears must be well-seasoned in the modern school of pianofortery to relish the following:—



That the ears of the composer were rather tickled than offended by the progression, may be gathered from the complacent bonhommie with which he reiterates it.

"'Azelia,' morceau de salon"—Adolph Gollmick, Op. 38 (Boosey and Sons). Herr Gollmick's "Op. 38" would be as irreproachable as the immaculate Azelia herself, but for such passages as the subjoined:—



and the subjoined:—

The theme itself is pretty, and the arpeggio variation beginning at page 4, a clever imitation of one of M. Thalberg's most familiar expedients.

"'La Consolation,' rêverie," à son ami, R. Conolly, Esq.—H. F. Henniker (Avery). We protest against a French title-page coming from an English Academy student. The late Earl of Westmoreland would not have sanctioned it; and we are ready to bet three "rêveries" to one that Mr. Henniker's "ami, R. Conelly, Esq." (why not Escuyer?) would have preferred to have the work dedicated to him in plain English. The name of the "rêverie," moreover, is ill chosen. There can be little consolation for any sorrow, disappointment, or misfortune in four or five pages of music skipping about after this fashion (style grenouille?):—

A paralytic pianist who had lost the use of his fingers might (peraunter) find "consolation" in the fact that he could not now be asked to play it.

"Azelia," noticed above, forms No. 2 of "Six Morceaux Caracteristiques, pour piano" (Boosey and Sons), to which the name of Herr Adolph Gollmick is attached. The others are "Vive la Danse, grande valse brillante" (Op. ——), which has a very effective episode in the subdominant key, but the first theme of which sets out, questionably, thus:—

"'Belinda,' morceau de salon" (Op. 47), which would be nice, but for such passages as:—

and again:—

"'Jeu d'Esprit,' caprice" (Op. 48), the first two pages of which are all at the top of the key-board, but in which we are consoled, at page 3, by a charming episode in the subdominant key; "'Pauline,' mazurka de salon" (Op. 46), a really brilliant piece; and "'Bellona,' fest marsch" (Op. 49), the melody of which begins something like the septuor in the duel-scene of the Huguenots. In all these pieces there is more or less merit, and they are all written by one who evidently understands the instrument.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

MATHEMATICAL THEORY OF THE MAJOR DIATONIC SCALE.

SIR,—I presume that as Mr. D. C. Hewitt offers no reply to my letters (Musical World, December 24th, and January 28th), he is thoroughly convinced of the unsoundness of the principles of his proposed theory of unit basses, which is in reality a theory founded upon an unlimited series of harmonics; and it could easily be made manifest that no theory, built upon such a complicated foundation, can give the true principles of harmony, that is, no theory derived from such a basis can show the true relations of musical sounds, whether as simple sounds or in combination as chords, or can explain the connection of these chords one with another, either when they proceed by simple progression or by modulation; on the other hand, all these relations, and many others, are with facility deduced from the simple theory of limited harmonics, or systems of sounds, based upon the consonant intervals, the whole of which are formed by a principal sound as generator, and its first, second and fourth harmonics, represented by the respective ratios, 1, 2, 3 and 5, to 1, and are those generally known as the common chord, which chord may therefore, with propriety, be called the very essence of harmony, and justly be designated the perfect concord.

In my last letter I pointed out, I believe for the first time, the mathematical relation existing between the chord of the dominant 7th and the chords of its resolution, but as the limits of a letter written for the purpose of elucidating another part of the subject, did not allow of more than a slight notice of this, I may perhaps enlarge upon it at some future period; for the same reason I assumed the sounds of the major diatonic scale to be those already acknowledged as such, but it is my principal object in the present to complete the link in the argumentative chain, by showing that these sounds of the scale can be strictly deduced from the same scientific basis. In reference to the systems of sounds in the same letter, I there noticed the fact that each sound (nominally the same), as, for instance, G, enters into three systems under three distinct forms, and when it enters as a primary it is continued through three systems, in the other cases only through two. Now when it appears in two systems only, as in E and A, it does not enter as a primary, but only in a subordinate character: it is subject unto and governed by a primary sound, evidenced also by its accidental change, and though in combination with the primaries, E and B, it establishes a connection between the two systems, yet it is of itself powerless, and has no influence over the sounds of these systems; the same may be said of the sound G in the systems E flat and A flat. But when it enters as a primary, as in G, then in the adjacent system C, it appears as the unit-sound, that is, the sound with which all the others in that system are consonant, and which it therefore governs; it is the ruling sound, in fact, the dominant sound, all the others being subject unto it, its influence extending also into the adjacent systems, G and F, which thus become equally related to the system C; also the sound G is the only one that is continued through the three systems G, C, and F, which are in this manner brought into connection and form one mode of sound, of which G is the dominant. Moreover, the G as dominant, or unit-sound of a system, invariably leads to the 5th below, or C, as the primary basis (as shown in my letter, Musical World, December 24th), which thus becomes the basis or root of the sounds in this mode.

The mode may be either major or minor, accordingly as we take the sounds of the major or minor primary chords. As the subject of our present consideration is the major diatonic scale, we must take the sounds of the major primary chords, the individual sounds of which, arranged within the compass of an octave in an ascending order, according to the magnitude of their ratios, and commencing with the ascertained root, are—

C	D	E	F	G	A	B	C
1	$\frac{8}{9}$	$\frac{5}{6}$	$\frac{4}{3}$	$\frac{3}{2}$	$\frac{5}{3}$	$\frac{15}{8}$	$\frac{2}{1}$

which are all the sounds of the major primary chords, in the mode of which C is the root, and taken collectively are the sounds of the major diatonic scale of C only. All other major diatonic scales are formed in a similar way.

We have thus not only the sounds of the major diatonic scale, but also the true reason why the 5th of the scale is the dominant sound, and how it becomes so: the whole of which are, I believe, now, for the first time, strictly deduced from a mathematical basis. It will be seen that the complete scale consists of eight sounds or seven intervals, which intervals, by a comparison of their ratios, are found to be of three degrees of magnitude, viz.: the major tone (ratio $\frac{8}{9}$), the minor tone (ratio $\frac{15}{16}$), and the diatonic semitone (ratio $\frac{16}{15}$), which, if they be represented respectively by the letters T, t, S, then the following is the order in which they occur, and which serves as a simple illustration of the magnitude of the various intervals, any interval whatever may be easily measured and compared with another, by simply adding together the various magnitudes of which such intervals are composed:—

C	D	E	F	G	A	B	C
	T	t	S	T	t	T	S

Thus the interval of any of the minor 3rds, E G, A C, or B D contains the magnitudes T and S, whilst the interval D F contains only t and S, and is therefore less than a minor 3rd by the difference between T and t.

The equality between the magnitudes of the first three intervals, and the last three intervals of the scale, and the fact of the semitone occurring in the same situation, in each portion, has given rise to the notion that the major diatonic scale is in reality a compound scale, consisting of two scales of four sounds each, thus:—

C	D	E	F	G	A	C	B
	T	t	S		t	T	S

and it is thus taught in several theoretical works, but it is evident, on looking at the order of the intervals, that such notion is incorrect, the second portion, G A B C of the scale of C, could never become the first portion of the scale of G, the intervals not occurring in the same order, but which ought to be the case, all major diatonic scales being exactly similar in this respect, that is in the order of the intervals. The consideration of the minor scale I reserve for the present.

I remain, sir, yours truly, W. W. Parkinson.

Chatham Hill, Manchester, April 2nd, 1860.

THE NEW ORGAN FOR THE CATHEDRAL.

To the Editor of the "Manchester Courier."

Sir,—I was greatly surprised to see the account given in your last of the new organ for our Cathedral. I had been somewhat prepared by the silence maintained by the authorities after the inquiries made by one of your correspondents some weeks since, to expect that no healthy competition would be allowed, but I now find not only that the order has been given in a most peculiar manner, but that the instrument, instead of being worthy of the Cathedral, will be inferior to others erected by private liberality in district churches. I cannot doubt the accuracy of the specification which you have published, and, as far as church organs are concerned, you are correct in stating that the instrument will rank third in this city, but, speaking generally, this is not the case. The organ in St. Peter's Church is undoubtedly the finest and largest in this district, as well as this city; but the organ at the Free-trade Hall is the next in importance. This instrument contains 52 sounding stops, against the 39 (I should say, for such things as tierces and larigots have no right to be considered separate stops,) of the new organ for the Cathedral. It also contains a 16 feet trumpet in the great organ, a 16 feet reed in the swell, and a 32 feet stop and a 16 feet reed in the pedal. The organ at the Cathedral will therefore not rank even third in this city, but will come in as a bad fourth—a fact I really think anything but creditable to the authorities. I cannot ascertain that any of the churchwardens are possessed of practical musical knowledge, and I believe that the organist, Mr. Harris, has not had any connection with the matter, not even having had the compliment of being consulted on the subject, and the order for the instrument has been given to a stranger without any competition. I imagine that others besides myself who have been appealed to by the churchwardens for contributions, will be interested in this inquiry; and for troubling you with this communication, this must be the apology of, sir, your obedient servant,

A Parishioner.

LETTERS OF SPOHR.

[In numbers 8 and 11 we gave two letters from Spohr, written from Paris in 1820, besides extracts from two others dated 1821. Our authority was, Herr Al. Malibran's small book on Spohr. If Herr Malibran does not expressly say the letters were addressed to him, which, on account of the anachronism, we never supposed they were (though other papers have, without any investigation, taken this for granted), every one must, at any rate, have believed that the originals of the letters were given to Herr Malibran by the person to whom Spohr addressed them. We quoted them, therefore, bonâ fide, and as the best things in the whole pamphlet. —— There is, however, now lying before us the copy of a letter written by Spohr from Heidelberg to a friend, on the 20th February, 1821, in which he says:—

"You will read an account of our stay in Paris in four long letters which I have forwarded to the Leipsic Musik Zeitung."

—— These letters are, therefore, printed in the volume of the above paper for 1821, which we do not happen to have by us. Was it to be supposed that reckless bookmaking could go so far as to foist upon the public, as the great attraction of a hastily compiled biography of a great man, letters of his which had long since been published?

We, however, are enabled to present our readers with some letters of Spohr, from London and Paris, written at the same period of his life, and addressed to his friend, Speyer. They have never been made public. Herr Speyer gave these interesting documents, unconditionally, to Herr A. Schindler, at the latter's reiterated request. We, in our turn, are indebted to Herr Schindler for them.]

I.

London, the 27th March, 1820.

My dear Friend,—I have purposely deferred writing until now, in order that I might be able to tell you something both of my circumstances here, and of the way in which art is cultivated. At present, after a stay of four weeks, I am sufficiently at home to be able to pronounce a decision with certainty. If, however, my procrastination has been the cause of your being at all alarmed by a piece of information in a Paris paper, which reported we were lost during the passage from Calais to Dover, I should blame myself for not having at once let you know that—though obliged to venture on crossing at the stormy period of the year, when, according to the returns of the Exchange,* more than 150 ships were either lost or driven aground on the English coast—we arrived safe and sound, and soon recovered from the fright and illness of the transit. In the first place, then, you must know that I have been most cordially received by all those persons to whom I brought letters of recommendation, as well as by all the artists on whom I have called, and that Herr Pensa is perfectly right in saying that the English are far more agreeable at home than on their travels abroad. In the next place, I must inform you that the way in which art is cultivated here offers great contrasts (most glaringly prominent in large cities especially); that, side by side with much that is admirable and worthy of praise, you hear the most wretched performances, and that, in a word, it is very plain the English have no vocation and no true feeling for music. It is true that they cultivate music seriously, as they do everything, but it is soon evident, as in the case of English travellers, when visiting the treasures of art and antiquities in Italy, that it is more a labour than a source of enjoyment for them, and that, at the conclusion of a concert, they may well be supposed to say, like their compatriots after an art-visit in Rome, "Thank heaven, this is all over!" The very fact of their being able to sit out and listen attentively and seriously to concerts, four, and frequently five, hours long, with only a short pause, proves that music does not force its way to their hearts, for, if it did, they would be exhausted before the end of the first half. The fact, too, that they listen with equal interest, on the same evening, to the most wretched compositions; that they can, in the same concert, hear a classical piece of music by Mozart, and encore a vulgar English street ballad, without the slightest artistic value, proves them to be utterly incapable of distinguishing good from bad. Of course this is true only of the ordinary concert-goers, for there are naturally in a city with 1,200,000 inhabitants, some few who must be allowed to form honorable exceptions, and possess the power of judging matters of art. That, being convinced of this, I should, three weeks ago, on my first appearance (when I played my scena at the first concert of the Philharmonic Society) have felt very nervous, I can explain only by the presence of Viotti and several other distinguished professionals, whose perhaps too great expectations I had to satisfy, and although they, as well as the general public, applauded me very much, I was but little satisfied with myself, and looked forward impatiently to my second appearance. A week ago, I played at the second concert of the Philharmonic Society, my "Quatuor brillant" in E major, with such success that, from that time, I have enlisted every one in my favour. Last Wednesday, too, when I played for the third time, at Drury Lane Theatre, in what was called an oratorio, my "Pot-pourri," in B flat, I was greeted, both on my appearance, and when I had concluded the piece, with marks of approbation, such as seldomfall to the lot of a foreign artist. At the third concert of the Philharmonic Society, I am going to conduct, and shall make my début with a new grand symphony in D minor, which I began immediately after our arrival, and finished a day or two ago. You may easily believe I am indescribably delighted that this work, which I conceived and brought forth in a spirit of the greatest enthusiasm, is to be performed for the first time by so magnificent and full a band as that of the Philharmonic Society (28 violins, 12 double basses, &c), and in so noble a place as the New Argyll Rooms. I shall afterwards produce my old symphony, as well as my overtures, which have not yet been performed here.

* Spohr means, probably, Lloyd's.—Ed. M. W.

Whether we shall make anything considerable here, the Future will show; that it will be something, I know already, for I can calculate pretty nearly the expense of living. Up to the present time, we have engagements, either for us both. or for me alone, to play for remuneration at three concerts. I have also begun to give lessons. It is not certain whether or no the King will hear us; he has not yet returned to town. Our benefit-concert is fixed for the 8th June; I think it will be tolerably successful. I will write to you next time about the professionals here; a concert of Mad. Mara, who is seventy, was interesting. My change on the violin has turned out excellent; the violinists here are already beginning to imitate it. Louis Spohr.

II.

London, the 17th April, 1820.

My dear Friend,—How can I thank you sufficiently for having, by a speedy refutation of the frightful report of our death, spared my parents and mother-in-law days of grief! But for your letter, what would they not have suffered until they had read the denial of the report in the newspapers? I shall never forget this friendly act of service on your part. We are receiving, from all parts of Germany, congratulations on our escape; these, as proofs of the interest taken in us by a great many good men, have caused us great joy. I cannot, however, even now, understand how the report of our having perished can have arisen, since we were in London long before the outburst of the storm, which destroyed so many vessels.

You received, no doubt, soon after you despatched your own, my first letter, in which I informed you of my appearance at the first two concerts of the Philharmonic Society. Since then, I have played three times in public, and conducted the third concert of the Philharmonic Society, rising, I am fully justified in asserting, more and more in the estimation of the public,—at least the latter have given me the most unmistakeable proofs of this at each successive appearance. In the first place, I played in a so-called oratorio at Drury Lane Theatre, my pot-pourri in B flat major, then, at the last Dilletanti Concert at the London Tavern, in the City, a sonata with my wife, and, in the second part, my scena; and, lastly, at the so-called Vocal Concert, in a very fine room in Hanover Square, a new concerto in A major, which was especially successful. My wife, who, on her first appearance here, where there are so many good masters of the harp, quite astonished and put me to the blush, for I was much more timid than she, created a deep sensation by the originality of her grand play, and was highly praised by all the professionals that evening. That this success of our efforts as artists greatly enlivens our sojourn here, you may easily imagine.

The greatest pleasure was, however, that caused by the reception of my new symphony. Previously to my arrival in London, not one of my orchestral compositions had ever been given, either at any of the Philharmonic, nor, as far as I am aware, at any other concert; and I looked forward anxiously for an opportunity of enabling professionals and amateurs to hear some of them. This opportunity presented itself. Among other very sensible regulations, there is one to the effect that, during the series of concerts, the members shall execute, on two evenings, before a small and select audience of professionals and amateurs, only compositions (mostly symphonies and overtures) with which they are unacquainted, and decide, by the applause of those present, whether the pieces thus played are or are not worthy of being played publicly at one of the subsequent concerts. At an ordeal of this kind, I gave them my published symphony and two of my overtures, that from Alruna, and the new one. The enthusiastic applause with which these were distinguished (it is true they had to contend with only very weak productions—a symphony by Soliva, the composer of the opera La Testa di Bronzo, and another, still weaker, by a native composer) impelled the directors to ask me to have the published symphony performed at the next concert. This, however, I declined, telling them I had intended for my début as a composer a new symphony, written here in London. My proposition was accepted, although the directors seemed to think the new symphony would scarcely please so much as the old one did. But they changed their opinion, even on the first hearing of the piece at rehearsal. The band, whose good-will I had already gained, by small acts of attention and politeness, at the performance of my other things, exerted themselves to the utmost to execute the symphony in a way that would meet with my approval. They were accustomed more, also, to my mode of conducting (for I had been called on to conduct at the trial of the new compositions a week previously), and found this a great help, so that not only my symphony, but all the other pieces produced at this concert (the symphony in C with fugue, by Mozart, and the overtures to Fidelio and Medea) went with much more precision than usual.

The manner of conducting at the theatres and concerts here is the most preposterous which can be imagined. With two conductors figuring away, there is really not even one. He who is styled the conductor, in the bills, sits at the piano and plays from the score, but neither marks time nor gives the tempi; this the leader, or first violinist, ought to do. As he has, however, merely a violin part before him, he cannot help the orchestra, and, therefore, contents himself with playing away his own part, and allowing the orchestra to get on in the best way they can. Artists here had perceived the defect of such an arrangement, and the impossibility of an orchestra of fifty or sixty persons ever working well together with it, before I spoke to them on the subject; but they do not dare to make an alteration, because what is once established is regarded as sacred and inviolable, for, after all, with all his political freedom, an Englishman is the most abject slave of etiquette. I conducted, however, at rehearsal, in my old and usual manner, from the score; and, in the evening, when the conductor is obliged to figure behind the piano, I knew the thing so by heart, that I was enabled to help the orchestra even without the score. My symphony was, consequently, executed with more precision and nicety than I could expect, after one rehearsal, and that rather a hurried one, and it is to this, no doubt, that I am indebted for the fact that it was received by the public with greater enthusiasm than any other orchestral composition during my stay here. The minuet or scherzo was encored, and applauded after its repetition even more than before. This successful result is doubly gratifying, because it encourages me to hope that I have not yet gone back as a composer; for I dare not trust unconditionally my own opinion, according to which this symphony is the best thing I have done in the way of orchestral music, partly because one is always fondest of one's youngest children, and partly because a man is only too unwilling to confess to himself that the creative power of his youth is on the decline.

Of the other concerts and musical performances we have attended, I cannot say much. The Italian Opera is, at present, altogether bad. We were so fearfully bored there, that, till now, we have been unabled to make up our minds to go there a second time. Among the singers, there was not a single one who distinguished himself. The band, conducted in the mode I have just described, is continually wavering, and you fear that it will break down every instant. The choruses are beneath criticism. Of the benefit concerts, the most interesting (but not on account of its goodness) for us was that given, at the Opera House, by Mad. Mara, who is seventy years of age. She had, probably, hoped that curiosity to hear once again as a matron a singer who had been admired here in her prime, forty years ago, would attract the English in large numbers to the theatre, and that she would once more, in her old age, make a great hit; but she was wofully mistaken. The house was empty, and, on account of the enormous expenses (the theatre alone costs 100 guineas), she will, in all probability, be something out of pocket. If, without being compelled to take such a step by the greatest want, she has, by thus appearing in public, rendered herself ridiculous, and damaged her well-merited reputation, she richly deserves having been punished by the unfavourable result. If, however, it is true that, as it is here and there asserted, she lost all she possessed at the burning of Moscow, we must give all our sympathy to a poor old lady, who, at so advanced an age, has been compelled, for the sake of what she might get, to exhibit publicly the last remnant of her once so celebrated artistic capabilities. What was heard of the latter on the evening of the concert was far too little for anyone to form a judgment of her, and she escaped, probably, general ridicule only by causing it to be announced before she appeared that she was extremely hoarse and must crave the kind indulgence of the audience. Not merely has she scarcely any voice left, but everything she attempted on this unfortunate evening was so uncertain, out of tune, and even in such bad taste, that it was impossible to gather from it any idea of her former excellence.

The same evening two or three other things happened which could occur only in England. One of Cramer's pupils was to play Mozart's grand pianoforte concerto, with trumpets, kettle-drums, and a numerous band; it turned out, however, that the piano was so high, that none of the wind instruments could be employed. In any other city such a concerto would have been previously rehearsed, and then the tuner would have been able, between the rehearsal and the performance, to tune the instrument properly; here, however, this had not been done. I expected that the concerto would be entirely omitted, and that the pianist would substitute something else without accompaniment; not a bit of it; this piece, to which the wind-instruments are so essential, was played without them, the first oboe and first bassoon part being merely taken by a violin and a violoncello. How the tutti, especially, sounded in the large Opera House, you may imagine. I did not observe, however, that anyone among the audience resented such a profanation of a magnificent masterpiece. Did they fancy, perhaps, it ought to be given in this way? Cramer, the violinist, performed in the second part a violin-concerto by Martini, which is, at least, 120 years old! It would be difficult to find anything in the world more wearisome! How a man can play such a thing in public is to me incomprehensible. If it were not done here, I do not think it would be done anywhere else. As a remarkable fact in London, it was not, therefore, without interest for me; I again felt, too, very vividly, that though in Martini's time there was vocal music, instrumental music has, at any rate, been created during the last fifty or sixty years by our heroes at Vienna. On the other hand, I heard, with the greatest pleasure, glees at several concerts, the so-called glees or four-part songs for male voices, of the same period. These are the only specimens of national music the English possess. There are some, especially by Webbe and Smith, which are really admirable. It is, by the way, impossible for such songs to be sung more perfectly than they are sung by Messrs. W. and C. Knyvett, Vaughan, and Bellamy. I never before met with such perfect equality of voice and such perfectly correct intonation. People here, however, do not seem to attach much value to these compositions, and I have always been looked at with astonishment when speaking in terms of ecstacy about them. Here, as well as elsewhere, a cavatina by Rossini is more certain to set the hands of the audience in motion.

At one of the last vocal concerts a Te Deum, by Graun, was sung. Scarcely, however, had the singers sung the first words, after the very long prelude, before all present rose, and remained standing as long as the piece lasted. This struck me as doubly ridiculous: in the first place because the English thus only pay the Almighty the same outward respect they pay the king—for, as is well known, "God save the King" is always listened to standing, whether the king be present or not; and in the second, because they regard as though belonging to the ritual of the church a piece of concert-music, which, just like all the others, is merely performed to afford artistic enjoyment to those present, who behave as though they were at church. The seriousness and gravity with which Englishmen observe the frequently absurd rules of etiquette always strike me as exceedingly comical, and I can scarcely reconcile such conduct with the intelligence and love of freedom of which they boast.

I have received from Berlin the intelligence that the vacant post of Capellmeister will not be filled up. I have, therefore, no reason for keeping my opera back any longer, and beg you, therefore, to have the kindness to forward the score and libretto, together with the enclosed letter, by the first post, to Count Brühl.

During the magnificent spring weather, we have commenced making excursions in and about London, to see whatever is worth seeing. Last Sunday, for instance, we went to Richmond, which is situated 13 English miles off, in a perfect paradise. I cannot describe to you how delightful it was to see the first green and the first blossoms on the trees, and once again to breathe the pure air without the unsupportable coal smoke. But this merely caused our chests to suffer more acutely as we approached the large mass of stone. Town is growing more lively every day, and the winter season will now at length begin with the blossoms on the trees. Is it possible to meet with greater contradictions than in London?

In my next letter, I will describe to you how music is cultivated in most private houses. The mode in which this is done is, also, quite English, although some houses form honorable exceptions to the rule. For instance, I played yesterday at the Duke of Hamilton's, in the presence of the Duke of Sussex, and a very select assembly. I cannot sufficiently praise the stillness and attention of all present, during the music, nor their polite behaviour towards us artists. The English, especially those who have travelled, can make themselves very charming.

Farewell. Most cordial remembrances to your family. Let us soon have the pleasure of receiving another letter from you.—Ever yours, LOUIS SPOHR.

THE LATE SIG. LABLACHE.—Notwithstanding the period which has elapsed since the death of Sig. Lablache (which it may be remembered occurred on 23rd January, 1858,) deep regret is still vividly felt in reference to his memory, and all that relates to an artist so highly esteemed is received with the most lively interest. We are sure it will afford universal gratification in announcing that Her Majesty has been pleased to present a copy of the portrait of Sig. Lablache, executed for Her Majesty, by Winterhalter, to the surviving relatives; a compliment no less gratifying to the family than indicative of Her Majesty's appreciation of worth and excellence. With becoming consideration the gift is accompanied with explicit suggestions—from such a distinguished quarter, almost amounting to commands—that the charge of the picture should be entrusted, during his lifetime, to Sig. Frederick Lablache; and, at his decease, to be transferred in succession to any of his brothers or sisters, children of the late Sig. Lablache—thus providing that the picture should remain a heirloom to the family. A communication embodying such instructions accompanied the gift, which, in accordance with Her Majesty's commands, has been recently delivered to Signor Frederick Lablache, as the eldest member of the family.

The letter in which Her Majesty's wishes are conveyed, does honour (if that were possible) to the source whence it emanated:—

Sir,—I have received the commands of Her Majesty the Queen to forward to you the copy of the portrait by Winterhalter of the late Signor Lablache, which her Majesty has presented to his family.

Her Majesty thinks that the charge of this picture should be entrusted to you, as the eldest son, and consequently the representative of Signor Lablache; that you should keep it during your life, and that at your decease its custody should be transferred to the eldest living child, and so to each brother and sister in succession, as long as any of the children of Signor Lablache shall survive.

You would not, of course, have any power to dispose of this picture by sale, gift, or will, so long as any of your brothers and sisters shall be living, or to transfer the charge of it to any other person, except your eldest brother or sister; and any member of the family, sons and daughters of your father, should at any time have the power to direct a copy of the picture to be taken at their own expense.

In the event of the decease of all the children of Signor Lablache, this portrait should be disposable by you, by bequest in your will to any member of the Lablache family.

I have directed a copy of this letter to be sent to Madame Thalberg, as Her Majesty wishes this arrangement to be finally decided upon,

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

Signor F. Lablache. C. B. PHIPPS.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—Piccolomini (her Last Appearance but Three). Second Night of La Traviata. To-morrow Evening (Saturday, April 21), will be repeated LA TRAVIATA. Alfredo, Signor Mongini (his second appearance in that character); Germont Georgio, Signor Aldighieri; Medico, Signor Castelli; Baron Duphol, Signor Casaboni; and Violetta Valery, Mdlle. Piccolomini (positively her last appearance but three previous to her final retirement from the stage). Conductor, Signor Arditi. The opera commences at 8 o'clock. Pit tickets, 8s. 6d.; gallery stalls, 5s.; gallery, 3s., to be obtained at the box-office of the theatre, which is open daily from 10 to 5.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.—The farewell performances of Mdlle. PICCOLOMINI, previous to her final retirement from the stage, will take place on the following dates:—To-morrow (Saturday), April 21; Thursday, April 26th; Saturday, April 28th; and Monday, April 30th. This engagement can on no account be extended.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA, COVENT GARDEN.—First appearance of Madame Grisi and Signor Mario. On Tuesday next, April 24, will be performed (for the first time at the new theatre), Donizetti's Opera, LA FAVORITA. Leonora, Madame Grisi (being the first of the twelve representations to which her engagement is limited), Inez, Madame Tagliafico; Alfonso IX., M. Faure (his first appearance in that character); Baldassare, M. Zelger; Don Gasparo, Signor Rossi; and Ferdinando, Signor Mario (his first appearance this season).

Conductor—Mr. COSTA.

The Incidental DIVERTISSEMENT will be supported by Mdlle. Zina and M. Desplaces.

EXTRA NIGHT next Thursday.

Third appearance of Mdlle. Csillag. On Thursday next, April 26, an Extra Night will take place, on which occasion will be performed (for the third time these five years, Beethoven's celebrated Opera, FIDELIO. Leonora, Mdlle. Csillag (her third appearance in England); Marcellina, Mdlle. Corbari (her third appearance this season); Rocco, M. Zelger; Plazaro, Signor Tagliafico; Il Ministro, Signor Polonini; Giacchino, Signor Lucchesi; and Florestano, Signor Neri-Baraldi.

After which, the Divertissement entitled AZELIA, in which Mdlle. Zina will appear.

JULLIEN FUND.

THE illness of M. Jullien having, with fatal rapidity, terminated in death, it has been resolved that the donations to the JULLIEN FUND shall be applied in the manner which would have been most in consonance with the wishes of the deceased, had it been permitted him to express them, viz., to the relief of his widow and family, who, by his loss, are left totally unprovided for.

Committee for the distribution of the Jullien Fund.

Mr. John Mitchell; Mr. W. R. Sams; Mr. Thomas Chappell; Mr. W. Duncan Davison; Mr. Jules Benedict; Mr. A. Blumenthal.

Honorary Treasurers.

Mr. John Mitchell, 33, Old Bond-street; Mr. Thomas Chappell, 50, New Bond-street; Mr. W. R. Sams, 1, St. James's-street.

Bankers,

Messrs. Coutts and Co., Strand; Heywood, Kennards, and Co., Lombard-street; London and County Bank, Hanover-square;—who, as well as the Honorary Treasurers, have kindly consented to receive subscriptions.

Subscriptions already advertised .. .. £410 10s. 10d.

Additional Subscriptions.

	£	s.	d.		£	s.	d.
Proprietors of Punch ..	5	5	0	Mr. Hammond	1	2	0
Lady B. Lytton	2	0	0	Mr. D. Dewison	0	4	0
Countess Caroline Bellew ..	1	1	0	Messrs. Cramer and Co. ..	0	5	0
Dr. Bennet Hawkins.. ..	1	1	0	Sunday Times Offices ..	0	2	0
2nd Collection, Coffee Room Friends, Manchester ..	1	2	0	Messrs. Keith & Co., per J. N.	1	3	0
Henry Fentum, Esq. ..	1	0	0	Messrs. Keith & Co.	0	12	0
Dr. Roberts	1	0	0	Messrs. Bailey, Brothers ..	1	2	6
V. B.	0	10	0	Mr. Mitchell	0	1	0
T. W. B.	0	10	0	Deposit Bank, Leicester-sq.	0	7	0
H. S. Flinn, Esq.	0	5	0	Parkins and Gotto	0	7	6
Mr. Austin, sundry small subscriptions	0	17	6	Messrs. Boosey and Sons ..	0	3	0

The return of country subscriptions has not yet been received, but will be shortly advertised.

ONE SHILLING SUBSCRIPTION.

Books to receive names are now placed at Mr. Hammond's (late Jullien's), 214, Regent-street; Messrs. Cramer's, 201, Regent-street; Messrs. Baily Brothers, Cornhill; Messrs. Parkins and Gotto's, 24, Oxford-street; Mr. Pask's, Lowther-arcade; Messrs. Keith, Prowse, & Co's., 48, Cheapside; Mr. Bignell's, Argyll-rooms, Deposit Bank, Leicester-square; Sunday Times Office; Messrs. Boosey & Sons, Holles-street; Mr. Austin, St. James's-hall; Duncan Davison and Co., 244, Regent-street; and at the principal music shops throughout the country.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

DR. F. R.—The communication of our correspondent, on which we set a very great value, has unfortunately been mislaid, but the strictest search shall be instituted for it forthwith.

NOTICE.

THE MUSICAL WORLD may be obtained direct from the Office, 28, Holles-street, by quarterly subscription of five shillings, payable in advance; or by order of any Newsvendor.

ADVERTISEMENTS are received until Three o'clock on Friday Afternoon, and must be paid for when delivered. Terms:—

Three lines (about thirty words)... ... ... 2s. 6d.

Every additional line (ten words) ... ... 0s. 6d.

THE MUSICAL WORLD.

LONDON, SATURDAY, APRIL 21ST, 1860.

THE Philharmonic Society gives it first concert on Monday, and the first piece in the concert is to be the last orchestral symphony of Spohr—the one in B minor, known under the title of The Seasons. It may be remembered that The Seasons was performed several times at Her Majesty's Theatre, in the year 1850, under the direction of Mr. Balfe, when the Grand National Concerts were got up (by a committee of noblemen and gentlemen) in opposition to the late M. Jullien—a fruitless opposition, as the complete failure of the undertaking showed. The symphony was also played (under Mr. Benedict) at the Norwich Festival of 1857; but on no other occasion has it been heard in England.

The idea of giving The Seasons no doubt originated in a wish on the part of the directors of the Philharmonic Society to pay a tribute of respect to the memory of the great musician whose death occurred in the interval between their last and forthcoming series of concerts. No foreign composer, not Mendelssohn himself, was better known, or more highly respected, by the patrons of this long-established and firmly-rooted institution, than Spohr; and it was therefore politic, no less than decorous, to commence the first concert with a performance of one of his great orchestral works. The Sacred Harmonic Society gave the oratorio of The Last Judgment, with a similar object in view, and to the credit of all concerned. The Monday Popular Concerts, and Mr. Manns at the Crystal Palace, followed the example set by the worthy amateurs at Exeter Hall. The Musical Society of London gave the Weihe der Töne, and Dr. Wylde introduced the same master-piece at his third concert at the St. James's Hall. It was natural that the Philharmonic Society should exhibit an equally earnest wish to do honour to the memory of so illustrious an artist*—one who had directed and played concertos at their performances, composed a symphony (in D minor, No. 2,) expressly for them, and even figured among the first fiddles in their orchestra. Whether The Seasons was the wisest choice that could have been made, is open to question, as also whether it would not have answered the purpose more legitimately had preference been given to the Symphony in D minor, which, besides being an eminently finer work, was written (as we have already hinted) for the Society's concerts, during Spohr's first visit to England. What the composer himself thought of this symphony may be gathered from one of his letters from London, addressed to his friend (and Beethoven's biographer) Herr Schindler—a translation of which will be found in another column of this week's impression.

Since its origin the Philharmonic Society has not addressed the public with more solid or brighter prospects. The same distinguished musician who, since Herr Richard Wagner relinquished the conductor's stick, has held it with such credit to himself and such manifest advantage, retains his post, as Director of the Orchestra, having fully succeeded in convincing the public that it could not possibly be in better hands. The recent trial, in the Hanover-square Rooms, of orchestral works, all by English composers, indicated a spirit which, if encouraged, is likely to extinguish the narrow prejudices of the past, open a fresh career of enterprise, and enlist new friends, "in troops," for the institution. Of a certain moral support from outside, the Philharmonic Society has for some time stood in need; but it at present exhibits signs of awakening vigour; and this (if they do not turn out mere delusions, which we hardly anticipate) will be more likely than anything else to supply the want.

"Yes," said Panurge, "this is one of the very few artists whom I went to see on Monday last, which was a cold night, of whom it may be said that others are not such a dwarf, although it might be observed by some, I believe, that had it not have been for the wit of the talents of Mr. Thorne, they might not have been so, which eventually it happened to be, any opinion to the contrary notwithstanding. Indeed, when in this world, there is so little that is mirthful, which some philophers call a vale of tears, we can less afford to omit them from our scanty dimensions. At the same time I assert without fear of contradiction, which is perfectly correct, however foreign to the purpose, that has been attributed——"

"Heyday! hoity-toity! Flihbertigibbet and all the antipodes of the Saints!—what sort of tongue is this wherein thou discoursest?" shouted Pantagruel. "By the tripes which were so liberally eaten by Grandmother Gargamelle, I have never heard the like since I was born."

"Of a truth," said Epistemon, sadly, "I think he constructeth his sentences according to a grammar written by the builders of Babel."

John the Waiter simply scratched his head and said nothing, reckoning within himself the many curious and delectable things which had been heard at the Edinburgh Castle, since first that admirable tavern had been honoured with the custom of Pantagruel.

"There it is!" said Panurge. "The fable of the Man and the Ass. Try to please everybody, and nobody is content. A fico for him, who saith 'Do at Rome as the Romans do.' Henceforth, if I am in the Libyan desert I will have a taste for skating; and if I am in Greenland, I will inhabit a bungalow. One of you recommended me to form my style on that of the Theatrical Journal, and being of a docile and amiable turn, I purchased a number of that widely circulated periodical, which mightily enriched my mind with an accurate and very copious account of the proceedings at the Cabinet Theatre, King's Cross, thereby enlarging not only my theatrical, but likewise my geographical erudition. But I paid most attention to the leading articles, with the view of improving my style, and now judge for yourselves whether I have not closely followed the manner of this eloquent essay on Mr. Creswick, choosing for the theme of my oration the performance of the dwarf, Jonathan Jack, now engaged at Astley's."

With these words, Panurge took out of his waistcoat pocket a wafer the size of a sixpence, and fastened to the mantel-piece the following extract from the Theatrical Journal, which all present read to their exceeding gratification and delight:—

"Of Mr. Creswick it may be said that he is one of a very few tragedians who, after their début, of late years has held the rank of leading tragedian, and, although this might very probably have not been the case had he not himself been the manager of the Surrey Theatre, the public are nevertheless very much gratified that it is so; for, as a tragedian, he is one we believe that none have any disposition to part with out of our shrunken catalogue. Upon his first appearance at the Princess's Theatre, Mr. Creswick made his talents apparent to the public, and more particularly to the critical portion of it. His success at this theatre was great. So may it be said of his engagement at the Haymarket, where he gained many admirers by his delicate and earnest portraiture of Romeo and Cassio. At Sadler's Wells, too, although he only held a third-rate position, he became a great favourite, and was justly acknowledged to possess the finest talents of the actor's art."

"Enough of the form of discourse," said Pantagruel, "expound to us the matter, whereof thou hast essayed to speak, and expound in thine own manner, vile and abominable as that manner may be."

"Learn then," said Panurge, "that Mr. Batty hath reopened Astleys, and it is decorated with a magnificence that gladdeth the eye and comforteth the heart. Ye know what Mr. E. T. Smith has done for Her Majesty's Theatre?"

* What work of Spohr's is to be given at the Norwich Festival this year has not transpired; most probably one of his oratorios; for Spohr was at Norwich what Mendelssohn was at Birmingham.

"Indeed do I," said Pantagruel, "he hath so adorned all the halls and ante-rooms, that the other evening when I went to hear the opera, I was suddenly absorbed in the contemplation of the glories in the large saloon, and did not awake from my reverie till the performance was over."

"Vases, fountains, statues, mirrors!" ejaculated Epistemon, "mirrors wherein I saw myself reflected again and again, till I fancied there were fifty Epistemons."

"May Mercury, the god of looking-glasses, be thanked that this was only an illusion," said Panurge, "for what would become of the world, if it was so hideously peopled? Well, something in the same spirit, though not to the same extent hath been done by that creator of beauty, Mr. Batty, with the old amphitheatre. Then the scenes on the stage—by my faith! there is a snowy landscape, under the influence of which the negus whereof I was drinking became a sherry-cobler! But what pleased me most was a dwarf called Jonathan Jack, whom Thorne the clown, pleasantly acknowledged as his father."

"And mayhap, Thorne was correct," observed Epistemon; "for it is hard to prove a negative, and in the next place our knowledge of Thorne's pedigree is not sufficiently extensive to allow us to criticise with precision on matters so recondite."

"But wherein consisteth the merit of this same dwarf?" asked Pantagruel. "I can see no virtue in mere smallness, and I strongly suspect that John here, if I gave him a fourpenny-bit, would not esteem it more than half-a-crown, simply on account of its puny dimensions." [John, bowing reverentially, acknowledged the soundness of this reasoning]. "Did the dwarf give any extraordinary manifestations of lofty intelligence or physical vigour?"

"Just condescend to walk into the middle of the room, most honoured Master," said Panurge, and Pantagruel complied with his request.

"Now," proceeded Panurge, "throw thy feet up smartly before thee, and alight on the floor in a sitting position." This, also, did Pantagruel, coming down with such violence that all the glasses in the house were immediately smashed, and all the window-panes shivered, while a penny-a-liner in an adjoining public-house earned ninepence by forthwith writing a neat paragraph, headed, "Shock of an earthquake!"

"Now," proceeded Panurge, with imperturbable gravity, "repeat that operation five or six times."

"I'll be —— if I do!" said Pantagruel, rising and rubbing the place that had touched the floor, with an aspect of considerable suffering. "Dost thou tempt me to commit suicide, villain! and that in an ignoble fashion unknown to the ancient Romans?"

"Observe," remarked Panurge, evading the question, "what thou hast just now done, to thine own great personal inconvenience, was done by Jonathan Jack, for some ten minutes together, without ceasing, and with a cheerful countenance."

"I should surmise," conjectured Epistemon, "that if any malicious wretch threatened to kick Jonathan Jack, after the fashion in which kicks are commonly administered, he would lightly heed the menace."

"And look you," said Pantagruel, from whose countenance the expression of pain had not yet disappeared, "I will go and see Jonathan Jack, and I will applaud him, and respect him, but I will not imitate him in his habits, neither will I adopt his conduct as a safe model for my rule of life."

WE certainly live in a most amiable age, and its kind, charitable tendencies are in no way more strikingly illustrated than in the taste which now so generally prevails for giving and receiving testimonials. We read the other day in some newspaper an account of the manner in which Mr. Macready has been worried by having pieces of plate forwarded to him from all parts of the world, and we are assured that this eminent tragedian has packing-cases lying about his house, in which salvers, coffee-pots, tea-services, &c., are supposed to be enclosed, but which he has not even thought it worth while to open. All are not so fortunate (nor so talented) as Mr. Macready, but almost everyone in the present day has had some sort of testimonial offered to him; and whether it be a tooth-pick or twenty thousand pounds a testimonial is a very pleasant thing to receive. For this reason we are glad to hear that a token of respect and admiration is about to be presented to Madlle. Piccolomini on the occasion of her retirement from the stage, which she quits in the fourth year of her reputation, and at an age when most vocalists are just seeking the chance of making their début. We cannot condole with a young lady who is going to be married, but we must express our regret, for the sake of the public, at an artist in the fulness of her powers quitting an arena in which it has been her fortune to charm thousands, and, indeed, to throw them into ecstasies, that, to the mere lover of music, have sometimes appeared inexplicable. We need not inquire too closely into the right of Mdlle. Piccolomini to have a testimonial presented to her. It always appeared to us, that for the encouragement of youth and beauty, young and beautiful women had a right to whatever they could get; compliments, jewelry, rich husbands—in short, anything and everything that happened to please their fancy. And we maintain now, that if the fascinating Mdlle. Piccolomini wishes for a testimonial, she must, for that simple reason, have one.

We believe, however, that the grounds on which the testimonial to Mdlle. Piccolomini is being "got up" are not precisely those just adduced by us. In England, as in other countries, nothing succeeds like success; and it is now a recognised principle among us, that to him or her who has much, much shall be given. If a singer were to lose her voice, or to meet with any accident that rendered it impossible for her to continue the exercise of her profession, the public would, of course, have no more to say to her; they have always plenty of sympathy, however, for those who have health, strength, reputation, and riches. It is in art as in commerce. How many, among the hundreds that subscribed to the Hudson testimonial, would have given a halfpenny to benefit a director who, in spite of his intelligence, and in consequence of his integrity, had failed to make money out of the company with which he was connected? But we must not compare the charming Mdlle. Piccolomini with the Turcarets and Dandins of finance. She deserves everything her admirers like to give her, and we hope the testimonial they are about to offer to her will be worthy of her talent and of their admiration. She merits it for at least as many reasons as there are letters in the alphabet; with an A because she is amiable, with a B because shé is beautiful, and so on down to Z—which reminds us that no one has been more zealous in her endeavours to please.

In the meanwhile, if we were director of Her Majesty's Theatre, we should not encourage the testimonial-mania too much. Already we hear of literary and artistic associations having been formed with a view to the interchange of testimonials among the members, and in time singers may come to regard them with so much favour that they will stipulate in their contracts for the presentation of a testimonial at the end of every season.

Herr Leopold de Meyer.—This accomplished virtuoso is expected daily in London, where he intends to remain for the season.

Sig. Ronconi has arrived.

Herr Lubeck, the pianist, has returned to Paris.

Mr. Aguilar's third and last Performance of Classical Pianoforte Music took place on Saturday evening. The programme included Mozart's Sonata, in G, for piano and violin, op. 2, No. 5; Beethoven's Sonata, in B flat, op. 22; trio, in C minor, for piano, violin, and violoncello; Mendelssohn's Lied ohne Worte, No. 6, Book 6; Weber's "Polacca Brillante;" and some vocal pieces, sung by Miss Lindo. Mr. Aguilar was assisted by Herr Jansa as violinist, and Herr Lidel as violoncellist. The concert was a classical display throughout, and elicited repeated marks of satisfaction. Miss Lindo sang Mendelssohn's "Zuleika" and an air by Stradella with perfect taste. There was a large and elegant company.

Crystal Palace.—A grand concert will be given in May or June, for the benefit of Mr. Vincent Wallace, to consist entirely of music taken from his works, vocal and instrumental.

Sacred Harmonic Society.—The Grand Choral Meeting of the sixteen hundred members of the London Division of the Handel Festival Choir, preparatory to the grand performance of Elijah at the Crystal Palace, on May the 4th, was held last evening at Exeter Hall, under the direction of Mr. Costa. All the principal choruses of Mendelssohn's oratorio were rehearsed, and the effect was very grand from the stupendous choral force.

Mr. Richardson's Concert.—This came off on Thursday evening at St. James's Hall, and attracted a very large attendance. Mr. Richardson is still prevented by illness from performing in public, and the concert was got up by some of his friends, who had no difficulty in obtaining assistance from the most eminent artists. The following singers and instrumentalists gave their gratuitous services:—Mdlle. Parepa, Madame Weiss, Miss Palmer, Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Santley, Signor Belletti, Herr Becker, Signor Piatti, Herr Schroeder, and Miss Arabella Goddard. There were upwards of twenty pieces, so that it is impossible to do more than single out a few which seemed to afford most gratification. Perhaps among the vocal selections the performance that afforded most unqualified satisfaction was Beethoven's "Adelaida," sung by Mr. Sims Reeves, accompanied on the pianoforte by Miss Arabella Goddard. The word "perfect," indeed, might be fairly applied in this instance to both artists. Mr. Sims Reeves was encored in two English songs: Mr. Hatton's "I wandered by my dear one's door each night," and Mr. Balfe's "Margaretta." Miss Arabella Goddard was encored in Mr. Benedict's solo for the pianoforte, "Where the bee sucks," and gave Thalberg's "The last Rose of Summer," in its place—the one performance being, if possible, more marvellous than the other. The grandest performance of the evening, however, was Mendelssohn's trio in D minor, for pianoforte, violin, and violoncello, by Miss Arabella Goddard, Herr Becker, and Herr Schroeder—truly great music, worthily interpreted and thoroughly appreciated. Mdlle. Parepa was encored in the laughing song from Auber's Manon Lescaut, as was, also, Mr. Santley in the song from Dinorah, "Ah! now I feel the burthen." Mr. Cusins officiated as conductor.

The Philharmonic Society of Rouen has elected Miss Virginia Gabriel "Socias honoraria," or honorary member. We believe this is the first instance on record of a person in a distant country receiving this distinguished honour. Miss Gabriel is well known and esteemed in the musical world, and has published several works of the highest merit.

St. Martin's Hall.—Rossini's Stabat Mater, and Mr. Macfarren's cantata, May Day, were performed on Wednesday evening, under the direction of Mr. Hullah. The principal vocal performers in the former work were Mademoiselle Parepa, Miss Palmer, Mr. Wilbye Cooper, and Mr. Santley; while Miss Fanny Rowland sang the solos in the cantata. The execution of both pieces were highly satisfactory, but only one accepted an "encore" during the evening—namely, the unaccompanied quartet "Quando corpus morietur," from the Stabat Mater, Miss Fanny Rowland, however, in "Beautiful May" (May Day). which she sang to perfection, received the compliment, but gracefully declined to respond to it.

Harmoniums.—An exhibition of Evans's harmoniums was given at Messrs. Hopkinson's rooms, in Commercial-street, on Monday and Tuesday last, before several professional men and amateurs of the town. Mr. J. Rhodes, of Pontefract, played several pieces, and exhibited to great advantage the beauties of a double-keyed harmonium, with all the latest improvements. One of the principal drawbacks to a general adoption of harmoniums in private dwellings, has been the harsh and unpleasant character of its tone; and we must congratulate Mr. Evans on having at last entirely obviated this defect. The instrument we heard on Monday is capable of producing a tone as sweet as the dulciana of any chamber-organ, or as full and solid as that required for a moderate-sized church or chapel. By a little management, the effects of a swell and tremulant can be obtained; whilst, in every other respect, it is superior to most of the small organs at present in use, and infinitely cheaper.—Leeds Express.

Miss Julia St. George.—In consequence of the indisposition of Mrs. Howard Paul, an engagement has been effected with the above talented actress and vocalist, who will appear at the St. James's Hall, Piccadilly, in her "Home and Foreign Lyrics," every evening next week, and on Tuesday and Saturday mornings at 3 o'clock. Miss Julia St. George has been long popular as a comic actress, and, we have no doubt, her new and original entertainment, embracing nearly twenty changes of song and character, will meet with decided favour from the audiences of the West-end.

HER MAJESTY'S THEATRE.

The first performance of the Trovatore on Saturday was one of the best we have heard. Signor Giuglini, it was said, had not entirely recovered from his indisposition, notwithstanding which we never heard him sing more exquisitely the phrase, "Ah! che la morte," in the "Miserere," and the duet with Azucena, "Si; la stanchezza." Mdlle. Titiens was more magnificent than ever in Leonora, and never created a profounder sensation than in the last act. The Azucena of Mad. Borghi-Mamo was powerfully conceived and powerfully acted. Her reading, though new, has more than novelty to recommend it. The music, which suits Madame Borghi-Mamo's voice, was admirably sung, and Alboni herself could hardly have surpassed her in the fine duet of the last act. The success of the new Azucena was undeniable, and the audience divided their favours between her and Leonora. Signor Aldighieri would do better as Conte di Luna, if his delivery was not so slow. He drags "Il balen" until it tires, instead of pleasing. He has voice and energy enough to do better things. The Trovatore was repeated on Tuesday, and attracted the largest audience of the season.

On Wednesday, the first of the five farewell performances of Madlle. Piccolomini was given. The theatre was by no means crowded, but the performance, though coldly received at first, went off ultimately with éclat. La Traviata was the opera, and Madlle. Piccolomini, as Violetta, produced all the old effect on her admirers. Sig. Mongini sustained the part of Alfredo, vice Sig. Giuglini, and gave the air, "Di miei bollenti," with the finest possible taste. His acting was manly and natural. Sig. Aldighieri was the elder Germont.

Rossini's Otello was produced on Thursday—the first time at Her Majesty's Theatre for many years. The director having found a suitable tenore robusto in Signor Mongini led no doubt to the revival of that opera. Another motive, however, was to introduce Madame Borghi-Mamo in Desdemona, a part in which she had recently won the suffrages of all the dilettanti in Paris. Madame Borghi-Mamo did not disappoint expectation, singing magnificently throughout the opera and acting with great energy and feeling. The lovely air in the last scene, "Assia a piè d'un salice," given to absolute perfection, was encored in a tumult of applause. In the first scene (Rossini having written no cavatina) Madame Borghi-Mamo interpolated "O quante lagrima" from La Donna del Lago—Malcolm Græme's air—and sang it with extraordinary fluency. This air, originally written for a contralto, was rearranged by the composer for Pasta, when she first appeared as Desdemona in Paris. To conclude—Madame Borghi-Mamo's success was triumphant and the audience enthusiastic.

Signor Mongini's Otello is admirable from every point of view. He sings the music with immense vigour, and gives a striking histrionic embodiment of the Moor. Not to descend to particulars, we would select the scene with Iago, in which the duet "Non m'inganno," occurs, and the whole of the last act, as worthy very high praise. The quick movement of the duet, as a matter of course, was encored, Signor Mongini giving it with an energy that nothing could resist.

Signor Everardi sang the music of Iago like a thorough artist, and has added to his reputation by this second essay. His ease and facility permit him to execute the florid passages without effort. His acting, if not subtle, like Ronconi's, was manly and straightforward. The encore awarded to the duet in the second act owed much of the honour to Signor Everardi.

Signor Vialetti was an excellent Elmiro, and Signor Belart most effective, as far as singing went, in Rodrigo.

The band and chorus, under the direction of Mr. Benedict, were highly efficient throughout the opera.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

THE first appearance of Mad. Csillag, in Fidelio, on Thursday, if it did not attract a large assemblage of "fashionables," brought together all the real lovers of music in London, anxious not only to welcome a new Leonora—so difficult to find at all times—but to hear Beethoven's wondrous music executed by the Royal Italian Opera band and chorus, under Mr. Costa's direction. The great reputation of Mad. Csillag at the Imperial Theatre of Vienna was not unknown in England. Moreover, last year she appeared at the Grand-Opéra of Paris as Fides in the Prophète, but her success was somewhat marred by her non-familiarity with the French language. Nevertheless, enough was shown in her impersonation of Fides to prove the possession of remarkable gifts, both vocal and histrionic; while many asserted that Mad. Csillag had yet to be fairly judged. The single performance of Mad. Csillag last season at the Philharmonic, although highly satisfactory, could not decide for or against the immense dramatic powers with which she had been credited.

Mad. Csillag's dramatic singing belongs to the grandest school. Her voice is of great power and compass, metallic and resonant, and of that peculiar Teutonic quality so effective in the utterance of strong emotions. It is a magnificent, rather than a beautiful organ, and consequently well fitted for the music of Leonora. On certain notes Mad. Czillag has more power than any singer we remember except Malibran; and in some other respects indeed resembles that extraordinary artist, however wide apart their general capabilities. As a singer, Mad. Csillag, like most Germans, is more attentive to outline than detail, and produces her effects by bold strokes rather than fine touches of art. Where passion invokes physical force to its aid she is invariably triumphant. In tender passages, too, Mad. Csillag hardly appears to less advantage. In what may be called "abstract singing," she is less successful. Her voice does not appear to possess remarkable flexibility—scarcely to be wondered at, considering the school to which she belongs. As an actress, Mad. Csillag is perhaps even more finished than as a singer. She has studied her art deeply, and possesses all the intelligence to enable her to attain the highest results. Her energy and fire are irresistible, her instincts always correct, and her expression admirably true. We are not going to criticise Mad. Csillag's performance in detail, but shall take an early opportunity of discussing at length her very remarkable talents, of which, perhaps, we may be better enabled to form a true estimate with further experience. About her success there can be no second opinion. The audience, unusually cold at first, gradually recognised the presence of a great artist, and after the quartet (canon) in the first scene—which, by the way, strange to say, for the first time, passed without a hand—applauded all her efforts, and at the conclusion recalled her twice with enthusiasm.

The cast, in the other parts, comprised Mdlle. Corbari in Marcellina; Signor Neri-Baraldi in Florestan; Signor Tagliafico, Pizarro; M. Zelger, Rocco; and Signor Luchasi, Jacquino. The weak point was the tenor. Mdlle. Corbari, who made her first appearance for several years, sang the music of Marcellina with the utmost expression as well as artistic correctness. This clever lady's return to her old post will cause general satisfaction among the patrons of the Royal Italian Opera.

The band and chorus were splendid throughout, and the grand final hymn, as it is called, was never given with more powerful effect. The opera was preceded by the overture to Fidelio, in E (taken at an unprecedentedly rapid pace), and between the acts the grand Leonora overture (in C) was played magnificently, created a perfect furor, and was encored with acclamations.

Fidelio will be repeated to-night and on Thursday, and on Tuesday Madame Grisi makes her first appearance, with Signor Mario, in La Favorita.

NEW PHILHARMONIC CONCERTS.

THE third concert took place on Monday evening, in the presence of an audience that filled St. James's Hall in every part. The following was the programme :—

PART I.—Overture (Coriolan), Beethoven. Recit ed aria, "Che farò" (Orfeo), Gluck. Aria, "Della sua pace" (Don Giovanni), Mozart. Symphony, "The power of sound," Spohr. Chorus, (Euryanthe), Weber. Duet, "Ciel! che veggio" (Lucrezia Borgia), Donizetti. Overture, (Midsummer Night's Dream), Mendelssohn.

PART II.—Concerto for pianoforte and orchestra, in E flat, Beethoven. Aria, "Ecco ridente" (Il Barbiere), Rossini. Aria, "Il mio ben" (Nina), Paisiello. Overture (Ruy Blas), Mendelssohn.

Conductor—Dr. Wylde.

A finer selection could hardly have been made, although for one of Mendelssohn's overtures—although both are incomparable masterpieces—an overture by some other composer should have been given. Indeed the orchestral prelude to Mr. Howard Glover's cantata, Comala, had been announced, but was abandoned for reasons not explained. Beethoven's Coriolanus, and Mendelssohn's Ruy Blas was both splendidly executed; but the overture to A Midsummer Night's Dream wanted more subtle discrimination of light and shade; and the wonderful colouring with which the composer depicts the frolics of the fairy troop, and the fantasia of Bottom and his companions, might have been presented with greater distinctness, both to the ear and to the intelligence. Spohr's symphony, however, was a triumphant success for the conductor and his band, the slow movement more especially being executed with faultless precision throughout.

In Beethoven's Concerto Mr. John F. Barnett made his final first appearance for two years. During his absence, we are informed, he has been travelling through Germany, giving concerts occasionally, and, as we are enabled to judge from his playing on Monday evening, studying and practising with zeal and determination. Mr. Barnett has made great progress, particularly in his execution, which, when we last heard him, was by no means finished. He has obtained, too, increased strength and elasticity of finger and consequently a more uniform command of the instrument. That he has yet something to learn, however, appeared from his reading of the adagio, which left much to desire both in style and expression. Mr. Barnett's performance was received with enthusiasm, and he was unanimously recalled at the end.

At the commencement of the chorus from Euryanthe the singers were unsteady, but improved as they progressed. Mdlle. Vaneri, from Her Majesty's Theatre, sang Gluck's splendid air—transposed and "adapted" (!) by M. Duprez, the great French ex-tenor and professor—with considerable energy, winning loud applause. We have heard Signor Belart—also from Her Majesty's Theatre—give the air from the Barbiere with greater fluency. The song from Don Giovanni hardly suits this purely Rossinian tenor. The duet from Lucrezia Borgia was altogether out of place.

AMATEUR MUSICAL SOCIETY.

THE sixth concert took place on Monday evening, at the Hanover-square Rooms, and was very fully attended. The programme was varied in character, as the following will show:—

PART I.—Symphony, in D major, Op. 7 (No. 5), Mozart. Couplets de la Bourbonnaise (Manon Lescaut), Mdlle. Euphrosyne Parepa, Auber. Introduction, Tema et Variations (Le Petit Tambour), violin, Mr. Irving Rougement, F. David. Aria, "Quando le sere al placido" (Luisa Miller), Mr. Walbanck, Verdi. Concerto in D minor for the Pianoforte (pianoforte, Miss Cazaly), Mendelssohn.

PART II.—Overture (Le Domino Noir), Auber. Ballad, "Janet's Bridal," Mdlle. Euphrosyne Parepa, Claribel. Morceau de Concert, "La Cascade," pianoforte, Miss Cazaly, E. Pauer. Song, "The maid I love," Mr. Walbanck, J. L. Hatton. Overture (Fidelio), Beethoven.

Conductor—Mr. Henry Leslie.

The orchestral performances were excellent, the concerto of Mendelssohn being particularly well accompanied. Miss Cazaly's playing of this magnificent work gave evidence of great improvement since we last heard her. She has all the requisites of a good pianist—power, delicacy, sentiment, and dash, and it will be quite her own fault if she does not take an important position. Her reading of the beautiful slow movement was unexceptionable. Mr. Rougement deserves honourable mention for his execution of David's solo, and the warm applause he received at the termination was fairly earned.

Mdlle. Parepa delighted the audience with her brilliant execution, and was encored in the air of Auber.

Mr. Walbanck, a new comer, has a good tenor voice, and not a bad style, though we must take exception to his occasional exaggeration of sentiment.

The next concert will be given on Monday, April 30th, when Madame Piatti is to appear as pianist.

PROVINCIAL.

BIRMINGHAM—(From a Correspondent).—On Thursday evening last, a performance of the Messiah was given at the Town Hall for the benefit of the School Building Fund, in connection with St. Andrew's Church. The executants were Mr. and Mrs. Sims Reeves, Miss Banks, Miss Palmer, Mr. Newman, and Mr. Thomas, whose valuable aid was gratuitously accorded. The band comprised the leading professionals and amateurs of the town and neighbourhood, who also contributed their services without emolument. Mr. Stockley conducted, and Mr. Stimpson did excellent service at the organ. The hall was crowded in every part, and we are happy to add that the objects of the projectors of the concert were fully realised, as upwards of £200 was obtained for the building fund. The choruses were fairly rendered by the Festival Choral Society.

LIVERPOOL—(From our Own Correspondent).—After an unusually long lull our musical season has at last begun. We have had the Pyne and Harrison Company at the Theatre, Royal; our Philharmonic Society gave their Fourth Subscription Concert on Tuesday night; and at the Concert Hall there are Buckley's Serenaders (fresh from New York); and at the Clayton, the Campbell Serenaders or Minstrels, who are, I believe well known in the Metropolis. The Pyne and Harrison Company, whose engagement terminates on Friday next, have already played Dinorah and Lurline twice, for the first time in Liverpool. Mr. Leslie's Romance was also introduced to our dilletanti on Wednesday, in company with Mendelssohn's Son and Stranger, and, except on this latter night, the houses have been full to overflowing, though the company have sadly missed the exquisite singing of Mr. Santley, a Liverpool man, and naturally a deserved favourite with his townsmen. Alfred Mellon's Victorine is to be given to-morrow (Friday) night, and as the talented composer is well known and appreciated in Liverpool, his coup d'essai is sure of a most favourable hearing by a crowded and fashionable audience. Owing to indisposion I have been unable to attend either the operatic performances or the Philharmonic concert; but I send you the critiques which have appeared in our local Daily Post. The party who sang at the Philharmonic on Tuesday give a morning concert in the same locale on Saturday.

